D. LLEUFER THOMAS,
Secretary.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON LAND IN WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

The Athenæum, Llanelly, Carmarthenshire, Monday, 16th April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN)

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Lord Carrington.

Before we begin our proceedings I shall ask the Secretary of the Commission to read out the remarks I made in Glamorganshire at the commencement of our sittings, with regard to our procedure and the due protection of witnesses on coming before the Commission.

The Secretary read the following passages:—"We do not anticipate that the Commission can "be made the medium of any unfair attack on "the character or conduct of any individual, "but, in case any individual should feel himself "aggrieved by any statements which he believes "to be unfounded, we provide the following "checks, which we believe will be adequate for "the prevention of pain or injury. In the first "place, permission will be given to any person "present at any sitting to put questions in "writing to any witness through me, the "Chairman, the Commissioners reserving to themselves the right of deciding whether such "questions be permissible or not. Secondly, "the Secretary has been instructed to send "notice forthwith to every person whose "character or conduct is impugned by the "statement of any witness, thus giving such "person an opportunity of explanation, or of "rebutting the charge, either personally or by "letter." "There is only one other matter "upon which I need touch, that is concerning "the protection of witnesses, which has been "referred to in Mr. Vincent's letter. Experience "has shown that, unless witnesses speak out "boldly and without fear, inquiries like the one "we are engaged in are futile. We have no "reason to believe that undue pressure will be "brought to bear upon any class of witnesses "or any individual witness; nor have we reason "to think that the giving of evidence by any "person in this county will lead to his being in "any way injured. But it is of course possible "—we cannot shut our eyes to what has before "now taken place in regard to affairs of this "kind—that some men are less scrupulous than "others, and that it is possible that witnesses "who speak here what is in their minds may "be subjected to loss and annoyance. We "desire, therefore (and it is our duty to do so), "to point out that the recent Act, the Witnesses' "Protection Act, 1892, affords a remedy adequate "to meet any ordinary case."

Mr. RICHARD WILLIAM STEPHENS called and examined.

Chairman.

36,671. Are you a freeholder?—Yes.

36,672. And are you an alderman of the Carmarthenshire County Council?—Yes.

36,673. Where do you live?—Coed-y-brain Farm, near Cidweli.

36,674. Have you been appointed to come here by the parishioners at a public meeting?—I have.

36,675. Will you kindly state to the Commissioners what it is that you desire to testify to?—I was born and bred on an adjoining farm belonging to Lord Cawdor, who is considered to be one of the best landlords in the county. Some of my relations have occupied the farm for generations. My father built the farm-house and a large portion of the out-buildings, which remain there now, at his own expense, and never received any compensation for it. My brother occupied the farm for a few years after my father. But when my brother took another farm, Mr. Mousley, Earl Cawdor's agent, gave my brother six months' notice to leave the farm. My brother never intended to give up this farm, and applied several times to Mr. Mousley to keep it on for his children, who were growing up, especially as the farm had been occupied by the same family for such a long time. Mr. Mousley never replied to his applications, but rented the farm to a stranger in preference to my brother or any member of the old family, which had occupied the farm for some hundreds of years. The farm has been for sale since then, but was not sold. My father had an advance of 10*l.* a year in this farm within my memory. My father held another farm in the same parish from 1850 to 1870, which belonged to the vicar of Taliaris, near Llandilo. Three tenants had failed to live on it before he took it; still it advanced about 5*l.* in rent every five years while he held it within my memory.

36,676. Was it glebe or private property ?—It belonged to the church. When there was a change of incumbent there was an advance in the rent. The tenant who succeeded my father had another advance.

Consolidation.—I know of small farm-houses being allowed to tumble down by the landlord, and the land added to other farms, on the estates of Mr. Jennings, Gelli-deg, and the Earl of Cawdor, and others.

Game.—The Game Laws are a constant source of ill-will and irritation between landlord and tenant. I give instances of the intolerable way tenants are treated on account of the landlords' jealous care of the game. A certain Captain Chamberlain, a stranger who came to reside at Plas Wenallt, near Cidweli, either rented or received permission from Lord Cawdor or his agent to shoot the game over Lord Cawdor's estate in this district. That was before the Ground Game Act had been passed. The captain invited a pack of harriers to course hares on the farms which he shot over. A hare, worried by the harriers, ran through a field where I was driving cattle with a dog. The dog chased the hare, but did not kill it. The captain walked up to me, made use of very bad language, and asked me why I did not stop the dog. I said I could not. He then asked me why I did not keep it tied up. I answered that I wanted it to drive the cattle. He finished up by saying, "I wonder what Lord "Cawdor will say to this when he shall know "of it." Another time he saw a man going into a wood with a hatchet to cut wood for fencing, and at once accused the man of taking a gun. Another time he attacked an idiot, who was gathering firewood, on the ground that he was poaching. He summoned my brother for coursing on the land which my brother occupied, but it was shown that the game belonged to my brother. The rabbits and game on the land which he preserved at the time became so numerous that they totally destroyed a whole field of corn belonging to a poor farmer, named Richard Jenkins, Llwynybarkid. No one dared shoot even a crow, lest he should be suspected of killing game. The tenants' interests were thus sacrificed for the pleasure of a stranger. I do not know whether tenants in these cases were paid for the ground game, but I know that the great majority of them do not take advantage of the Ground Game Act. I think tenants should have perfect freedom to kill all their own home-bred birds.

Chairman—continued.

Commons.—Three commons in this neighbourhood have been, to my knowledge, enclosed, viz., Allt Cynadda, near Cidweli; Mynydd Eiddole, near Carmarthen; and Ferryside Marsh. The latter was enclosed early in the fifties; by what authority, and according to what system, the land was apportioned I do not know. The Iscoed Estate, however, belonging to the Picton family, had all the good land which was protected from the tide by the railway. The other estates had allotments between the railway and the sea, where the tide comes over it every 12 hours, and which is worth about 2*s.* 6*d.* per acre. With reference to Allt Cynadda, I cannot complain, for my father had a six-acre field given towards the farm wherein I now live, while many other farms in the neighbourhood had none at all. A small farm called Robert's Rest, situate at Ferryside, and belonging to the Brigstocke family, had a large field allotted to it on Allt Cynadda, fully three miles away, but had none on the Ferryside Common, which was close by. I believe the enclosure of commons has been the means, to a great extent, of causing the labourers to migrate from the rural districts, because they have been deprived of the opportunity to keep a cow, a pig, a pony or a donkey, a couple of sheep, a couple of geese, &c.

Politics.—I have known agents going round to the tenants to tell them how and for whom to vote. I have also known them to meet tenants and walk them up in a body to the polling booth.

Suggestions.—Welsh farmers require: (1) Land Court to see justice done between landlord, tenant, and labourer; (2) Permanent reduction in rent, or a sliding scale according to the price of produce; (3) Fixity of tenure; (4) Freedom of cultivation; (5) Full compensation for improvements in land and buildings; (6) Sole right to all the game on the land; (7) Reduced railway rates; (8) Wheel tax on travelling caravans to compel them to contribute towards the maintenance of main roads; (9) Tithe rentcharge to be devoted to national purposes and the support of the poor; (10) Landlords to be more in touch with their tenants; (11) Abolition of the system (in use in this district in some instances) of paying agents by commission on the rents; (12) Foreign produce to be labelled when sold in this country; (13) Government to pay full compensation to farmers for loss of cattle from anthrax and all kinds of contagious disease.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

36,677. I think the parish you represent is the parish of Llandefeilog ?—It is.

36,678. You know, I suppose, pretty well all the farmers in that parish ?—I think I do.

36,679. Is that a Welsh-speaking district ?—Quite.

36,680. Do the majority of the inhabitants habitually use the Welsh language ?—Yes, nearly every one.

36,681. Are they chiefly nonconformists?—Mixed up.

36,682. In reference to the case of your brother, which you mentioned at the beginning of your evidence; he occupied the holding of your father, and then your brother took another farm and he did not get any compensation, I think you said?—No; he received 5*l.* for a new fence which he had made, but the fence cost him more than 10*l.*, and he did it the very year before he left.

36,683. Did your brother leave after the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, had come into operation?—Before then.

36,684. Before the Act?—Yes.

36,685. Is there no custom of the country as to compensation to an outgoing tenant similar to that which exists in the adjoining county of Glamorgan?—No, they often do not apply for it because they do not think they will get any.

36,686. First of all, tell me what is the ordinary tenancy. Is it a Michaelmas taking?—Yes, and six months' notice as a rule; but as a rule they do not make use of the late Act.

36,687. As a rule, tenants do not apply under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, only to a very small extent.

36,688. When a farm falls vacant in that part of the county, are there many applicants for it?—Sometimes there are, and sometimes there are not.

36,689. We have had evidence in some counties in Wales that the people have a very great attachment to the land, and that there is what is called great land hunger?—There was many years ago, but not so much at the present day.

36,690. You think that people are more ready now to go away to England and other places where they may use their faculties?—Yes, a great many go from Wales and farm in England at present; they get cheaper land there now, it seems, and a great many migrate to America.

36,691. Are the farmers in your parish, speaking generally, prosperous men?—They are hard-working men.

36,692. I mean are they carrying on the business at a profit?—Not at present; they are carrying it on at a loss.

36,693. Do you think that the average farmer in your parish is able to pay his rent without difficulty?—No, I think they all have great difficulty at present.

36,694. Have any abatements been made in the rents?—Yes, a few.

36,695. Have there been any permanent reductions?—I do not know of any hardly; generally small abatements. Then the tithe and taxes are carried on according to the full rent, of course.

36,696. Referring for one moment to the matter of compensation, do you of your own knowledge know of any instance in which tenants have complained of having to go away and getting no compensation?—Yes.

36,697. How is it the tenants have made no claim?—Well, thinking that they would get nothing out of it, they do not seek the advantage of the Act.

36,698. You do not think the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, is known much in the parish?—Well, it is known, but it is not powerful enough.

36,699. From your experience, what alteration do you suggest in it?—Well, unless the landlord has given consent for certain alterations in the buildings, and so on, the tenant cannot claim compensation, and that consent is very seldom given. The tenant has to do what he likes, and gets nothing for it.

36,700. You mean that the landlords as a rule do not comply with the request of the tenant, and give consent for the permanent improvements under the First Schedule of the Act?—Very seldom; some do it, but the majority do not.

36,701. On what terms are the permanent improvements, say in the way of buildings, usually affected?—Sometimes the landlord gives the materials and the tenant has to do all the building and the haulage.

36,702. Then, with regard to the erection or enlargement of buildings, the usual terms would be the landlord supplies the materials and the tenant does the haulage?—Yes, and this is the case, again, in many instances, that the landlord charges from 5 to 7 per cent. for what he lays out in improvements—advances to the rent.

36,703. Adding that to the rent?—Yes.

36,704. Do you know of many such cases?—Yes, I have heard of some, but I have none of my own experience.

36,705. Do you know of many cases in which permanent improvements have been done by the tenants entirely at their own expense?—Yes, of late years, but times are too bad for them to do much at present.

36,706. In what condition are the farm buildings and the farm-houses in this parish?—As a rule the buildings are not sufficient for the farm. They have to cram the cattle together in the winter.

36,707. Are they big farms in this parish?—Mixed up—small—rather under-sized.

36,708. What is about the average acreage?—From 50 to 150 acres; some 300 acres, not many.

36,709. Are they chiefly pasture farms, or what proportion does the arable land bear to the pasture?—Well, I call it mixed up.

36,710. Has the amount of arable land been decreasing of late years?—It has been decreasing very much.

36,711. I think you said that the farmers in your district could fairly be described as hard-working men?—Yes, they are.

36,712. Do they work themselves on the farms?—Yes, they do; they put their shoulder to the wheel as well as anyone else.

36,713. Do the children help them?—Yes.

36,714. Do the children get wages generally?—No, they cannot afford to pay them; it is as much as they can do to get a little clothing. A man gave me an instance the other day that his daughter was offered 12*l.* a few years ago to go to service. She told her mother she would rather stay at home for 6*l.* Afterwards she spent a year at home, and the father told me that they were not able to give her 2*l.* even.

36,715. Are the little children made to work?—Yes, as soon as they are out of school, and before then; they have to work before they go to school in the morning and when they come out of school in the evening. I have with me a specimen of the agreement of a small farmer, which I will hand in (handing same).

36,716. This is Mr. David Harris, of Llandefeilog, to Mr. Caleb Evans, of Ostrey, near St. Clears and Cilgadanfach, Llandefeilog, and the agreement is dated 1885?—Yes, it is.

36,717. Are there any clauses in the agreement which you think are unfair to the tenant?—Yes, the tenant complained of them very much to me.

36,718. Which clause?—I think it is all over rather hard.

36,719. I see there is a very usual clause agreeing to pay an increased rent "for every "acre or part of an acre of the fields mentioned "in the schedule hereto, and also of any ancient "meadow or pasture ground which the tenant "shall plough or break up without the previous "consent in writing of the landlord, his heirs, or "assigns." Is that clause complained of?—Yes, it is rather hard I think, but farther on I think it is harder still.

36,720. Do you think there is a general feeling in the parish that that kind of clause, as to breaking up ancient meadow land or pasture ground, is hard?—Yes, I think he ought to get his own meadows when he pays for them.

36,721. Then I see there is another clause, "Also will preserve and protect the game, subject "to the Ground Game Act, 1880, and all the "woods, trees, underwoods, plantations and "hedgerow timber, and young timber, or upon "the said premises or any part thereof, and will "not fell, crop, top, or lop any of the timber, "pollards, or other trees standing or growing on "the said premises, nor dig or work any of the "minerals or quarries under or upon the said "premises." Is that clause complained of?—Not so particularly; I understand he had to pay rent four times a year, every quarter. He complained of that, and said he had to carry it out to perfection.

36,722. Yes, I see there is a yearly rent of 90*l.* in this case, which has to be paid in four instalments on the four usual quarter days. Does that operate hardly upon tenants?—Yes, he complained of that.

36,723. Why is that more objectionable than the half-yearly payments?—He had to find the money at difficult times of the year, when there was no produce to sell.

36,724. Then the next clause is, "Also will "not take from any part of the demised lands "more than two white crops in succession, and "with the third of such crops will sow 12 "pounds of good clover seed and three pecks of "good rye grass seed per acre"?—That was complained of again.

36,725. On what ground?—That he would like to get liberty to do what he liked with it.

36,726. Then there is a covenant to repair the dwelling-house and all the other houses, and the fences and so on. Is that complained of?—Not very much. In the case of a storm it might be expensive, and the tenant could not help a storm. We have had a great many this year.

36,727. That is excepted from the operation of the clause?—Yes.

36,728. Then I see there is put in writing at the end of it, "and also pay the increased rent of "10*l.* on the 29th day of September in each year "for every acre or part of an acre which the "tenant shall plough or break up, beyond the "agreed quantity of 10 acres, without the "previous written consent of the landlord, his "heirs, or assigns." Is that complained of?—That was complained of.

36,729. And on the same grounds, that it unduly fettered the liberty of the tenant. Is that the point?—Yes, he complained of that.

36,730. You made some reference to the commons. You do not know under what Enclosure Acts these commons were enclosed?—I do not. They were enclosed when I was very young.

36,731. Was any part of the land enclosed set apart for a recreation ground?—No, none.

36,732. Or for allotments for labourers?—No, none in either of them, although that parish is close to Ferryside, where they require a recreation ground very much.

36,733. Is there a difficulty in getting labour in that parish now?—Very much indeed.

36,734. What are the average wages of a labourer living off the farm, and living in his own cottage that he rents?—In our neighbourhood they generally live on the farm.

36,735. Do you mean they live in a cottage on the farm, or in the house?—In a cottage on the farm generally.

36,736. Then what is a man paid?—Then they maintain them in the farm. That is generally the custom.

36,737. Is such a labourer hired by the year or by the week, or how?—Sometimes by the week; single men by the year as a rule.

36,738. Then they live indoors, I suppose?—Yes, they live indoors.

36,739. What do you pay a man, say, of 25?—A man of that age, if he is any good, averages from 20*l.* to 30*l.* per year

36,740. Living in the house?—Living in the house.

36,741. And are most of the hired servants hired upon those conditions?—Yes.

36,742. These are generally hired by the year I suppose?—By the year.

36,743. Suppose a man is a married man, and lives in a cottage on the farm, what are the average wages in your part of the country?—He generally gets a little more.

36,744. But he does not get board in that case, or if he gets board his wife does not, I suppose?—No; but often the wife works on the farm at the turnips and potatoes, and so on.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

36,745. Is any potato ground given with the cottage or garden?—Generally a row or two, or probably there is a large garden belonging to the cottage.

36,746. Has the condition of the labourers improved of late years in that part of the county?—Yes, but a great many labourers' cottages are tumbled down in my recollection.

36,747. Then there is a difficulty of getting cottages there now?—It is more difficult to get labourers than cottages, I think.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,748. You say, Mr. Stephens, in your evidence that your father built the farm-house and the farm buildings upon the farm of Cilveithy?—He did.

36,749. You could not give us the amount of expense that he went to?—I could not indeed. It was before I was born.

36,750. You have no idea?—No. It was a useful farm-house. It is still there, and there is a very large young family in the house too now.

36,751. The landlord never assisted to build at all?—Nothing at all.

36,752. How long did your brother occupy this farm after your father died?—He lived in it at the time my father went to his own farm, where I live now, and left that to my brother when he got married.

36,753. How long did he live there before he had notice to quit?—He lived there six or seven years I should say.

36,754. Then he took another farm?—Then he took another farm.

36,755. In the same neighbourhood?—Well, there is the ferry between them. The present farm is the Llanstephan side, and the other farm was the Ferryside side.

36,756. Had your brother any family?—Yes, a lot of children.

36,757. Then, do you suppose he could have carried on the two farms very well?—Exactly so; he meant it.

36,758. In which way did he make his application to the agent; was it in writing, or did he see him personally?—He failed to see him, I understand. He wrote several times.

36,759. And had no reply to the letters?—No reply whatever.

36,760. Had he done anything to offend the agent in any way, do you know?—No. They were on very good terms. The agent gave him a testimonial to take the other farm.

36,761. Yet he would not reply to his letters?—No, no reply at all.

36,762. Was there any reason why he should have let the land to a stranger in preference to your brother?—That is what I cannot understand.

36,763. What was the new tenant?—He was a single man, living at home with his father.

36,764. Was he of the same politics as your brother?—No, he was not exactly, at the time, anyhow. My brother does not take much interest in politics, one way or the other.

36,765. Then you do not think that was the reason?—Not exactly, but I know that the present tenant is a Conservative; my brother was a rank Liberal at that time, anyhow, and since then he is living under a Conservative landlord, and I do not think he likes to show his colour much.

36,766. Then with regard to this other farm which belonged to the vicar of Taliaris, near Llandilo; what has been the cause of the advanced rent there, Was there a change in the landlord?—Yes, there was a change in the landlord when there was a change in the vicar, and the new vicar always advanced, as a rule.

36,767. He always advanced the rent?—Yes.

36,768. Then your objection to this tenancy was that you wanted some place that the tenant might refer to to settle his rent?—Yes, that is it.

36,769. Instead of having it varied by every fresh in-coming landlord?—Yes, because he might change every year, and then there would be an advance, or some change or other, every year most likely.

36,770. You say some farm-houses have been allowed to tumble down. Is that because there are two or three farms put together?—Yes. They are put together into one.

36,771. To save expense, I suppose?—Yes. They are small holdings, farms of under 100 acres generally.

36,772. Are there as many labourers kept upon those farms now as formerly, do you think?—No, less than usual.

36,773. So that the population is decreasing in consequence?—Yes.

36,774. Then, with regard to this question of game; you think it is considered objectionable by the tenants generally that the game should be let to an outsider?—Yes, in fact I think it is a scandal that such a law should exist in a free and Christian country like Wales.

36,775. Do they exercise, as a rule, a greater power than the landlord himself over the tenants?—Yes; as a rule they take all the power.

36,776. Are the tenants pleased with the keepers; do they object to them at all?—Yes, the keepers object to the dogs very much, and they object to their keeping a collie, because they say they destroy the game, or frighten them away.

36,777. Do you think that if the tenants had the game altogether in their hands they would make a short job of it, and that you would not have much game in this country, or what is your opinion with regard to that?—Very much the same, I think, they would not have so many to destroy their produce, of course, on the land. They would keep them down, I should expect.

36,778. Do you not think it would be the means of driving our landlords from the country?—No, I do not.

36,779. They would have no sport?—Some landlords do not shoot at all.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

36,780. Some landlords do not shoot at all, but there are others that are very fond of shooting?—Exactly.

36,781. Do you think the tenants would allow them to shoot over the farms just the same?—Oh yes, if they gave anything for preserving the game, if they paid the compensation to the tenant for the losses he gets by them.

36,782. You say that the tenants are slow to take advantage of the Ground Game Act?—Very.

36,783. Why should it be so?—Well, the majority of our tenants in fact cannot read the Act, and they cannot understand the Act, and those who do understand the Act do not take advantage of it.

36,784. Do you think they are afraid of displeasing their landlords in doing so?—Yes, something to that effect.

36,785. Do you think it is a very easy matter to get the sliding scale that you speak of into operation for farm produce?—I think it could be got every six months, if there was a Land Court.

36,786. It is not so easy as it is for the colliers to have a sliding scale?—Not quite, perhaps.

36,787. How much has the price of produce varied in your time?—Very much indeed.

36,788. Are the prices down to half of what you remember?—Yes, I remember them more than double that they are now, store stock particularly.

36,789. Then you consider the rents should follow?—Yes, I do; that the rent ought to tumble under the half.

36,790. You object to the principle of paying the agents by commission?—I do.

36,791. Which way would you propose that they should be paid?—Paid annually, or in any other way except that.

36,792. We had a suggestion in Pembrokeshire that each agent should have a farm to till himself?—That would be very good, I think.

36,793. And to let to the tenants at the same rate of rent and on the same conditions as he farmed on?—That would be a very good idea, it could not be beaten, I think.

Mr. Grove.

36,794. Do you think that there is as much farm labour on the land now as there ought to be?—Hardly.

36,795. Why?—Because the labourers are so expensive, and times are so bad to find money to pay them.

36,796. You put it down, then, to the general depression of agriculture that they cannot afford as much labour as they would like?—That is so.

36,797. Do you think there are sufficient cottages on the farms, generally speaking, to accommodate the labour that ought to be there?—Yes, generally, or in the neighbouring villages there is. There are some empty ones now as a rule

36,798. You said something about railway rates; have you had any experience of that. What do you mean by railway rates, do you mean the local railway rates, or do you mean the preferential rate that is given to foreign produce as compared with English produce?—I mean with regard to the railway that takes manure down to this country from London and so on.

36,799. You mean local rates?—Yes.

36,800. Do you know whether any of the railway companies are charging more than they are entitled to under the Act of Parliament?—I do not know about it according to the Act of Parliament, but I know that they charge too much according to reason.

36,801. That depends upon which side you look at it from?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,802. Going to the early part of your evidence, you said that your father built the farm-house?—Yes.

36,803. On what farm was that?—It was called Cilveithy, near Cidweli; three miles out of Cidweli.

36,804. That is a large farm, is it not?—It is not a large farm, medium sized.

36,805. When was it that your father built that house?—It was some years before I was born.

36,806. That is going back a long way?—Yes.

36,807. Had he a lease upon the land?—Not at that time.

36,808. Had he any arrangement or agreement under which the rents of the farm were lower in consequence of the building?—No, I do not think he had anything particular, only it had been in the same family for generations, unrecorded generations, I believe.

36,809. Is it customary on Lord Cawdor's estate that the tenants should do the buildings?—As a rule they do it now, and they get compensation for what they do.

36,810. On Lord Cawdor's property?—They get materials, and the building is done, and Lord Cawdor charges a certain per-centage for the money he lays out in buildings. I believe that is the present system.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I am surprised to hear that. It is contrary to what we heard in Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Griffiths.

I do not think the witness quite understands you, Sir John.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,811. Mr. Griffiths thinks you do not quite understand my question. My question was whether it is customary, of course speaking now of Carmarthenshire. Very likely there are different customs in Pembrokeshire to what they are in Carmarthenshire, but in the district with which you are acquainted on Lord Cawdor's estate who does the permanent repairs, landlord

576. or tenant?—I think the landlord does them at present, and charges 5 per cent. on what he lays out in expenses.

36,812. Can you say what, at the time that your father built this particular building, the custom of the estate was?—I think the tenants did nearly all then.

36,813. How long after your father had built this house was it that the farm was taken from your family?—I suppose some 30 or 40 years years perhaps after he built it.

36,814. And you say he never received any compensation for it?—No, and never asked for any, I believe.

36,815. Can you say approximately how long ago this house was built. You say it was before you were born?—It was before I was born, so that I cannot remember.

36,816. I was not asking you to remember exactly, but can you give an approximate date. Mr. Seebohm suggests whether it was 80 years ago?—I heard my father speaking many times of his working at the building, assisting.

36,817. May I ask what your own age is?—I am close on 50, but I am a single man, and I ought not to expose myself.

36,818. But it is more than 50 years ago. Now can you speak with regard to other estates in your own district. You are speaking as a representative man; can you speak of other estates as to whether the material repairs, the buildings, are usually done by the landlord or the tenant?—It is mixed up, done by both, by the landlords chiefly, I believe. We have some very good landlords, they do the haulage and everything else, at least they pay the tenant for doing the haulage.

36,819. You yourself are a freeholder?—Yes.

36,820. Do you consider that you are better off as a freeholder or as a tenant farmer?—I would be better off, I think, if I was not in any kind of farming at present.

36,821. I daresay, but that does not quite answer my question. Which of the two do you think you would be in the best position under; would you be in the best position as a freeholder or as a tenant farmer?—Well, a good farm rented at a reasonable price I think would be better.

36,822. That is, that you would be better off as a tenant farmer?—I do think so.

36,823. You have, of course, now the whole of the repairs upon your own shoulders?—Yes.

36,824. And you have no one to go to for an abatement of rent or a reduction?—No, I have no chance of getting an abatement from anyone.

36,825. In one of your suggestions at the end you say you think that landlords should be more in touch with their tenants?—I do.

36,826. I quite agree with you. Will you kindly tell me how?—I think that most landlords might make their appearance at the audit as well as the agent, and speak to the tenants personally.

36,827. Are many of the landowners in your district absentee landowners, who are living elsewhere?—Yes. A great many live in the neighbourhood, but they keep town houses in London. They spend perhaps nine months in London and three in the country.

36,828. Is the system common of paying agents by commission on the rents?—Not common, but it has been; I have known it so.

36,829. In what way would you obtain fixity of tenure?—I should say if there was a Land Court, for the tenant to get full compensation for any improvement he does on the land and the buildings, that it would be almost as good as fixity of tenure. I do not believe in leases, because they work the land out before the lease is done.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,830. Perhaps you do not remember it, because it was in your father's time, but was not Lord Cawdor's word in those days considered equal to any lease?—It was very good in the time of the late Mr. Williams, the agent

36,831. But you think things have altered since?—Well, there have been a lot of changes since, anyhow.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,832. You are a freeholder?—I am.

36,833. Would you say how long it is since you bought your land?—It belonged to my ancestors for unrecorded generations.

36,834. Do you consider that the value of it is just as much now as it was 15 years ago?—No, I do not. I think it is less, much less.

36,835. So that as an owner you have had to bear the whole brunt of the depression in agriculture?—I have.

Mr. Grove.

36,836. But I suppose in the meantime you have done a good deal more to the land than you would have done if it had belonged to some one else?—Not very much more to the land. Perhaps I have done a little more to the buildings.

Chairman.

36,837. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "What was the name of the "farm upon which you were brought up"?—Cilveithy.

36,838. "Was Mr. Chamberlain a shooting "tenant only?" I suppose by that is meant did he rent any land besides?—Yes. I do not know whether he rented land or only got permission, as I stated.

36,839. Was that the Mr. Chamberlain who was living at Plas Wenallt?—That is the same. It was Captain Chamberlain—a military captain.

36,840. He is not alive now, I think?—No, he is dead.

36,841. Plas Wenallt is a place belonging to Lord Cawdor, is it not?—Yes.

36,842. "With regard to this hare case—are "we to understand that Mr. Chamberlain used "bad language to you because your dog turned "a hare that was being coursed or hunted?"—He did.

36,843. "Do you not think that was merely "temper?"—Yes, he had a hot temper; he was a hot-tempered Irishman.

36,844 "Do not farmers course or hunt a good "deal in this country?"—Very little. There is very little done in our parish or district.

36,845. "Did any result follow upon Mr. "Chamberlain's threat of telling Lord Cawdor?" Nothing whatever.

36,846. "What do you mean by saying that "the tithe rentcharge is carried on according "to the full rent? Has the tithe anything to "do with the rent in Carmarthenshire?"—With rents—with the letting of the land?

36,847. The question as I have it is, "Has the "tithe anything to do with the rent in Carmar-"thenshire?"—I think it has.

36,848. "Will you specify cases in which land-"lords have refused consent to improvements "which tenants have desired to make?"—There are a great many indeed.

36,849. The question is, will you specify any cases?—I cannot specify any, because I had nothing to do with them myself.

36,850. "Do not most landlords give credit "for the rent if required?"—Some do.

36,851. "Is it not the rule on some estates "that no tenant shall hold two farms?"—No, a great many hold two farms. My brother at present holds two farms under different landlords.

36,852. "May not the reason be that the "tenant may enrich the one farm at the expense "of the other?"—Yes, they could do that.

36,853. "Would not this danger be present, "though possibly in a minor degree, if members "of the same family were encouraged to hold "several farms on different estates?"—I think it would be very good to keep the same family in the same district.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,854. Do you think that that danger would exist in your brother's case, where one farm is one side of the ferry and the other farm the other side?—Not the least, because he would have left some of his children behind at the small farm.

36,855. Then he would not be so likely to injure one farm more than another, would he?—No, he could not do that, because he would have to take them all by ferry boat before he could get there, or go about 16 miles round by the road.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS WALTERS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

36,855A. Your name is Thomas Walters, and you are a tenant farmer, of Glyn Mill Farm, Cidweli?—Yes.

36,855B. And you have sent in a statement of your evidence?—Yes. The following statement of the witness was read:—

PERSONAL.

My predecessor had only 8 acres at first, on which he paid 3*s.* 10*d.* tithes. After a while the landlord increased his holding to 58a. 4r. 6p., at a rent of 52*l.* 14*s.*, the additional tithe being paid by the landlord. I rented the farm in 1880 at the same rent, but I had to pay the tithe, which came to 3*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, on the additional land. The land was in very bad condition as to tillage and cleaning. 14 acres of it were no better than waste, and had been allowed to run wild. I took to cleaning it. One field, which had never before been ploughed by the old tenant, cost me 6*l.* 10*s.* in pulling up roots, &c. In 1882 the landlord gave me another addition of 8 acres at a rent of 8*l.* exclusive of tithes and rates. I had three sons growing up, and therefore determined to clean more of the wild land. Four little fields, measuring together 8 acres, were nothing but a wilderness, but I cleared them at a cost of 10*l.* per acre. I drained 40 perches at the rate of 2*s.* 6*d.* per perch, total 5*l.*; and all on my own expense, without a fraction of help from my landlord. In 1886 I had another addition given me—a field of 10a. 2r. 13p.—for the rent of 16*l.* and tithe, which was 17*s.*, together with rates on me. (N.B.—This is not in the lease.) All the help I ever had was 6*l.* worth of artificial manure in March 1893, and 2*s.* in the £ in September 1893, for the last-mentioned field; but none for the farm I had a lease for. In 1887 my landlord died. He had often offered me a lease, which I refused, because I felt the farm was rented much too highly. But after he died, I determined to obtain a lease because of the great expense I had been to, and so I took a lease for the sake of security. In August 1888 the estate was for sale. Two farms were sold. In July 1892 another two were sold. Now there remain only my farm and three others unsold. Besides my own farm there is some land that is let out on which there are no farm-houses, and that has not been sold. In 1890 I asked for a new cart-house and stable, which I had; and, though I was obliged to do the haulage gratis, yet I was further obliged to pay according to 4 per cent.

Chairman—continued.

per annum as interest on the money expended on the said buildings. This interest is 1*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* yearly. They did not complete the stable; I had to make the loft and stairs myself, the timber for which cost me 1*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* I have also, from my own pocket, made a house for the fowls and a place for the big boiler, 2*l.*; and a passage from the house to the back kitchen, 1*l.* 10*s.*; a turnip house, 2*l.* 10*s.* (I was allowed 1*l.* for zinc to roof this); and a place for the calves, 2*l.* 10*s.* Money expended by me in bettering the farm:—

Building - - - -	9	18	7
Land - - - - -	91	10	0
Total - - -	101	8	7

The only help I ever had from the landlord:—

	£	s.	d.
Artificial manure - -	6	0	0
Ten per cent. on 8*l.* -	0	16	0
Total - - -	7	16	0

I am prepared to stand by my figures and statements and to show full value of the money herein stated on improvements on land and building. In August 1893 an allowance was refused to me because I had a lease, while at the same time the other tenants on the same estate received 10 per cent. (They had no leases.) Again in February 1894, I made the same appeal for an abatement, with the same result. So those tenants that have no leases have had abatements twice, while I have had none at all, because I have a (wretched) lease. I asked for new doors for the outhouses, &c., which are too bad to be mended any more, and the answer I had was that the lease requires me to repair. So between all it is very hard to make two ends meet, since we depend upon our stock for making up the rent, and the price of it is so deplorably low. Were it not for my boys—one of whom I am obliged to send out to earn wages in order to help me to pay the rent—I would have been a failure three or four years ago, because it is impossible to make farming under the present circumstances pay for itself.

36,856. That is your evidence?—Yes, that is my evidence.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,857. Who was your landlord, who died in 1887?—Mr. Ashley Thompson, Glyn Abbey.

36,858. Who has granted you the present lease?—The trustees of the estate.

36,859. For how long is that lease?—21 years.

36,860. What is the acreage of your farm?—65 acres and some perches, besides that field of 10 acres that I had.

36,862. Is it fair land, or is there bad land among it?—It was very bad land when I had it. The old tenant had failed there. 15 acres of it is on the banks of the river, and it is flooded when the river overflows.

36,863. You have brought it up to a better condition since you have been there?—Yes, there is a good deal of wood on the upper part of it, and some of it is wet land.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

36,864. You have put in a copy of your lease, have you not?—Yes.

36,865. Do you complain of any of the covenants in the lease?—The agent read it out to me in Welsh, and I asked him whether the repairs would fall upon me, and he said no—that I would only have to keep it in tenantable repair.

36,866. This is what the covenant says, "Will "during the said term keep the house and "buildings now on the said demised premises "and all other buildings that may during the "said term be erected in good repair and con-"dition," and there are similar covenants as to ditches and so forth, and as to the general method of cultivating the farm, and as to landlord's fixtures. Then there is a clause also, I see, that the lessor is to provide the timber in the rough for the repairs covenanted to be executed by the lessee. Do you complain of that covenant?—When I was given this lease I did not understand at all that I had to make the repairs myself.

36,867. What was the agent's name?—Mr. R. T. Hammond, Burry port.

36,868. Could he speak Welsh?—Yes.

36,869. He read this agreement to you in Welsh?—The agent who gave me the lease is dead. His son is the present agent.

36,870. What was the name of the father?—Mr. T. Hammond.

36,871. I understood you to say that you did not understand from the agent that the covenant that I have read was in the lease?—Yes, I understood from what the agent told me that I was not to do the repairs.

Mr. Seebohm.

But we understood before that he was not to do more than keep it in tenantable repair.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I did not so understand it from the witness.

36,872. Did you say before that you understood from the agent that you were to keep it in tenantable repair?—He told me that the repairs would not fall on me—that I would have to keep the buildings in the same state as I had them.

36,873. Then he did not translate from the English copy into Welsh for you the whole of this document?—Yes, he went over it all in Welsh.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

36,874. Do you complain of any other covenant in the lease?—Nothing more. One of the covenants in the lease provides that the tenant is not allowed to sell the hay, corn, turnips, or straw. I think that is a hardship, because I should like if there were any over to sell them.

36,875. You mean the covenant which provides that you are to consume on the demised premises all the hay, clover, straw, roots, and fodder grown thereon?—He put a mark to show that I could sell one ton of hay and 10 cwt. of turnips

36,876. But do you complain of that. Have you found that that restriction has made it more difficult for you to pay your rent?—No, I do not say that, because I have not much to sell.

36,877. Do you yourself work upon the farm?—Yes, I work hard.

36,878. What time do you begin in the morning usually?—In the summer about five o'clock in the morning.

36,879. And in the winter?—In the winter, when the days are very short, I have to work in the morning by candle light.

36,880. What time do you knock off at night?—About seven or eight in the evening in the winter.

36,881. Have you any indoor servants?—Only a servant girl.

36,882. Do you employ any labourers?—No.

36,883. Then the work of the farm is done by yourself and your wife and your boys?—Yes.

36,884. You find it very difficult now, you have told us, to pay the rent?—Yes, at the present time.

36,885. Do you find that on the adjoining farms the farmers have the same difficulty?—Just the same, but it is my own evidence that I am giving.

36,886. You have told us that you have had to borrow the money from your boys to pay the rent?—Yes, I have to use them because one of my sons is working away. They are very handy when the money for the rent is scarce. I have no other place to go to.

36,887. Do you think that many of the farmers in the same parish that you come from are obliged to borrow the money to pay the rent?—I daresay I could find them, but I should not like to answer for any but myself.

36,888. Have you thought what alterations could be made in order to improve the circumstances of a man like yourself?—You must have either the land at a lower price or get the trade better.

36,889. That means that there is really no help for it, unless prices improve or the landlords lower the rent?—I cannot see any other way.

36,890. You have not heard any talk of any suggested alteration of the law for giving security of tenure, if possible?—No doubt that would be useful.

36,891. Has the matter been talked over among the tenant farmers in your neighbourhood?—I hear them complain that the land is too high and the prices are too low, and that it is impossible to pay the rent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

36,892. Do you know whether the tenant farmers are willing to come forward from your parish, or are they afraid to do so. I do not know in the least; I am only asking?—The majority of them are afraid of it.

36,893. I cannot help being struck by the fact that you are a leaseholder, that you cannot be sent away for a good many years. Yours is a lease for 21 years from 1887. Are there any other farmers coming from Cidweli?—I come from the parish of Llangyndeirne, near Cidweli.

36,894. Are there any other gentlemen coming from that parish?—Yes.

36,895. You said something about tenant farmers being afraid to come forward. Do you speak of your own personal knowledge when you make that statement?—I have been speaking to many farmers in my parish, and they are afraid of something that will happen afterwards.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,896. You are aware now that under this agreement the repairs are on you?—Yes.

36,897. How much have you expended upon repairs? Am I justified in taking it that the 9*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.* you have mentioned here is all you have expended?—Yes.

36,898. Since the year 1887?—Yes.

36,899. Then the outlay has not been very serious?—No.

Chairman.

36,900. There are two questions handed in by Mr. Vincent: "So far as the improvements go, "would you be satisfied if the law gave you "compensation in proportion to the increase in "the letting value of the land due to your "exertions, or do you think you ought to be "compensated according to the amount you have "spent?"

I daresay Mr. Vincent will be able to alter the wording of the question.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

As I understand, Mr. Vincent is asking whether you want from the landlord all your money back, or whether you want simply that proportionate part of it which represents the amount that is unexhausted at any particular moment.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I think the Interpreter might very well put it in the shortest way—that is take the last part of the question: "Do you think you ought to be "compensated according to the amount you "have spent?"

36,901. The question was put.

Witness.

I think I ought to have some of it, but I have got a lease, and that is my security for what I have done.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

36,902. But suppose you had not got a lease, and that you were turned away, would you think that you ought to get from the landlord the 101*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* that you have actually expended, or some and what part of it?—I ought to have it all if I was turned out.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

36,903. Even although you had had the advantage of it for some years?—It was only last year that I finished my last improvement.

Chairman

36,904. There is another question by Mr. Vincent, "If you were compensated according "to the improved lettable value by the land-"lord, would it not be unjust to him that a "court should fix the rent he is to charge to an "incoming tenant?"—No, I do not see that it is unjust or unfair.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM STONE, called and examined.

Chairman.

36,905. You are Mr. William Stone, a tenant farmer, of Talyclyn, Llangennech?—Yes.

36,906. Do you give your evidence in English?—In English, if you please.

36,907. Will you read your statement?—

PERSONAL.

I was appointed at a meeting held on 9th March 1894, by the farmers of the parish of Llangennech, to give evidence on their behalf before the Welsh Land Commission. I am a tenant farmer. I farm 250 acres, and have been farming all my life; but have never seen such hard times as the present. I appear before you as an advocate of fair rents, security of tenure, compensation for improvements, Government assistance for the purchase of farms by tenants, and Land Courts. This is not my own personal feeling only, but the unanimous feeling of all the farmers whom I represent. Rents are too high at present, and there ought to be a general reduction so as to enable us to compete with foreign produce. The price of farm produce has been getting less year after year, while rents, labour, rates, and cost of living have been increasing. The rent of the farm I occupied before coming to Llangennech (Quarry Farm, Llanelly) rose from 93*l.* to 120*l.* I greatly improved the Quarry Farm. It was owned by a kind landlord, and I was doing my best to the farm; but the landlord died, and the farm was sold. It was bought by a Mr. Goode, who raised my rent from 90*l.* to 120*l.* I left the farm, and did not receive any compensation for all my improvements. The farm has since greatly deteriorated, and is not worth half the rent to-day. I could not pay the rent of my present farm if I had not got sons working hard without any wages, and I receive no interest on the capital laid out in the business. I have laid out a large sum of money on my present farm, and I have a good landlord; but if the farm was sold I would run the risk of losing all.

LABOUR.

Labour has gone up very much. I used to pay to a first-class workman 9*s.* per week on his own finding, with cottage, and he worked long hours; now I pay to the same class of man 18*s.* per week with cottage, and he works shorter hours. Head farm servants boarding in the house used to get 9*l.* a year; now they get up to 35*l.* a year. I also pay a proportionate increase of wages to carpenters, masons, and blacksmiths. I do not grudge good wages to good workmen, but it is hard times on the tenant farmer between high labour, high rents, and the low price of farm produce.

SUGGESTIONS.

We want security of tenure and compensation for improvements. Farmers would farm their land much better if they were sure that they would reap the benefit of their labours, and would receive a just compensation for the money they laid out in improvements on their farms. A law ought to be made that when farms are sold the first offer would be given to the sitting tenants, and the Government to lend part of the purchase money at a cheap rate of interest. We want a general reduction of rents and a Land Court, or some other body that will give us security of tenure and just compensation for improvements made by tenants.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

36,908. I see that your farm is one of pretty considerable size, 250 acres?—The present farm, yes.

36,909. I do not think you have given us the date upon which you went to this present farm?—I went in 1869.

36,910. What rent did you agree to pay in 1869?—Very near the same as at present, very close upon the same.

36,911. Has it been reduced at all?—No, it has not been reduced, oh, no.

36,912. What is the present rent may I ask?—The present rent is 200*l.* a year.

36,913. And it has been raised since 1869?—There has been a little difference. The tithe and the rent go together at present.

36,914. With the exception of that small alteration the rent was much the same in 1869 as now?—Very little difference.

36,915. During the time since 1869 that you have been on this farm have you built a good deal on it?—Not to a great extent. The landlord and myself have done a good bit. It is not all of my own accord; the landlord and myself pull together like man and wife. What one could not do another would.

36,916. What buildings have been made?—There have been out-buildings, a stable, a cow-shed, a cart-house, and buildings that were required.

36,917. What share did the landlord take in regard to those new buildings?—He found all material.

36,918. Who did the work, the actual mason work, at whose expense was that done?—At my expense.

36,919. Who did the hauling?—I did the hauling as well.

36,920. Have you done any other improvements besides the building?—Oh, yes.

36,921. What kind of improvement?—I drained a good deal of the land.

36,922. Did you give a notice to the landlord under the Agricultural Holdings Act before you did that?—No, we came to terms between ourselves.

36,923. What were the terms on which the drainage was done?—I did the labour and he found the pipes.

36,924. Do you do much work yourself now?—No, I have gone past that now.

36,925. How many labourers do you employ?—Two workmen, and I have got two sons, one 28 and the other 21.

36,926. Do the sons get any wages?—Not so far, the times will not allow it

36,927. Then I am to understand that at the present rent it is impossible for you, however skilfully you farm, and however hard-working you are, to make the farm pay?—I think that is a general complaint over England and Wales. I have no faults and no complaint to make before you of any shape, only that we have got to compete with the foreign produce, and the price of our produce will not meet the cost of production. I have got as good a landlord as anybody in the district, I should say.

36,928. Is this parish a Welsh-speaking district?—It is.

36,929. Most of the people habitually use the Welsh language, do they—most of the farmers and labourers there?—Oh, nothing else.

36,930. You are appointed, I see, as a representative. Do you think that the other farmers are in much the same condition as yourself, and find it very difficult to pay the rent?—I am certain of it.

36,931. Are they a hard-working body of men, do you consider?—Yes, or else they would be finished off in a very short time.

36,932. You mention cost of living as having gone up; do you think that is so? This is the phrase in your evidence: "The price of farm

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"produce has been getting less year after year, "while rents, labour, rates, and cost of living "have been increased."—Yes.

36,933. Do you think that the cost of living has been increasing in Llangennech?—To a great extent.

36,934. In what way; take meat?—Well, formerly they used to live at a more reduced diet than they will look at at present.

36,935. Then you do not mean that the price of food is higher now than it used to be?—Not the least.

36,936. What you mean is that the standard of comfort in regard to clothing and in regard to food has gone up?—Well, no, not that the price of food has gone up, but it is more expensive food than used to be formerly.

36,937. Do you have meat every day on your farm?—Yes.

36,938. Do you think that most of the farmers have meat every day?—I beg pardon.

36,939. I ought to tell you that we have had evidence in some parts of Wales that meat is quite a luxury in a farm-house. Do you think that most of the farmers in the houses round about you get fresh meat every day?—Fresh meat?

36,940. Yes?—No, not once a week, not once a month, so far as I know.

36,941. In what respect then do they live better than they did?—The population is of a more delicate health than they were formerly; they must have more delicate food at the present time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,942. Have you had any reduction in the rent?—No, no more than I have told you.

36,943. Who is your landlord?—Sir William Robert Clayton.

36,944. You say in your printed statement that he is a good landlord?—As good as anybody that I know of.

36,945. Does he know your position?—I beg pardon?

36,946. Is he acquainted with your position; that is, that the farm does not pay?—I cannot say that, because it is very seldom that I see Sir William himself, but I see his agent every six months.

36,947. Every rent day I suppose?—Every rent day.

36,948. Have you made any complaints to the agent that the farm does not pay you?—I have never done that, but I have told him that the times will not afford the present rent, and he made a reduction of 10 per cent.

36,949. And you do not consider that sufficient?—Not according to the price of the produce of the land.

36,950. You never made a complaint to Sir William for a reduction in the rent?—I beg you to excuse me. I do not recollect that I have done so, but I am certain that I made it to the head agent.

36,951. Do you think that if Sir William knew that the farm did not pay you he would reduce it for you?—Well, I cannot say about that; that would be rather hard lines without other gentlemen of the same position doing the same.

36,952. But somebody must make a start?—Yes, yes, but I think that it ought to be considered that there ought to be a general reduction as the produce is reduced to a certain extent.

36,953. But do you not think it was your duty, if you thought the farm did not pay you, to make an application to Sir William for a reduction. That would be the most business-like way to go about it?—Well, I tell you what, that is one way to do it, but as he is as good a landlord as anybody in the round, it would be rather hard for him to make a start, because he is not a gentleman in the neighbourhood—he lives away somewhere—and gentlemen that live here among their tenants ought to make the start, if there was any start made 36,954. I see you are speaking as a representative of the farmers. Has there been no combination among the tenants to ask for a general reduction of rents in your district?—Not to my knowledge, but the good landlords make a reduction in our district from 10 to 15 per cent.

36,955. Is it a reduction or an abatement?—Oh, it is an abatement of 10 or 15 per cent., according to the times, thinking that there would be a turn to bring things to a level once again, but there is no sign of it at present.

36,956. And you think it is time for them to make a general reduction?—Yes, I do.

36,957. More than 10 or 15 per cent.?—Oh, I should think so, according to the price of the produce. I should not apply for anything of the sort if the produce would meet the cost. I am willing to pay my present rent if the price of the produce would meet it.

36,958. What do you consider would be a fair reduction; that is to enable you to make the farm profitable, taking all things into consideration. I suppose you would admit that the cost of production is greater now than it used to be?—Yes.

36,959. What would you consider now a fair reduction?—I will tell you what, I think it would be very reasonable if the string was cut in three, two to the landlord and one to the tenant.

36,960. What do you mean; do you mean a reduction of 33 per cent.?—The landlord to have two-thirds.

36,961. One-third you mean?—Say that the place is worth 200*l.* a year, if there was a reduction of 50*l.*, that would bring things something like on a level to 150*l.*

36,962. That would be a reduction of 25 per cent. Would you be satisfied with 25 per cent.?—Something like that; that is at the present time; and security for improvements.

36,963. Security of tenure?—The place that I had before I came to Llangennech I occupied for many years. It was just in the time that my father went into that farm; the rent was 90*l.* a year; it was bought by the landlord before my father went there at 1,400*l.*, and after my father and myself had been there about 40 years it was sold for 3,000*l.* There was a large improvement made there, and he never had a halfpenny for the improvement, and the rent was raised to 120*l.*, which I could not see my way to pay.

36,964. You mentioned security of tenure. Do you think if tenants had security of tenure that there would be any desire among them to purchase their holdings?—If they were enabled to do it, there is no doubt about it, because when a person takes a liking to a place he would rather make a long stretch than leave it.

36,965. But there would be a certain amount of inconvenience; for instance, supposing when a farmer died, and it was wished to dispose of his property, the farm would become charged with legacies to the other children. You would not consider that a desirable thing, would you, that the property would become encumbered?—I tell you no more than the improvements that were made there. If the improvements were made by the tenant, I should think that is due to the tenant to have what improvement was made, if it was more valuable when he left it than when he had it.

36,966. You are going into another matter now. I will ask you the question again?—You must excuse me, because I am rather deaf.

36,967. Do you think there is a desire among farmers to purchase their own holdings, that is if they get security of tenure?—I think so.

36,968. If they think that they are safe in their farms, and that they will not be turned out, do you think they are anxious to buy their holdings?—Yes, if they have capital and they can do so, and carry on their business to the same extent, because shortness of cash makes a lot of difference in handling business.

36,969. Your opinion differs a little from some evidence which we had in Monmouthshire. We were told in Monmouthshire that there was no desire to become purchasers of holdings among tenants, that is providing they had security of tenure?—Everybody is not of the same opinion.

36,970. It seems not. Do you think the farmers are evenly rented in your district?—I think they are just at a level as they have been years past, but they are too high at the present time by a great deal, too.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,971. There are many other witnesses, and therefore I shall only ask you one question. You say that a law ought to be made, that when farms are sold the first offer should be given to sitting tenants, the Government to lend part of the purchase money at a cheap rate of interest?—That would be to the tenants' taste very much if it was agreed to.

36,972. What I wanted to ask you was just this; supposing that the Government would lend money, say at 2½ per cent.?—Yes.

36,973. Would not that fact, that the landlord knew that you could borrow that money at 2½ per cent. make him ask more for the land when he sold it to you?—That is a question that I cannot decide exactly.

36,974. But what I mean is, it is very difficult for the law to secure that an advantage of that kind should really go to the tenant?—Yes.

36,975. That the competition for farms would probably be so great that that facility for purchase would send up the price?—Yes.

36,976. Do you think that would be likely?—Not so likely.

36,977. You think it would still be an advantage to the tenant?—Yes, it would be an advantage.

36,978. Notwithstanding that it might send up the price to a certain extent?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

36,979. You say that you would like to see a chance for the tenants to buy their farms, and the Government to lend a part of the purchase money. What part of the purchase money do you think it would be fair to expect the Government to lend?—One-third.

36,980. Then you think that the tenant should find two-thirds, and the Government lend one-third?—Yes.

36,981. Then you say a cheap rate of interest—Yes.

36,982. What would you consider to be a fair rate of interest for the Government to charge for that loan?—3½ per cent.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,983. How much money have you laid out on your farm for building?—My present farm?

36,984. Yes. Your words are, "I have laid "out a large sum of money on my present "farm." How much is that for building?—I cannot exactly say how much I have laid out, but I have laid out all I could make out of the farm since I have been there.

36,985. You go on to say that you have got a good landlord?—Yes, a good landlord.

36,986. Did you make application to the good landlord for the erection of the buildings?—Yes.

36,987. Have you got the sanction of the landlord for it?—No, I have not it with me now. It was only by word of mouth.

36,988. You obtained it?—Yes. It was only by word of mouth between the head agent and myself.

36,989. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

That gives you compensation for the buildings if you obtain the sanction of the landlord.

Mr. Seebohm.

That is written sanction; he got it verbally.

Sir John Llewelyn.

He says he got it verbally, and he does not know the Act.

Chairman.

36,990. Do you find that politics or religion make any difficulties between landlord and tenant?—Not the least.

36,991. The fact of your being in favour of a Land Court would not make any difficulty between you and your landlord?—Not at all.

36,992. May I ask what are your own politics. You need not answer that question unless you like?—I am Church of England.

36,993. Are you Conservative or Liberal?—Conservative.

36,994. And a member of the Church of England?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN HARRIES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

36,995. Do you understand English well enough to follow your evidence when read out?—I think I can understand that.

The Secretary read the satement of the witness as follows:—

'Evidence of John Harries, Penybont House, Brynamman. Brynamman is an industrial place: few farms, some freeholders, others tenants. Most of the land, common land, claimed by the Lord of the Manor. He rents at prices varying from 5*s.*, and 8*s.* to 2*l.* and 5*l.* per acre. 40 years ago the price of building plots was 6*d.* per perch. This applies to private property. He sells limestones and building-stones, sand, and coal for 4*d.* to 7*d.* per ton, and gives leases for working them. The Black Mountain Silica, Sand,

Chairman—continued.

Brick, Lime and Colliery Company, Limited, pay the Lord of the Manor 400*l.* dead rent (as per prospectus produced). There are other industries from which the Lord of the Manor receives large rents. In one, that is the Penrhiw-wen Lime and Sand Works, the lime and sand is carried along the turnpike road, and causes great damage to this part of the road, placing a heavy burden on the ratepayers. I think the royalty from these works should go, not to the Lord of the Manor, but to the county council to meet the additional expense in connexion with the road, and so with all similar works. Waterworks have been built on the common. 10*l.* is paid as rent for one, and 5*l.* for the other. Lately the latter has been reduced to 2*l.* 10*s.* in consequence of a petition from the district. The waterworks have been made necessary by the opening of the works, and so drying up the wells. I think royalties should be in part applied to ease the ratepayers of this expense. The Lord of the Manor was petitioned to grant a piece of land on the common for the purposes of a cemetery, but he refused. The Lord of the Manor also claims rents for all encroachments.

The following is a letter claiming such rent:—

"W. Morgan Griffiths,
Solicitor. Saint Mary Street,
Carmarthen,
Madam, 29th December 1893.
Re the Manor of Ferdre and Forest Bethel with the upper part of the Commot of Iskennen in the Lordship or Manor of Kidwelly.

Some couple of years ago you encroached upon certain lands belonging to the above Manor in the parish of Quarter-bach, and there was a presentment made at a Court Leet held on the 13th November 1891 in respect thereof, and it was then decided that you should in respect of such encroachment, consisting of two acres and two perches, pay 16*s.* per year as yearly tenant at the will of the Lord of the Manor from Lady Day 1891. I am instructed by Earl Cawdor, the Lord of the Manor, to request payment immediately of 1*l.* 12*s.*, two years' rent, or payment in respect of such encroachment, or if you dispute such payment proceedings will be forthwith commenced against you, in order to have you immediately ejected from the premises which you unlawfully took possession of, as the payment arranged to be taken from you was without prejudice and only in order not to put you to considerable inconvenience by immediate ejectment, and in the event of your still refusing payment you will be taken as having disputed the right of the Lord of the Manor, and proceedings will be taken against you accordingly. Seeing, however, that the Lord of the Manor and the Court Leet decided to treat you so leniently by accepting, at all events for the present, a yearly payment, I trust you will not see fit to put yourself to unnecessary trouble and expense.

Yours, &c.
(Signed) W. Morgan Griffiths.

Mrs. Catherine Morgan,
Rhosfa, Brynamman."

I think all commons should be enclosed for the use of those who wish to till the soil, at a reasonable price. Why should people emigrate as long as common land is unenclosed? The rent from common land should, however, go toward taxation or some common national fund, and not to the Lord of the Manor. Many people who used to pay rent to the Lord of the Manor have now for the last three years or so to pay it to the clergyman, e.g., Watkin Morgan, Pia; William Davies, D. Williams, David Davies (the last-named three used to pay rent to Mr. Thomas, Devynock, who held of the Lord of the Manor). Watkin Morgan's father, John Morgan, used to pay 4*l.* 6*s.* to the Lord of the Manor and the leaseholders who sub-let it to him. This continued till 1866. Then he received notice to raise his rent, and left. Watkin Morgan took it at 6*l.* 10*s.*; he repaired his house and made it much better at his own expense. For the last three years he has been paying this to the Rev. J. M. Jones, but he has received no compensation for the money he has spent on the farm. Rents have gone up in the farms. Nantgwine, the property of the Rev. D. H. Thomas, Kidderminster, was rented in 1844 at 25*l.*, in 1870 at 52*l.*, and to-day at 40*l.* Tenants had changed four times since 1844. Gorsto, the property of Henry Thomas, butcher, in 1844 was 15*l.*, in 1870 36*l.*, and to-day 32*l.*, four changes since 1844. The Lord of the Manor refused the application of the Gibea Congregational Church for a plot of land for a burial ground on the Black Mountain. I believe that the common land should be absolutely under the parish councils.

Chairman—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,996. Who is the Lord of the Manor of Brynamman?—Earl Cawdor.

36,997. Does he rent any of the surface of the common?—Yes.

36,998. Do the commoners object?—Yes, there is a general feeling. Some of the common has been enclosed recently.

36,999. Have they objected at the court?—Yes, some of them have.

37,000. The common has been enclosed lately you say?—Part of the common has been enclosed lately.

37,001. Where was it that they took objection?—In the late court.

37,002. What was the answer?—So far as I understand, they allowed it to some on the condition that they should pay 5*s.* an acre for some and 8*s.* for the rest.

37,003. When did the enclosure of the common take place?—At those places the names of which I have already given, a good long time ago.

37,004. Under an Act of Parliament?—No, I do not think so.

37,005. Has there been any Enclosure Commission?—I do not know?—What has recently been enclosed has been enclosed without the permission of the late court, but the matter was subsequently brought before the notice of the court, and they allowed some on condition that they should pay, and the others were not allowed at all.

37,006. By whom were the enclosures made?—By labourers, working men.

37,007. Were any made by the Lord of the Manor?—None of the recent ones, so far as I know.

37,008. Do you object to the Lord of the Manor receiving royalties?—Yes. I think that it is the property of the nation.

37,009. Is it now private property as things are?—No, it is common land.

37,010. I am not speaking of the land. I am speaking of the minerals?—I do not understand that the minerals under the common belong to private persons, but they belong to the nation.

37,011. Who made application for land for a cemetery?—The Congregational Church, Gibea.

37,012. When?—During last year think.

37,013. Do you think that all commons ought to be enclosed?—Yes, I think so, with the exception of parks and land reserved for the public.

37,014. Can they not now be done under the Enclosure Acts?—I cannot say.

Mr. Grove.

37,015. You speak of rent being as high as 5*l.* an acre. Is there much at that rate?—I cannot say, with the exception of one place, Black Mountain.

37,016. It must be accommodation land, surely, must it not?—Yes.

37,017. Then you speak in your evidence of a prospectus. Has that been produced?—I have handed it in.

37,018. The recent enclosures, I suppose, have been enclosures of small pieces of land?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,019. You give instances of several rents which have been raised recently. Were these rentals on small estates or large estates?—Do you refer to the farm or to the commons now?

37,020. To the rents mentioned in the last clause of your evidence?—They are small landlords.

37,021. Quite small landlords. Do you know of any cases of large estates where rents have been increased of recent years?—The lands belonging to the large landowners that we have, have been divided into allotments, and those allotments are very much higher than they used to be.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,022. Is Mr. Thomas, of Kidderminster, a clergyman?—Yes.

37,023. Is the property glebe land?—No.

37,024. Is he a large or a small landowner?—A small landowner, so far as I know.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,025-6. When was its rent reduced to 40*l.*?—Recently.

37,027. Does he make any abatement on 40*l.*?—I understand he does not give anything.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,028. I should like to point out to you that by an Act of Parliament of last year the Lord of the Manor cannot enclose now without the consent of the Board of Agriculture. You might just as well look at that Act of Parliament. There is no difficulty in getting it?—The others enclose, and the landowner afterwards claims the rent for the land.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

37,029. Quite so, but the joint operation is illegal now as against commoners, unless the Board of Agriculture have consented to it; that is to say, the other commoners may interfere with them. That is exactly what the Act says?—I do not quite know who are the homagers, because we are almost all working men.

37,030. It occurred to me when you were giving your evidence that it is possible that this is not common land in the true sense of the word. I do not know. Do the farmers who hold the adjoining farms depasture cattle and sheep on this land?—Yes.

37,031. Then it does not look as though it were a true common?—I wanted to say a word more. I refer to the fact that 40 years ago the price of building plots was 6*d.* per perch. It has now been raised, some to 1*s.*, some 1*s.* 6*d.* and 2*s.*, and a portion to 5*s.* per perch. What the farmer paid for that land was 10*s.* and 15*s.* per acre. By paying 1*s.* per perch for it the working man pays 8*l.* per acre; by paying 1*s.* 6*d.* the working man pays 12*l.*; and by paying 2*s.* he pays 16*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,032. Is that for allotments?—For houses and gardens—cottages and gardens. By paying 5*s.* per perch the working man pays 40*l.* an acre, and at the end of 60 years he loses everything. I think that he ought to have full possession, at the end of that time, of the house and the land and at a more reasonable price than this. I see no reason why the working man should pay more for his land than the farmer.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,033. But Brynamman, as I understand it, is getting quite a big town, is it not. It is some years since I have been there?—Not a town.

37,034. The population has been increasing a good deal there?—Yes.

37,035. Then I suppose that the land which you referred to is the land adjoining the public street?—Yes, part of it.

37,036. And as I understand your point, it is that you think that this large increase of rent, which is due to the general prosperity of the place and its convenience for colliery purposes, ought not to go into the pocket of the landlord?—No, not as much as that; the roads by which the houses are built have been paid for by the public and not by the landlord.

37,037. You complain that it should become the landlord's property at the end of 60 years, which appears to be the usual term there?—Yes, that is so now. We want reform in that, so that it should be the property of those who build.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,038. There are three questions put in; the first is asked by Mr. Abel Thomas, M.P.: "Do "not more than half the population in the "neighbourhood of the common belong to Gibea "Congregational Church, which asked for the "burial ground?"—There are over 700 members there, and one might say half, or more than half.

37,039. The following question is asked by Mr. Vincent: "Is it not the fact that at the late "court the steward refused to take rent for the "recent enclosures, and said the enclosures must "be taken down?"—I have said that already, and he threatens that proceedings will be taken against others unless they pay.

37,040. The following questions are put in by the Rev. J. Morlais Jones: "When did the Rev. "J. M. Jones come into possession?"—They have paid the rent for three years—Mr. Watkin Morgan and others.

37,041. "When was the rent raised, previous "to or after the event?"—Previous to the event.

37,042. "Has any application been made to "Mr. Morlais Jones for a reduction?"—I do not know.

37,043. There is one more question handed in by Mr. Vincent: "To whom was the application "for a burial ground made, and when, as nearly "as you can state it?"—To Mr. Rosser, I think, in the course of this last year.

37,044. Who is Mr. Rosser?—The agent of Earl Cawdor; Mr. Thomas, the minister who wrote it, is present in court.

Mr. Grove.

37,045. Then the application was made in writing?—Yes, in a letter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,046. This question is also by Mr. Vincent: "Would it surprise you to hear that Lord "Cawdor's agent has never heard of Mr. "Rosser?"—I think he ought to know. I beg your pardon, Mousley was the name, and not Rosser.

37,047. You wish to correct yourself to that extent. You meant Mr. Mousley, did you not?—Yes, I wish to correct that.

The witness withdrew.

The Rev. WILLIAM DAVIS THOMAS called and examined.

Chairman.

37,048. Do you wish to say anything as regards this burial ground which we have been told was refused last year by Lord Cawdor?—Yes, my lord. I wish to correct that part of the evidence which says that the application was made last year, when in fact it was made two years ago.

37,049. Mr. Harries says that an application was sent in two years ago?—Yes.

37,050. Who was it sent to?—To Mr. Mousley, Earl Cawdor's agent.

37,051. It was an application for a burial ground. Did you specify the size?—Yes.

37,052. Did you say how much land you wanted?—Yes.

37,053. How much was it?—Two or three acres.

37,054. Was the application granted?—It was not.

37,055. Have you got any letter or papers of any kind that you can produce with regard to this matter?—I have not them with me.

37,056. But you have them at home?—I had a letter refusing.

Chairman—continued.

37,057. You have the letter now?—No, my lord, I have not.

37,058. Have you it at home?—Yes, I think I have.

37,059. Perhaps you will send it in to us?—I will if I can find it.

37,060. Will you please put your name on it and send it in. Was there any reason given why this refusal was made?—There was.

37,061. What was the reason?—Because it was not adjoining our present burial ground.

37,062. Was an offer of any land next to your present burial ground made?—Another reason was this, that they did not see that it would suit.

37,063. Was any other land offered in its stead?—No.

37,064. Has any application been made since?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,065. Is the land adjacent to your present chapel available for burial purposes?—It is not. It is not adjoining our present chapel.

37,066. No, I understand you to say that this piece of the common was not adjacent to your chapel?—No.

37,067. Is the ground that is adjacent to your chapel suitable for burial purposes?—It has been used since.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,068. That is to say, you have added it to your burial ground?—Yes, but it is not adjoining the one that we had already, for we have had to buy another plot of ground for the purpose.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,069. From whom did you get the ground that you have got now?—From the Amman Iron Company.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

37,070. Have you got a freehold or a lease?—Freehold.

37,071. Did you have to pay more for that than you would have had to pay, in reason, for the waste land?—We had no price at all for the common land. They did not give us any price, but simply refused it.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,072. May I ask whether the present piece you have got is as good in your opinion as the common would have been?—Oh, yes.

37,073. But it has cost you more probably than you expected to pay?—Yes, we had to pay a certain price per acre for it.

37,074. Would you mind mentioning the sum?—60*l.* per acre.

37,075. You purchased the freehold?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. William Thomas called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

See 38,197–38,251; and 43,170–43,212.

37,076. You are Mr. William Thomas of Pontantwn Factory, Cidweli?—Yes.

The following statement, having been previously interpreted to the witness, was then read:—

Farmers are afraid to come forward, though eager for release. Many farmers can only pay rent with borrowed money.

Scarcity of Labourers.—Servants, especially female servants, very scarce. Small farmers have to manage without any because in farms of about 20 acres they cannot afford to keep a female servant, and the farmers to begin work at 5 or 6 and continue till 8 or 9 in the night. Within a radius of 1½ miles from Pontantwn I could count 40 labourers' cottages which have gone down.

Small Farms: As a rule, much sought after, from 10 to 20 acres. The small farms (from 10 to 20 acres) average 15*s.* per acre more rent than farms of over 100 acres. There are very many applicants for small farms.

Abatements: Some landlords have made abatements varying from 5 to 20 per cent., but these were landlords who rent cheapest. Mr. Saunders, Glanrhydw; Mr. Davies, Upland; and Mr. Fitz-Williams, Van, have not to my knowledge made any abatements.

Agreements.—Agreements are stringent, with penal clauses which are never hardly put in force, because seldom transgressed by the tenant. Many have no copies of their agreements, and those who have agreements are unwilling to produce them. I have no copy of my agreement.

Chairman—continued.

Buildings.—The following, among others, are in an exceedingly bad state of repair: Ffos, the property of Mrs. Brigstocke; Ty Newydd, of Mr. Puxley, rent 36*l.*; Iscwm, of Mr. Richards, rent 80*l.* On some estates, e.g., the Brigstocke, the tenant is expected to do all the haulage free, while on others, e.g., the Glanrhydw, the materials are given by the landlord, and those only meagrely, and occasionally they pay the masons and carpenters as well.

"Rents: Rise in rents has been very general. I give a few instances:

Name of Farm.	Rent in 1844.	Present Rent.	Owner.
Lan - -	70	106	Mr. Arden.
Panteg - -	70	110	Mr. Puxley.
Gelligadrog -	120	220	Mrs. Richards.
Caegwyllt - -	30	45
Pencelli - -	120	200	Mr. Saunders.
Tanybanc - -	60	90	Mrs. Brigstocke.
Total -	470	771

Or about 70 per cent. I do not say that in all cases the average is as high as 70 per cent.

Chairman—continued.

Insecurity of Tenure.—I give the following instance of hard treatment on account of want of fixity of tenure. David Harries, a tenant of Mr. Davies, Upland, received notice three times to raise his rent. 55*l.* was the rent of Llwyn-y-gwcw at first, but he had to advance 5*l.* each notice, and at last the tenant had to leave because he could not pay his way.

Relations of Landlords and Tenants.—Unsatisfactory. This may be because the landlords are aliens in race, language, religion, and politics, and too ready to hint threats (awgrymu bygythion), and also to lend their ears (rhoddi clust o ymwrandawiad) to low and unprincipled persons, who try to wriggle into their favour by telling them tales about their tenants. I myself received letters from my landlord because I attended a meeting called together to prepare evidence to place before the Commission. (The letter was sent to Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., who has unfortunately mislaid it.) It is the popular impression that on many estates nonconformists need not apply for farms. The following facts may perhaps explain the reasons for this wide-spread belief:—1. Mr. Isaac Thomas, Blaenau, wanted a farm called Pencelli, on Mr. Saunders' estate. Mr. Peel, Ferryside, wrote for him, and the answer he received was that he was not a churchman. 2. The present tenant of Gwenipa used to attend the Methodist Chapel, and his wife was a member. Since going there he has become a churchman. 3. The present tenant of Bridge End promised to go to church for getting the Bridge. Before that time, or a year to last September, he was a member with the Calvinistic Methodists. 4. The six vacant farms during the last six years on Mr. Saunders' estate have all been given to churchmen, with the one exception of a man who promised to go to church, but after entering on the farm did not go. Letters written by Mr. Saunders, my landlord, to me were sent to the Commission. I had received a reduction of 5*l.* and a promise of a further reduction 5*l.*, but when Mr. Saunders heard that I had been to two meetings called for the purpose of preparing evidence for this Commission he wrote me a letter stating that he had only promised the 5*l.* reduction for two years, but would discontinue it and give it to someone else who would appreciate his generosity more than I did.

37,077. Have you got that letter of Mr. Saunders' with you?—After the letters were returned by the Secretary they were forwarded to Mr. Thomas E. Ellis, M.P., and unfortunately he has mislaid them.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams.—I received a telegram from Mr. Ellis last week saying that he is very sorry that he has mislaid these letters. Mr. Lloyd Morgan, M.P., saw one of the letters and returned it to him, but the others have unfortunately been lost. The witness is under the impression that Lord Carrington and the Commissioners have seen them.

There are copies in the London office, I understand, of the letters that are alleged to have been lost. (See Appendix for copy of this correspondence.)

37,078. Have you a copy of Mr. Saunders' last letter, or was that left with the others?—No, I have not a single copy of the letters. I have copies of the letters that I forwarded to Mr. Saunders, but I have not got his answers.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,079. Is Mr. Saunders resident in this county?—Yes.

37,080. Is he at Glanrhydw now; does he live there?—Yes.

37,081. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

37,082. How much land do you farm?—20 acres.

37,083. About insecurity of tenure; is Mr. Davies, of Upland, a large landowner?—I cannot say exactly. He has seven or eight farms.

37,084. He owns Glanhydw?—Yes, it is the property of Mr. Saunders.

37,085. Do you know the reason why it was the tenant left?—Yes, because he saw that the place was too dear for him, and he could not pay his rent, and that he was nearly bankrupt when he left.

37,086. What is the rent of that farm now?—I cannot say what may be the rent now.

37,087. Have you not taken any steps to inform yourself. Your contention is that it was an unfair rent, is it not?—Yes. It is unfair, because the rent has been raised three times, and it was too high when he took the farm.

37,088. And yet you cannot tell us what the rent is now?—No, I did not inquire what was the present rent.

Chairman.

37,089. What is the rent you pay for your farm, and who is your landlord?—40*l.*, and my landlord is Mr. Saunders, of Glanrhydw.

37,090. Then you have got something besides the land; have you anything besides the land?—Yes, I have a factory as well as the land.

37,091. You have a factory and 20 acres of land at 40*l.* rent?—Yes; it is 45*l.* rent now, as he says he is raising 5*l.* In the evidence which has been read he had promised 5*l.*, and that is going to be discontinued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,092. Glanrhydw has been let; I think Mr. Saunders has been living away from the county, has he not?—Yes, it was let; he lived somewhere else, I do not know where, but he has been yonder now for a twelvemonth.

Mr. Grove.

37,093. You say that 40 cottages have gone down?—Yes.

37,094. Why is that?—Because there is no work for labourers; they have moved from our district, and their houses have been allowed to fall into decay.

37,095. Do you mean there is so much depression in farming that they cannot afford to put sufficient labour on the land. Do you mean that?—Yes; they used to keep two or three more labourers than they do on the farms now, and if they engaged more labour they could not pay the rent.

37,096. Is it partly because the men go away into the industrial places to get higher wages?—Undoubtedly that is also a reason.

37,097. You say farmers are afraid to come forward. Have you actually spoken to many farmers who have told you that?—Yes, I have spoken to several farmers who are afraid of coming forward. About 12 to 15 farmers were coming at the outset to give evidence, but when they heard that their landlords were opposed, they withdrew.

37,098. You say in your statement: "Mr. "Isaac Thomas, Blaenau, wanted a farm called "Pencelli, on Mr. Saunders' estate. Mr. Peel, "Ferryside, wrote for him, and the answer he "received was, that he was not a churchman." How was that answer received, by letter or by word of mouth?—Mr. Peel received the answer by letter, but Mr. Thomas, of Blaenau, received that by word of mouth.

37,099 Mr. Peel wrote for him, and received an answer by letter. Where is that letter?—I cannot say. As far as I know, Mr. Peel has it still.

37,100. Will you ascertain that from Mr. Peel, and send it in to us?—I do not know Mr. Peel, but I will ask Mr. Thomas to ask Mr. Peel to send it in.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,101. With regard to these cases about which Mr. Grove has been questioning you, you mention three cases, and then you say that "The "six vacant farms during the last six years "have all been given to churchmen." Are those six vacant farms different ones from your numbers 1, 2, and 3?—Those six are all different. All the cases given are different, and with regard to the six, they are on Mr. Saunders' estate; that is, they differ from the other three.

37,102. Only the other three are on Mr. Saunders' estate, Penelli, Gwempa, and Bridge End?—They are all on the same estate, but I have not mentioned them on the paper.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

37,103. Are there six cases or are there nine on Mr. Saunders' estate?—The total number in these nine cases are six farms.

37,104. All on Mr. Saunders' estate?—Yes, all on Mr Saunders' estate.

37,105. Do you know any other estate where the same thing takes place?—Yes, I know of another estate, but I have been charged not to mention it.

37,106. You state that it is a popular impression that on many estates nonconformists need not apply for farms?—It is the general impression among nonconformists that it is so.

37,107. Is this grievance that you complain of one that is growing less and less or one that is growing more and more?—It is increasing now. This complaint started about six or seven years ago, and is getting worse and worse.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,108. Have the landlords shown disapproval in any way of their tenants coming forward to give evidence?—No. I do not say that they have shown it personally, but people who are supposed to know the state of their minds go about saying that it is so.

37,109. Do you think the landlords are aware that this fear exists?—Yes, I believe so. They say publicly that they are quite ready to allow the tenant farmers to come forward, but privately they say to the contrary.

37,110. Where do they say it publicly—at the rent dinners?—At the rent dinner or something of that kind they say they do not mind.

37,111. You say that farmers can only pay the rent with borrowed money; where do they borrow the money?—There are some people who have money in the parish, and they borrow money from them, merchants and so on. There are no farmers to be had yonder who can lend money.

37,112. How do the farmers stand generally with the merchants; are they much in their debt?—Yes, some of them are in debt, but I am not going to mention any of them,

37,113. When a farmer is in difficulties, who generally has to go without his due; is it the merchant or the landlord?—I do not know of any instance. I think that in the end both the landlord and the merchant get what is due to them.

37,114. If farmers are in difficulties of this kind what is your explanation why they stick to their farms?—Because they do not care to move from their farms; they prefer to remain on their farms until they have nothing rather than to leave.

37,115. Why?—Because their attachment to the place is so strong.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,116. You say that female servants are very scarce; what is the reason?—A scarcity of them is the reason.

37,117. But why are they scarce?—I cannot say. The only reason I can give is, that they go to the towns because they get more wages, and get better places.

37,118. What do the farmers pay for a female servant?—The wages vary from 10*l.* to 16*l.*

37,119. What did they use to get about 25 years ago?—A servant who gets 15*l.* now got about 5*l.* 10*s.* then.

37,120. Do you know cases where farmers have been obliged to give up, say, dairying, or anything that has been a source of profit owing to the scarcity of female servants?—No. I cannot mention any farm where it is so within my knowledge.

37,121. I mean where it has affected the dairy work of a farm-house?—Yes; they are scarce, because the farmers' wives are obliged to work from 5 o'clock in the morning to 8 or 9 o'clock at night because they cannot get anybody to help them.

37,122. Is it a fact that farmers' wives have to work harder in consequence of the difficulty in getting female servants?—Yes.

37,123. How long does a farmer's wife generally work?—From 5 or 6 o'clock in the morning till 8 or 9 o'clock at night, and often till 9 or 10 o'clock.

37,124. And on constantly, without a minute's rest?—Yes, the whole day, from the time they begin till they finish work, between 8 and 9 or 10, without rest.

37,125. Have you a copy of your agreement?—Yes, I have a copy of the agreement which I will show, but the names are not to be disclosed to anybody.

37,126. I mean your own agreement?—No, I have not a copy of my own agreement, otherwise I would bring it with me.

37,127. Does not the landlord supply the tenants on the estate with agreements?—That is how I am placed at any rate. I have no copy, and I have received no copy from them. I cannot say how it is with others.

37,128. Do you remember the clauses in the agreement?—I only recollect one clause in the agreement, and it is something to this effect, that if I ploughed up one acre of land I was to pay a fine of 10*l.* I am willing that the Commissioners should see that agreement.

37,129. According to the clauses of your agreement are you allowed to crop as you please?—I am not certain as to the agreement myself, so I cannot tell you.

37,130. How do you do it. Do you crop as you like?—Yes. I do not cultivate or do anything to the land myself, but I simply keep hay. I do not grow corn, but I merely keep hay.

37,131. Are you allowed to sell the hay?—No, I have no right to sell my hay.

37,132. Not if you returned artificial manure in its stead?—No, I do not know, because it is 14 years since I read the agreement, and I only had the agreement for one day before it was returned.

37,133. Have you never applied to sell hay on the condition that you should return artificial manure in its stead?—No.

37,134. Would you like to have done so this last season?—Yes, I should, especially this season, when hay is so dear.

37,135. Has it never occurred to you to ask the landlord or agent whether you might do so?—No, because I do not think I should be any the better if I were to ask.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,136. Following up Mr. Jones' questions, which do you consider work the harder, the tenant farmers' wives or the labourers?—Oh, the farmers' wives, by far; there is no doubt of it.

37,137. The wife is better paid, too, is she not?—By the farmer?

37,138. Yes?—No, she is not better paid, because she hardly gets anything at all.

37,139. When you had your agreement and you signed it, was it read over to you?—No, it was sent to me by Mr. Stokes, and I had to return it the next day.

37,140. Did you write a copy of that agreement when you had it in your hands?—He said he would return a copy to me.

37,141. You spoke of 40 cottages that had tumbled down. What kind of cottages were those?—Straw-thatched cottages, labourers' cottages.

37,142. Built of wood I suppose?—No, stone, and some wood; they were very roughly built.

37,143. I think you spoke rather highly of the landlords, and said the best landlords, with the cheapest land, also gave the most abatements?—Yes, that is how it is in our parishes.

37,144. Do you know of any tenants that have suffered, after they have done much haulage towards buildings on their farms, by having to leave their farms?—No, I do not know of one; I cannot remember a single instance now at any rate.

37,145. Unfortunately the letter cannot be found, I understand, but will you tell us what were the contents of the letter that you received from your landlord with regard to signing the petition against the Suspensory Bill, I think it was?—It was not with regard to a petition against the Suspensory Bill that I received the letters from Mr. Saunders, but because I had taken part in preparing evidence for the Commission. I cannot remember the whole of their contents now. He stated that he was withdrawing the 5*l.* that he had promised to give for two years, and was going to give it to someone else who would appreciate his action more, because I was attending meetings where evidence was being prepared for this Commission. He also further said that he objected to my stating anything about his estate at all; that he was not willing to allow that.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,146. To state about it, do you mean to this court?—Yes, to this court.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,147. Will you kindly give us the name of that landlord?—William Francis David Saunders, of Glanrhydw.

37,148. You say here "the six vacant farms "during the last six years have all been given "to churchmen, with the one exception of a "man who promised but did not go." Did not go to where?—He did not go to church.

37,149. How long has he since been on the farm?—I cannot say for certain, but from three to four years.

37,150. Then the landlord did not eject him because he would not go?—No, he did not eject him, because if he turned him out he could not get anybody else to pay the rent which he, the present tenant, gives.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,151. I did not quite gather what rent you pay for your holding?—It was 45*l.*, it is 40*l.* now, but it will be 45*l.* after this year. I asked for a reduction of 10*l.*; I was given 5*l.*, and I had a promise of a further reduction of another 5*l.* in about two or three years after the first reduction.

37,152. When did you ask for an abatement of 10*l.*?—May and July of last year.

37,153. That is 1893?—Yes.

37,154. Did the landlord make you any abatement in respect of the rent then due?—No, he did not, and he never will give me any either.

37,155. I understood you to say that you had received at some time or other some abatement in your rent?—Yes, the 5*l.* which I now mentioned to you.

37,156. That is the one I am asking you about?—Yes, I had that 5*l.* for two years, but it has now been withdrawn.

37,157. I just want to get at the dates. In what year did you receive the first abatement?—I was promised a reduction in July of 1892.

37,158. Did you get the promised reduction?—Yes, I had a reduction that year for the September rent, which I paid towards the end of the year, I cannot remember when.

37,159. That was before this Commission was appointed, was it not?—Yes.

37,160. Did you after this Commission had been appointed, and after this appointment had been announced, ask for another abatement?—No, I did not ask a word afterwards.

37,161. But you told me you asked in July 1893?—I made a mistake; I meant July 1892.

37,162. Then you have not since the Commission has been appointed asked for any abatement?—No, I have not.

37,163. Have the other tenants on the estate received any abatement?—I believe that some have received abatements, but it has not been made public; it is not publicly known.

37,164. You have received no abatement for the year 1893?—No, not after that one I have mentioned.

37,165. How many tenants are there, roughly speaking (I do not ask you to one or two) upon this estate?—From 12 to 14.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

37,166. In your evidence you have told us that the landlords are aliens in race, language, religion, and politics. What district are you speaking for; the parish of Cidweli or the parish of Cidweli and the surrounding parishes?—I speak particularly of the parish of Llangyndeyrn, and especially more particularly of our estate.

37,167. Llangyndeyrn is an adjoining parish to the parish of Cidweli?—Yes.

37,168. Is it the fact that the majority of the tenants and the labourers in that parish and the adjoining parish speak the Welsh language habitually?—They all speak Welsh.

37,169. What are they in religion?—They are almost all Nonconformists, with the exception of an occasional one who is obliged to go to church.

37,170. What do you say in regard to politics?—They are almost all Liberals yonder everywhere.

37,171. With regard to the landlords, whom you have described as aliens in race, are they chiefly Englishmen, or what?—It is Englishmen they are.

37,172. Do the agents of these landlords usually speak Welsh?—No, they speak English as a rule.

37,173. Then do the tenant farmers find it somewhat difficult to do business with the agent or the landlord?—Yes, they do. I think that they do experience great difficulty, and they would be far better off—they would be well off—if they were able to speak with the landlords instead of through their agents in regard to these business matters and the general work that has to be done between landlords and tenants.

37,174. Is it true that there are certain people living in the villages who curry favour with the agents by telling tales to them and so on, and who interfere in the business?—Yes, there is an instance that one said I was endeavouring to get Mr. Saunders to go against him, and I never said a word about it in the meeting.

37,175. Then there was a meeting of the tenants, was there?—No, it was not a meeting of the tenants; it was a meeting of the tenant farmers in the parish generally, and not one of Mr. Saunders' tenants went there except myself.

37,176. How do you account for the fact that none of Mr. Saunders' tenants attended a parish meeting called in reference to this Commission?—They knew that he was not willing that they should go.

37,177. How do you suggest they knew that?—He has a workman with him in his house or in his mansion, and this man tells everybody what he conceives his master's views to be.

37,178. And though it may sound absurd here, do you think that the tenant farmers really attach importance to what this workman says?—Yes, they do; they pay attention to what he says.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

37,179. Is it because of this essential division that results from the difference of language, and so forth, between the landlords and tenants that this state of suspicion arises?—I think that in some degree it arises from that at any rate.

Chairman.

There are so many witnesses coming forward that it will be necessary to sit in two courts. Therefore evidence will be taken by the Commissioners in two separate rooms. The evidence of Mr. William Thomas has raised a question of the utmost gravity and of the greatest importance. Mr. William Thomas, in his printed evidence, has said that farmers are afraid to come forward, and he will correct me if I am wrong, but I took down as his evidence that he has spoken to several farmers who were afraid to give evidence, and that there were from 12 to 15 farmers who were coming forward, and who, on hearing that their landlords were opposed to it, have withdrawn.

Witness.

Yes, I say so again.

Chairman.

37,180. That is correct?—Yes.

This is a question on which the Commissioners speak with united voice and in the plainest possible terms. I had occasion to speak on this subject at Portmadoc, and I think it will be the quickest, and perhaps the best plan, to read again what I said there. One of the witnesses said that the farmers were very glad that the Commissioners were coming round to inquire into their grievances. That was on the 16th of September 1893, at Portmadoc. But he said that so great was their fear of their landlords, and so much did they feel themselves to be in their hands, that very few of them dare come forward to give evidence lest they should incur their landlord's displeasure. That was further accentuated by a question put by Lord Kenyon, and I read this because Lord Kenyon is the only Commissioner who is not present, but he is heartily with us in our opinion upon this subject. He said, "You state there is great fear of "the landlords. I presume that is not so in "your own case, otherwise you would not be "here. You are not afraid of Lord Harlech?" The answer to that question of Lord Kenyon's was, "I hope he will not do any harm to me "after being here, for I only meant to say what "was right." Then Lord Kenyon made an observation with which all the Commissioners heartily agree. He said, "I am quite sure he will "not if he is a reasonable man." After that it was my duty, as the Chairman, to state: "We have "come here with the determination to do our "duty without favour or affection of any sort "or kind. We have come here to do the best

"we can to probe this great question to the "bottom, and though we do not for one moment "think, as I have said before, that any land-"lord would act in this way, yet, at the same "time, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that "such a thing might occur in an individual "instance." It was, therefore, my duty then, as it is now, as the Chairman of the Commission, to read section 2 and section 4 of the Act for the Better Protection of Witnesses who give evidence before any Royal Commission or any Committee of either House of Parliament or on any other inquiries. Section 2 is: "Every per-"son who commits any of the following acts "that is to say, who threatens, or in any way "punishes, damnifies, or injures, or attempts to "punish, damnify, or injure any person for "having given evidence upon any inquiry, or "on account of the evidence which he has given "upon such inquiry, shall, unless such evidence "was given in bad faith, be guilty of a mis-"demeanour, and be liable upon conviction "thereof to a maximum penalty of one hundred "pounds, or to a maximum imprisonment of "three months." Section 4 is: "It shall be "lawful for any court before which any person "may be convicted of any offence under this "Act, if it thinks fit, in addition to sentence or "punishment, by way of fine or imprison-"ment, to condemn such person to pay the "whole or any part of the costs and expenses "incurred in and about the prosecution and "conviction for the offence of which he shall be "convicted, and upon the application of the "complainant, and immediately after such con-"viction, to award to complainant any sum of "money which it may think reasonable, having "regard to all the circumstances of the case, by "way of satisfaction or compensation for any "loss of situation, wages, status, or other damni-"fication or injury suffered by the complainant "through or by means of the offence of which "such person shall be so convicted, provided "that where the case is tried before a jury such "jury shall determine what amount, if any, is "to be paid by way of satisfaction or com-"pensation." I then said: "If such a thing "comes before our notice, if an individual case "should come before our notice, it ought to be "well known that we should not hesitate at "once to put the law in force." Besides Mr. William Thomas's evidence, Mr. Thomas Owen, of Caegrossfford Farm, has stated to one of the officials of the Commission this morning that, seeing the agent of the property in court, he was not going to give any evidence. I have asked Mr. Thomas Owen whether I have his permission to state this. I have his permission, and I do state it, and if his landlord, who, I believe, is Sir Arthur Stepney, is in court I shall ask him to come forward and to give evidence in the clearest possible manner that he has not in any way, directly or indirectly, interfered with the proper right of his tenants to come forward and give evidence before this Royal Commission.

See 37,222 –37,276 41,670.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William John Wilson called and examined.

Chairman.

37,181. What are you?—I am Sir Arthur Stepney's agent.

37,182–3. You have heard the statement of one of the tenants on your estate. I will ask you this question. Have you, directly or indirectly, given any of the tenants on the estate of which you are agent to understand that either you or the landlord would rather that they should not appear before this Commission?—I have done so in no instance whatsoever; exactly the opposite.

37,184. Will you kindly state what you mean by "exactly the opposite"?—That I wished them to come forward instead of remaining behind. I think we then get more information for the benefit of the farming in South Wales.

37,185. Do you wish directly to state that you have told the tenants?—I have not told them.

37,186. That you have told the tenants of the estate on which you are agent that you wish them, or at any rate that you have no objection to their coming forward and giving evidence before the Commission?—It is perfectly understood.

37,187. I beg your pardon, how is it understood. Have you ever made it known to them?—There has been a case in which a man said, "I am going to give evidence." I said, "Do by all means," at the rent audit, and I have a witness here who will prove it, who heard me say so—my head clerk, Mr. Jeremiah Williams.

37,188. I think if you wish to bring any evidence of that sort forward you may do so. But you distinctly state before the Commission that you have given every facility to the tenants on this estate to come forward?—Certainly, every facility.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,189. Have you stated it at any public meeting?—No, I have not.

37,190. Have you sent any circular round to the tenants on the estate?—No, I have not. I do not think it is necessary.

37,191. Then when and where have you stated that you wished them to come forward?—When they asked me. When they said they were going to come forward, I said, "Do by all means." I have given no circular, and I think anybody who knows Sir Arthur Stepney's property here knows the friendly terms we are on, and that it is not necessary to do so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

37,192. Could you give us the name of any special individual that you have said that to; You speak in a general sense that they came forward and so on?—I forget the farmer's name, but the name of his farm is Llwyncynhwyra, near Llandilo. He said he had been selected by the people there to give evidence before the Land Commission. I said, "I hope you will."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,193. Do you happen to know the gentleman who is in court,—I think it is Mr. Thomas Owen?—I know him.

37,194. If the matter is so well understood as you are now saying, how is it that this gentleman, when he saw you present, was afraid to come forward?—I will tell you how perhaps this arose. Mr. Vincent had not his second secretary here; the Commission divided and he asked me if I would mind going with Mr. Griffiths into the other room, so that I might bring a true report of what was said back. Mr. Vincent will say it is so, if necessary. I went with Mr. Griffiths into the other room; Mr. Owen came in there, and I suppose he has made this statement. Mr. Vincent said that his assistant, Mr. Stephen had not come, and would I kindly do it for him. I demurred at first, and I said, "It "will be misinterpreted." He said, "Will you "take your head clerk, Mr. Williams, with you." I took no notice whatsoever; we were talking about black cattle between the calling of the witnesses, and about bringing sires down here. I have never said a word to Mr. Griffiths or anyone else as to what was taking place, and my clerk, being able to talk Welsh, was dealing with the matter. That is how it occurred. I was never more surprised in my life than when this was suggested.

37,195. Still, if it was understood, as you told us, that the tenants were at liberty to come forward, I do not understand why your presence in that room should have produced the state of mind on the part of Mr. Owen?—I do not know at all, either.

Re-examined, 41,582.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Thomas re-called and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,196. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Do I understand that the "original promise of Mr. Saunders was purely "verbal?"—He sent a message down to say that I was going to have 5*l.*

37,197 Was it in writing or not?—It was verbal

37,198. "Is it not the fact that the Cawdor, "Edwinsford, and Stepney estates are all held "by the Vaughan family, in its various "branches?"—I cannot say. I do not know anything about that, so I cannot say.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

37,199. "What landlords are not Welsh in your district?"—Mr. Jennings, Mr. Puxley—they are two Englishmen—and Mr. Brigstocke. Of course, there are not a large number of landowners yonder.

Re-examined, 41,582

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Nathaniel Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

37,200. You are a County Councillor?—Yes, my lord.

37,201. Will you kindly read your statement to the Commissioners?—Yes. I am an auctioneer and farmer, living at Tir y dail, Ammanford. I am a tenant of Lord Dynevor's, and the tenants in my neighbourhood, for which I speak, are, on the whole, on good terms with their landlords, some of the smaller owners being considered as letting at higher rents than larger landlords. Tenants are anxious to get farms on the large estates, because it is felt that once a person gets a farm on one of these estates he is secure in that farm for life. The buildings on Earl Cawdor's, Lord Dynevor's, and Mr. Dubuisson's estates, are considered good, and temporary reductions are made during bad times. Lord Dynevor, whose tenant I am, resides on his estate, and shows great kindness towards his tenants by visiting them when ill, often paying their doctor's bills, assisting them when they lose cattle or sheep by death or by dogs. Now, of late this feeling of security has been largely shaken, in consequence of farms on these large estates having been put up to auction and sold. The result often has been that the farms are purchased by persons desiring to occupy them themselves, and the tenant has had to leave without a penny of compensation. I will give you one instance on Lord Crawford's estate. He is the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres. On his estate being sold a little time back, a farm, "Gellysilver," was bought by a person wanting to go there himself, and the tenant, who had been there for years, had to leave without a penny compensation outside a few pounds given him by the new owner. To re-establish the confidence of tenants it will be necessary to have some system that will give fixity of tenure, or some custom that will bring people back to the land, and keep them working thereon instead of neglecting farms, and causing them to get into a state of dilapidation, often meaning a loss to the landlord. I consider good buildings are of the utmost importance. It matters not what a man's rent may be if he has poor and inadequate buildings. I would rather see proper and efficient buildings insisted on than a reduction in rent. I consider the present Act as being useless. There should be some definite system or custom or law, giving to every tenant fair compensation upon leaving his farm. When arbitration is resorted to and the arbitrators fail to agree upon a third person as referee, power should be given to some person in each county to appoint such third person. I would suggest the chairman of the county council for the time being. I think it is of the greatest importance that agents should be able to understand and speak the Welsh language, and be approachable at all reasonable times.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,202. You say, Mr. Jones, that the tenants feel insecure owing to so many farms being sold?—That is so.

37,203. Do you know of any instances where the landlord has given compensation to a tenant who had laid out money upon his farm when the farm was sold?—I cannot give any definite instance of that, but I understand that when part of Lord Dynevor's estate was sold Lord Dynevor did give some compensation to some of the tenants who had to leave in consequence of the sale. Still what seems to be wanting is something definite that makes it binding upon the landlord to give, or at all events to secure for the tenant fair compensation.

37,204. You mean security for his improvements?—Exactly.

37,205. It is not the duty of the new purchaser to give the tenant compensation; he takes it as it comes?—Yes, he takes it as it comes.

37,206. Then you consider the Agricultural Holdings Act has been of very little benefit in this neighbourhood?—Very little benefit at all. I do not think half the tenants know it. I take it they do know that some kind of Act is in existence, but I do not think the bulk of them know the provisions of the Act at all.

37,207. Then you do not approve of a Land Court I suppose to settle a moderate rent?—That seems to be a very difficult question. I am half inclined to think that a Land Court would possibly bring to an end the good feeling that now exists between the better landlords and their tenants. It is possible that it would do so.

Mr. Grove.

37,208. Would that be so, if the landlord and the tenant always try to agree to terms mutually between themselves, and then only went to a Land Court in case of need?—Well. I take it that on the better estates the tenants and the landlords generally do come to terms and do understand each other. Of course upon estates where the landlord is considered severe and harsh, I take it a Land Court there would possibly be of protection to the tenant, and give him that which he fails to get from his landlord.

37,209. But if it was understood, as it would be no doubt, that they only went to a Land Court in case of need, does not that do away with a great deal of the objection which the first remark would suggest, do you think?—It would possibly do that, because, of course, the good landlords would not want to appeal to the Land Court, nor the tenants under those landlords. Of course I only said that possibly the good feeling which is existing may be affected by the Land Courts.

37,210. But if the Land Court was only made use of when it was really necessary to do so, that would not interfere with the relations of a good tenant and a good landlord?—No, certainly not.

37,211. You spoke of a farm that was sold, and the sitting tenant had to leave it?—Yes.

37,212. And you said that he left without any compensation?—Yes.

37,213. Do you know what amount of improvements he put into that farm?—He had been living in that farm for nearly 20 years, and I myself had known the farm during very nearly the whole of that time, and the farm had certainly been improved to a large extent by grubbing up roots and one thing and the other, and hedges had been put in order and gates had been placed there by the tenant, and no doubt the farm had been enhanced in value, and when it was put up by auction it was worth more money than it was when the tenant took it.

37,214. Then you consider he was a good farmer, and that he improved the place?—Yes, exactly.

Chairman.

37,215. The following question is put by Mr. J. Ll. Thomas: "Is it a fact that the pollu-" tion of the river Loughor causes a great loss " to farmers on its banks between Pantyffynon " and Loughor? If so, what causes such " pollution, and what remedy would you " recommend"?—I am not a member of the committee that took this question up under the county council, but the report of that committee came before the county council, and they did say that the river was polluted between Pantyffynon and Pontardulais by the vitriol or washings of vitriol that came from the different tinworks upon the river. I think that committee recommended that the county council should take no action in the matter, because they felt, I think—I am speaking now out of book—but I think they gave it as their reason, that they thought the law was rather indefinite upon the point, and the council would rather be risking a case by trying the point. With respect to doing something to do away with that pollution, it is a very difficult matter. In some works I think it could be done easier than in others; take, for instance, the Pantyffynon works, those works are on a corner where two rivers meet, and I have no doubt to a certain extent this polluted water has to get into the river earlier than it would from other works that are at a greater distance from the river and are able to run their water down a long way through culverts or ditches before it gets into the river.

Mr. Grove.

37,216. I will just ask you one question, because I come from Monmouthshire, where we have a great deal of the same sort of thing. Do you know whether at the tin-works they try to get the copperas out of that acid?—I think they do in nearly all the tin-works that I know.

Chairman.

37,217. Then the following are questions by Mr. W. Llewelyn Williams: "Do you know of " cases where houses are built without any " definite agreement or lease between the land-" lord and tenant?"—On Lord Cawdor's estate I believe that nearly the whole of the village of Llandebie has been built upon the word of mouth of his lordship; no leases have been granted, only I think now there is a new agent appointed upon the Cawdor estate, and I have heard (and I believe it to be a fact) that he has given it as his opinion that leases should be granted, and that they would be made retrospective. But up to now I think the whole of the village has been built without any lease at all.

37,218. "Do you know of any other cases " than on Lord Cawdor's estate where farms " have been sold. If so, were the tenants certain " to receive compensation?"—I do not personally know about Lord Cawdor's estate, other than that I have seen farms upon his lordship's estate advertised for sale by public auction. On Lord Dynevor's estate farms were sold, and as I said just now, I am not in a position to prove it, but I believe his lordship did give some amount of compensation to tenants who had to leave, but I cannot give the amount as I have not had the figures.

37,219. "Do you know of any nonconformist " going to church upon being given a farm under " a churchman?"—Yes, I think I can answer that question. I take it you want names.

37,220. No, we will take it you have known such cases?—I do not know that there is any reason why the names should not be given; I am quite willing to give the names if you like.

37,221. Of course it would be better if you would, but we do not know whether the parties would object?—There is a gentleman in the county named Mr. Falconer—Mr. Robert Falconer, I think—who lived at a farm called Gwempa, down at Cidweli; I have been given to understand that he attended the Methodist Chapel for some years. He moved up to a farm adjoining my farm; the name of that farm is

Chairman—continued.

Myddynfych, and it is owned by a clergyman in Herefordshire. Since Mr. Falconer came to that farm to live he and all his family, barring one son, have gone to church.

Chairman—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Owen called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

37,180 ,195; 270.

37,222. Where do you live?—Caegrosffordd, Llanelly.

37,223. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

37,224. How many acres do you farm?—12 acres and some perches.

37,226. Under what landlord?—Sir Arthur Stepney.

37,227 Is there anything that you particularly wish to say about agriculture, whether you are in favour of a Land Court, and so on. Tell us what it is you wish to state?—The place has been in my family since my grandmother and grandmother's time; I have made a lot of improvements there myself. In my grandfather's time the rent was 5*l.* a year, but when Mr. Chambers became the owner it was raised to 10*l.*

37,228. Did Mr. Chambers buy the estate?—I cannot say.

37,229. But how did Mr. Chambers raise the rent? Is he the agent or the landlord, or what?—He was the landlord. At that time there was no farm-house on the land.

37,230. But how many years ago was it raised to be 10*l.*?—About 70 years ago, more or less.

37,231. Who built the house?—My uncle who lived there, William Davies, agreed to pay 14*l.* a year.

37,232. Your uncle was the tenant?—He was tenant at the time, and he agreed to pay 14*l.* a year for it.

37,233 What year was that in?—He built the house and planted an orchard.

37,234. He agreed to pay 14*l.* a year and plant an orchard; how many years ago was that?—That I cannot say.

37,235. But about?—It was near 70 years ago. Mr. Chambers told him to go on building the house and planting the orchard.

37,236. Did Mr. Chambers help him in any any?—When the house had been built and the orchard planted and he got his lease, the rent was raised. He had been promised the place at 14*l.*, but the rent was given at 20*l.* instead of 14*l.*

37,237. But did Mr. Chambers help him to build the house or plant the orchard?—No. Mr. Chambers did not help him at all, but the understanding was that he should get it at 14*l.* a year.

37,238. And when the house was built Mr. Chambers raised the rent?—Yes; when he got the lease the rent was 20*l.*

37,239. And that is the rent it has remained at ever since?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

37,240. Do you know how long the lease was?—It was a three lives lease.

37,241. How many lives are there in the lease left?—Oh, they have all gone.

37,242. What is your tenancy now under Sir Arthur?—The house has gone out of repair. I asked for repairs, but I could not get any.

37,243. When did you ask, and whom did you ask, Sir Arthur?—I asked Mr. Gaussen, who was the agent at that time, about 10 years ago. About nine or 10 years ago I received a lease from Sir Arthur Stepney for 40 years.

37,244. Instead of having any repairs done?—I was supposed to spend 70*l.* in repairing the house.

37,245. I understand you built the house entirely at your own expense?—Yes, I did.

37,246. It then got into bad repair?—My uncle built the first house; that went out of repair, and I repaired it again.

37,247. At a cost of 70*l.*?—70*l.* I had to spend on it for getting the lease; but when I began repairing the house the masons condemned it, and said I could not do anything without pulling it down altogether, because they had been mining under it. The present house, therefore, has cost me 136*l.*

37,248. Then, practically, you and your family have built the house twice over, and it is not your own?—I am in it now.

37,249. But you have only a 40 years lease; how many years remain of that lease?—About 30 years. I am not quite certain, but it is about 30 years.

37,250. Is there anything else you would like to say?—Besides that, I have built some outhouses. I have built the cow-house and pig-styes. I did not build the cow-house; I put a roof on to the cow-house. I built a pig-stye and a stable and a cart-house. All the improvements that I made there come up to about 250*l.*

37,251. Practically speaking, your landlord has done nothing except the walls of cow-house?—The old walls of the cow-house were there since my uncle's time. Messrs. Nevill, Druce, & Co., patched up the walls of the cow-house, because they had been working in the ground and injuring the walls; but I supplied all the timber for the cow-house. The condition of my lease is that if any land is required for building houses or for working minerals I must give it up at a month's notice. There was at one time a canal running through the land. Complaint was made that the water from the canal leaked into a coal-mine, and therefore the company determined to fill it up, and they filled it up with stones from the works, and I improved that place. I levelled the embankment and made it a presentable place, and then I had a month's notice that my landlord wanted it for building purposes. I sent in a bill for 10*l.* which I had paid to two workmen, somewhere about 10*l.*, for levelling this and putting a face on it, putting sward and so on. This did not represent all my expenses, because I had carted very many loads, hundreds of loads, to this. I sent in a claim for 10*l.*, which was disallowed.

37,252. Do you consider the terms and the conditions under which you hold your land fair and just to yourself as tenant?—No, I do not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,253. In what parish is your holding?—In the parish of Llanelly.

37,254. Has any abatement ever been made in your rent?—I have never received any. They have made an abatement to some this year, but I have received none.

37,255. Why have you received none if others have had abatements?—That is a question that I cannot answer.

37,256. Have you asked for it?—I asked for a small field instead of the acres that were taken away from me, in order that I might turn out my cattle, because the land I have now is very often under water during winter, and they laughed at me.

37,257. Had you any dispute ever with the landlord?—No never.

37,258. Is the Stepney estate chiefly in this parish?—There are a few farms down our way.

37,259. But I thought you were in Llanelly parish?—Yes; there are some others—Pencoed, Bryn, and so on.

37,260. I take it that the parish of Llanelly is, like the other parishes, Welsh speaking?—It is a Welsh parish, but the children in the schools begin to speak English pretty well now.

37,261. What language is habitually used by the tenant farmers and labourers?—The Welsh language.

37,262. Are they chiefly nonconformist in religion?—Yes, most of them.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,263. Your chief complaint is that your uncle had been promised a lease at 14*l.* a year, and when he went to get the lease he found that instead of 14*l.* he had to pay 20*l.*, is that it?—Yes. He did not get the lease till he had finished building the house and planting the orchard. Mr. Chambers told him to go on with building the house and planting the orchard, and then he would get a lease.

37,264. But he was never told that he would have to pay 20*l.* a year?—He would not have built it at all if he had known.

37,265. Then, in your case, you think the agreement is rather harsh at present?—I would have been satisfied if I had been allowed to keep the land where I had laboured so much and spent so much in improving.

37,266. Did you make any complaint against that clause in the agreement, that you were to leave at one month's notice?—I would not have objected if the land was taken away from me for the purpose of building, or for the purpose of working minerals, but the land that was taken from me is now in the hands of a company, and they graze it.

37,267. Did they not tell you that it was for building purposes that it was taken?—That was the notice I had. The company have placed a small engine in the corner of one field to haul up coal. There was no need for this engine to be placed where it is; it would have been better if it were placed on another field, which belongs to Sir John Llewelyn, of Penllergaer. The collieries are all on the land of Sir John Llewelyn, of Penllergaer.

Chairman.

37,268. Some questions are handed up by Mr. Stephen: "Are you not an engine-driver in the tin-works?"—Yes.

37,269. "Is not your holding accommodation "land next to the railway station?"—No, there is no accommodation at all in it, as far as I can see.

37,270. I will ask the question again: "Is "not your holding accommodation land next to "the railway station?"—The land is not near the station, but the house and garden are near the station.

37,271. "Is not much of the property sur-"rounding your house building property in a "populous district?"—Yes, there is some building going on on the side of the turnpike road, but my land does not adjoin the turnpike road.

37,272. "Did you not receive compensation "for damage caused by subsidence from the "mining company?"—Yes, I did. Some of the land is under the rubbish tip from the coal mine, and I have received compensation for that from the company.

37,273. "Have you any papers, or have you "ever seen any papers, relating to the terms on "which your uncle got a lease?"—No, I have not got any papers, but I have heard him speak of it many times.

37,274. "Is not the land taken by the com-"pany used for tipping purposes?"—They have not tipped anything on it, but, as I have said, they have got an engine there.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,275. Is there any truth in what we have heard this afternoon, that some of Sir Arthur's tenants are afraid to come forward and give evidence?—I cannot speak about anybody except about myself. I did not intend to give evidence when I came down here to-day, but one of the Commissioners asked me if I was going to give evidence, and I said that I was not going to give evidence, because Mr. Wilson was present, the agent of Sir Arthur.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

37,276. What objection had you to Mr Wilson being present?—I thought that he would revenge himself on me more than he has done.

The witness withdrew.

Rev. Benjamin Evans called and examined.

Chairman.

37,277. You are an Independent minister?—Yes.

37,278. You have got your evidence in print here?—Yes.

37,279. Will you kindly read it to the Commissioners?—I submit evidence relating to Cil-a-Gwyn, Llanelly ——

37,280. Are you a farmer as well?—No; I had better explain my position. I have been asked by the landlady, Mrs. James, to appear here on behalf of her son, who is to-day at Carmarthen, and unable to attend.

37,281. Then will you proceed?—The rent, since 1854 is 190*l.*, with 10 per cent. abatement. Rent still too high, as rates, taxes, and labour have gone up, and farm produce gone down. Rent could not be paid were it not that three sons and two daughters work at home for nothing. The tenant has suffered enormously for the last 25 years for want of repairs. He has had to build out-houses, such as boiler-house, pantry, turnip-house, small stable for colts, open shed for store cattle, back kitchen, water closet &c. He also built an open shed for store cattle, the landlord supplying the timber. He had a small cart-house to hold two carts up to 1888; in that year he had to turn it into a chaff-room, leaving him without a cart-house to this day, which is a great loss, as the carts and implements are left out throughout the year. Prior to 1889 the barn was in a bad condition, water leaking through the roof and walls, which occasionally caused much loss. In 1889 he had to sell a part of the crops because he could not use the barn. In 1889, however, it was repaired by the landlord, and finished in 1890. The tenant did the haulage free of charge. This year he has had several changes, and the haulage was again done by him, except two loads. He is still in want of accommodation for the calves, being obliged to keep the calves in the open space (côr) of the cowhouse, in front of the cows.

Mr. Grove.

37,282. You say the rent since 1854 has been 190*l.*, with 10 per cent. abatement. Do we understand that the abatement has been allowed for the last 40 years?—No, it has been an occasional abatement, I believe, for between six and 10 audits, so far as I understand the question.

37,283. Are you acquainted with the way in which the agents give notice. Do they give notice when they are going to make an abatement?—I cannot say with regard to abatements.

37,284. We have had evidence that notice is given some three or four months before, so that the farmer need not get ready any more money than he really wants to pay on the rent day, which is a great advantage; but you do not know anything about that?—No, I do not.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,285. You say the tenant has laid out much money in building. On what security has he laid out this money. Has he any lease?—No, he has no lease.

37,286. No agreement?—I do not believe there is an agreement.

37,287. Who is the landlord?—Mr. Mansel Lewis.

37,288. Then his word is considered as good as a lease, I suppose?—Well, I suppose so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Hughes called and examined.

Chairman.

37,289. Do you wish to give some evidence before the Commissioners?—Yes.

37,290. Will you kindly tell us what about?—With regard to the foreshore and the harbour.

Chairman—continued.

37,291. Will you tell us where you live?—Richard Street. See evidence of next two witnesses.

37,292. Are you a member of the county council or the town council?—I am chairman of the Harbour Commissioners.

Chairman—continued.

37,293. And a member of the county council?—Of the local board.

37,294. What would you like to tell us?—Perhaps I had better read what I have written here.

37,295. If you please?—The commissioners have spent a large sum of money on works for the maintenance of the depth in the harbour and channel leading thereto from sea. Despite the fact that the jurisdiction of the commissioners extends by Act of Parliament to the limit of tidal waters, the natural tidal capacity has been reduced by private parties, and the commissioners have been compelled to spend large sums of money over scouring reservoirs to compensate for that reduction. These reservoirs have not been so successful in maintaining the depth in the harbour which existed previous to the above-mentioned encroachments, in consequence of their not being so advantageously situated for scouring the channel in the harbour. To mitigate the prejudicial effect of the encroachments, the commissioners have in the past been compelled to lease certain tidal lands from the Crown for the disposal of slag, which is the refuse from one of the staple industries of the district, the disposal of which has in the past, and is at present, encroaching upon the tidal portion of the harbour, and resulting in damage thereto. The apparently anomalous fact exists that all a private individual requires to do in order to be entitled to encroach upon the limits of jurisdiction of the Harbour Commissioners, as defined by Act of Parliament, is to obtain a lease of the foreshore from the riparian owner or owner of land contiguous to the tidal portion of the estuary. So long as this encroachment is permitted under existing circumstances the extinction of the harbour is simply a matter of time. The prejudicial effects of indiscriminate reduction of tidal capacity in a harbour has been placed beyond doubt. The commissioners have jurisdiction over the channel from sea to Llanelly and the small shipping places above. The channel at present wanders about and changes its course, to the advantage of no one and the incalculable harm of the port and harbour of the town and district of Llanelly. It would appear that as the channel alters its course the ownership of the foreshore alters. The maintenance of a defined channel would be of inestimable value to landowners themselves, and the Llanelly Harbour Commissioners, who practically represent a large ratepaying community, having a scheme in course of execution for obtaining this object by means of training walls across sand-banks, which are at present in undisputed possession of the waters of the Atlantic, are hampered by the payment of subsidies to the reputed owners of these sand-banks before they can carry out the works so vitally affecting the prosperity of the district and the value of the land in proximity to the channel. It is therefore submitted, that had the commissioners an interest in the foreshore, the value of which is dependent upon the improvement works of the commissioners, the port and district would benefit without harm to any one. The case of the River Tees on the east coast may be advanced as a precedent for such a suggestion. The jurisdiction of the Tees Conservancy Commissioners extended as far as the river was tidal, the line of high water ordinary spring tides being their boundary. Upon the Tees, as in the Burry Inlet, there existed many acres of waste and tide-washed lands. By the reclamation and sale of these the said commissioners, after their available funds had been exhausted, were enabled to raise more funds for training and dredging and otherwise improving the channel and port. 2,600 acres of land have been reclaimed there from the estuary, at a cost of 110,000*l.*; 1,200 acres had in 1889 been sold for the sum of 209,432*l.* Of this sum, the Tees Conservancy received one-half, the riparian one-fourth, and the Crown-one fourth. There then remained 1,400 acres unsold, which has since to a great extent been sold or leased to the promoters of salt industries, rock salt having been discovered under the reclaimed land. But for the interest which the commissioners had in this land it might have remained waste to this day, the funds from the mortgage or sale of which contributed to the improvement works carried on in the harbour; and the facilities afforded by the improved waterway are responsible for the opening and development of the Cleveland iron and salt, shipbuilding, and other industries on its banks, and the development of the town of Middlesbro', with its 80,000 inhabitants, which 70 years ago was represented by a farm-house. The interest of the Commissioners of the Llanelly Harbour and Burry Navigation in the port is the same as that of the Commissioners for the port of the Tees, namely, the levying of dues on the shipping for the buoying and lighting and improvement of the channel. It is then submitted that their interest in the foreshore should be the same, failing which they should at least have the right of pre-emption of the foreshore rights from the Crown.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,296. Do you suggest any further legislation?—Well, I thought we would avail ourselves of the opportunity of your presence to propose that.

37,297. Yes. What suggestion do you make in regard to the existing law?—We believe the object of the Commission is to legislate on the lines laid down by the parties who come here to offer suggestions, and I think that the suggestions contained in the few remarks I have made may be an inducement to you to recommend legislation in future on these lines—that a ratepaying community, if they carry on constructive works, should have the first claim on any reclaimed land. I may say it is the intention of the Llanelly Harbour Commissioners to construct works in the near future, which, as well as improving the harbour and the estuary, will reclaim a lot of what is at present waste land.

Mr. Grove.

37,298. Does that statement define the boundaries of the port of Llanelly?—Yes, it embraces the whole of the estuary.

37,299. Then you speak of the reputed owners of sand-banks. Do you suggest that there is a question of ownership?—Well, there are several riparian owners. We have from time to time, when carrying out the work of laying down training banks, had to get their consent, and also pay them subsidies for the tipping of slag.

37,300. You spoke about the experience of the Tees. That is a very large experience, and a very valuable one. Where do you get your details from. Is that in a Parliamentary paper that we can avail ourselves of?—Yes.

37,301. So that the whole of that can be brought before us?—Yes.

37,302. There you say they reclaimed by using, if I remember rightly, cinder from the blast furnaces?—Yes, that is to say, works of a similar nature to what we are carrying out here.

37,303. And they have reclaimed a very large tract of land which they have subsequently sold at a considerable profit?—Yes.

37,304. So that they have done this immense amount of good at the same time that they have been able almost to pay for the cost of doing it?—That is so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. George Blake called and examined.

Chairman.

37,305. Whom do you represent?—I represent Mr. Mansel Lewis, the owner of the foreshore.

37,306. Is he the owner of the whole of the foreshore?—Yes, down to low-water mark.

37,307. Do you wish to say anything upon what has been said by the last witness?—I wish to specifically rebut a statement made by Mr. Hughes, evidently under a misapprehension of the facts. Mr. Mansel Lewis claims to be the owner of the whole of the foreshore to the seaward of the Great Western Railway; right away down to low-water mark. With regard to the improvements which the commissioners have in contemplation, I submit that they can only be made with the consent of Mr. Lewis. If the result is anything in the direction that Mr. Hughes states, in my opinion I may say that Mr. Lewis's consent would be forthcoming as a matter of course, his own interests being identical with those of the Harbour Commissioners and the ratepayers. With your lordship's permission, I will show you a map which is attached to a deed of grant dated the 4th March 1866. It is a deed of grant from the Crown to Mr. Mansel Lewis, and, with your permission, I will explain a part of the map.

37,308. Is this one of the grants in which the Crown has given the foreshore to a private individual?—Yes, I wish specifically to rebut Mr. Hughes' statement in reference to the difference in the tidal points. He said that the foreshore boundary fluctuates. What I wish to emphasise is that in 1866 that (pointing) was a defined line of high-water mark, this was the ascertained and defined limit of medium of high-water mark. A point is here given, point CCC, which represents the then point of low-water mark. Those are the specific points in which Mr. Lewis claims absolute private interest, and as I gather from Mr. Hughes' remarks, he rather begrudged Mr. Lewis's claim in that respect.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,309. Was this grant given in consequence of some litigation that had taken place?—This grant is really a compromise. Litigation had been going on for many years with the whole of the frontagers to the land between Pembery and Llanelly. Mr. David Lewis, the father of the present owner, successfully contended with the Crown up to a certain point, when he then submitted to a compromise, the terms of the compromise being that the Crown gave Mr. Lewis an absolute grant in respect of the land, the surface points of which are here and here, together with the whole of the minerals. Mr. Lewis accepted a grant of the surface only, and gave to the Crown any rights which he might have in anything underlying the surface to the seaward of the railway wall. Of course I am apprehensive that the effect of Mr. Hughes' proposal will be that the commissioners will interfere with these rights and limits, and I thought perhaps you would allow me to make this statement, and I thank you for the opportunity.

37,310. That is a different case from the case of Swansea, where practically legal rights were claimed. Mr. Mansel Lewis only claimed, as I understand, the ordinary proprietary rights?—Yes, those acquired by grant from the Crown.

Mr. Grove.

37,311. Supposing that the coast advances or recedes permanently would those lines marked on the map there of high water and low water be altered in any way?—I think so.

Mr. Grove—continued.

37,312. You do?—I beg your pardon, not those lines.

37,313. Those are fixed?—Those are fixed points.

Mr. Grove—continued.

37,314. So that the effect of the tide would not alter those?—Mr. Hughes' statement is not correct in that respect, because the boundary is now within certain well defined points.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

See evidence of the two preceding witnesses.

37,315. What standing have you in Buryport?—I am a surveyor in Buryport, and I represent the overseers of the parish.

37,316. You are a surveyor?—Living at Buryport.

37,317. You are surveyor and overseer of the parish?—No, I represent them here.

37,318. What do you wish to tell the Commissioners?—The overseers wish to claim the portion coloured green on that plan. That is the portion of the foreshore south of the Great Western Railway. There are about 300 acres of land that have been reclaimed from the sea during the last 20 or 30 years. In the interests of the parish they think it ought to become their property. That black mark represents a bank of slag carried on by the sea from the copper works, and has been the means of reclaiming a great portion of that land. It is about a mile long.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,319. You are one of the overseers?—No, I represent the overseers. They asked me to attend.

37,320. The overseers of what?—The overseers of the parish. They asked me to attend on their behalf. There have been several meetings in connexion with parish property lately at Buryport, and this is the outcome of one of those meetings.

37,321. But this is an accretion to the land by the receding of the sea to which I suppose ordinary legal doctrines will apply?—The parish think they ought to claim it, because there are a great number of sheep grazing there every day, and the parish receives no benefit in the shape of rates and taxes from it.

37,322. I am afraid that upon that statement only the ordinary legal doctrines must apply?—Yes. We thought that if any legislation takes place as the outcome of this Commission we should be put upon the same footing as other people.

37,323. If there is no other owner of the foreshore you will find that the Crown has rights, and I should recommend your looking at the evidence that was given before us in London by one of the officials of the Board of Trade, Mr. Charles Cecil Trevor, the Assistant Secretary to the Board of Trade, upon this matter of foreshore. You might possibly find an application to the Crown would lead to the protection of your interest. I do not know, but it might be worth your while to consider that evidence.

See 27,94

Chairman.

Mr. Trevor gave evidence on Friday, January the 26th of the present year.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

You had better read his evidence. It is very full evidence of the treatment of foreshores by the Crown according to its policy. You will incidentally gather from that the law bearing on the subject. You might also look at the evidence of Mr. Sowray the late Principal Clerk to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests.

See 27,56

The Witness.

I am much obliged to you.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Llandilo.

Llanelly, 16th April, 1894.

Second Court.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART. (IN THE CHAIR.)

Professor RHYS, M.A., LL.D
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. THOMAS JENKINS called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,324. Have you given your evidence in Welsh before one of the Commissioners?—Yes.

37,325. And is this a correct statement of your evidence?—I have more to give.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence of Thomas Jenkins, butcher, Panteg, Felin Foel: I submit the following resolutions, which were unanimously passed at a public meeting of tenant farmers convened by publication in all the chapels of the rural district of the parish of Llanelly), held at Felinfoel, Monday evening, April 2nd, 1894, and which were ordered to be sent to the Secretary of the Land Commission:

1. "That in our opinion, the rents generally are too high, as the wages of servants are much higher now than they have ever been, rates constantly increasing, and the price of stock greatly reduced.
2. That, in our opinion, the farmers feel a want of protection against increased rents on account of improvements carried out by tenants.
3. That, when farms are sold, the new landlords invariably aim at increasing the rents, and no compensation is paid the tenant for improvement.
4. That a Land Court should be established for Wales.
5. That labour is more scarce now than it has been for the last 50 years, inasmuch as cottages have been allowed to become ruins.
6. That where a remission in rents is made to tenants, no reduction can be obtained in rates, as the old assessments remain the same.
7. That, in our opinion, neither stamping foreign produce nor placing duties on them will benefit the tenant farmers.
8. That tenant farmers will not benefit by establishing butter factories.

JOHN JAMES,
Chairman of the meeting."

I also wish to give evidence on the inconvenience and the losses which tenants suffer through bad buildings, and the injustice with which farmers are treated who have improved their farms, by being given notice to quit on the ground that the rent is too cheap. Witness will also speak of the loss suffered by some farmers through rabbits, game, and haulage of timber, and absence of compensation. He will also give instances where farms which were improved by the tenant were sold by the landlord without any compensation being paid to the tenant.

37,326. Do you wish to add to that?—I wish to add what is contained in these written documents. I appear on behalf of Mr. James Anthony, tenant farmer of Gellylysyed, whose landlord is Mr. C. W. M. Lewis. This is the evidence of Mr. Anthony.

37,327. Is this the evidence of another person who might be here?—He cannot be here, but I can verify everything he states.

The following statement was read:—
"Evidence of Mr. James Anthony, of Gellyly-
" syed, a tenant farmer under Mr. C. W.
" M. Lewis: My father took the farm in " 1882. The buildings were in a bad state
" at the time and he was promised that they " should be repaired during the first six " months, but nothing has been done so far.
" We have, through the bad state of the build" ings, suffered great inconvenience and a great " deal of loss; we have had a good deal of loss
" in cattle and in corn, and we lost two fat
" oxen because we had not a proper place
" wherein they might be protected from the " weather. We have suffered loss in corn owing " to the bad state of the barn. We have had " no cart-house at all since 1884, when the wind
" blew it down. The pig-styes are so bad that " we have not been able to keep pigs for some " considerable time, which is also a great loss.
" With regard to the land, it had been greatly " neglected and a good deal of it had been " allowed to run waste and grow wild. The " two previous tenants had been there only two

" years respectively, and in order to meet the " then bad state of the land we had twenty tons of " lime from the landlord. The hedges or walls " were in a very bad state at the time, and " there was hardly a gate on the place. New " gates were promised at once, but we did not " get one. We have by this time cleaned a " good deal of the land and made drains on part " of it, and also have limed and put manure and " raised fences on it. In order to do this we have " been obliged to live hard and work hard, and no " one did eat the bread of idleness. I worked at " home without wages, and I did this because we " thought that it would be an advantage to us " in the future, and now after suffering the " inconvenience and the loss through the bad " state of the buildings and through cleaning " and bringing the farm to a good condition and " enclosing it, I have been served with a notice " to quit without any reason being given " beyond that the rent of the farm is too low."

37,328. This all refers to Mr. Anthony?—Yes, that is all Mr. Anthony's statement. Then I give evidence on behalf of Mrs. Mark Bartlett.

37,329. Could Mrs. Bartlett have been here herself to give this evidence?—It happens to be a very inconvenient day in this district in consequence of the John Brown Fair at Carmarthen. I can give evidence about Caemawr, near Llanelly.

37,330. Do you mean that you personally know the facts?—I do with the exception of the first rent 31 years ago, but I had it from Mrs. Bartlett herself.

The following statement was then read:—" Caemawr, near Llanelly; tenant, Mrs. " Mark Bartlett; owner Mr. W. Davies, sta- " tioner, Llanelly. This property first of all " belonged to the Dundas estate. When Mr. " David Bonnell, the first husband of Mrs. " Bartlett, took the farm some 31 years ago the " rent was 50*l.* In a few years it was raised to " 60*l.*, and soon afterwards the place was sold " to Mr. Lewis, of Stradey, and then the rent " was raised to 80*l.*, and in some three or four " years after this, without any choice of their " own, they were obliged to take 18 acres of " other land which was not in good condition " for 21*l.*, which made the rent altogether 101*l.* " At the end of the year 1892 the farm was " sold to Mr. W. Davies, stationer, of Llanelly, " with the exception of 11 acres, for the sum of " 3,150*l.* The present rent is 100*l.* The farm " which 31 years ago was taken for 50*l.* is now, " with 7 other acres, 100*l.* in rent. Mr. and " Mrs. Bartlett say that they feel that they " have brought all this on themselves by their " own continual efforts to improve the land, " that they have not made anything for them- " selves, and that they are obliged, much as " they are attached to the place, to give it up " because they are unable to pay the rent."

37,331. You are a butcher yourself?—Yes.

37,332. Do you occupy any land?—No, I do not. There is another thing I can speak of in reference to Mr. H. Bowen, of Berllan Dywell, Felin Foel.

37,333. What is the reason for his not attending?—I cannot say why he does not come forward. He told me he would be here, and if he could not be here he asked me to read it for him.

37,334. Do you testify to the facts of your own personal knowledge, or is it merely hearsay?—This is not hearsay. I am able entirely to corroborate everything, because I was born in the place.

37,335. We will take anything which comes within your own knowledge?—This does.

The statement was read as follows:—" H. Bowen, Berllan Dywell, Felin Foel: " He took " the farm of Cwtta, near Llanelly, on the " Stradey estate, 23 years ago. It had been " unlet for two years, and the crop for two years " was sold for 13*l.* He took it at 30*l.* on the " promise that repairs were to be made at once. " But this was not done for 16 years. The land " when he took it was a wilderness, without a " hedge on it; he kept people to make hedges and " clean it, and made it one of the best little farms " in the whole district. It was sold two years ago " for 1,200*l.* (with the exception of 3 acres) to " Mr. W. Williams, Tirbuan, Felin Foel, and " because he refused to pay the price Mr. Williams " asked, he had to leave. The present tenant " pays 45*l.* for the farm and 3*l.* to Mr. Mansel " Lewis for the 3 acres unsold. The whole rent " on the farm is now, therefore, 48*l.*"

37,336. You have added at the end of your evidence this: " The witness will also give " evidence on the inconvenience and the losses " which tenants suffer through bad buildings, " and the injustice with which farmers are " treated who have improved their farms, by " being given notice to quit on the ground that " the rent is too cheap." Have you anything to add to that?—I meant to say that the evidence by Mr. James Anthony confirms what I state in my own evidence.

37,337. Do you say anything with reference to the loss suffered through rabbits?—That has to be withdrawn. That I have not stated anything about. I have kept it back. There are not many rabbits in the village, but there are very many in the neighbourhood.

37,338. For my own satisfaction, I should like to ask you the question, do not the tenants kill them of their own accord when they like?—They cannot under some circumstances.

37,339. What are those circumstances?—The woods or cover surround the land, and there are no holes between the woods and the farm land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,340. No holes or burrows in the fences?—Between the woods and the land.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,341. Do you mean that they cannot trap them on their own land?—That is it.

37,342. Where is that?—That is on Gellifechan, part of the Stradey estate.

37,343. That is not near Berllan Dywell, Felin Foel, is it?—It is not very far off.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,344. There is one other question arising out of your evidence. You say you can give instances where farms have been improved by the tenant, sold by the landlord, and no compensation paid to the tenant?—I meant the farms upon which I have given evidence, and also there are others.

37,345. Do you know of others?—Oh, yes, there is another farm adjoining.

37,346. What is it called?—Ysgybor isa.

37,347. Were there many tenant farmers at this meeting?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,348. How many?—I cannot give the number.

37,349. One hundred?—No.

37,350. Fifty?—Say 40. There have been several meetings held there.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,351. How many tenant farmers would there be living within reach of it that you could expect to come? Supposing they were all to come how many would there be?—I cannot say exactly—50 or 60.

37,352. There would be 50 or 60 altogether?—There might be more.

37,353. Then 40 out of 50 or 60 was a good meeting?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,354. You say, "That, in our opinion, the "rents generally are too high, as the wages of "servants are much higher now than they have "ever been, rates constantly increasing, and the "price of stock greatly reduced." Have the landlords recognised the bad times by making abatements in the rent in your district?—Yes, some.

37,355. To what extent?—Some give 5 per cent. and other 10 per cent.

37,356. How many give over 10 per cent?—I do not know of any over 10 per cent.

37,357. When did the abatements commence?—I cannot say exactly; two or three years ago.

37,358. 1886?—No.

37,359. After?—Yes, after.

37,360. Nothing before?—No, I do not remember anything.

37,361. What reductions have been made this last year, say the last two audits?—5 per cent. and 10 per cent.

37,362. You do not know of any case of permanent reduction?—No, not one.

37,363. Do you know whether the tenants on any of these estates have combined to ask for a reduction in rent from their landlords?—No, I do not.

37,364. Do you think it is from fear or anything of that kind?—Well, there is a great deal of that.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,365. You think that the tenants would be afraid to start it for fear they would be marked men?—Yes; I can give you an instance. At our meetings one said, "Well, I will not do any-"thing unless we sign our names."

37,366. A round robin?—Yes, and others suggested a union. That feeling does exist very strongly.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,367. Is the fear against the good landlord or the bad landlord?—The bad landlord.

37,368. The fear of offending a good landlord is sometimes quite as deterrent as the fear of offending a bad landlord?—Well, it is the bad landlord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,369. What is the fear with respect to a bad landlord—that he would turn the tenant out of a farm?—Well, yes.

37,370. Are there any cases in which a bad landlord has turned the tenant out of his farm?—No, not exactly.

37,371. You do not know of any capricious cases yourself?—No, not exactly turning them out.

37,372. But they are afraid of it, you say?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,373. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act operative in your district? Do they make use of it?—No.

37,374. You think the tenants are not acquinted with the provisions of that Act?—No, they are not, they are quite ignorant of it.

37,375. And there are no provisions in the agreements for compensation?—Not that I know of; I never heard of it.

37,376. Have you any copies of the agreements?—No, I have not.

37,377. And the landlords, generally speaking, do not give their tenants copies of the agreements?—That is what I cannot answer. I do not wish to answer anything beyond my own knowledge.

37,378. Are farms often sold in your neighbourhood?—Several lately.

37,379. Single farms or estates?—Well, part of estates, and there has been a whole estate sold—the Sartoris estate—the Llangennech estate.

37,380. Do you know of any cases where the tenants have bought their farms where they have been offered for sale?—Two that I know of.

37,381. At a public auction?—Yes, at a public sale.

37,382. Do you think that these men, if there was security that they would get compensation for unexhausted improvements, would buy their holdings?—No, I do not; they would not.

37,383. You think that they bought their farms in order to secure the fruits of their own labour?—Yes, exactly.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,384. And by so doing, perhaps paid for their improvements twice?—Yes, that has been the case.

37,385. What do you suggest would be the functions of a Land Court?—Well, to secure justice to the tenant. So far as I understand all the tenants want is to feel that they get justice and fair play. They want some authority behind them to secure that.

37,386. To decide the question of the adjustment of rent and the settlement of any dispute which may arise between the landlord and tenant owing to improvements made by the tenant?—Yes, or anything that may arise.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,387. Do you think the amount of rent ought to be adjusted by the court?—Well, that is the feeling amongst the tenant farmers.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,388. That is where they could not agree amongst themselves?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,389. Should the rents be fixed according to present prices do you think?—They could not do anything different except to have some sort of sliding scale.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,390. Do you swear by a sliding scale, or is this what you mean, that the price of stock and produce should be considered when the rent is adjusted. Is that what you mean?—Yes.

37,391. Over what period should you say that ought to extend?—Say every 12 months.

37,392. You say that the tenant farmers will not benefit by establishing butter factories?—Yes.

37,393. I believe you have a butter factory in Carmarthenshire?—St. Clears.

37,394. What has been the result of that experiment?—I am told it has not been very successful.

37,395. Do you think it has been managed properly?—I do not know; I never was there; but it would not pay here.

37,396. Why?—In consequence of the distance that the farmers would have to bring their stuff.

37,397. It would be too far?—Yes, and when the question arose at that meeting very strong words were uttered upon the point that it would be a loss in many ways.

37,398. It is possible there may be a certain amount of prejudice in the minds of tenant farmers against any innovation, anything new. Do you think that?—No, I do not think that.

37,399. Do you find that the tenant farmers in this district are pretty ready to drop old methods of farming and adopt new methods?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,400. Then there is a bit of enterprise about them?—Yes, but in consequence of the uncertainly and the unjust advantage that has been taken by several landlords and their agents it kills that speculative spirit.

37,401. They do not feel inclined to carry out improvements because of the fear that the money laid out will be confiscated?—Yes, we have so many instances of it.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,402. Do you happen to own land yourself?—I do not. I was acting as secretary for the farmers of the neighbourhood.

37,403. As to this farm which you told us about, and which had its rent raised from 50*l.* up to nearly 100*l.*, or 100*l.* with the 7 acres added, and which sold at 3,150*l.* in 1892, was that bought by a farmer?—No, a tradesman.

37,404. Do farmers often buy the farms when they are to be sold?—There are some cases.

37,405. Do you think that they would be willing if they had given a price for land to have a Land Court and to let it to tenants?—I daresay they would.

37,406. Do you find small purchasers of that kind make good landlords?—Well, there are exceptions; some are good and some are bad.

37,407. Is it not chiefly the small landlord who has given rather too much for the land who makes the difficulty?—Very often; but we have instances both ways.

37,408. Your great difficulty arises when land gets into the market and is sold?—I can give instances of tradesmen in town buying farms and treating the tenant well.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,409. There are some questions put in by Mr. Vincent. The first question is: "I understand you want a land court to fix rents "according to present prices. Is that so"?—Yes.

37,410. "If there were such a court would it "not be difficult to assess compensation for "improvements?"—I do not see it.

37,411. "If not, what would you say the "landlord ought to pay. Ought he to pay what "the tenant has spent, or a part thereof?"—Say a part of it.

37,412. "Or ought he to pay a sum repre-"senting the improved lettable value as assessed "by the court?"—I do not quite grasp that; I do not understand it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,413. What Mr. Vincent means is this: Whether a Land Court should give its decision in this way, that the whole improvement should be paid for, whether it was really an improvement to the succeeding tenant or not, or whether only so much should be paid for as would increase the value of the holding to the succeeding tenant?—If there is an improvement being made it must be an improvement for the succeeding tenant.

37,414. It does not of necessity follow?—If he improves the land, and makes a 10*s.* land wo th 1*l.* it must be an improvement to the succeeding tenant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,415. It would not follow of necessity that it would be an improvement to a succeeding tenant. Then the next question is: "Are not judicial rents and full compensation "for improvements inconsistent propositions?" —Not in the least.

37,416. Then, "You say you give Bowen's "evidence 'of your own knowledge.' How can "you possibly know of your own knowledge "the 'promise,' presumably made by somebody "else, on which he took his farm"?—Well, I had the promise from Mr. Bowen, but as to the condition of the land at that time I am able to answer—the improvements that have been made afterwards.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,417. You have spoken about a Land Court. Supposing a Land Court was established, do you expect that every tenant and every landlord would go to the court at once in respect of their rent?—No, I do not.

37,418. You think, then, it would only be a small number who would go?—

37,419. That is where they could not agree with one another?—Well, mostly so, because there are many that would agree.

37,420. You do not suppose that the cases which would go before the court to adjust the rents would be numerous in proportion?—No, I do not, because there are many farmers quite satisfied.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,421. Do you mean that the existence of a sort of Land Court would be a source of strength for the tenant to treat with his landlord?—It would, undoubtedly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,422. Do you think lawyers ought to be admitted to that court?—The less the better.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. MOSES REES called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,423. Are you a tenant farmer of Glyn Fach Farm, Llangyndeyrn, Cidweli?—Yes.

37,424. This statement has been read over to you, and you say it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

PERSONAL.

I am the fourth tenant, since the year 1874, of Glyn Fach Farm, Llangyndeyrn, Cidweli, which belongs to the Glyn Abbey Estate, two of whom totally failed, and were obliged to give the farm up owing to the unreasonably high rent. And were it not for my working out in the coal works most of my time I would have been the same as my predecessors, a bankrupt. In 1874 this farm was bought by the owner of the Glyn Abbey Estate. Before then it was 28*l.* rent with 6 acres more land to it than there is now. After it was bought the rent was raised to 36*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, though 6 acres of best land were taken away. Again the rent was raised by 2*l.* 10*s.* as interest on money which was to be expended on re-roofing the house. This new roof has never been done, so that the sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* has been paid yearly for 20 years as interest on money which was never expended. I took the farm in 1884. For the first two years the landlord gave me 3*l.* 10*s.* worth of lime for the land; after the said two years he declined to give the lime. Then I gave notice to leave, and, after this, was allowed 3*l.* 2*s.* yearly instead of lime. I also received 10 per cent. abatement after a hard fight the last two half-yearly payments. That is all I have received. The farm was in a very bad condition when I took it. A large portion of it was underwood, and many fields had been neglected and allowed to run wild. In 1885 I took to cleaning half an acre of wild land, which cost me 2*l.* In 1886 and 1887 I cleaned two fields, measuring together 7½ acres, which had to be dug with mattocks, and cost me a sum equal to 8*l.* Again, in 1887 and 1888 I cleaned another field, 2½ acres, which cost me 5*l.* In 1888 I cleaned another field, which was full of furze, 3 acres, cost 4*l.* In 1893 a field of 2 acres, which was all over furze, thorns, and prickles, cost 5*l.* Total, 24*l.* Under the present depression in prices for stock, on which we depend, it is impossible to pay our way, and if times were even better I could not pay the present rent.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,425. May I ask what is your other employment?—Cutting coal, a collier.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,426. Cutting coal or working it?—I work in the colliery, and I keep this place at home.

37,427. Did you take this place as a residence whilst you were working the coal, or did you take to the coal because you found that your farm was not paying?—I tried it for three years and I failed, and I had to go to work at the coal.

37,428. I suppose there is competition for such a farm as that by people who are engaged in the collieries?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,429. Which would you rather be at, in he coal-pit or on the farm?—On the farm.

37,430. Is that the reason that you cling to it, because you have a liking for the land?—Because my wife was brought up on a farm and she likes being on a farm, and she looks after the place at home and I go off to work.

37,431. Is the farm big enough to give you full employment, that is, if you were to look after it properly. Is there sufficient work for you to manage the farm?—Yes.

37,432. You find that it would not pay you to do so and that you are obliged to go into the pit?—As the rent is now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,433. You have laid out 24*l.* in improvements on the land?—Yes.

37,434. Under the Agricultural Holdings Act you can get security for that, can you not, by getting the sanction of the landlord for the outlay?—I did not know of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

37,435. It is worth looking at?—Thank you.

37,436. The landlord is dead, is he not, and it is in the hands of trustees?—Yes.

37,437. Have you approached them with regard to a reduction of the rent?—Oh, yes, and the answer I get is that I must stick on until times are better.

37,438. Have you a lease?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,439. In case you were to give it up, do you think there would be many applicants for your farm at the present rent?—No, I do not think there would be many after it; the rent is too high.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,440. Do you think the trustees would give you any portion of the 24*l.* which you have expended on the land?—We have asked them for it, but they have not given anything.

37,441. Supposing you left it, do you think you would get anything?—No, I do not think so. If they gave me notice to go I should have to go.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Harries called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir Sir John Llewelyn.

37,442. Do you live at Tyrmorfa Farm?—Yes.

37,443. Where is it situate?—It is situate about three miles from the town of Llanelly.

37,444. In which direction is your farm?—Below Llwynhendy.

The statement of the witness was read, as follows:—Tyrmorfa Farm, situated about three miles from the town of Llanelly, and the present tenant, Mr. Evan Harries, has held it for 19 years. Owner, Mr. Caradoc, Bath. The rent for first eight years was 100*l.*; subsequently it was reduced to 90*l.* Area of farm is 45 acres together with a few acres of salt marsh which is continually being cut by the tide and decreasing in size. Tenant complains that the rent is too high, and that he has been compelled to sell his own property to pay the rent. Tenant also complains of his agreement, inasmuch as he is not allowed to farm as he wishes, being only at liberty to plough the two worst fields on the farm. Consequently he has to buy all the bread required for the family. The farm, though 2*l.* per acre in rent, has no water on it for the cattle. Has never been able to pay wages to his children for working on the farm.

37,445. Is it 100*l.* for 40 acres?—90*l.* for 45 acres and a few acres of salt marsh. The tenant who was yonder before me said it was 45 acres.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,446 Is not the salt marsh included?—Without the salt marsh.

37,447. Do you reckon the salt marsh in the 45 acres?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,448. Let me get your figures correctly. You have had it 19 years?—Yes.

37,449. For eight years you paid 100*l.* a year? Yes.

37,450. Since then you have paid 90*l.* a year?—Yes.

37,451. That is at the rate of about 2*l.* an acre?—Yes.

37,452. Have you successfully paid that now for the last 11 years?—Yes, I have paid my landlord.

37,453. That is not the point. Have you paid the rent from the produce of the land?—No, I have been obliged to sell the little that I had.

37,454. What other means had you of paying your rent beside the produce of the farm?—I had no means beyond that I gave my own labour and the labour of my children for nothing.

37,455. I thought you said you sold something of your own?—Yes a little land I had had off my father and mother which I was obliged to sell.

37,456. How much was it?—From 10 to 12 acres of land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,457. Was that adjoining the farm which you rent?—No, it was the lower side of Carmarthen.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,458. What rent did you get for that?—I received no rent at all from it.

37,459. When did you sell it?—About four to five years ago.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,460. Did you sell it immediately you got into possession of it? How was it you got no rent for it?—I sold it within 12 months after the burial of my father.

37,461. Before you would have had time to have had any rent from it?—Yes. We were three brothers, and there were three shares.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,462. May I ask whether if these 45 acres were to let they would easily let at 2*l.* an acre?—I do not know about that.

37,463. Is it meadow land?—Pasture land.

37,464. Would pasture land close by be letting at those rents?—I have not found it good land now for many years.

37,465. Does the neighbouring land of the same kind let at 2*l.* an acre?—There is land in our neighbourhood which is not let at 1*l.* an acre even.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,466. Did the landlord reduce the rent from 100*l.* to 90*l.* of his own accord, or in answer to an application?—On my application.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,467. Have you applied for a reduction?—Yes, I asked afterwards.

37,468. What did the landlord say?—He gives me 2*s.* in the £ back now, since the last three rents.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,469. Does land let for about the same rate as you pay in your neighbourhood generally?—I cannot tell, but there is land which is much cheaper in our neighbourhood.

37,470. If you went out of your farm would there be any one who would take it at that rent?—I cannot tell.

37,471. We want to know what you think. Do your neighbours consider that you pay too high a rent?—Yes, they do consider that I pay too much; the more money that you pay so the rates increase.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,472. There are two questions put in by Mr. Vincent: "How much salt marsh is there?" I cannot say how many acres; I have not had any reckoning of it.

37,473. "Is not salt marsh valuable pasture?"—Yes, sometimes

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM REES called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,474. This statement has been read to you by one of the Commissioners, and do you say it is correct?—It is.

The following statement was then read:—Maesardafen Farm. Situated within the borough of Llanelly, but two miles from the town. Owner, William John Rees, Esq., Gelly House, near Llanelly, and occupied by Mr. William Rees. Acreage, 100 acres. Rent, 200*l.*, and no reduction whatever has been made on account of bad times. Present tenant has held it for 16 years, and the condition of the land at the time he took the farm was thus: 40 acres very poor, and the 60 acres remaining in very fair condition but not compact. The two former tenants left in two and three years respectively, owing to the rent being too high. The condition of the farm has improved, but with a reduced rent and fixity of tenure it could be greatly improved again. Tenant has been unable to pay his children wages for working on farm, his family having consisted of four sons and three daughters, all of whom have left him with the exception of one son and one daughter. Stock consists of four working horses, three sucklings, 16 cows, one bull, five yearlings, seven calves, and 25 sheep. Would like to see a Land Court established in order that fair rents be fixed. During his tenancy at Maesardafen many coal pits have been opened on the farm, and this has affected the farm-house and buildings, but no allowances have ever been made to tenant for damage done to houses and land, nor any compensation given for part taken away for coal pits. Labourers' wages are much higher than they have ever been. Times have deteriorated since taking Maesardafen more than farm produce has improved. Witness was formerly tenant of Colman Farm, in borough of Cidwelly, owned by four successive persons during his 15 years of tenancy. Area, 36 acres. Rent, 60*l.* at first, raised to 80*l.* owing to tenant's improvements. No house fit for habitation, and outhouses in ruins. Removed owing to want of fixity of tenure and fair rent.

37,475. Is Maesardafen Farm anywhere in the neighbourhood of the last witness's farm?—Yes the last witness was a neighbour of mine.

37,476. How many acres have you, do you say, now?—100.

37,477. How much do you pay?—200*l.*

37,478. Do you consider that is too high a rent for your neighbourhood?—Yes, I think so, far too high now, because times have changed.

37,479. Your neighbour pays at the same rate, I see?—Yes, that is so.

37,480. It is a very good rent—well, it would be for some parts of the country—but I do not know what the quality of your land is. Is it very good land?—It is very bad land. About 40 acres is all clay.

37,481. And you have 60 acres of good land?—It is fairly good land, but it is very heavy and flat land.

37,482. What would be the value of the 40 acres of bad land, do you think?—About 18*s.* an acre.

37,483. What ought to be the value of the other?—2*l.* is quite enough for that now.

37,484. That gives some idea of what you consider the value of the land in that district, and that is what I have been trying in vain to get at so far?—It was easier to pay 200*l.* five years ago than to pay 140*l.* now.

37,485. You consider it was not too high five years ago?—I paid then, and I fail to pay now.

37,486. By paying, you mean that you paid it out of the profits of the farm?—Yes, but I get into debt now. My landlord is present in the room, if I say anything which is not correct.

37,487. I wanted to get at what you consider the value of the land in the neighbourhood. I failed to get it from the other witness. I do not think I have anything else to ask?—Well, that is what I say.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,488. Do you consider it an advantage to live within two miles of Llanelly?—Oh yes, I considered that from the outset, at first.

37,489. The farm would be more valuable than if it was say seven or eight miles from the town?—Oh, undoubtedly that is so, but times are much worse now.

37,490. Of course, if you are within the boundary of the borough you have to pay the borough rate?—Yes.

37,491. Do you know whether there is an outer circle formed within the borough for the rural population?—No.

37,492. To what extent does the boundary extend beyond the town?—The borough extends about 2½ miles outside the town.

37,493. Have the farmers never made an application to have an outer circle formed?—Yes, we have tried, but we have had no result; they will not assent.

37,494. What means did they take?—We met together as a committee, and then we applied to the town council.

37,495. And the town council refused the application?—Took no notice.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William John Rees called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

e 37,474 37,496. Where do you live?—Gelly House, Llanelly.

37,497. I understand you wish to rebut some evidence given by the last witness?—Yes. He said his farm was within the borough. It is partly within the borough only. Then the acreage is nearer 103 acres. He said no reduction had been made on account of land spoilt by the colliery. That is not true, as may be seen by his receipts. We have allowed him pro rata for any land which has been spoilt by the colliery.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Mr. William John Rees, your landlord, says when land was taken for the collieries an allowance was made proportionate to the quantity of land taken.

Mr. William Rees.

Yes, that has been so when they themselves have opened pits.

Witness.

The land has been altered since, and a similar reduction has been made on account of the land which has been spoilt.

Mr. William Rees: I did not know that until to-day.

Witness.

He can see by his receipts.

Mr. William Rees: All right. I can easily see those.

Witness.

He says two of the tenants left because the rents were too high. One was a colliery proprietor, and he took the land while he was managing our colliery for a matter of convenience, and the other one was a haulier practically—they were not regular professional farmers.

Mr. William Rees: He told me that it was too high. He was a haulier. He was not a farmer.

Witness.

Then he said that his sons were obliged to leave him. That is because he has put two sons into separate farms, and one son is, I believe, Secretary to General Booth, of the Salvation Army.

Mr. William Rees: Two of them are farmers, but I could not give anything to them. They have work themselves.

Witness.

Then he says there are many coal pits there. There has been only one coal pit upon the farm, and that is one which my father worked. He says the out-buildings have been spoilt by it; that is only within the last few months, and he has asked for no compensation at all. As a matter of fact, the proprietor of the colliery is just about putting the buildings into proper order.

Mr. William Rees: They do not know the trouble that I had during the winter, being unable to open the doors in order to get to the house.

Witness.

He explained all that to me, and I took the matter in hand at once. Then he says he has failed to pay his rent because he says his rent is too high. I think it is because he has spent his money in stocking the farms for his sons, and we have not forced him to pay the rent.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,498. As a matter of fact he has failed to pay the rent?—He is about a year and a half in arrears now, and we have not pressed him at all for it.

Mr. William Rees: No, they have not pressed me at all for the rent, but I have been unable to give anything to my sons.

Witness.

I do not know where his son got the capital from, at any rate. I should tell you some few years ago he took a farm upon a three years' lease. He admitted he lost a lot of money on that farm. He put his son to manage it, but he has given that farm up now. I should also tell you—well, I do not know whether I should tell you or not, but at any rate, my father lent him money when he came.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,499. It would be pleasanter to confine yourself to rebutting anything he may have said?—Then that is all I have to say.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,500. How came you to let the farm to a haulier?—I think it was a mistake my father made in letting it, and he got him out of it as soon as he possibly could.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,501. You do not think he was a desirable sort of tenant?—No, of course not, and that is the reason my father got rid of him.

37,502. I suppose he took him because he offered a higher rent than anyone else. Would that be so?—No. I think he took him because he was very well recommended, and the recommendation was not accurate; certainly it was not, judging by the way in which he attempted to farm the land.

37,503. Are you in a position to know that he supplied his sons with money to stock their farms?—Yes, I am. I am in a position to know this, that he had no money when he came there, because my father lent him money to pay his previous landlord.

37,504. That does not prove that he afterwards supplied his sons with money to stock the farms. They may have borrowed the capital from someone else, as he did?—I do not think anyone would give him credit.

37,505. They may have obtained credit in the same way as he obtained credit off your father?—I think it is only reasonable to suppose that they have been supplied with stock by him, because he has practically de-stocked a good part of our farm in order to stock other farms for his sons. That is the reason his stock is so low upon Maesardafen Farm, because it would hold a very much larger stock than is upon it now.

37,506. It is not because he has become poor that his stock has become reduced?—Well, I do not think he has the capital to stock the three farms. One son, I should think, is independent of him now; at least he should be.

37,507. The secretary to General Booth?—No, one of the farmers.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,508. Do you think he has lost money at all on your farm?—No, I do not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,509. What is the value of the meadow land, the best of it?—I should think it is worth about 2*l.* 15*s.* to 3*l.* an acre. I know land in the district is let as accommodation land at 6*l.* an acre. I have allowed one of our tenants 6*l.* for accommodation land.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David James called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,510. Where do you reside?—14, Lloyd Street, Llanelly. I propose to give evidence on behalf of my brother. My brother had to go to Carmarthen to-day, and I live in the town.

37,511. Are these circumstances which you are going to speak of within your own knowledge?—Perfectly. I propose to give evidence relating to Penygraig Farm, Llanelly. Landlady,

Mrs. Daniels, Swansea; tenant, Mr. William James; rent risen from 15*l.* to 32*l.* The last advance in the rent was from 15*l.* to 32*l.*, about 21 or 22 years ago. Shortly after that, 17 acres were taken for the construction of the Llanelly Waterworks, but no reduction was made in the rent. Present rent much too high. Tenant has to keep the children from school to work on the farm, as he cannot afford to pay for labour. The farm buildings are almost in ruins, but the owner will do nothing. The horses and cattle are suffering severely, owing to insufficient protection. The loss of the land for the waterworks was very much felt, as it was mostly grazing land, with the river running through. The points I would like to lay stress upon are suitable farm buildings and fixity of tenure.

37,512. The farm is about two miles from Llanelly?—Yes.

37,513. How much of the land was taken for the waterworks?—17 acres.

37,514. Seventeen acres of his land?—Yes.

37,515. That is a good slice. Was there no reduction in rent?—No, no reduction whatever.

37,516. That operated as an increase of rent for the remainder?—Decidedly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,517. What is the age of the children that work on the farm?—One 16, and the other, I think, is a little under 14. The younger one of the two attends school occasionally—intermittently.

37,518. I suppose when they have passed their fifth standard, or arrived at a certain age they at once go to work on the farm?—Yes.

37,519. Otherwise the children would be kept on in school?—He would like to give them a better education if he could.

37,520. The farm is owned by a landlady, Mrs. Daniels?—Yes, she is a widow.

37,521. Is she in a position to erect buildings for sheltering the horses and cattle?—She has acknowledged her obligation to do so, because she has promised to do it as soon as she could afford it.

37,522. Is there any reason you can suggest why she does not carry out her promise?—The family have lived in the farm for a great length of time. I was brought up there, and I had to leave because the prospects were so bad. This is my youngest brother there now, and he is obliged to stay there because he has nowhere else to go, and advantage is taken of that, I think.

Adjourned.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

37,523. Are you a land agent and surveyor?—I am.

37,524. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—I am John Morgan Davies, of Froodvale, in the county of Carmarthen, land agent and surveyor, a Fellow of the Surveyor's Institution, late Chairman of its Provincial Committee for South Wales and Monmouthshire, Surveyor to the Crown, and as such have surveyed and valued upwards of 80,000 acres in the counties of Carmarthen, Cardigan, Radnor, and Merioneth. Have acted largely under the Inclosure and Land Commissioners, having, in conjunction with my late father, and since his death, carried out the inclosure of common lands in the counties of Carmarthen, Cardigan, Radnor, and Montgomery, comprising an area of 26,000 acres; have valued very large areas of land for letting, and for sale, and for rating purposes; have been in practice for 40 years, succeeding my father, who was one of the leading land agents and valuers in Wales; I am the agent of the Bronwydd estates, the property of Sir Marteine Lloyd, Bart., comprising in—and of several smaller properties.

Chairman—continued.

37,525. Do you find that the difference of language and religion has any effect on the relations between landlord and tenant?—Not the slightest. Most of those I act for speak Welsh, and some who do not speak it understand it fairly well.

37,526. What is the date of entry?—The date of entry is Michaelmas.

37,527. What do you think about the condition of tenancies at the present time?—The conditions at present are very deplorable undoubtedly. Times have been very bad, and in the last couple of years they have suffered severely.

37,528. Do you produce any of the agreements on the different estates for which you are agent?—That is the agreement I use practically on all my estates (handing).

37,529. Are there any penalising clauses in it?—Yes.

37,530. Are they often enforced?—Never. They are necessary, and have a very good moral effect, I think; that is all. Half my tenants have no agreements at all; I place very little value upon an agreement. I must state that one of the chief reasons for inserting penal clauses was in consequence of a practice in this country some years ago, when corn was a good price, of tenants when leaving their farms breaking up the pastures and selling off the whole of the crops from the land. The penal clauses are chiefly with the object of preventing that.

37,531. Do you have many changes on your estates?—Very few indeed. Scarcely ever a change of tenant.

37,532. When is the payment of rent made?—The payment of rent varies on different estates in different districts. The rents due 25th March are collected in this neighbourhood after the 21st of June—from the 21st June to the 17th July. In other districts, on Sir Marteine Lloyd's estate especially, they are collected at the end of August—July and January, August and February; three to five months after they are due.

37,533. What is the general size of the farms in your district?—They vary in different districts. I suppose taking this country through the average size would be about 50*l.* to 60*l.* rent. The acreage would vary with the situation of the farm, whether it was hillside or valley.

37,534. Does the landlord do all the improvements?—Yes, all the permanent improvements, such as building and so on; practically all.

37,535. Does he expect the tenant to do the haulage or not?—He does. It is an invariable practice on the estates that I have that the tenant does the haulage.

37,536. Does the Agricultural Holdings Act work at all well in your neighbourhood or not?—It is practically unknown. The practice of selling at Michaelmas all the crops off the land in a great measure does away with the effect of the Agricultural Holdings Act even if it were used. I have incorporated it in my agreement. When the whole produce is sold off a farm at Michaelmas there is not very much to compensate for, excepting in very exceptional cases.

37,537. Have you anything to say about the game?—No. My estates are not very much preserved. Of course, there are corners near the mansions and houses where the game does damage, no doubt, but taking the estates generally it is not so. Before the Ground Game Act there was a great deal of damage done by rabbits, but since that there is practically none, excepting, perhaps, occasionally near home covers.

37,538. I suppose you complain of the railway rates?—Very much, indeed. We suffer severely from them, being so far from centres.

37,539. Have you anything to say as to proprietor farmers. Are there any freehold farms in this neighbourhood?—There are a good many in this county. I think the inherited freeholders have decreased; they have not been able to weather the storm; but a great many farmers of late years have purchased their farms, on the whole the number of freeholders has very much increased.

37,540. Do you consider the tenant farmers are a hardworking, industrious lot of people?—Very—very hardworking and very industrious, their wives especially so.

37,541. Have you anything to say about the labourers?—No, I have not much to say about labourers, excepting that of late years it has been difficult to pay them such wages as they can get elsewhere. The consequence is they have left the country; they have gone away to the works. We are not very far from Glamorganshire, and they migrate there in consequence of getting better pay.

37,542. How are they accommodated. Are the cottages very good?—The old cottages were very bad, but most of them have tumbled down, and what are built now are good cottages and give fair accommodation.

37,543. Is the accommodation in the farmhouses pretty good and decent?—Yes. On my estates it is very good. It is capable of improvement, and it has been improved immensely within the last 20 or 30 years.

37,544. When do you think the depression began in your neighbourhood?—I think it was in 1879 that we began to feel it severely.

37,545. The relations you have said, I think, are very friendly?—Yes, very good indeed.

Lord Kenyon.

37,546. Do you think the condition of the freeholders is as good or better than that of the tenant farmers?—I think it is much worse. There is a great difficulty with the freeholder. When the freeholder dies, the estate has to be divided or charged, and when that is repeated two or three times the freehold goes, and the freeholder goes to the wall. I do not think the freeholder can live in this country for long.

37,547. Do you think the Agricultural Holdings Act is capable of any improvement?—I have had very little experience of the Agricultural Holdings Act I do not think it applies so much to this part of the country, for the reason I have already stated, that the crops are sold off. It is the general practice in this part of the country, that the farmers during the last three months of their tenancy can sell the whole of their crops off. There is not such need for the Agricultural Holdings Act here as there would be if they went away under other circumstances, leaving their crops.

37,548. Do you have any difficulty in valuing under this agreement? You say you appoint two arbitrators and an umpire?—No, we very seldom require it.

37,549. Have there been more frequent changes during the last 12 months?—No, there have been hardly any changes at all for years.

37,550. You did not have many notices this last Lady Day?—I seldom have notice, but taking the country through, there have been very few changes of late.

37,551. Have the landlords given abatements?—Yes, they have given abatements.

37,552. Can you give any details of those abatements?—Yes. On one estate in this immediate neighbourhood, Mr. Gwynne Hughes', there was 20 per cent. at Michaelmas 1885, 20 per cent. at Michaelmas 1886, 10 per cent. from Michaelmas 1886 to Lady Day 1888, 5 per cent. at Michaelmas 1888, 10 per cent. in 1892, 10 per cent. on lowlands in 1893, and 20 per cent. on uplands. With slight variations, similar remittances have been made on my other estates, of which I can give details.

37,553. And you think that the tenants are satisfied that the landlords try to meet them?—I can say they are very grateful for it, the landlord did not for a moment suppose he was giving them such an abatement as would meet the difficulties of the situation, but he was giving what he could. At all events it showed warm sympathy, and it was highly appreciated.

37,554. I think you said it was customary for the landlord to do all the repairs?—Yes, on my estates.

37,555. And the tenant the haulage?—Yes.

37,556. Is there any objection to haulage?—Never.

37,557. Has any complaint come to your ears as to insecurity of tenure?—No.

37,558. Do you consider that on these estates the tenant considers himself secure?—Yes, some of these estates have been in my hands and my father's for 70 years—the estates I am particularly speaking of—and the same tenants and their families are on them now as were there then, with very rare exceptions. The rents of the farms have remained the same for a very long period of years; since 1842, I think, a vast number of them, for 50 years. There have been advances on some portions of the estates.

37,559. Have you considered whether there are any remedies to meet the depressed state of things?—I think it would be a good thing to educate the farm children more in science. I think science should be taught in schools more than it is to get the children familiarised with scientific terms, so that when they get further on in life they may benefit by technical education—chemistry especially, as applied to agriculture.

37,560. Have not the county council done anything of that sort?—Very little indeed. There is a gentleman connected with the Aberystwith College, Professor Parry, who has been going about this part of the country a little, with marvellous effect.

37,561. With marvellous effect, you say?—Yes, but it has only been at intervals, occasionally here and there. He has not covered the district, or followed it up sufficiently. He is a Welshman, and certainly manages to use the Welsh language for scientific purposes better than any one I ever heard. Professor Parry is connected with the Aberystwith College.

37,562. Then you think that the farmers are taking up this kind of education. Do you say they attend these lectures pretty well?—Very well indeed.

37,563. There was some encouragement to go on?—Yes, certainly.

37,564. Have there been any field experiments?—Few to my knowledge.

37,565. Do any of the landowners you represent keep bulls?—No, not one of them.

37,566. Is there any inducement to do that; do they improve the class of stock?—They do not farm much themselves; they have neither of them farms in hand.

37,567. Does this depression in agriculture seem to you to be permanent or transitory?—That is a very difficult question.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,568. I see, Mr. Davies, that you have been concerned in carrying out the inclosure of common land?—Yes.

37,569. What common lands in this county have you been concerned with?—This is a list of the inclosures which I have carried out in different parts of the country.

A List of Inclosures of Commons carried out by David Davies and John Morgan Davies of Froodvale, Carmarthenshire.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

37,570. Are these all in Carmarthenshire?—No, not all in Carmarthenshire: North and South Wales.

37,571. Carmarthen, Cardigan, and Montgomeryshire. I do not think I need go over the table. I see that you give the acreage and the date of the confirmation of the award, and I see that among the allotments for public purposes there are the words, "For recreation," "Four acres "for the poor," "One acre for recreation," "One "acre for the poor," and so on. Have you any knowledge of the way in which the public allotments have been working since these different inclosures?—Generally speaking, the commons were far away in the mountains, and the allotments set out for recreation were really of no use whatever for the purpose; they could only be sold or exchanged. In Cardigan, where the common is near the town, they have been used for all purposes for which they were intended.

37,572. At Cardigan 4 acres were reserved for recreation and 4 acres for the poor?—Yes.

37,573. Are they being properly used for those purposes?—I believe they are.

37,574. Is there much copyhold property in this county?—There is some.

37,575. In this district of Llandilo?—Yes, there is a copyhold manor at Talley.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

57,576. Do you hear of any complaints as to copyhold land not being as convenient for the purposes of the landowner as freehold land?—No; I have had copyholds of my own, and I have not found any inconvenience from it. The fines are small here.

37,577. And there is no difficulty, so far as you have noticed, in that respect?—None, whatever.

37,578. Has any copyhold been enfranchised under any of the recent Acts?—Yes, the copyholds on one of the estates under my management have been enfranchised — Sir Henry Davies'.

37,579. Have you any criticism to make on the machinery of the Act?—It was rather costly, I believe; that is all I have to say about it. Copyholds, if left alone, seem to me not to be inconvenient, but if you want to enfranchise them they are certainly costly.

37,580. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, you remember that by section 7 a tenant claiming compensation under the Act has to give two months' notice?—Yes.

37,581. And that the giving of such two months' notice is a condition precedent to his right to get compensation under the Act, and on the other hand the landlord is bound, before he can make a counter-claim, to give so many days' notice, and that that is a condition precedent too. Do you not think it would be expedient to get rid of that limitation?—I think there should be notice. I do not know that it is necessary that it should be two months' notice; I think that is a very long notice; but I think there should be sufficient notice on both sides, so as to enable both parties to have fair play in the matter.

37,582. Yes. Do you not think it is very hard, if a landlord, say, should forget to give notice of a counter-claim that he should be shut out from counter-claiming?—I think there ought to be a remedy certainly, and if a tenant forgets I think there should be a remedy; he ought to be relieved by a court if he can show fair reason for not having done so.

37,583. Then your suggestion is, while the provision should be kept that there should be some notice on each side, that in case of the omission of either party to give notice, the court should have power of relieving against the neglect to give notice, on terms?—Certainly.

37,584. Have you any criticisms to make upon what I may call the machinery of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I have not. The machinery is very much complained of in England, but not having handled it myself, I would rather not deal with the subject.

37,585. Would you see any objection to this, that instead of the somewhat complicated proceeding by the appointment of arbitrators by each party, with an umpire, that either party might go to the county court and get an independent valuer appointed right off?—I see no objection to any machinery that will expedite decision, and do justice between the parties.

37,586. Does your experience of the county courts lead you to think that both sides would have sufficient confidence in a county court judge's nomination?—I should think so. I have no reason to suppose otherwise. That is so far as the assessing of compensation is concerned.

37,587. Well, ultimately, the matter does come to the county court under this Act in certain cases?—Yes.

37,588. It is a rather elaborate process, but my experience of the operation of the Act was wholly unfavourable to it, and I think that it increases costs. What strikes me is that the landlord or the tenant might go straight off to the county court and get an ordinary form of summons for the appointment of a valuer. With regard to the schedule to the Act, do you think there might be any alteration of this schedule with advantage?—I think the first schedule requires the consent of the landlord. I think it is very important that that should be continued. Permanent improvements may sound very simple, but very few of them are permanent; drainage, for instance, requires a good deal of skill.

37,589. Drainage is in Part 2. The tenant has a right to give notice to the landlord that he is going to drain, but the landlord's consent is not necessary?—No, it is not necessary in that case, but take buildings in the same way.

37,590. But deal with this, the making of fences: do you not think that that head, at any rate, of Part 1 of the schedule might very well be left to the tenants' discretion?—I do not suppose that a landlord would object to a tenant making a fence.

37,591. Yes, but if a tenant does make it, in a certain eventuality, he should be entitled to a certain compensation under the Act?—Certainly.

37,592. Take, again, the improving of the roads, if any, on the part of the tenant?—Yes. That is not very much done, I am afraid, in this country.

37,594. That only goes to show that a tenant ought not to get any compensation for that kind of reclamation; it does not touch the really good and substantial reclamation of land?—No. I was going to that point. The reclamation of that land under present circumstances would be impossible; it would not pay; no tenant would attempt it; the price of corn at that time enabled him to do so.

37,595. Then you do think that the consent of the landlord ought to be obtained to the erection and enlargement of buildings?—Certainly.

37,596. But, as I understand, there are some of these 14 heads that you would not be disinclined to leave to the tenant, provided he gives notice, say, to the landlord, without a formal consent?—Possibly. I have not got that in my mind at the moment.

37,597. I gave you one instance, namely, the making of fences?—There is no objection to that so far as I can see.

37,598. I gathered from your answers to Lord Kenyon it is very difficult for a tenant to pay his rent now-a-days, is it not?—No doubt.

37,599. Do you think that the evidence wich we have received yesterday as to the great difficulty that the tenants have in finding the money to pay rent, and that they have to borrow and so on, is true?—I do not know about the evidence you have received, but there is no doubt that they have great difficulty in getting their rents together.

37,600. Then I suppose one may take it, at any rate at the present time, that a farm business is a losing business; a man gets no interest on his capital?—On the whole I should think so. He does not make anything at all events; he is a very lucky man if he does not lose.

37,601. Did I understand you aright when you said that the abatement which had been been made, though they were as large as the landlords could fairly be expected to give, were really insufficient?—No, I did not say that. What I said was that the remittances that had been made did not meet the whole of the tenant's loss.

37,602. That is what I meant: it is very much the same thing; I thought I caught you aright?—Yes.

37,603. What is the largest per-centage of abatement that has come under your notice on the estates you are connected with?—20 per cent.

37,604. Do the landlords upon the estates in regard to which you act give notice of their intention to give the abatement beforehand?—Yes.

37,605. Do you see any hope of an improvement in the existing condition of agriculture?—Yes, I do. I think a great deal of it is due to bad seasons.

37,606. You do not think, then, that the causes are more deep-seated than that?—Foreign competition no doubt adds to the difficulty.

37,607. Yes, but do you not think that, apart from foreign competition, what we call modern economic conditions generally have a great deal more to do with the existing depression than mere bad seasons?—I think at present we are suffering more from bad seasons than we are from anything else. I do not underrate the suggestion you have made with reference to other forces, but just at present I think we are suffering from bad seasons more than anything.

37,608. Do you really think that a succession of good seasons would so entirely modify the condition of the tenant farmer as to put an end to all cause for complaint?—I do not know what you mean by cause for complaint. I think it would improve his condition very much; it would put him back to where he was a few years ago.

37,609. The cause of complaint is that he is carrying on a business in which he is bound to lose, according to your evidence?—Yes. I think it would in a great measure.

37,610. Do you not think that if a man had really more freedom to do what he liked in regard to carrying on his business as people in other businesses can do, the tenant farmers would be much better off?—He has perfect freedom now, so far as I can see, and is never interfered with in any way whatever.

37,611. I do not know; the agreement you have put in is pretty tight in some respects?—Yes, certainly it is tight so far, that it prevents a man doing that which he would not be advised to do.

37,612. That is your view?—I incorporate the Agricultural Holdings Act in my agreement, which gives him power to obtain compensation for anything he does.

37,613. No, not for anything he does; if he enlarges a building he cannot get compensation unless he gets your consent?—For anything that is sanctioned by the Act.

37,614. How would you describe, from an agricultural point of view, the farms about here. How does the tenant farmer make his money?—He makes his money chiefly from dairying and from stock.

37,615. Not much from crops, you think directly?—No, he consumes his crops chiefly.

37,616. Has the price of labour gone up much of late years?—Yes, it has very much.

37,617. What are the average wages of the out-door labourer?—Do you mean the labourer on his own finding?

37,618. On his own finding, living in his own cottage, and going by the week?—A labourer on his own finding would vary very much, from 14*s.* to 16*s.*, 17*s.*, or 18*s.* a week, I should think, varying with the district in which he was. Labour is high here; near the works.

37,619 Do most of the tenant farmers employ many labourers on their own finding, or do they chiefly rely upon indoor servants?—They chiefly rely on indoor men.

37,620. Is it the fact that many of the farm buildings are inadequate?—I do not think so, on the estates that I have to do with. No doubt the increased use of machinery requires a greater extent of building than there used to be formerly; but so far as stock is concerned, taking the country through it is fairly provided for.

37,621. On the estates that you are connected with, have the families of the present tenants been in the same places for many generations?—They have.

37,622. I suppose that they nearly all habitually use the Welsh language, do they not?—Yes.

37,623. And they are nonconformists, I suppose?—Yes, to a man, pretty nearly.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,624. You mentioned in your evidence that practically the landlords do all the permanent improvements?—Yes.

37,625. Have you ever had any application from tenants for some more buildings?—Yes, often.

37,626. Do you always comply with the request?—So far as we can. The buildings are taken in rotation, and we comply with them as far as we can.

37,627. You do not know instances where they have been obliged to build themselves because you would not build for them?—There may be some instances of that kind; I cannot call them to mind at the present moment, but they are very rare indeed, I think.

37,628. Is there much water power used in this district?—Yes; that is put up by the tenants generally, almost exclusively, generally by the tenant.

37,629. You would not call that "practically done by the landlords"?—What I meant by landlords' permanent improvements referred to buildings. The water power is almost invariably put up by the tenant farmer.

37,630. And the buildings are generally put up by the landlords?—Yes.

37,631. Do you always compensate for damage done by game?—I do not know that on my estates there is very much game. There have been cases of compensation, but not many.

37,632. You have not had many applications?—No, I have not; very few.

37,633. Do the tenants generally avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—Yes, thoroughly.

37,634. The landlords give them perfect freedom to kill?—Yes, absolutely.

37,635. In which way, to shoot them?—What they usually do is to ferret and snare them.

37,636. But not to go into the covers, I suppose?—On nearly all my estates they go into the covers excepting where birds are bred to hand, and there they do not.

37,637. You said just now that tenants who purchased their farms are not so well off, as a rule, as other tenants with yearly tenancies?—Yes, I said so.

37,638. Why are they induced to purchase them on any terms?—A man purchases land for various reasons. He may wish to become a landowner.

37,639. Quite so. At the same time, when he can see that he is at a loss, is it not rather strange that he should purchase?—It may be so, but they do purchase, though they have seen their neighbours purchase at a loss very often.

37,640. Is it not because they want security of tenure?—In some cases a man buys his farm, no doubt, in order to live in it.

37,641. Then with regard to the farm-houses and the cottages on the estates you represent, what is the general state of them?—They are very good.

37,642. We have had complaints that in many farm-houses they have not accommodation sufficient for the servants; that they are herded together almost as cattle, according to some evidence we have had before us?—I do not find that. We provide for the men servants in a room outside and the women servants are indoors. The farm-houses have three, four, or five bedrooms in them, half a dozen, many of them.

37,643. Do the men servants generally sleep outside?—Invariably, I think.

37,644. Do you think the farmer has the same command over his servants when they are outside as if they were indoors?—Really, tha is a matter of opinion; I could not tell you

37,645. The men servants you say are chiefly boarded in the house. What comfort have they. Have they fire and lighting in the evening?—Certainly, they live in the kitchen with every comfort.

37,646. With regard to the cottages, what accomodation have they; how many rooms have they generally in the house?—The cottages I have built of late years have had three rooms upstairs, and the parlour is a room that is often used as a bedroom; that makes four sleeping rooms and a kitchen.

37,647. We have had it given to us as a reason why many of the labourers go to the works and to the towns that it is because they have not proper cottages to live in?—I do no think that is the case at all. I have cottages vacant now, good cottages, and I do not think that is the case. There is no doubt that a few cottages here and there would be an advantage, but very few.

37,648. Have you any of the old thatched cottages still remaining in the district?—Yes.

37,649. How many rooms have they as a rule?—They are going out of fashion; it is only the old-fashioned who live in them, the young people do not go into them; there are not many of them.

37,650. Some of them have more than on family in the same house?—Yes, they have.

37,651. And only a couple of rooms?—Yes.

37,652. Do you think that is good for the morality of the district?—The old cottages.

37,653. Yes?—No, I do not.

37,654. How do you find the tenants, do they take willingly to the new cottages you speak of, or do some of them rather prefer the old ones?—No, they are very glad to get the new ones.

37,655. Do they pay increased rents as a rule?—The rent is not very much. It is a loss to the landlord building cottages; the rent is very small; building cottages does not pay.

37,656. I think you admitted just now that present abatements were not sufficient for the present times?—No, I do not think I put it in that way. They do not cover the whole of the tenants' loss; that is what I intended to say

37,657. How long do you think the tenants can go on at the present rates, at present prices, and with this depression, if this bad time continues?—I hope this very fine spring will show a good deal of alteration in prices as well as in agriculture generally.

37,658. But suppose it does not, suppose we have another bad season or two; do you think the farmers of the district can go on in the way they have been going on?—I have great hopes that it will be otherwise.

37,659. Do the landlords of the district do anything in the way of encouraging good sires in this district, and in the way of giving prizes for good sires?—They subscribe to the agricultural societies of the district, and give prizes as gentlemen do in their respective neighbourhoods.

37,660. And encourage good horses as much as they can?—Yes, they do that; there is no doubt they do as much as they can.

37,661. What accommodation have you on the farms you represent; what dairy accommodation have you?—Very good. I have paid exceptional attention to the dairies on all my farms.

37,662. The dairies have been improving?—Yes, they are exceptionally good.

37,663. What is your opinion of butter factories?—I have no personal knowledge of butter factories, but from what I read of the factory at St. Clears, it does not seem to have been taken up by the farmers of the district. I have estates in that neighbourhood, and they do not seem to have taken it up.

37,664. Have you heard the reason why they have not?—What they told me was that it did not pay them to send the milk in; that is the answer I got when I asked them why they did not support the factory.

37,665. The Welsh are very slow to take to any new method?—They are, you are quite right.

37,666. And I think it may be shown that it would pay them very much better. Do not you think the landlords should encourage butter factories in this district, which is a great dairy district?—I believe the one I have just referred to has been got up chiefly by the landlord. Sir Arthur Stepney, I believe, has been a very great supporter of it. If that had succeeded, I have no doubt other landlords would have followed suit, but that seemed to be such a failure that everybody left it alone.

37,667. But there are other districts in England where we find them very successful, paying very much better than the ordinary butter-making?—No doubt. I am quite certain that the landowners would be quite willing to give them their powerful support.

37,668. Do not you think, on the whole, taking all the dairies of the district here, they are not suitable for present dairy implements?—Many of them are not, I daresay, but I think so far as the estates I represent are concerned, I can show good dairies everywhere. I have paid special attention to them.

37,669. Do not you think that it is time to throw the old agreements on one side, and let us have something more modern? There are many clauses in the old agreement which do not apply at the present day?—I have very few agreements compared to the number of the tenants I have. I have got scores of them without any agreement at all. I do not place much importance on an agreement myself.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

37,670. But the tenant, if he is turned out, is obliged to place a good deal of importance upon it?—He cannot say that I have ever produced it against him in my 40 years' experience.

37,671. Do the landlords of the district do much in the way of encouraging night schools and libraries and that kind of thing?—No, I do not think there is much of that done.

37,672. I thought you told us just now that there was very much done in the way of education in the district?—No, I think not. I did not say there was very much done; I think a good deal more might be done.

37,673. I misunderstood you. I understood you to say that there was a good deal done in that way?—No, I think not.

37,674. Did you not say that Professor Parry attended here to give lectures?—I said that Professor Parry had been over the country and given lectures.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,675. You say that the present condition of tenant farmers is deplorable. You said that, did you not?—Possibly.

37,676. How do you reconcile that with your answer on the precis here? You say, "Changes "less frequent; conditions of tenants very much "improved"?—Yes, the condition of the tenants is very much improved of late years—within the last 30 years—very much improved, but not within the last two years.

37,677. And it is still deplorable?—Just at the present moment it is.

37,678. You say the depression commenced in 1879?—Yes.

37,679. Has it been deplorable since 1879?—No. It is only just at the present moment, say the last year and the last couple of seasons—since the bad seasons have come in.

37,680. We have visited some districts, and it was said that abatements in rent were made as far back as 1885 and 1886?—Yes, so they have been here.

37,681. On all the estates that you are acting for?—Yes.

37,682. Does that apply to Sir Marteine Lloyd's estate?—Yes.

37,683. I will come to that later on. Do you think that the tenant farmers, according to their knowledge, make the best of their farms?—According to their knowledge, no doubt, but that knowledge is very deficient, I think, in the present day. They do their best undoubtedly.

37,684. So that really if they go to the wall it is not their fault?—No, I think not, having regard to their knowledge.

37,685. You say that compensation is given for damage done in felling trees or commencing industrial operations?—Yes.

37,686. Can you supply the Commission with any instances where compensation has been given?—Generally it is provided for in the agreement that the timber merchant has to pay compensation if he goes off the roads.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,687. How many cases of compensation have you had?—I really could not tell you at this moment.

37,688. Twenty?—No, I do not think so.

37,689. Ten?—Most of our woods go down to the road. We get to our covers without touching the tenants' land in the majority of cases.

37,690. But are there any cases where compensation is given?—Yes; there are instances where compensation has been given.

37,691. What is the course you adopt when a farm is to let?—We very seldom have a farm to let. When we have there are applications for it, and it is invariably given to the next of kin of the tenant, if he is a suitable man, or to somebody on the estate who belongs to the old tenantry.

37,692. Generally you give preference to the nearest relative?—Invariably, so far as we can.

37,693. So that really you do not let the farm to the highest bidder?—Never. We do not let it to a bidder at all.

ee 5109–296. 37,694. Do you know whether any of the tenants of Sir Marteine Lloyd have been giving evidence before the Commission?—One of his tenants gave evidence at Swansea, I think. He lives near Pontardulais.

37,695. David Williams, of Clynyfyd Farm. Do you know him?—Yes, I know him very well.

37,696. He says here that he has only received abatements on two occasions?—I can give you, if you will allow me, the abatements that were made on Sir Marteine Lloyd's estate. 10 per cent. at Lady Day 1885 to Lady Day 1888; 7½ per cent. for the year 1892, 10 per cent. for the year 1893.

37,697. You did not make any abatement in 1891 or 1890?—Those are the abatements that have been made only.

37,698. What was the state of the buildings at Clynyfyd Farm?—Very good.

37,699. He complains that it was very bad?—They are not very bad. They are very good buildings, Carnarvon slated buildings; they are not long built. He left a building that he ought to have thatched in a very neglected state.

37,700. He offered 20 per cent. more rent, or even 40 per cent. in some cases. Has he made any application to you for increased accommodation?—Yes, he has. He is going to have it in his turn. That property has only recently come into Sir Marteine Lloyd's possession. It belonged to his grandmother, who died a few years ago, and he has made no alteration in the tenancy in any way whatever since he has come into possession of that farm, or the property at Pontardulais.

37,701. Did you send notices to the tenants on Sir Marteine Lloyd's estate that you were going to make abatements?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

37,702. He says you did not?—There is a printed card sent to every tenant, and a notice of the remission on the card before each audit. I shall be very happy to send you copies of them.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,703. You are agent for several estates of various sizes. Could you give an opinion as to whether several estates in that way, under the management of one agent, are placed very much in the same position as regards uniformity and security as a large estate would be?—Yes, they are.

37,704. We have generally found that the grievances, or the alleged grievances, come on the small estates of persons who have bought property comparatively recently in the market, and have paid a high price for it. Would that be your experience?—That is so, no doubt. If I may be permitted I would mention the case of Mr. Gwynne-Hughes. Where he has purchased land in almost every instance the rents have been reduced, notwithstanding a considerable outlay in building. I can furnish you with a schedule of the farms purchased by him, and the condition of the rental when he purchased them, the condition at the present time, the outlay which has been made, and the reductions which have also been made in the rent

The following statement was handed in:—

Tregib Estates, Carmarthenshire.

The outlay on the above since the date of purchase has been 1,112*l.*

37,705. I see from this that the rents on these 11 farms have been reduced from 431*l.* 15*s.* to 394*l.* 8*s.*?—Yes, and an outlay of 1,112*l.* made upon them since they were purchased without any charge.

37,706. In any of these cases, supposing that they had been bought by a landlord who had not reduced the rents, in your opinion would they have been cases of hardship?—I do not know about that. My landlord in that particular instance is a very generous man; he is a very good landlord.

37,707. But if the 1,112*l.* had been added to the value of the property, and interest had been charged upon that, the rents would have been raised?—They would.

37,708. We will take the case of any one of these farmers; if his rent had been wrongly raised, do you think that an alteration in the Agricultural Holdings Act might be made which would prevent any injustice by his being rented practically on his own improvements?—I do not see how he could be rented on his own improvements, provided he availed himself of the Act.

37,709. We have been told often that there are certain cases which are not provided for by the Agricultural Holdings Act. Take the case, for instance, of a considerable amount of haulage having been done, say a year before the sale; the Agricultural Holdings Act would not protect him from an increased rent upon the increased value of the holding, would it?—I presume it would. I have always been under the impression that if a tenant hauled he would have his remedy.

37,710. Anyhow, we have had several cases brought before us in which alleged hardships have taken place owing to rents having been raised by incoming purchasers. My question was whether in your opinion you considered that if a perfectly adequate security were given against any rent upon improvements which had been made by the tenant, that really would obviate the cases of hardship?—I think it would. I think a tenant should be so protected that it would be impossible to raise his rent on improvements. I think that would be quite fair. Every tenant should have the benefit of his improvements where there are improvements.

37,711. Then I should like to ask you this question; in the case of a purchase by a landlord of farms which had been sold in the open market, whether, in case rents are inordinately raised or injudiciously raised, there would amongst landlords be a public opinion which would be a strong deterrent against such a course; would a man who created hardship on his purchase be at all under the corrective influence of a public opinion of landlords around him?—You mean a smaller man.

37,712. Yes, a smaller man?—That would depend a great deal upon the character of the individual.

37,713. That I can well understand, but would you feel that anything else was necessary behind, in the interests of the landlords as well as in the interests of tenants?—I beg pardon?

37,714. Would you feel that it was necessary to have some other force behind, independently of the action of public opinion, to protect landlords from the the injury that is done to them as a class, by these individual instances of hardship?—I do not know what force you could get to prevent that.

37,715. Of course we have been told that there ought to be a Land Court, and this, that, and the other?—I think a Land Court would be very prejudicial to the tenant, in so far it would set up a foreign body between him and his landlord, and he would not have the same consideration as he has now. I do not think the same warm feeling could possibly exist between the tenant and the landlord with a Land Court as there is at present.

37,716. Could you suggest anything short of a Land Court, a reference to any local skilled official, or anything of that kind?—In what particular instance, because the Agricultural Holdings Act, I presume, meets most of the difficulties of the case.

37,717. We understand that it does not now, but take it upon that point; supposing that the Agricultural Holdings Act were made sufficiently protective to the tenant, still there would be the difficulty of litigation in the way. Can you suggest anything short of legislation by which cases of hardship could be met to the benefit of both landlords and tenants generally as classes?—I have not in my mind at present anything that I can suggest.

37,718. Do you think that the cases of hardship are likely in future to increase or diminish?—To diminish.

37,719. Is that by land being bought up by the large landowners, who manage their estates well?—I do not think large landowners are likely to buy land just at present.

37,720. Then, if more land were thrown upon the market we should have a large number of cases of hardship, should we not?—I do not see where the hardship is, if a man buys his farm.

37,721. I am not speaking of buying his farm, but of other people buying his farm over his head?—They buy their farms over each other's heads. I do not see how you can prevent that in any market.

37,722. I have only one other question to ask you, and that is rather an important one. We have had it suggested that Government should lend money at a low rate of interest to sitting tenants, and that they should have the option of purchase in case of the sale of the property. My question is this. I will put an extreme case. Supposing the Government lent money at 2½ per cent. for such cases, would the advantage of that go into the hands of the sitting tenants, or would it not increase the selling value of the property?—I think it would do both. Facilities for borrowing money at a low rate of interest would naturally increase the selling value, and, on the other hand, it would help the tenant by enabling him to purchase at a low rate of interest.

37,723. That is to say, he would pay a fair price, and he would borrow the money at a low rate of interest?—Yes, I think so necessarily. I think the advantage to the tenant would be very great. If it was possible to get money from the Government at the present moment for those who have purchased their farms—and there are a vast number in this country who have purchased them and have not the means to pay for them—at a low rate of interest it would be an immense relief.

37,724. You think that advantage would be divided between the seller and the purchaser?—In favour of the purchaser, I think, chiefly, but the seller is also bound to benefit by it to some extent.

Mr. Grove.

37,725. Have you had many claims for damage by game?—No.

37,726. You have had some, I suppose?—Oh, yes.

37,727. Have you settled them amicably?—Yes, always.

37,728. In all cases?—Yes.

37,729. Referring to a Land Court, do you think it would disturb the relations between landlord and tenant?—I do.

37,730. But if they could agree mutually between themselves as to rents and conditions, they need not go to a Land Court at all?—True, but the fact would remain.

37,731. The effect would remain?—The fact of the existence of a foreign body.

37,732. Undoubtedly, the fact that the Land Court would be there as a piece of machinery in case of need, but do you not think that if the landlord and tenant first put their heads together and agreed, a great deal of the objection to the Land Court in your mind might be done away with?—I am very strongly of opinion that at the present moment it would be very prejudicial to the interests of the Welsh tenant. What may happen in 20 or 30 years' time, when people are more educated, I cannot say, but you must bear in mind that the Welsh farmer, or any farmer, is not commercial. You cannot deal with him as you can with a shopkeeper. It is a different position altogether.

37,733. But he is commercial enough to appreciate his own interests, is he not?—I do not think so. He is not commercial enough to deal with his own affairs in a commercial spirit.

37,734. In a commercial spirit or in a commercial manner?—In a commercial manner. The time will come, no doubt, when he will.

37,735. Do you think there is sufficient labour on the land now?—No, I do not think there is.

37,736. Why; is it because of the agricultural depression, do you think?—Well, of course that has a very serious effect upon labour.

37,737. Do you think it is caused by shortness of cottage accommodation to any extent?—No, I think not.

37,738. Not at all?—I think not. The labourers have left this country because they get better pay elsewhere. If you could pay them they would stay here.

37,739. They go because the industrial districts give them higher wages?—Exactly.

37,740. You say when you give notice of abatement, you send out beforehand?—Yes.

37,741. May I ask what length of time that is before the rent audit or the rent day?—It is always very well known before the rent day what abatement we are going to give. What the abatement is going to be is as well known as possible a month or six weeks, or more than that, right through the estate.

37,742. So that a tenant could not say that he had to sell his stock at a low price in order to get money ready for his rent and then find that he did not want quite so much when he went to the rent audit?—No, I have never had a complaint.

37,743. There has been complaint of that in some cases?—It might have been the very first time when abatements were made, in the first instance, but since then I think notice has been given, at all events it has been always very well known.

37,744. You gave us a list of abatements; you read out some of the figures, and said other landlords had acted in the same way. I suppose those figures are fairly typical of what has been done on other estates?—They vary a little.

37,745. But taking it throughout?—Yes.

37,746. You complain of the railway rates. Do you mean the local railway rates, or do you mean competition rates for foreign produce?—That is a big subject. I have not gone into that but the local rates are undoubtedly too high. You cannot get a ton of manure from Llanelly or Swansea, or anywhere else, without paying an enormous rate for it.

37,747. Do you happen to know whether it is above the legal charge that the railway companies are entitled to make?—No, my knowledge is not sufficiently accurate.

37,748. I suppose you know about this little book which is published by the Board of Trade for 1*s.*, that tells you everything connected with it?—Yes, I do.

37,749. Then as to the list of commons or enclosures that you have been good enough to give us, you have no objection to that appearing on the notes, have you?—No, not the slightest.

37,750. As a matter of history, it will be most useful to us?—I believe it is practically correct. I have taken it from my draft awards, and I believe it to be correct, but if you will be good enough to submit it to the Board of Agriculture to look over, I shall be glad, in case of any slight error.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,751. You are agent for several estates, think?—Yes.

37,752. Containing altogether a large area. I was only just going to ask you what was the language of most of the tenants on the estates you have to do with?—Welsh.

37,753. Nearly all?—Nearly all.

37,754. You speak Welsh, I suppose, yourself?—Yes.

37,755. You find that a help do you not?—Yes; I do, certainly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,756. You said that in your opinion a Land Court would be prejudicial to the tenant?—I think so.

37,757. Why?—He would lose the warm interest which the landlord has in him now.

37,758. But his condition is deplorable now according to you?—No; I was going to ask before I left, permission to say this. It was not the tenants' condition, but that the present condition of agriculture was deplorable. That was what I intended to remark, not that the condition of the tenant was deplorable. I must be allowed, if you please, to correct that. That is what I wanted to say when I used the word deplorable.

37,759. But notwithstanding the warm interest taken by the landlord, it appears that the business of farming is a losing business?—It cannot be a winning one at present, at all events.

37,760. In what way would a Land Court make the tenants' position worse?—I do not think he would have the same consideration that he has now. I do not think so. There is not much got out of land at any time, the little prestige that there is left would be gone, and the interest in property would be gone in a great measure.

Lord Kenyon.

37,761. You said just now something to the effect that the tenant in course of time would treat matters in a more commercial spirit. Do you think that would be to his advantage or not?—It is a long time ahead, I am afraid.

37,762. Do you think it would be a good thing if the landlord were to treat his property in a commercial way?—Not for the tenant at present. I think it would be a good thing for the tenant if he could deal with the thing in a more commercial spirit than he does.

37,763. But not for the tenant if the landlord did that?—No, certainly not.

37,764. Do you think that a Land Court would induce the landlord to treat his property in a more commercial way?—I do.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,765. As to these tenants who have had the abatements that you have mentioned, have they had their rates reduced in proportion?—No, I have tried that, and it is impossible. So far as I can ascertain, you can get no abatement of assessment for an abatement of rent. It must be a permanent reduction of rent before the Assessment Committee will take any notice of it. I think it is very hard lines.

37,766. Then with regard to the haulage and timber cutting, do you not think it would be much better for the tenant to treat with the landlord. Is it quite fair for the tenant to have to treat with the timber merchant?—I have always stood by the tenant. When I have had any complaint I have always met it. The tenant who has timber cut on his land may have some disadvantage, but he gets a great quantity of timber, pretty well any quantity. I do not think it is a loss to the man as a rule.

37,767. I have seen some cases where tenants have not been in a very fair position to treat with the timber merchants; the landlord has sold the trees, and the tenant is obliged to take what he can get?—I have had that here, and I have stood behind the tenants, and brought the timber merchants to book; I always do so.

37,768. I know you are a very extensive land agent and surveyor. Are you also a practical farmer?—Yes; I have farmed all my life, and my father before me, and I am farming now.

37,769. You say you do not approve of a Land Court. Do you consider that the present way of valuing farms by a person employed by the landlord is quite fair to the tenant, that the tenant should not have a word to say in the matter?—I suppose I have valued as much land as any man living in this country. I have always found that my figures have been accepted fairly.

37,770. In other valuations we find that there is generally one appointed by each party, and an umpire. Do you not think it would be fair for the tenants to have the same thing with regard to farms when there is any dispute?—I do not know that the tenant on the whole would benefit by it. Instead of having one honourable and competent man to do what is fair between the two men, you set the two men in antagonism with each other, and the consequence is they are sure to differ, and an umpire comes in. Each makes the best of his own case, and finally it goes before an umpire.

37,771. But is it not natural that the valuer should be inclined to lean to the one that has employed him?—Not in the least. The man has his own reputation at stake, which is of greater value to him than any money that he gets, if he has any position at all in the country.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,772. You say that the abatements vary on the different estates?—Yes. Shall I give them to you.

37,773. Will you hand them in. That will be the best way?—I can do so afterwards. I cannot hand you in at present the paper I have in my hand, because you would not understand it, I will read it. I have given you the abatements granted by Sir Marteine Lloyd and Mr. Gwynne Hughes. Then on the Glansevin estate, Edward Price Lloyd, Esq., 10 per cent. 1885, 10 per cent. 1886, 5 per cent. 1887 and Lady Day 1888, 10 per cent. in 1892, 10 per cent. in 1893. On the Maeslydan estates, Captain Lloyd Harries, 10 per cent. from Michaelmas 1885 to Lady Day 1888 inclusive, 10 per cent. in 1892 and 1893. On the Dolaucothi estate, 20 per cent. at Lady Day 1882, 10 per cent. at Michaelmas 1882, 5 per cent. in 1883, 20 per cent. in 1885, 10 per cent. 1886 to 1888, 10 per cent. 1892 to 1893, and a further abatement of 5 per cent. for lime, for those who carted lime in 1893. Colonel Methuen's estates, 10 per cent. in 1885, 1886, 1887, Lady Day 1888, and 1892, and 15 per cent. in 1893. As to Sir Henry Davies, the abatements have been the same as the last I read.

37,774. Upon whose initiative were those abatements made. Were they made by an umpire, or were they made on your advice?—They were made acting on my advice, certainly.

37,775. I will ask you this question: are the farms evenly rented on the different estates?—I think they are, very fairly.

37,776. Why should you advise a greater reduction in some cases than in others?—The answer to that is this: Farms that are of fairly good quality, near railways and markets, do not require so large an abatement as those that are distant, and poor land. As in Mr. Gwynne Hughes' case, he has given 10 per cent. to his tenants near Llandilo and St. Clear's, and 20 per cent. on the estate called Brechfa, right out in the mountains, inferior land, far away from markets. The general character of the property in the district is taken into consideration, and the position and facilities for markets.

37,777. But would not the position of the farms be taken into consideration when the rent was adjusted in the first instance?—The consequence of the depression is very much more severely felt on bad land than it is on good land, and on land distant from markets more than it is on land close to markets.

37,778. Practically it amounts to this, that the farmer has to take what the landlord chooses to give him?—Certainly.

37,779. You say that the depression commenced in 1879, and that it is owing chiefly to bad seasons?—Foreign competition and bad seasons.

37,780. Bad seasons chiefly?—Bad seasons at present chiefly. Yes, I think so.

37,781. Are we to understand that the depression since 1879 is to be attributed to bad seasons?—In 1879 it was attributable to a bad season, but there have been very high prices and very good times since 1879, cattle selling at such prices that when taken to England they were kept the whole summer and sold fat at the same price that they were sold here as store cattle, the English farmer getting nothing for their keep. That is since 1879.

37,782. Was it through bad seasons that you made reductions in those bad years since 1879?—Low prices, and various causes, not so much bad seasons then as at present.

37,783. Do you know this farm of David Williams' well?—Yes, very well.

37,784. Is there any poor land on it?—Yes.

37,785. How many acres?—I could not tell you out of book. If I had known you wanted it I should have been very glad to have given you every information about it. It is a large extent of land, I know.

37,786. You do not remember, perhaps, what is the rent of the place?—I really could not tell you. Perhaps you have it there; if you would tell me I will tell you pretty nearly, I dare say. Is it 60*l.* or 70*l.*

37,787. I think it is 90*l.*?—It may be so. I really do not remember.

Chairman.

37,788. Some questions have been handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "What was the "reason of Mr. Davies, Caefylchy leaving his "farm on the Glansevin estate"?—Well, he and Captain Lloyd, the landlord, did not hit it off together.

37,789. "Is it not a fact that not three farms "on the Glansevin estate are held to day by the "same families as held them 25 years ago?"—I do not think that is so. There were a great number of old life leases on the estate, and those who had lived under them could not survive. They had to leave, and we had to rebuild a great portion of the estate in consequence.

37,790. There was a great change on that estate?—A great change on that estate, greater than on any estate I have.

37,791. "Why is there no demand for leases. "Is it not because rents are too high and the "clauses too stringent?"—I do not think so. They do not care for leases simply because as yearly tenants they consider themselves perfectly safe. They have all the repairs done for them, and they have no liability, whereas under a lease, being a contract under seal, they would have liability certainly.

37,792. "Was not the farm of Penarth, on "Dolaucothi estate, let in the seventies by "tender?"—I was not acting then for the estate. I could not tell you. I only acted after the death of the late Mr. Johnes.

37,793. "Is it the rule that farms should be "re-valued on the outgoing of a tenant?"—It does not follow at all. It depends entirely upon the circumstances.

37,794. "Have landlords done anything to "introduce scientific knowledge of farming "among tenants." I think that was answered. You said no?—No, I think not. Pardon me, Sir James Hills-Johnes, who is with Lady Hills-Johnes and Mrs. Johnes, the owner of the Dolau Cothi estate, has done a good deal in that way. He had a professor down there last year, and laid out, I think, something like 15 acres, or more than that, in experimental plots that were manured according to the direction of the professor. He did all he could in that way to diffuse information with reference to manures in the district.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,795. Was that Professor Parry?—It was not Professor Parry who attended there; I forget his name; it was another professor, from Aberystwith.

Chairman.

37,796. "Does not the fact that abatements "are made imply that rents are acknowledged "to be too high?"—No, I do not think so at all. I do not think it affects the question of the rent so much. Rents are fixed upon an average price, and when the price becomes very much beneath that from some adverse circumstances the landlord has to come to the rescue, and he does.

37,797. "Why is there less drainage done "now than formerly?"—I have done a great deal of drainage, and have had to give it up because I could not get the tenants to keep the ends of the drains open even; they do not open their side ditches, the roots come in and fill the drains; they do not appreciate them sufficiently, that is one reason. Another reason is that at present prices of labour there is very little land in this country that would pay for draining.

37,798. "Is it not because farmers have lost "heart because they are not certain of compen-"sation?"—I do not think so at all. The farmers have drained very little. There is very little drainage done by the farmers, and as a rule what is done is not of much value. They do not know much about it to begin with, and it is only half done. That is as a rule, there are exceptions, of course.

37,799. "Do farmers know the provisions of "the Agricultural Holdings Act?"—I think not.

37,800. I think you said that. "Have you "ever seen a copy of it in the hands of a "tenant"?—No, never.

37,801. "And has it been translated into "Welsh?"—Not that I am aware of.

37,802. "Does not the preservation of game "tend to disturb the relations of landlord and "tenant?"—Where excessive, no doubt.

37,803. "If freeholders, who have inherited "their farms, fail to make farming pay, why is "it that, as you say, tenant farmers have of late "shown an increasing desire to buy their "farms?"—I do not think I said that.

37,804. You did not say that?—I do not think so. I did not intend to.

37,805. "Do you know of any cases where "tenants' children work at home for nothing, "and where the tenants can still hardly find "money to pay the rent"?—Where there are children they work, and as to the circumstance of the tenant being unable to pay the rent in any particular instance, of course I have no means of knowing.

37,806. "You say that the farmers' condition is better now than it was 30 years ago." Is that so?—Yes, the farmers' condition, very much.

37,807. "Is the standard of comfort as high among Welsh tenant farmers as it is among English tenant farmers?"—I think it is, having regard to the capital they have got invested in their farms.

37,808. The next question I do not know whether you will be able to answer: "How "often do they get butcher's meat?"—I do not know.

37,809. "Is it the case that tenants on Mr. "Gwynne Hughes' Brechfa estate have to pay "the fire insurance premium for the landlord?" —Yes.

Chairman—continued.

37,810. "Have you ever postponed the date "of the rent audit in order that tenants should "not sell their cattle at too low a price?" —I do not think I have had occasion to do so. Rents due on the 25th March are received at Brechfa on the 17th July, and those due on the 29th September are received about the 17th or 18th of January. I have never been asked to postpone an audit there. I would have done so with great pleasure.

37,811. There is another question which I do not know whether you will be able to answer. "You say that abatements were made on your "advice." You have advised abatements of rent?—Certainly, I was consulted.

37,812. "Do the landlords take pains to "acquaint themselves with the position of their "tenants?"—Position in what way? They take a very great personal interest in their tenants.

37,813. Then there is this question by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Do you consider that the abatements recently given have caused the loss in "each year to be fairly divided between landlord "and tenant"?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Richard Jones.

37,814. I will put one question, arising out of an answer of yours to a question of Mr. Llewelyn Williams. Do you know of any class of people having the same amount of capital who live as hard as tenant farmers?—I do not know. Their capital is not very large, and they get a living out of it, a great number of them; I do not know that they live so very hard in this country. I do not find it so.

37,815. Are you in a position to know how they live?—I am, indeed. I am every day in their houses, and have been all my life.

37,816. What was your answer with respect to the fresh meat?—I said I did not know.

37,817. Then, on your own showing, you are not in a position to know how they live?—Not at all on my own showing. Enter any farm-house you like, and you will find there is a very good fat pig hanging up, and there is plenty of food everywhere, and the people are looking well and healthy, and I know they are well fed. I know them personally, and have known them all my life, and there is no hard living amongst them.

37,818. I suppose you would consider it hard to live on bacon all the year?—I should not consider it hard, with their capital, to live upon what they live on.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,819. Their capital, did you say?—Their capital, yes.

37,820. But is one's diet to vary with one's capital?—One's capital would influence one's ability to regulate one's diet, very much, I think.

Mr. Griffiths.

37,821. Can you tell us what has been the result of the experiments carried out by the Agricultural Department of Aberystwith College at the place you mention?—I am sorry to tell you that it was a complete failure owing to the season. The season was so dry that it was only where nitrate of soda was applied there was any appreciable difference; the phosphates and other manures had no effect whatever simply because they had no rain. Re-examined, 39,414.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Llewelyn Williams called and examined.

Chairman.

37,822. You live, I think, at Swansea?—Yes.

37,823. You were at one time exhibitioner in modern history at Brasenose College, Oxford?—Yes.

37,824. You were also Powis Classical Exhibitioner and the writer of Bridgman's Prize Essays?—Yes.

37,825. You have handed in a statement and I will ask you now to read it?—I am the son of the late Morgan Williams, Brown Hill, Llansadwrn, a tenant farmer on the Abermarlais estate, and have taken a deep interest in the agricultural question in Wales. I have acted as honorary secretary to the central committee of Carmarthenshire farmers for the organising of evidence to be placed before this Commission.

Difficulties.

Great difficulty has been experienced in inducing farmers to come forward to give evidence. When it was first announced that the Commission was about to sit, public meetings were held all over the county, and the greatest readiness was manifested on the part of the farmers to give evidence. Gradually, however, the enthusiasm cooled down, and very few farmers, who were eager to give evidence at first, will now be found ready to come forward. The only reason for this falling off of enthusiasm is the fear, well or ill-founded, on the part of the tenant farmers, that the landlords of the county view with coldness, if not with aversion, the visit of the Commissioners. All the members of the committee were of the opinion that the tenants were afraid to give evidence on account of the real or fancied opposition of the landlords. The Witnesses' Protection Act is thought to be insufficient to protect the tenant against future annoyances, if not actual hard treatment, from the landlord or his agent. At a meeting of the central committee, held at the Assembly Rooms, Carmarthen, Mr. Lloyd Morgan, M.P., barrister-at-law, explained the nature of the protection afforded by the Act. Several who were present at the time immediately left the room, and appeared no more at the meetings. Again, I have received very many letters from farmers, giving facts which would be within the province of this Commission to take into account, but those who have supplied them are unwilling that the facts should be made known, for fear of the consequences. More than one instance has been given at the committee meetings where the landlords have interfered with their tenants' intention to give evidence. Even good landlords have not encouraged their tenants to come forward. Since writing that my attention has been drawn to two instances, one Mr. Vaughan Pryse Rice, of Llwynybrain, who sent a circular late in March, after we had collected all the tenants' evidence, giving them permission to give evidence; and I believe Lord Dynevor has also intimated his willingness that his tenants should come forward. With those two exceptions, no landlord that I know of has encouraged his tenants in any way to come forward. I submit copies of letters which passed between Lord Emlyn, the chairman of the quarter sessions, and myself, with reference to granting the use of the Town Hall, Carmarthen, for holding the committee meetings in. I should also say that Lord Emlyn is the chairman of the quarter sessions, but I wrote to him as chairman of the joint police committee. The hall is used for concerts, and, I believe, political meetings, but its use was denied to the farmers.

Golden Grove,

Sir, December 4th, 1893.

I am in receipt of your letter, but regret that I am unable to comply with the request which it contains. I do not think that the meeting you mention is one for which I should be justified in granting the use of the Town Hall at Carmarthen.

I am, &c.

(Signed) Emlyn.

Mr. W. Ll. Williams.

Ty Coch, Swansea,

My Lord, December 5th, 1893.

I regret that you cannot see your way to comply with my request for the use of the Guild Hall, Carmarthen. The object of the meeting is neither sectarian nor political, but we are only endeavouring, to the best of our ability, to aid the inquiry which the Government has instructed the Royal Commission on Land to make.

Yours, &c.

(Signed) W. Llewelyn Williams.

The Right Hon. Viscount Emlyn.

This will, perhaps, indicate the attitude of passive resistance which has been taken up by even good landlords towards the Commission, and it will help to explain the distrust which tenants feel who are entirely dependent on the goodwill of the landlord. I submit also a letter which I received from the son of a tenant farmer, who had intended to give evidence, and who had actually sent me particulars of the evidence which he thought of giving. His mother, however, who is a widow, and his relations, fearing the future illwill of landowners and agents, have succeeded in preventing him from appearing as a witness.

DEAR MR. WILLIAMS, March 30th, 1894.

RECEIVED your papers safe, and enclosed you will find them returned. I am very sorry to tell you that I want to withdraw my name from your list of witnesses. I had kept the matter of my giving evidence a secret till now, but, somehow or other, some of my relations have heard it (especially my mother), and I had to pledge to her that I shall not give evidence. She believes that she shall suffer because of my giving evidence, and rather than she or anybody else may say so, I deem it expedient to withdraw——

I have handed you a copy of the letter, but I should not like the name to transpire if it could possibly be prevented. The greatest difficulty has been experienced to induce the men who have suffered most to give evidence themselves, or to put information in the way of those who are willing to appear before the Commissioners. It is the best landlords, as a rule, who are ready to appear before the Commission, men who have comparatively little to fear from the inquiry. The worst landlords will allow others to speak for them. Those who are willing to speak for the tenants, on the other hand, are for the most part either men who are comparatively well off, and are not, therefore, entirely dependent on their landlords, or men who have left off farming or have other means of subsistence than by tilling the soil. Another difficulty has been the almost impossibility of bringing documentary, or indeed any proof except tradition to bear upon things that happened 40 or 50 years ago. The landlords have preserved deeds and documents in their estate offices, and can produce or suppress at will. The farmers find it impossible to prove any of their statements which relate to a condition of things that existed before their own time. For instance, it has been impossible, in many instances, to find out the rents of farms in 1844, because of the many changes that have occurred in the tenancies of farms. The present occupier remembers the rent paid by his predecessor, but knows nothing, as a rule, of his predecessor's predecessor. This is the case not only with increase in rents, but with unexhausted improvements which were not paid for to the outgoing tenant. It is, therefore, impossible to know how much landlords have benefited during the century by their tenants' labour and industry.

INCREASE IN RENTS.

It will be clearly proved, I think, to the Commissioners (1) that there has been a general increase in rents, concurrently with a fall in the price of produce, and a tremendous rise in the price of labour; (2) that there has been a great decrease in the rural population; and (3) that the land does not produce as much as it might, owing to inadequate cultivation, resulting from insecurity of tenure, absence of proper compensation for improvements, and the consolidation of farms. Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., in October last quoted before the Commissioners from the Statistical Abstracts of the Inland Revenue Reports to show that rents had increased in Carmarthenshire by 73·9 per cent. since 1814. It will be impossible for the tenants, on account of the limitations which I have already specified, to show that there has been such an increase in every case. It is impossible because we have to rely on the memory and experience of one generation only, but the rise in rents during the last 30 or 40 years will show the spirit in which Welsh tenants have been treated. Though the tenants can only show, in most cases, that rents have advanced during their own lifetime, it should not be assumed that rents were not continually advanced before their time. The Rev. Walter Davies, in his report on the state of farming in South Wales in 1814, says that "there are instances of tenants at will being "nearly ruined by having expensively improved "their respective farms, which, as soon as the "improvements had begun to repay them, "became the property of others, such as would "not be troubled by any nice qualms of con-"science which might plead the tenant's case." This would seem to show that the grievances which farmers complain of to-day are at least as old as 1814. Mr. Clare Sewell Read, afterwards M.P. for Norfolk, published in 1859 an essay on the Farming of South Wales, which received the prize offered by the Royal Agricultural Society of England, and which seems to have been written in a very fair and impartial spirit. After showing that the Welsh farmers lose by growing corn and hay, he goes on to say, "But "it will be naturally asked, 'If this be a fair "'statement, how do the farmers live?' They "depend chiefly on the young stock to pay the "rent, and rely on the dairy. . . . In "addition to this, the small farmer and his sons "do the principal work and repairs of the farm. "They have thus hardly any outgoings for "labour or tradesmen's wages and they live in "a style of patriarchal simplicity, almost "entirely on the produce of their own land." Further on, he says that "Recent leases exhibit "an increase of rent on the old ones from 50 to "300 per cent., and the land is now (in 1859) "let at its extreme value." It is to be regretted that farmers cannot show how rent has been advanced since 1814. I am, however, in a position to testify to one case. My grandfather, Morgan Williams, of Brown Hill, held the farm of Ffrwd Wen, in the parish of Llandilo, on a lease about the year 1814. The rent paid by him was 35*l.*, but the present rent of the farm is between 70*l.* and 80*l.* From the figures quoted by Mr. Ellis, it will also be seen that Camarthenshire is the only county in which the rents have sensibly increased since 1879, and in many hill-side parishes, such as Myddfai and Llanfynydd, rents have been advanced during the last ten years on farms which were, even 40 years ago, let at their extreme value, and in spite of the fact that cattle and farm produce have fallen in price, while the price of labour has trebled during that time. Farmers have been compelled to acquiesce in this increase, because they are, as a rule, dependent on tilling the soil for subsistence, and are not, therefore, free to treat with their landlords on equal terms, and they have been, and are, sentimentally attached to their birth-place, and find it difficult to settle in England or abroad. The style of farming, the language, customs, and religious worship would be different. (Of late years, however, there has been an appreciable increase in the migration of farmers. Quite a small colony of farmers from the district of Llangadock has settled in Herefordshire, Brecknock, and on Lady Llanover's estate, near Abergavenny.) "The smaller holdings," wrote Mr. Clare Sewell Read, in 1849, "are generally "dearer in proportion than the large farms, "simply, it is supposed, because there are so "many competitors for small parcels of land." The competition for farms is to-day none the less keen because the population has decreased since 1849, for the number of farms has also decreased through the consolidation of several small farms. Instances are still frequent where farmers try to outbid one another for farms. It may not be that the landlord invariably lets his land to the highest bidder, but there are plenty of instances where landlords take advantage of the competition to extort a higher rent for the most desirable applicant. I will quote the case of my own father as an instance. My grandfather took Brown Hill, a farm on the Abermarlais estate, in 1830. The dwelling and out-houses were built in 1801, and I believe they were, and are considered, to be models of their kind. An Englishman, named Abbott, was his immediate predecessor, but he was completly ruined, and died in the workhouse. I do not know what rent my grandfather paid when he took it, but I believe it was let to him at a moderate rental, as the local farmers were afraid to take such a large farm, which had ruined an Englishman. The land had also, I believe, been uncultivated for some years prior to 1830. My grandfather, however, had a family of six sons and two daughters. Five of his sons worked on the farm, four of them till they married, while my grandmother and the two daughters also worked hard. In 1850 a lease for three lives was given him, to cover the lives of himself, his wife, and his eldest son, at a rental of 250*l.* a year, but a good portion of the farm was taken away, and added to other neighbouring farms. My grandfather survived his wife, and eldest son, and in 1862 retired, leaving my father who had recently married, to live at Brown Hill. In 1870 my grandfather died, and the lease was therefore determined. The then landlord, Mr. Henry Foley, resided in France, and his estate was managed by Mr. Protheroe Lewis, a Llandilo solicitor, with whom my father was on excellent terms. It had been arranged between my father and Mr. Lewis that my father should be granted a fresh lease of 21 years at a rent of 280*l.*, an increase of 30*l.* on the old rental. Before, however, the lease had been formally signed, another farmer from the neighbourhood offered 320*l.* for Brown Hill, and, according to Mr. Protheroe Lewis, offered him besides an honorarium of 100*l.* This honorarium, which is locally known as "cil dwrn," is a perfectly well-known thing, but whether agents accept it or not I cannot say. Mr. Long Price, of Talley, speaking at a rent audit some time ago at Llangadock, stated that farmers had often offered him such a thing. (I mention this simply as bearing upon the frequency of the practice, and not as reflecting in any way upon estate agents.) Mr. Lewis, however, refused to accept the honorarium, and gave my father the first refusal of the farm at 320*l.* My father had no option but to accept. He had a young family of six children, the youngest only born in that year. He had lived all his life practically at Brown Hill, and was much attached to the place. He knew very little English, and being at the time about 45 years of age, would have found it extremely difficult to have settled down elsewhere. No doubt, too, he did not like to leave a farm which his father and himself had done their best to improve. These improvements did not merely consist of bringing a farm which they had found a prairie into a high state of cultivation, but he had planted trees in the orchard, and made the garden a little paradise—improvements which could not be estimated at their money value. It would also have been impossible for him, without paying a fancy price, to get another farm in the neighbourhood. About the time the land hunger in the district was intense. The Danyrallt estate, owned by the Lloyds, was sold about that time, and was bought by a Mr. Alan James Gulston, who ruined himself by buying it at too high a figure The consequence was that all the rents on the estate were, without exception, raised. Farmers, rather than leave their homes, consented to an increase, and I believe the neighbouring landowners, gathering confidence from the success of Mr. Gulston, followed suit whenever possible. My father, therefore, consented to accept a lease for 21 years at a rent of 320*l.* The times were good, and the farm was in excellent condition. I believe that for some time it was possible to pay the rent. The lease (produced) was signed on August 30th, 1870, but was to date for the 29th September 1869. The three lives' lease, however, under which the landlord's interest was 250*l.*, only determined at my grandfather's death in February 1870, so that the landlord's increased interest of 70*l.* a year commenced before the expiration of the old lease. I need not point out, my lord, that the agent in that case was a lawyer. In 1890 the lease expired, and during the 20 years not a single penny was given in abatements. The point of that is that my father had to pay an increased rent of 35*l.* a year, while the old lease had not yet expired. In 1872 or 1873, I believe the foot and mouth disease caused widespread, and in some cases ruinous loss among farmers. I know that my father lost considerably. But I have never heard of a landlord showing any active sympathy with the tenant in these circumstances. I know, too, that on more than one occasion cattle had to be sold at a low price in order to meet the rent. One year, I well remember—about 1878, I think—our most valuable cart mare was sold for 60*l.* in order to pay the landlord, and I do not believe that the full half-year's rent was not paid on the day of the rent audit throughout the period. I think, my lord, that the most valuable cattle ought to be kept on the farm in order to improve the stock, instead of having to be sold in this way in order to meet the landlord's demands on the day of the rent audit. My father, however, had died before the expiration of the lease, and my mother had married again to Mr. Rees Lewis, the present tenant. Mr. Lewis, however, in 1890, was in a more independent position than my father was in 1870. He is the owner of one or two farms in the parish of Llansadwrn, and possessed, therefore, more freedom to contract with his landlord. Nor possibly was he sentimentally attached to Brown Hill in the same way as my father was. He refused to accept the farm without a new valuation. The landlord appointed a valuer of his own—a gentleman from Pembrokeshire, I am not sure that it was not Mr. Rule Owen, who gave evidence before the Commissioners—who valued the farm at 280*l.*, which is the present rent. For 20 years, 40*l.* a year had been paid more than the land was worth. Had this been done through a mistake on my father's part, or even through an unfair valuation, the thing might be more tolerable. But the rent agreed upon in the first instance was exactly the same as that at which it was valued in 1890, and it was only advanced to 320*l.* through taking a merciless advantage of the tenant's helplessness against insane competition. It is also more than doubtful whether the man who bid for the farm against my father would have been able either to stock or to manage it properly. But landlords, especially if they have as their agents men who are not practical farmers, seem to care little for the character of the tenant or his financial position, as long as he is able to pay the rent. The condition of the law at present—which enables the landlord to be the first creditor to be considered—no doubt causes landowners to be sometimes, at least, careless as to the financial position of the tenant. I produce also a circular, which was lately sent out by the recently-appointed perpetual curate of Gwynfe, with reference to the glebe farm of Llwyncelyn. It will help to illustrate the manner in which farmers are asked to outbid one another for farms, though, as I have stated, the farm is not necessarily given in every instance to the highest bidder. I have no hesitation, however, in saying, as Mr. C. S. Read said in 1849, that the competition has increased the rents. I do not know how many applicants there were for Llwyncelyn, but I believe they were many. The farm was let to Mr. Howells, Pantmeredith, a neighbouring farmer, who has already a farm to till. I do not think that glebe farms are, as a rule, well managed. The incumbent, having only a life interest, tries to get as much out of them as he can, and spends as little as he can help. This is the circular:

"Llwyncelyn Farm.

"As there is a number of good applicants for the farm of Llwyncelyn, we have found it very difficult to decide upon a tenant. We have therefore made up our minds to let the farm by tender, though we do not bind ourselves absolutely to accept the highest tender.

"If you are still an applicant, please read the following instructions carefully, and send me your offer:—1st. The rent is to be 60*l.* a year. 2nd. Possession can be had at once. 3rd. The rent is to be paid from the 25th of March next. You need not say anything about repairs.

"The question for you to decide is, 'What goodwill are you prepared to give if appointed tenant?'

"You can take a few days to consider your offer, and then write to me.

(Rev.) J. Jones,
February 24, 1894. Gwynfe, Llangadock,
R.S.O."

I do not know how often it is the case that these glebe farms are given to tenants on condition that they go to church. I know, however, that at Llansadwrn the glebe farm of Llwyncelyn was given to the last two tenants, William Jones and Anthony Williams, on this condition. Both were previously Independents, but after becoming tenants of Llwyncelyn, they and their families went to church. I do not think that any men should be tempted in this way. Some of the people who have been "converted" in this manner have felt the degradation of their position very keenly, and nothing has done more to destroy the self-respect of farmers than the temptation to which they are exposed of being, as it were, bribed to relinquish the religion of their fathers. This keen competition for land has not only had the effect of lowering the character and destroying the manliness and independence of spirit of the farmers, and of causing them to plot and scheme one against the other in order to win the landlord's favour, but it has, in too many instances, made landlords arrogant, unsympathetic, and harsh in their dealings. I will give one instance, which will, perhaps, show what injury to the whole community may be inflicted by irresponsible power being placed in the hands of an unfit person. The farm of Pentre Meurig, in Llanwrda, is, or was, one of the best in the whole of the Vale of Towy. The house is an old one, and was once the residence of Sir John Powell, one of the judges who acquitted the Seven Bishops. It is the largest farm on the Llwynybrain estate, and from what I have been told, its recent history is something as follows. In 1835, David Prosser left the farm, which he held at a rent of 350*l.*, but the farm at the time was much larger than it is at present. John Prosser took it in 1835 at a rent of 400*l.*, but in 1841 left on failing to obtain a reduction. Another Prosser took it at the same rent, and remained there till about 1852. In that year it was taken by a man named Price, who failed to make it pay, though he had four daughters working at home on the farm. Price left in 1859. Another Prosser took it from 1859 to 1862, when he had to leave through refusing to sign an agreement. Then it remained a "pasture for birds" for a year and a half—a prairie. In 1862 Daniel Samuel, holding a farm called Llwyncyfarthwch, near Llanelly, took the farm on a 21 years' lease, at a rent of 460*l.* He had two sons and two daughters working on the farm, and it was a matter of comment and wonder to the neighbours to see Pentre, which had hitherto had a small army of male and female servants, managed in this way. Many tales are still told of the careful thrift which was exercised by Mrs. Samuel, and how she used to take butter-milk to Llanelly to sell. In spite of this, Samuel could not make the farm pay. Major Rice, the landlord, however, held him to his lease, and it was not till after seven years of fruitless toil that he succeeded in getting a man to take the lease from him. Rees, the new tenant, soon found that he could not make the farm pay, and ran away to America in order to escape from his covenant. But he had to return, as he had a small farm called Llanfihangel, in the parish of Llanfihangel Cilfargen, which he had not disposed of. This farm he had to sell, and remained for another dozen years or so at Pentre, employing no labour except at harvest time, and allowing the land to run out. He was eventually sold up, and died shortly after, broken in heart and fortune. There were plenty who would be willing to take the farm at a reasonable rent; in fact the land hunger is so great that there is no lack of applicants even for a rack-rented farm. But even Welsh farmers flinched from certain and inevitable ruin by offering as much rent for a farm when it was run out as two previous tenants had failed to pay for it when it was in good condition. Major Rice, however, steadily refused to give it to anyone except at the old rent, and he persisted in this determination till the day of his death, which occurred two or three years later. In the meantime, this, the largest farm in the whole neighbourhood, at a time when land hunger was rife, and in a district where tilling the soil is a necessity for the very existence of the population, was allowed to become a prairie. The crop of hay was allowed to rot upon the land in order to save paying the parish rates. The loss to a small parish like Llanwrda was considerable, and the rate had to be increased. A man was hired to keep off trespassers, and he was the only person who made a livelihood out of a farm which once directly supported, and now supports, a dozen people or more. Two other large farms on the Llwynybrain estate were also unlet at the time of Major Rice's death, and all have since been let at reduced rents. Two or three years after Rees' death—the last tenant I mentioned—and while Major Rice was still alive, a man named Morris, from Carmarthen, took the farm at the old rental; his wife did the dairy work almost unaided, and her death, which took place shortly after taking the farm, was to some extent, at least, caused by overwork. Morris then gave up the farm. On the death of Major Rice, and after a short interval after Morris' leaving, the farm was rented to a tenant named Davies, who still lives there. He has five sons and two daughters working hard on the farm, and improving it. His rent is, I believe, 280*l.*, but he has no security that it will be continued at that price after the farm has been increased in value by the expenditure of his capital and his children's labour. The history of Pentre Meurig illustrates the danger and loss to the community of placing irresponsible and absolute power in the hands of one man over the means of production. Other influences have, perhaps, been at work to a lesser degree in raising the rents, especially since 1870, in Carmarthenshire. A very large amount of land to the north of Llandilo has been sold and resold during the last 30 years; and even in cases where there has been no actual sale, new men have come into the property, who had little or no previous connexion with the tenants on the estates. The change of ownership may not have in every case resulted in the increase of rents; but in many instances, within my own knowledge, it undoubtedly has. The following estates have been sold during the last generation:—Alltyferin, Glanbrydan (twice); Danyrallt (twice); Saunders Davies'; Glanbran, Cynghordy, &c. The following have changed hands through marriage or inheritance:—Middleton Hall, Manoravon, Abermarlais, Llwynybrian, &c. The relations of the old tenants and the new owners have been, to a greater extent than was once the case, based on commercial lines. Men, who had made money in trade, bought land for its social value, and gave too high a price for it, and expected a fair return on their investment. I believe also, that the social value of ownership of land has decreased since the political influence of landlords has been lost through the Ballot Act. Whether this may have a tendency to make landowners treat land as they would any other commercial commodity, I will leave the Commissioners to decide. It is certain that for years before 1868 Carmarthenshire always returned Tories to Parliament. In 1868 it returned one Liberal, in 1874 two Tories, in 1880 a Tory and a Liberal, and in 1885 and since two Liberals. At the election of 1874, the Abermarlais tenants were told to assemble at the Abermarlais toll-gate, and were there decorated with red rosettes the Conservative colour, and were marched to the polling place at Llangadock, calling on the way at the Tory committee-room to get their register number, which was given them on a card. Hitherto, the owners of Abermarlais had been Liberals, and had allowed their tenants to vote as they liked. The change was not due, I believe, to the new owner, but to the agent, Mr. Molesworth Ellis, a letter from whom to a tenant on the Gulston estate, who applied for a reduction in his rent, I also submit:—

28, Park Place, Cheltenham,
16th December 1885.

Sir,

In reply to yours of the 15th instant, I beg to inform you Mr. Gulston does not intend making any return at his audit, his property not being made up of a large number of farms such as is the case in the estates you named in your letter, which alters the case materially. In your case, I consider you do not pay a very high rent considering the small acreage of your farm. In dealing with a small property like Mr. Gulston's, I take each case on its merits, and consider a general reduction in no way called for. I am aware markets are low, but this is the result of five years of mismanagement under a Government calling itself Liberal, and under that name ruining every industry that is English. I hope if the present Government remains in office, a better state of things will return, otherwise all classes will have yet to suffer much greater privations.

I am, &c.

To Mr. Rees, (Signed) M. Ellis.

Tir Glancennen Farm.

I should like to point out three things in that letter:—"The property not being made up of a "large number of farms" seems to imply that the rents would be higher according to the smallness of: "considering the small acreage of "your farm"—the small farm is still rented at a higher figure than the larger farm, according to Mr. Ellis—and to the manner in which the political opinions of the tenant are endeavoured to be influenced. I should like to remind you also that this being written a little after the General Election of 1885, at which for the first time Carmarthenshire had returned two Liberal members, it seemed to imply that because the tenant farmers had returned two Liberals to Parliament they could not get any reduction in the rent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,826. The general election was in 1885, I think?—Yes, some time in the autumn, I think, and this was in December. At the election of 1874, the Dolgarreg tenants were assembled in a body at Llanwrda, decorated with the Tory favour, marched to the railway station, and thence to the polling place, calling at the Tory committee room on the way. The owner of Dolgarreg at the time was Mr. Charles Bishop, clerk of the peace for the county of Carmarthen (before the County Council's Act). I mention the fact that he was clerk of the peace because he was in receipt of public money. It is certain also that concurrently with the decline of their political influence landlords have become less anxious to keep up the number of their tenants. At one time a landlord maintained as many men on the land as he could. The tendency has been of late years to throw together small farms in order to save repairs, at the cost of reducing the number of tenants and increasing the competition for land.

See 39,546.

Relations of Landlords and Tenants.

There is no tenantry in the world which has shown so much attachment to the landlords. The common name for a landlord is "master," which indicates the close personal relation that once existed between landlord and tenant, and which the tenant has never lost sight of even now. In spite of innumerable broken pledges, hardships, and oppression, the tenant, as a rule, is willing to place implicit faith in his landlord's word. A chance expression in the course of a casual conversation is often sufficient for the farmer to build his hopes on. Tenants have carried on large and expensive improvements, relying either entirely on the honour of the landlord to allow them to enjoy them, or on a verbal promise to that effect. It would be easy to multiply instances of this, but perhaps the following will suffice, in addition to others which will be given by other witnesses. (1.) The late Mr. Price, of Lasallt Isaf, Llangadock, greatly improved the farm, which was part of the Saunders Davies' estate. A book, which is in the possession of the present tenant (a nephew of Mr. Price), shows that 268*l.* 19*s.* 8½*d.* were spent on improvements during the first 12 years of his tenancy, but this amount by no means represented the full value of the improvements made. At the end of the 12 years the estate was re-valued, and the rent was raised from 66*l.* to 100*l.* About 1884 the farm was sold with the rest of the estate, and no compensation was paid for improvements. (2.) The same person built a thatched cottage and a small cow-house for the use of a labourer who worked on the farm. He asked for a lease on them, but the agent answered, "Is that the amount of your confidence in your "landlord?" Five or six years later the plot of land on which the cottage and cow-house stood were sold. Mr. E. Price Evans, the present tenant of Lasallt Isaf, asked Mrs. Saunders Davies to make some consideration for the cottage, when the land was sold, but was refused. The rent of the little place was raised by the new landlord from 9*l.* to 12*l.* per annum. Before I leave Lasallt Isaf I should like to say that about 18 months ago a tenant received notice to quit from the landlord, although no reason was assigned at all for it. The tenant's opinion is (I give it for what it is worth) that one of two things was the cause of his receiving this notice, either that a tale-bearer, to whom I refer later on in my evidence, untruly told the landlord that he shot over the farm, or that the tenant asked the landlord too often for necessary repairs to be done. In any case the notice to quit was received, and I am not sure whether it has been taken back yet. (3.) Mr. Price, of Lasallt Uchaf, worked hard on his farm. His grandfather and father had done much to improve it before his time. Between them they cleared and drained several acres of land, erected new out-buildings, and were only allowed 60*l.* odd towards the barn, the haulage for which they had to do gratis. In spite of their efforts to improve the farm, the rabbits were allowed to eat up everything, and there were fields of corn in which they never put a scythe. Once the agent was called to see a field of barley, and he valued the loss at 40*l.*, not a penny of which was ever paid. Last of all, the dwelling-house had to be re-roofed; on the completion of the work they were asked to pay for it. They wished to be allowed this sum at the next audit, but the agent wanted them to wait till the following audit. This they said they could not do, and they were dismissed from the farm about 1880. The rent had in the meantime been increased from 80*l.* to 120*l.* I believe since that time the rent has been lowered to 100*l.* These are but few instances of the way in which landlords have broken faith with their tenants. The fact that they were not legally liable does not free them from blame. The tenants have tacitly always seemed to recognise that their interest in their farms is more than a mere tenancy. They have cheerfully spent money and labour in improving their farms, and it has taken many years of bitter experience to show them the folly of doing so. Even now, however, tenants are eager to take advantage of the slightest hint from the landlord or his agent to spend money or labour in improving their farms. When landlords betray any desire to devote themselves to the public service, farmers are eager to give them the chance, unless the issue is a distinctly political one. For example, Lord Dynevor, Lord Emlyn, Mr. Gwynne Hughes, I believe Sir James Drummond, Sir James Hills Johnes, Mr. Herbert Peel, the late Mr. George Jones, &c., are all members of the county council; while Mr. Pelham, of Abermarlais Park, found himself (much to his own surprise, it is said) at the top of the poll at the last school board election at Llansadwrn. Nothing is to me more remarkable than the loyalty which is expressed towards the old Welsh families, such as the Rices, of Dynevor; the Lloyds, of Glansevin; and the Johnes, of Dolaucothi; even by men who are tenants on other estates. Often this real attachment to the descendants of the old national leaders is carried to such an extreme that it has come to be mere fawning servility. The tenants have certainly never shown any lack of respect, loyalty, and even affection for their landlords. Most of the landlords, on the other hand, seem to have cast away the responsibilities which once attached to the ownership of land, though they are still careful to enforce the old privileges, even to the extent of claiming the old "fowl duty." They have taken advantage of the tenants' ignorance of English, which has practically bound them to the soil, of their attachment to their old homes, of their confidence in their "masters," and of the keen competition there exists for land. Unfair clauses have been inserted in leases and agreements, and the latter have been often signed by tenants ignorant of their contents. In other ways, also, e.g., in regard to common land, the tenants' ignorance of law has been taken advantage of; while for years, and even now, farmers have been very unfairly assessed for the local rates. On many estates the death of an old tenant is made the occasion of a rise in the rent; in but few instances have the new tenants refused to pay the advanced rent; and often persons will be found to promise to pay more for farms than the out-going tenant was paying, though the tenant was leaving through inability to pay his way. There is no longer any close personal relationship between landlord and tenant. The landlord lives in a small world of his own, and hardly ever comes into contact with his tenantry. The tenants look upon him as a man different from themselves in religion, politics, habits, mode of life, and language. In England the squire is looked upon as a typical Englishman; in Wales he is a stranger, who has few points of contact with the tenants, except at the rent audit. The tenantry are all extremely religious, and attend to their devotions on week-days as well as on Sundays. The landlord never joins with them in these observances. I have seldom seen a landlord do so much as notice a nonconformist minister, the leader of the farmers of the parish; I have never seen one in a chapel; and I have never heard of one attending a prayer meeting. I consider the joining of landlord and tenant in common worship of incalculable importance in promoting good feeling and mutual understanding. A landlord who saw his tenant once or twice a week at church or chapel would be less liable to deal unfairly with him; and a common religion would help to promote community of feeling and interest. The tenants find enjoyment in musical and literary meetings which are carried on in the Welsh language. The landlord is seldom or never seen at any of them, and never pretends to take the slightest interest in the amusements or recreation of his tenants. Sometimes, however, landlords may be seen at ploughing matches, and nearly always at horse races. In cases where the landlord is able to speak Welsh, it is always broken Welsh, and he makes a point of addressing his tenants in the second person singular, to mark, I presume, his consciousness that he condescends when he speaks the vulgar tongue. The tendency of this is to cause the tenant to depreciate his own language, which to my mind is one of his most sacred possessions, and so cause him to lose his self-respect and manliness of character. He begins to distrust himself and all things Welsh, simply because they are Welsh. The landlord is often such a stranger in sentiment, language, and even in person, that he can only be approached through an intermediary. Many landlords have encouraged and multiplied these intermediaries, who are quite different from the regular estate agents. Sometimes they have a small office, either a sub-agency or a post in connexion with the valuing and selling of timber; and sometimes they have no office or stated position at all, but are simply go-betweens between landlord and tenant, carrying tales to the landlord about the tenants' wrong-doings, and being repaid by the bribes and hate and fear of the tenants, and by uncertain donations from the landlord. The game-keepers on some estates have more influence even than the estate agent and often no tenant, however old and respectable, is secure once the game-keeper is offended. Last year, for instance, Lewis Hillman, of Waunrhebog, a tenant of Llwynybrain, was turned out of farm and home, without any compensation for the improvements he had made. His family had lived at the farm for generations—as far as the memory of man can reach—he had been brought up on the farm, and had grown to love it. Recently a new house had been built; he himself had built, at his own expense, sheds for cattle, and had been at great pains to beautify the surroundings of his home He tried every means to induce his landlord to allow him to remain, but nothing availed. The only conceivable reason for evicting him was that his wife had been caught by the game-keeper setting a snare to catch a rabbit in the garden hedge. The landlords, by making the tenants feel that they are nothing to them in comparison to their game, and the complaint of a game-keeper or a tale-bearer has more weight with them than the interest of their best tenant, have tended to destroy the independence of the farmers, and to make them fawn and curry favour even with the landlords' menials and under-strappers. In the matter of buildings also, the landlords have not endeavoured to create a self-respecting tenantry. In very many instances the dwelling and outhouses are in a fearful state. Pentre Meurig, for years, was in a wretched condition. Lasallt Uchaf Farm was nearly tumbling down over the heads of the tenant and his family. At last, one winter, the house began to be pulled down; masons were sent to prepare for its re-building; the family were put to great discomfort, and had to sleep in a room which was only protected on one side from the weather by a tarpaulin; while the house was in this state the masons, &c., were called away to Llwynybrain to build kennels for the landlord's dogs. The tenant then left, and, I believe, is now a tenant of Sir John Llewelyn, in Breconshire. Lasallt Isaf may be looked upon as one of "historic homes" of Wales. It is the house where Bishop Morgan Owen, of Llandaff, when dispossessed of his see by the Puritans, retired to die, and where he was visited by Vicar Prichard, of Llandovery. In England, I fancy, such a house would be preserved, were it only as a historical curiosity; in Wales I doubt if any landlord would trouble himself with the associations of a farm-house. In any case the house is allowed to remain in a ramshackled condition; utterly unfit (as the agent has, I believe, expressed himself) for human habitation, though a farmer and a young family live there. The roof of the dwelling-house came down, from end to end, one stormy night, and the family had to shift from bed, as the rain descended on them in torrents. During the last five or six years the barn has also been only partially roofed, and the tenant has been compelled to take his corn to be threshed at a neighbouring farmer's. On a fine day, however, he is able to thresh on a floor which he made himself. Mr. Gray, the president of the National Union of Teachers, speaking at Oxford last month of the wretched school accommodation in many parts of England, asked "Can the lessons in "morality, taught in the schools, be effective, "when the whole surroundings are an object "lesson in direct opposition to such teaching?" If this is the case with schools in England, where children remain for four or five hours, much more is it the case with farm-houses in Wales, where men and women live. There are instances without number of farm-houses which have no partitions upstairs, and it requires no great stretch of imagination to understand the humiliation which the children of farmers, who live under such circumstances, feel, when they return home on a visit. I have myself slept in an upstairs room—the only one in the house—where there was neither window, nor ceiling, nor partition, when paying a visit to an old schoolfellow who has graduated at Oxford, and is a member of the South Wales Circuit. The sanitary arrangements and privy accommodation are in many instances not only defective, but non-existent. Persons living amid such sordid and squalid surroundings must deteriorate in character. Landlords have steadily and constantly increased their rents, but they have taken little or no trouble to teach their tenants a better system of farming, whereby the increased rents could be paid. The Rev. Walter Davies, in his report, did not condemn, without qualification, the practice of raising rents, for it helped, he said, to bring out the latent energy of the farmers. Perhaps, looked at from this standpoint, high rents are not an unqualified evil. They have, at all events, caused Welshmen to struggle to enter some profession or occupation other than farming, and have thus given to our future Queen a physician, and to this Commission a secretary. But (1) rents have been advanced beyond what land can possibly be worth under the present system of farming. Take, for instance, the cases which are frequent where children, by working for nothing at home, save 40*l.* or 50*l.* a year in labour to their parents; and yet the parents are not able to save anything. (2.) The advances have been made on the improvements made by the tenants, so that farmers have lost all confidence, and will not take the trouble to farm properly. I believe that the land could be made to produce much more were the tenant's confidence in the certainty of his return restored. The rents also are so high that it is only by denying themselves all the luxuries and some of the necessaries of life that many farmers are able to pay their rents. It is very seldom that butcher's meat is to be found on the table of the largest tenant farmer, and the eggs and poultry are nearly always kept for the market. His food is of the simplest; his clothes of the roughest. There is hardly any difference between the clothes and food of the large farmer and the labourer. Although the capital of the farmer is a good deal more than the capital of the labourer, with all this skimping and sordid thrift, the tenant is barely able to pay his way and the insecurity of his position makes him too hopeless to try new ways of farming, which would entail the expenditure of capital. (3.) Mr. Sewell Read pointed out that the Welsh farmer paid his rent out of cattle and dairy. The cattle, however, have fallen tremendously in price; the price of butter, however, has kept up. Nevertheless, the landlord has not helped him to make the most of his farm. The dairies are often in a wretched condition. Poultry farming would require the building of sheds, but landlords will not grant necessary repairs, much less sheds for farmers to make experiments in poultry farming. Market gardening is almost unknown in rural Wales, and landlords have done nothing to educate their tenants in this respect. Orchard keeping would mean a large outlay and slow returns, but Welsh farmers cannot stand one or the other. A large outlay would be almost impossible to most of them, and they dare not trust in the future as long as they are at the mercy of the whim of a landlord. Bee farming, also, is practically unknown, though I cannot see why it could not be profitably worked. Hardly a good horse is raised in the Vale of Towy, north of Llandilo, though I believe a good hunter or cob would fetch a fair price. Few pigs are bred in comparison to the demand. I may say that one of the largest horse fairs of the year was held yesterday at Carmarthen (John Brown's fair), and I was told that the horses were generally fetching from 25*l.* to 35*l.*, and there were very few horses sold at over 40*l.* yesterday.

See 38,719, 42,104.

Lord Kenyon.

37,827. What class of horse? Agricultural horses?—No; light 'bus horses, or something of that sort.

37,828. Half-bred horses?—I did not see them myself.

37,829. It makes a little difference?—I did not see them. The landlords have been hard taskmasters, expecting ignorant and poor tenants to make bricks without straw. "The best way "for an enterprising landlord in the Welsh parts," wrote Mr. C. S. Read, in 1849, "to disseminate improved and scientific agriculture among his dependent farmers would be to encourage the education of the most intelligent of his tenants' sons, and to place them in the Royal Agricultural College, and to permit them to view various good farming in England and Scotland." Landlords have never encouraged the educating of their tenants' children in scientific farming or in anything else. They look with suspicion—in every case that has come under my notice—on the children who are sent away to be educated, and always regard them in the light of possible destroyers of game, or catchers of fish, or upturners of established systems, which they do not wish to see upturned. If Welshmen had had to depend on their landlords they would never have had elementary or intermediate education, university colleges, or a national university. The tenants are consumed with a fine, though often blind, enthusiasm for education; the landlords have been either hostile or indifferent. The leaders of the Welsh people have been men sprung from among the peasants; there has been no leader sprung from the landlords for the last three centuries.

Rural Depopulation.

I consider that the bad condition of houses, and the absence of all means of recreation, have been the main reasons for the rural depopulation. Servant girls, for example, can get quite as much money, as a rule, on farms as they can in towns; yet the complaint is that they are extremely scarce, and indeed can hardly be got for love or money. This is no wonder when it is considered in what wretched rooms they have generally to sleep. In a farm-house "a woman's work is never done"; and when they retire to rest they have to sleep in an ill-ventilated room, or sometimes in a room which has too much ventilation through lack of adequate roof. Often there is no ceiling between them and the roof, and there is no comfort. They have little or no social life. They have no regular half-holidays or holidays, and have to see their sweethearts by night. This, however, is not held to be a sufficient excuse for being late to their work next morning. Similarly, servant men and labourers earn almost as much money in the country as they can in the towns, but they have no comforts and no social life in the country. The labourers' houses are, as a rule, wretched places, dark, and therefore dirty, with no ventilation or decent conveniences, and often are allowed to tumble down over the heads of the occupants. Servant men are even worse off than servant girls for sleeping accommodation; they sleep in a "dowlod," or kind of light shed made of wicker-work and plaster, which is placed, for the sake of warmth, in the cowhouse, over the cows. I have heard even of farm servants having to sleep in what is called a "bing"—the open space in front of the cows in the cow-house. In summer they sometimes sleep elsewhere, as in the "storehouse," or some spare room in one of the outbuildings. I remember the time when servants had a kind of domestic competition on the hearth as to who could make the best wooden spoon or basket, or string onions. There is now nothing of the kind. The servants are gradually losing their character as members of the family, and do not remain as much in the farm kitchen. They have little or no domestic life. If they are studiously inclined they have no means to satisfy their desire for mental improvement. Their only books, as a rule, consist of the Welsh Bible and hymn book, and I can remember seeing servants often reading them by the light of the fire in order to save the home-made candles. There are no night schools, and no room, except the public-house, where they can turn in to spend the evening. Indeed, had it not been for the Sunday school, the society, the singing school, and the prayer meeting, they would have been absolutely deprived in many instances of all intellectual recreation and social life. These institutions, which have flourished in Wales for about a century, have done an incalculable amount of good, were it only from this point of view. In 1886 we started a reading room and debating society at Llansadwrn. For two or three winters the institution was very flourishing, and there were about 70 members at one time on the register, while the attendance at the debates on political and social subjects, and at mock trials of poachers, &c., which were held, was far greater. We met in a little disused vestry room belonging to the Independent Chapel, but had to leave this after some time owing to the objections of one of the chapel trustees. We then took a small house in the village, at a yearly rent of 3*l.* or 4*l.* Four or five of the prominent members, however, left in 1889—two for Australia, and one to become a preacher. The effort to pay 3*l.* or 4*l.* rent and to get sufficient to pay the other expenses proved too much, and the reading room, which was for years a bright feature in the life of the parish, is no more. The experience of Llangadock was, I believe, something similar. The reading room flourished as long as there was someone to look after it, and succumbed when the leaders left. There are reading rooms, I believe, still at Llanddeusant and Llangadock, but they are not "public" rooms, or, at least they are not looked upon as such. They are under the influence of the church, and farmers and farm servants do not feel free to make use of them. What is wanted is a room where the people can smoke and talk freely, as they would at a public-house; which is not "bossed" by their superiors, and where they would not be in danger of being patronised by the vicar and his family, and which would have a large room adjoining it where concerts and eisteddfodau could be held. At present it is extremely hard to get up even a small entertainment in a country village, as there is the initial difficulty to be overcome of finding a room to hold committee meetings in. I have known a committee being formed, and an eisteddfod being organised at the cross-roads of the village on a fine night, after a prayer meeting. Until some consideration is paid to the growing demand for better comforts, more decent conveniences, and more facilities for social converse, it would be useless to expect the mere increase of material wellbeing to stop the rural depopulation. I submit the following figures, abstracted from the Census reports, showing the rural depopulation during the last 50 years. The parishes I have selected are agricultural parishes, with which I am personally well acquainted. It will be seen that the population was highest in 1831 and 1841. According to a note in one of the Census returns, the great increase in the population after 1811 was due to the fact that a great deal of common land had been enclosed about that time. The Rev. Walter Davies states that 11,280 acres of common land were enclosed between 1807 and 1812 in Carmarthenshire. The correctness of this surmise as to the reason for the increased population is borne out by the following fact: The increase in Llansadwrn was most rapid between the years 1811 and 1821; and 1,500 acres of common land had been enclosed in 1809. In the case of three parishes, viz., Llanwrda, Llangadock, and Llandingat, it will be seen that the population has increased since 1841. In the two latter cases, however, the population is decreasing in the last 10 years, while it is only in Llanwrda that there has been a constant increase. The increase is due, not so much to the fact that the agricultural population is increasing, as that the railway runs through these villages, and little industries and trades unknown before are springing up around the railway stations. The parishes which have suffered most have been those which are like Llansadwrn, Cayo, Myddfai, and Cilycwm, contiguous to parishes through whose villages the railway runs, but which are not themselves touched by the railway. The more remote the parish is from the railway, the smaller is the decrease, e.g., the decrease in Llansawel has been comparatively small. On the other hand, the decrease in Llanfynydd, which is equally remote from the railway, is most marked; but this is to be directly traced to the policy of landlords in consolidating farms. Another, though not very conspicuous reason for the depopulation, is the gradual disappearance of the old rural industries. The pandy and llŵdy—the dyeing works, the weavers, hoopers, thatchers, and even blacksmiths, carpenters, and masons, are not so plentiful.

(The witness handed in the following table):—

Chairman.

37,830. That is the whole of your statement?—That is the whole of my statement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

37,831. After your very interesting evidence, may I ask what deduction you draw from the advice given by Mr. Lloyd Morgan in the Assembly Rooms at Carmarthen to the tenants there. You say they left the room after he had given his advice?—Yes, they thought that the Witnesses' Protection Act was not sufficient to protect them from future annoyance.

37,832. That was the advice he gave them?—No; he explained the nature of the Witnesses' Protection Act. He said it would be a criminal prosecution, and that everything would have to be proved to the hilt, and that they would have to prove that the landlord had done something to them on account of the fact that they had given evidence before the Commission before they would be protected.

37,833. I only want to get the impression that was left upon your mind as to the cause of the tenants immediately leaving the room. Why did they leave the room after the advice?—They thought that the protection that was afforded by the Witnesses' Protection Act would not be sufficient to protect them, and therefore they determined not to give evidence, and left the room rather than do so.

37,834. I quite understand that. Was that the advice that he gave them—that in his opinion the Act was insufficient?—Yes. He did not say so in so many words, but he simply explained the nature of the provisions of the Act.

37,835. And when that was finished, was it followed by what is expressed in your own words, namely, that "several who were present "at the time immediately left the room and "appeared no more at the meetings"?—Yes, that is so.

37,836. May I ask if you are of the same opinion, that the Act is insufficient?—Yes, I am.

37,837. That was the impression left upon the minds of the tenants?—Yes.

37,838. We have done our best on the Commission with regard to this matter?—We are very much obliged to you.

37,839. We have said that we propose and hope to uphold the law to the utmost extent?—I do not say that landlords, except in very few cases, would try to prevent their tenants giving evidence; but what I say is that the impression, at all events on the part of the tenants, is that they would.

37,840. When you corresponded with Lord Emlyn as to the Town Hall at Carmarthen, did you do so with him in his public or his private capacity?—In his public capacity.

37,841. Because you go on in your evidence to suggest "This will perhaps indicate the attitude "of passive resistence which has been taken up "even by good landlords towards this Com-"mission." Is that a perfectly fair deduction?—Yes, because he allows the Town Hall to be used in his private capacity for political purposes, and for other purposes than those of holding town meetings and the sessions, and so on.

37,842. Then you think it is a fair deduction to say that he is hostile towards this Commission?—No, I should not go so far as to say that he is hostile, but he is indifferent.

37,843. Do you think it would have been a good thing if the landlords had encouraged their tenants to come forward?—Yes, I think so.

37,844. I think you also use the words that some landlords have given permission?—Yes, those have come to my knowledge since.

37,845. Is there any ground for giving permission to a man for that which at present belongs to him?—Yes, in the case of Welsh tenants there is.

37,846. I do not wish to quarrel with you; but I should not have thought you would have given permission to a man to use that which is already his?—They never enjoy that liberty.

37,847. With regard to your old farm upon which your ancestors were brought up—Brown Hill, on the Abermarlais estate—were you born there yourself?—Yes.

37,848. You have given us very interesting evidence with regard to the change of the rent that was payable, and how it was raised from 280*l.* to 320*l.*?—From 250*l.*

37,849. It was distinctly on a competition rent?—Yes.

37,850. I take it that the rent of 320*l.* was paid for a considerable number of years?—For 20 years.

37,851. And on a lease?—On a lease.

37,852. It was subsequently reduced to 280*l.*?—Yes.

37,853. But for 20 years that rent was paid?—Yes.

37,854. I take it rather that your father throve upon the farm where his predecessor had been ruined?—How do you mean?

37,855. Was it not the fact that the Englishman who had been there before was ruined?—Oh, yes. It was my grandfather who took it after that That was simply because he had not any labour to pay for; he had five sons.

37,856. Do you know why that Englishman was ruined?—Because he tried to introduce English ways in farming, and tried to live according to the standard of English farmers.

37,857. The Welshman farmed it according to the Welsh fashion, and so he made it pay?—Yes, and he lived according to the Welsh fashion.

37,858. You speak of living according to the Welsh fashion; but your father was able to give you a very liberal education at Oxford?—That I have had to pay for now.

37,859. You won scholarships and exhibitions?—Yes, I got 165*l.* in scholarships, and anything that I wanted besides I have had to pay back since I have come to earn money myself, and that is the case with nearly every son of a Welsh tenant farmer.

37,860. Is that really what you mean by saying later on in your statement that all the leaders of the people have sprung from the peasants?—No; what I meant was this, that if you take any names like Griffith Jones, Llanddowror, or Thomas Charles of Bala, or Rowlands, Llangeitho, or the name of any man who has helped to make Wales what it is to-day, you will find he has sprung from the peasant class for the last 300 years. Since the Tudor times the landlords have alienated themselves from the tenantry, and have not tried to keep in contact with them.

37,861. When you speak of a merciless advantage having been taken of your father's helplessness against insane competition, do you think that is a fair expression to use?—Yes.

37,862. I suppose you would apply that expression to all competition rents?—When one man is utterly helpless, and when the other man has the whip hand of him, and when, as Mr. Davies has said, the tenants do not look upon farming in a commercial spirit—they are not commercial men in any way—I think it is merciless to take advantage of their helplessness.

37,863. Of course, from my point of view, I should set that off against the fact that the rent was paid for a consecutive number of years. Would you tell us upon that whether the rent was made out of the farm?—No, it was not. It was paid as I stated. My father died in 1877. I believe up to that time the times were pretty good; up to 1877. My father dying in that year, the following year, when my mother farmed it herself, as I have stated, she had to sell the most valuable cart mare we had in order to pay the rent. I remember at another time the money had to be borrowed to pay the rent. Since 1880, the tenant has been a freeholder, who has two or three small farms himself in the same parish (Mr. Rees Lewis), and he lets those out, and he paid the rent out of the money that he received from his farms.

37,864. But he pays 280*l.*?—He pays 280*l.* still.

37,865. You also say that "On many estates the "death of an old tenant is made the occasion of "a rise in the rent; in but few instances have "the new tenants refused to pay the advanced "rent." Do you think there is often an advance in rent when there is a change of tenancy?—Yes; I cannot say that it is so in the parish from which I come, and for which I could speak personally: but I am afraid I have allowed myself to make that statement after looking over the tenants' evidence.

37,866. I was only going to ask whether it continued; it may have been the case in past years, but is it the case now?—I can only say that the tenants who have submitted their evidence to me to prepare for you are willing to prove that statement.

37,867. When you speak of close personal relationship between landlord and tenant, and when you say that the landlord does not join with the tenantry in their religious exercise, I quite agree with you that it is a matter of incalculable importance in promoting good feeling and mutual friendliness that that should be the case, but do you give no credit to some of the farmers being churchmen and going to the same place of worship, and some of the landlords being nonconformists, and going to the same place of worship as the farmers?—I quite agree there may be some, but very few. There may be some here and there—no rule is without an exception.

37,868. Again, when you speak of the landlords as being hostile or indifferent to education, you will not apply that to all of them, I hope?—Oh, no; I make some exceptions.

37,869. With regard to depopulation I was going to ask you this. You spoke with regard to depopulation of the rural parishes, the population going into the towns. Would you give us your reasons; what do you think has been the cause of the depopulation of the rural parishes?—I have stated here that I think more than the increased wages in the works is the fact that there is no social life in the country, no good houses, and no place for recreation to turn into of an evening, or anything of that kind. I believe that of course the increased wages in the works have made it possible for these men to migrate, because they are able to go somewhere else.

37,870. That is one element?—That is one element certainly, but it is not the main element. I would say the bad condition of the houses has a great deal to do with it.

37,871. Quite so. I am coming to that point, and I am very anxious to hear your opinion with regard to the condition of the housing of the population?—Yes, the bad condition of the houses, especially the labourers' cottages, has more to do, in my opinion, with the rural depopulation than the increased wages that can be earned in the works. I know, for instance, of several cases where men have gone to the works, and though they have been able to earn more money there, they have returned again to be farm servants, simply because they cannot bear to live elsewhere than on the land, and I believe that the number of those people who would come back would be infinitely greater if the houses were better, and if social conveniences were a little better.

37,872. Do you know many labourers' cottages that have become ruinous?—Yes, I can give you one instance; I have one in my mind's eye now, in the parish of Llansadwrn. I believe there were about 12 or 13 in a cluster near Maesyrhiw. Mr. Davies probably knows the case. They have all tumbled down.

37,873. There is another element which I want to bring in, that is, the social side to the question, and the opportunity that they would have in villages or in the works for recreation in the evenings. Is that an element?—Certainly, I think it is.

37,874. Do you think that the people who have now received a better education than their fathers and grandfathers want more recreation in the evenings?—Yes.

37,875. Do you suggest any way in which that could be provided in agricultural centres?—Yes, if the landlords were what some agents have represented them to be, and took a close personal interest in the tenants, they would provide those things themselves.

37,876. I rather agree with you that that should be as free from patronage as possible?—Yes.

37,877. The difficulty would be, would it not, to find suitable leaders, and to do it in such a way that it should not be called patronage?—No, I do not think there would be any difficulty at all. There are men among the Welsh tenants who are fit for any position if they had only been trained for it, and who are looked upon as leaders at the present time even, in the parishes.

37,878. You think there are these three elements, then, that have depopulated the country: higher wages obtainable elsewhere, social advantages in centres of population, and, on the other side, that the cottages have become less convenient and less good than they used to be?—Yes.

37,879. Is there any other element, do you think, that might be suggested to bring the people back again on the land?—Allotments, of course, would help.

37,880. Is the Allotment Act put into operation?—No, I do not know of a single instance, but there have been cases since I remember where labourers have had enough land given them by the farmer as a part of their wages to keep a cow or two; for instance, on Brown Hill there is a labourer who has a little cottage, and who keeps a cow or two in that way.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,881. You mentioned just now that a chance expression or a casual observation on the part of a landlord to his tenant is often sufficient for the farmer to build his hopes on?—Yes.

37,882. Do you think that sort of thing, showing the great trust the tenants have in their landlords, partly accounts for the feeling you heard expressed this morning, namely, that the tenant is not businesslike in his way of treating with his landlord?—Quite true.

37,883. It would be better if they were taught to be more cautious, and to have things put down in writing?—Yes, or get better landlords.

37,884. But in any case would not that help to spare misunderstanding?—There is no doubt that if you get a good landlord and a good tenant that is the best way, in my opinion.

37,885. But even a good landlord may have a bad memory, and if the things were put down in writing, and if the tenants were to insist on having things in writing that would spare many difficulties afterwards, would it not?—Yes, there is no doubt it would, but it is very seldom that they keep even valuable things. For instance, leases; I could not get a lease that I had even seen at home the other day. They keep all the white paper that is not written on, and they destroy all the paper that is written on, as a rule.

37,886. That is simply for the sake of future writing. You do not think there is any ground for the landlords thinking that the children of the farmers are too highly educated. We heard the other day that they were too much educated?—I do not think so.

37,887. You say that very seldom the landlord takes any interest in the musical or literary meetings that the tenants attend, and so on. You would make some exception from that, would you not?—Oh, yes.

37,888. There are several well-known families in this part of the county who have always been famous for encouraging everything Welsh of that sort among the tenants?—Yes, I could name two or three of the old Welsh families. The feeling towards the old Welsh families among the tenants is quite different, in my opinion, to that which is felt towards other families who have come on the land later.

37,889. The Dolaucothi family, for instance, there is a good feeling towards?—Yes, the Dolaucothi family, and I have also named the Lloyds, of Glansevin. The feeling is quite different, in my opinion.

37,890. You have alluded to the old custom as to the fowl. What does that mean; I am afraid I did not understand you?—They have to give two or three fowls a year. They are customs that would appear to be absurd at present, but which serve to impress on the mind of the tenant that the old feudal relations still exist between his landlord and himself.

Lord Kenyon.

37,891. A sort of heriot?—Yes. There are some agreements in which it appears.

Professor Rhŷs.

37,892. With regard to the sleeping arrangements for the servants, do you consider that the state of things you alluded to is the result of anything in modern times, or the survival of old habits?—It is an old-standing habit.

37,893. Do you think that the tenants have been in the habit of asking their landlords in former times to build more accommodation?—No, I do not think so.

37,894. They have put up with it?—They have put up with it—they have never seen anything better, and they put up with it.

37,895. There is no reason why it should be so?—Not in the least.

Mr. Grove.

37,896. As to this question of the fowl that has been alluded to, it is not enforced, I suppose, in any way?—Well, I cannot say. I have seen an agreement, which I have put in, of Mr. Stokes of St. Botolph's I think it is—it is among the documents I have handed in to the Commission—in which Mr. Stokes has added that to a printed agreement in his own handwriting, so that I should say from that that he still enforced it.

37,897. As to the rural depopulation, from whatever cause it arises, do you regard it as a great evil?—I regard it as the greatest evil possible. I think the land ought to maintain men, and keep up the character of the people.

37,898. Do you think that the land would carry more labour, generally speaking, if the depression would allow more labour to be paid for?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,899. You, in your interesting evidence, have placed a great stress upon the absence of what we may call the sentimental unity between the two classes?—Yes.

37,900. You feel very strongly upon that?—I think that has more to do with the relations between landlord and tenant than anything else, even more than material wellbeing.

37,901. Do you think that any possible legislation could increase the sentimental unity between the landlord and tenant?—No, I consider it hopeless, and therefore the sooner the whole thing is changed, and we place the relations on commercial lines, or something similar, the better. That is why I think legislation should be provided. If it were possible to revive that old feeling, I would say it would be the best thing.

37,902. Passing for the moment from the delicate religious question, the want of religious unity, do you think that there has been anything compensating in the tenants being thrown upon their own resources, as it were, as regards religion?—Certainly. By having to organise everything themselves, for instance, they have raised their character; they are able to build chapels, to manage their affairs, and generally to raise their character to a higher standard, I think, than almost any peasantry with the amount of capital that they have.

37,903. Then, apart from the sentimental view, you look upon the disunion as one of the schooling influences?—Yes, like pain.

37,904. It is an influence which has tended towards intelligence and independence?—Yes, like pain. Pain has been, I have been told, a great factor in evolution, and suffering may teach a lot.

37,905. Going one step further, do you think the competition between the noncomformist sects has had the same effect—that it has also been good in that direction?—It is not altogether an evil. I should not like to say it is altogether good, but it is not altogether an evil, because it has aroused an enthusiasm for theological discussions which, for lack of better means of culture, is a good thing. It is only an exaggerated form perhaps of keenness of intellect.

37,906. Do you think that the work and the schooling which is got in the country villages at the chapels of the different sects has taken to any extent the place of public recreation, public lectures, and that kind of thing?—Yes, I think it has. There is one tenant farmer who will be giving evidence to-morrow at Llandovery who is not able to speak any English at all, and who will have to be examined in Welsh, and I have submitted a copy of his evidence to Professor Rhŷs and I have asked him if he would kindly look it over. It shows a sense of literary style that you would not look for in a farmer of much bigger capital in England. See 39,655.

37,907. As to the person who belongs to any one of the Nonconformist schools in Wales, would his intellectual horizon be widened by the fact that he belonged to a sect which has spread over the whole of England, for instance?—No.

37,908. Would not that be one of the things which would tend to widen his mind and take him more out of the rural position in which he was?—No. So long as the Welsh language exists, and so long as no intelligent effort is made to teach the English language to the people, Wales must remain isolated.

37,909. But take a large body like the Methodist body. Does it tend to bring English and Welsh people together, their belonging to the same great religious body?—I do not believe that the Welsh Methodists consider themselves to be the same as the English Presbyterians, but there is no doubt that English thought had a great influence on Welsh thought even in the last century, when there was very little Welsh known. For instance, you will find that Wesley and Whitfield came to South Wales in old times, and the first Methodist revival was helped, at all events, by the Wesleyan revival in England.

37,910. Then you say you consider it hopeless to get rid of the sentimental difference between landlord and tenant?—Yes.

37,911. Do you think the position of things would be improved by the present landlords more and more selling their land, and the land getting into the hands of a smaller class, and a more mercantile class of landlords?—No.

37,912. You have not spoken of any remedies, but have you any remedies in your mind that you could suggest?—Well, I should not like to say. What we want is a simple, cheap, and effective remedy, if it is possible. I do not think that an expensive Land Court, or anything approaching that, would meet us. I think if it were possible to have an inexpensive machinery whereby rents could be adjusted, and all differences between landlord and tenant settled, that would be the best thing.

37,913. Now, taking that point, you gave us one instance in which a rent was fixed by the owner of a glebe at 60*l.* a year. We will assume, for instance, that that 60*l.* a year was a rent that was fixed by a Land Court?—Yes.

37,914. On the top of that, and in addition to that, was the possibility of the land being let by tender, and, in fact, put up to auction, the net rent being fixed at a lower rent than the competition rent, thus making a mercantile value in the holding; how could you prevent its being put up to auction, and a sum being paid by the incoming tenant to the outgoing tenant, which would, in fact, place him in the position of a rack-rented man?—I am afraid I have not quite followed your question.

37,915. I will put it again. Supposing that a rent is fixed by a court, and that rent is below the competition rent, owing to the eagerness and the land hunger, how are you to prevent the commercial value coming in, in the form of a payment for goodwill, that payment for goodwill placing the incoming tenant who pays it in the position of a rack-rented tenant, irrespective of the rent which is fixed by the Land Court?—That would be so. I suppose it would be impossible to do away altogether with the payment of goodwill by an incoming tenant. Could not a goodwill be valued as well?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,916. That depends upon whether there is free sale, but in some of the legislation which is proposed, it is supposed that even assuming there is to be a fixing of land at a fair rent, the tenant is not to have the right to transfer, except to a member of his own family.

Mr. Seebohm.

37,916*a*. I quite admit that but what I wanted to get at was this. You have given us very strong evidence—perhaps stronger than any evidence that we have ever had—of the extent of land hunger. There is, undoubtedly, according to your evidence, very great land hunger, which would make plenty of people willing to take even a rack-rented farm?—Yes.

37,918. Of course that is the crucial difficulty that we always come to when we are neither willing on the one side to trust to the law of supply and demand and the mercantile value of land, and on the other side we are unwilling to let things remain as they are following the sentimental rule of things. I will not go any further upon that point, but there is another point closely connected with it. In Wales from the evidence that we have had the ladder between the labourer and the landowners is, perhaps, more complete than in any other part of the kingdom. Do you think that placing things under strictly commercial lines would interfere with that?—Well, that is being interfered with already, I think. I think that there is a greater distinction between servants for instance, and farmers, than there used to be. I mean there is a tendency—the tendency is in that direction—to differentiate between the two classes more.

37,919. But the evidence we have had has certainly led, to my mind, to the conclusion, which is a very happy one, that the labouring population is very much increased in prosperity?—There is no doubt about that.

37,920. And we have often been told that the farmer considers his sons as not being in as good a position as the labourer?—Yes, but the farms have been consolidated; there are not so many small farms now as there used to be, and therefore the position of a tenant farmer is rather more different, in some parishes at all events, from that of the labourer than it used to be 40 years ago, when there was only a small farm and the farmer had to till it all himself.

37,921. Have you personally known of many instances of labourers saving money while being labourers, and then taking farms and becoming tenant farmers?—Yes, they take small farms first, and they increase them if they can. They take a small farm where they can do nearly all the work themselves, and if they are able to save any money there, and the children grow up and so on, they take a larger farm, but I do not know of late years of many instances. During the last four or five years I have known of that being done.

37,922. Then leading on from that to the question of depopulation in the villages, of course the growth of your towns has something to do with it. There is a transfer of population from the country to the towns?—Yes, and into the villages too.

37,923. Do you consider that that migration has been for the benefit of those who have migrated, that there are greater advantages in living in the towns and earning the wages that they get in the towns?—That depends on circumstances altogether. I mean there are some men who would prefer to live on the land, as I have stated; there are some men who will even come back to bear all the discomforts of living on a farm rather than earn bigger wages in the towns, and sentiment has more to do probably with the Welsh labourers and Welsh farmers than any other class of men that I know of; it carries more weight.

37,924. Would you not say that, looking to history even in classical times, and right down to our own times, that the tendency has been, as education and intelligence has increased, towards a town and city life because of its advantages?—Certainly I would say that. There is no doubt there is some increase in the town population which is inevitable with the increase of comfort and education, but I do not think the increase ought to be so marked as it has been in Wales, but for these other things which I have mentioned in my evidence.

37,925. Then these things which you think would tempt people to live in the country still, notwithstanding the advantages of the towns, I suppose require an outlay of money and of rates, in other words?—Yes, I suppose so.

37,926. Do you think that the farmers themselves are a class who would be likely to wish to have the rates increased for these purposes?—Probably not. In many places in England no doubt the farmers did not like to have the rates increased for the sake of education; but still it was done.

37,927. Would you not rather say there is a difficulty—we are now speaking of the advantage of the farmers and the farm labourers—is it not one of the great obstacles that public opinion in the villages themselves would be against the expenditure on public buildings and places of recreation?—Well, they need not be expensive; even a wooden shed would be better than nothing.

(Adjourned for a short time.)

Mr. Griffiths.

37,928. You spoke just now with regard to the farmers keeping all white paper. Do you regard that as a proof of their saving and economy?—Yes, that is what I meant. They want to keep every scrap of white paper that has not been used, and has not been written on.

37,929. So that they may not have to lay out so much money for paper?—Yes. I have received many many letters from relations and friends who are farmers on slips of paper of that description.

See 43,216.

37,930. Have you the date of that agreement of Mr. Stokes', with regard to fowls; I thought it was out of date altogether?—No. You will find there are some agreements which will be produced, one I think by Mr. David Rees, of Forge Farm, the one I was alluding to (it will be produced at Carmarthen), in which the fowl duty clause has been added in Mr. Stokes' handwriting.

37,931. You do not mean to say it is in new agreements?—This is a new agreement, I think about five years ago. It is a printed agreement, and Mr. Stokes has added in his own writing this stipulation for the payment of a fowl duty, and a duty of carrying coal, and a few other things of that description. I will produce the agreement here—at least, Mr. David Rees has it. I think there is another agreement on Mr. Gwynne Holford's estate, at Myddfai, where the fowl duty clause is retained; that is produced also.

See 39,272, 39,310-14.

37,932. Can you suggest any remedy to prevent the tenants offering these competition rents, the same as in the case of your family?—A Land Court is the only thing I can suggest.

37,933. Then you consider that a tenant should have really some protection more than he has?—Yes. I do not think it is necessary to do anything revolutionary; leave the present state of things remaining as much as possible, but protect the tenant, who is not on equal terms to contract with his landlord now; make it possible for him to be on equal terms with his landlord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,934. Your evidence is so exhaustive, if you will permit me to say so, that I do not propose to ask you any very numerous questions now; but in reference to the questions which were put to you by Mr. Seebohm. I should like to point out to you that your evidence has been chiefly directed to showing the exact condition of affairs, and the existing feeling, and pointing out the historic causes of the existing condition of things?—Yes.

37,935. The Commissioners would very much like to get from you your view of the remedies?—I have just answered Mr. Griffiths. The simplest and the easiest remedy I think would be the best, that is, any land court which would place the tenant on an equal ground with the landlord in contracting for a farm.

37,936. May I just point out, I was going to say, the difficulty of all persons who are concerned, whether from the reforming side or from any other side in reference to the land question at the present time. It would be very easy, for instance, to do what some witnesses suggested to us—to have an Act of Parliament similar to Lord Ashbourne's Irish Acts, the operation of which would be to create a peasant proprietary in Wales, or, if you do not like the term peasant proprietary, a small holding proprietary. Are you in favour of any extensive splitting up of the estates of Wales, and the creation of small freeholds?—No. As long as they get security of tenure, no.

37,937. That is not the direction in which you suggest that legislation should proceed?—No. Security of tenure I should say would be better.

37,938. Do you suggest that any legislation should be as drastic and as complete as the legislation in reference to Ireland, under the Act of 1881?—I am afraid I am not well acquainted with that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

37,939. That gives fixity of tenure, fair rents, and free sale, meaning by free sale the right of the sitting tenant to sell to anybody he likes?—Yes.

37,940. If you say that, what I would like to point out to you is that in fact that is the creation of a peasant proprietary?—I am afraid I have not given sufficient consideration to the remedies. The first, I think, and the essential point, is a Land Court to mediate between the landlord and the tenant. If the two were on equal terms, I think that is the chief thing.

37,941. Then I gather, your idea is not dissimilar to that which is embodied in Mr. Bryn Roberts' Bill, or in Mr. Thomas Ellis' Bill, a Bill that would give security of tenure to the existing tenant by means of an appeal for a fair rent to a court of some kind or other, and who could not be ejected from the land, except upon breach of certain statutory conditions?—Yes.

37,942. But the tenant having no right to alienate his interest?—Yes; of course, if he had the right to alienate, it would be a peasant proprietary.

37,943. Virtually it would come to that, and that is what is pressing on the minds of some of us, at any rate?—Certainly.

37,944. You think a Bill giving fair rent and security of tenure, on the lines I have indicated, would meet the demands of the class of tenant farmers of whom you speak?—Yes, I think so.

37,946. You mean, the moment you go outside what may be called the burning political questions, and you come to county positions and trusts of importance, like that of the county council, you find the people are willing to sink their political differences and to put the landlords upon the county council and into similar positions?—Yes. Mr. Herbert Peel, I think, was returned over a cousin of mine, who is a tenant farmer, at the last election. I may be incorrect, but I was under that impression. I beg your pardon; I am told it was the school board election.

37,947. Have you heard any desire expressed for anything in the form, direct or indirect, of Land Nationalisation?—Not among the farmers. Among certain people who may be called connected with the land by old associations, but who have left it, there may be someting of the sort, but very little. I do not think the farmers themselves have ever taken it up.

37,948. You have never heard any such scheme as that the county council should have extensive powers of purchasing land and letting it out on conditions approved of by the community at large?—Oh, yes, tentative measures probably, but no large scheme of Land Nationalisation.

37,949. With regard to the improvement of what may be called the social life in Wales, do you see any possibility of what may be called a general improvement without the aid of the State, through the parish councils or through the county councils being invoked?—No; I do not see it at all. I forget who it was who gave evidence before the Commission, and said that the rural parts of Wales cost so little in police to the public funds that the public funds ought to be spent in improving the social life of the country. I quite agree with that. In towns, for instance, the police cost a lot; in the country I think at the last assizes there were three maiden assizes in South Wales. I think the money that is saved in that way by the law-abiding nature of the people should be devoted to increasing their material comforts.

37,950. Do you think, for instance, in reference to what you were saying that the ordinary labourer or the small farmer has no place except the public-house to go to talk—he has got nothing in the form of a club, speaking broadly?—I know of no instance where there is such a convenience, even one room.

37,951. Do you think it would be expedient to give local authorities power to purchase land and to build a club which should be open to user by all the inhabitants of the parish?—Yes.

37,952. On proper conditions, settled by the parish council itself, for instance?—Yes, I think so.

37,953. Do you think the tenant farmers would cheerfully submit to any addition to the rates that such an institution might necessitate?—Let them decide it for themselves in the parish council.

37,954. But what do you think would be the practical result of that, would it be a dead-lock?—No, I do not think so. Among the older farmers I daresay there would be some little opposition. When we started this little reading room at Llansadwrn there was some opposition on the part of the older people, who were unwilling that their children should be sent out after 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening.

37,955. That seems to be an interesting case, because, as I understand, if some local authority would have paid some 4*l.* or 5*l.*, the rent of the place, the thing would have gone on?—It would have gone on. The expense is only about 10*l.* a year, if I remember rightly, or at the outside 15*l.* a year, and the money was easily obtainable if there was somebody to collect it.

37,956. Do you complain of any of the covenants in this lease?—My step-father, who is a practical farmer, of course, and I am not, tells me that the covenants are much too stringent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

37,957. They are very usual covenants?—Oh, I believe they are.

37,958. But he complains that they are stringent?—Yes.

37,959. Do you hear of any complaints connected with the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—As far as I know it has never been acted upon; it has never been.

Lord Kenyon.

37,960. You stated in the beginning of your evidence that there was fear on the part of the farmers. I think you put in one letter, which you did not read, but you handed it up to the Commissioners, from a landowner?—Yes; I only had it on Saturday, after the notes of my evidence were printed.

See 39,025*a*

37,961. Would you mind it being read out?—Oh, no.

37,962. This is the letter—

"Llwynybrain, Llandovery,
"South Wales,
"Dear Sir, March 22nd, 1894.

"Seeing in the papers that the Welsh Land Commission intend holding a sitting at Llandovery on Wednesday, April 18th, I take this opportunity (in order that there may be no misunderstanding on the subject) of not only expressing my willingness that any tenant of mine who may wish to give evidence should do so, but also to say that should any tenant require information regarding his farm, I am prepared to give it him to the best of my knowledge.

"I am, &c.
"(Signed) C. Vaughan Pryse Rice."

(Witness.) It is a pity that it was not sent out about a month previously.

37,963. Do you suppose that Mr. Pryse Rice is an exception amongst the landowners in this neighbourhood?—Yes, I think so. I have heard of Lord Dynevor and Mr. Vaughan Pryse Rice; those are the only two I have heard of.

37,964. Who expressed a wish to that effect?—Yes

37,965. Perhaps the others concurred with what Sir John Llewelyn said, that they did not consider it necessary to give permission?—Well, everything is possible for a Welsh landlord. He knows very little about the tenants.

37,966. You say the law for the protection of witnesses is not strong enough. What remedy could you suggest?—Well, it is a very hard thing. Perhaps it goes quite as far as it is possible to go.

37,967. It passes the wit of man to find a remedy for imaginary fear?—I quite agree. I only say that that imaginary fear, even though it may be fancied, as I said in my evidence, has been caused by the action of the landlords in the past.

37,968. With regard to letting by tender, I should think everybody must agree that that was a bad way to let, because it must recoil upon the landlord's own head in a short time?—Oh, yes. I quite agree.

37,969. And he would actually be the greater loser of the two. What was the size of Pentre Meurig?—It is a very large farm; I should say about 400 acres—between 300 and 400 acres, if not more. I cannot be certain; it is a very big farm.

37,970. Mr. M. Ellis, in a letter you have quoted here, says: "In dealing with a small property like "Mr. Gulston's, I take each case on its merits." Do not you think that that is the better way to treat all the cases on an estate, to take the cases on their merits rather than by giving a general abatement?—Yes; if they make a reduction in the rent when they do it on its merits, certainly.

37,971. Did Mr. Ellis give any abatements that year, do you know?—The estate is down here about Llandilo, and I do not know. If you will ask some of the Llandilo witnesses I daresay they will be able to tell you.

37,972. Then you complain of the condition of some of the houses and buildings. If there were a Land Court which fixed rents, and a landowner were to say, "My rent is fixed, and I will "take no more interest in the buildings," how could you compel the buildings to be put up?—From past experience, I think if the landlord would not put them up, and if the tenant had security of tenure, he would not mind putting them up himself. He has put them up very often with no security, that he would enjoy them.

37,973. You think the tenant would put them up. But suppose the tenant had not the capital?—Then I think some part of the rent ought to be devoted to it.

37,974. The landlord should be compelled to devote part of the rent to it?—I think some part of the rent ought to be devoted to it every year.

37,975. We had evidence last month that the interest on the value of the buildings would amount to very nearly as much as the rent?—Not in this part of the country.

37,976. Some gentleman—I forget now who it was—said he estimated the value of all the buildings taken from the fire insurances, and found out that the interest on that money was a very considerable sum?—With the exception of Brown Hill, I do not think there is a farm-house from here to the top of the county which has cost a thousand pounds.

37,977. What per-centage do you consider a landowner ought to pay on his rental in the way of repairs?—I am not a landlord, and I have not given the question consideration.

37,978. I said what per-centage. I thought you might be prepared to say?—I would not like to say now.

37,979. Do you think the houses and buildings have improved?—Oh, yes, I think they are improving gradually; but there are thousands and thousands of houses which are in this wretched condition still, and nothing has been done to help them.

37,980. As the witness before you said, everything must be done in its turn. No doubt some men have to wait for some time. You cannot spend a large capital sum at once?—I quite agree, but on some estates I think you will find there have been no repairs whatever made.

37,981. You gave us some very interesting evidence about the reading rooms. The only difficulty seems to be how to start them. Do you think that the farmers and labourers would combine?—We found no difficulty whatever, once the thing was started.

37,982. Did the labourers go to the reading room?—Yes.

37,983. As well as the farmers' sons?—Yes; I daresay there were about 70 on the list.

37,984. Have you any copy of the rules of that reading room?—I am afraid we had no rules—no printed rules, at all events. We used to have a debate once a fortnight, or an address, or a mock trial, or something of that sort, to keep up the interest—only in the winter.

37,985. Do you think that the difference of language is as great a difference now as it was formerly between landlord and tenant?—Yes, I think that many of the older landlords knew more Welsh than the immediate generation preceding, but I think there is a tendency now among the landowners to learn Welsh.

37,986. Among the growing up landowners—the sucking landowners?—Yes, I think so.

37,987. Then I take it from your evidence—I may be wrong—that the type of landowner you wish to see is what you may call the old type of Welsh landowner—I mean the older families in Wales?—Yes, that was, as I said, the ideal system.

73,988. That would be a good type of landlord?—Oh, I do not say it is the perfect type.

37,989. But as good as you can get in this world?—Yes.

37,990. I understand from you that you would not wish to abolish them or to create a commercial type of landlord?—Oh, no

Chairman.

37,991. Some questions are handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "You have given us an account "of the rent paid for your father's farm from "1834 to the present day. Has not the price "of stock risen a great deal during that time"?—I have not given the rent from 1834; I have given the rent from 1850. As to the price of stock, I would not like to say, but I fancy, if it is raised at all, it has not been raised very much.

37,992. "Was it not as high between 1870 and 1873 as it has ever been?"—To what does that refer?

37,993. The price of stock?—I think it was, from what I understand?—I think those were the best years.

37,994. When was the railway built in the neighbourhood?—I should say it was about the early sixties; I am not sure. It was before 1860.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

37,995. Which railway?—That is the railway from Llandilo, I take it, the London and North-Western Railway, the old Vale of Towy Line, I take it, is meant. I think it was built in the fifties. I am told it was 1854 or 1856.

37,996. That was the railway from Llanelly to Llandovery?—It came up to Llandilo. I would not like to answer definitely.

37,997. Somebody can tell us that. I think the railway from Llanelly to Llandovery was built before the Swansea to Pontardulais Junction, and before the London and North-Western had anything to do with this county?—Oh, yes, I believe that is correct. I could find it out if it is of any importance.

Chairman.

37,998. Then there are other questions by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "You have given us an "account of Ffrwd Wen, one of Mr. Nicolas' "farms let at 72*l.*; are you aware that the "landlord has spent 600*l.* on improvements to "that farm in the last 10 years"?—No, I do not know anything about Ffrwd Wen. I only remember seeing the old lease at home, and I was told the other day the rent was between 70*l.* and 80*l.*, and I remember the rent paid by my grandfather in 1814 was 35*l.*

38,000. Can you answer this question: "In "those cases does the Welsh tenant treat the "Welsh sub-tenant with greater or less leniency "than the alien landlord shows to that Welsh "tenant"? Can you answer that?—Oh, I daresay he would copy his superiors as much as possible.

38,001. "You tell us that the rent of Brown "Hill was reduced by 40*l.* in 1890, and you "argue from that that the rent had been 40*l.* "too high since 1870. Is this just? Would "not a farm be liable to be rented more highly "in 1870 than in 1890"?—Yes, I daresay, but the improvements had all been made on the land by my father and grandfather. The rent had been fixed practically; everything was ready, and it was fixed by my father and the agent, Mr. Prothero Lewis, at 280*l.*, which, according to the agent, was a fair rent, and it was only increased by 40*l.* a year owing to this competition.

38,002. Owing to another man stepping in and offering 40*l.* a year more for it?—Yes, that is why I say it was 40*l.* too dear for those 20 years.

38,004. "You say Lewis Hillman has been "turned out; in that case has he any reason to "fear his landlord? Why is he not here in "person?"—The only reason I can assign for his not being here is that he has gone away from this place to live elsewhere. He lives, I believe, about Llandovery somewhere. I mean to do my best to get him before the Commissioners to-morrow. I have been told since I came to Llandilo that he was anxious to give evidence a fortnight or three weeks ago.

38,005. "Were you aware of the letter from me"—that is from Mr. Vincent—"for the Land "Owners' Association, which the noble chairman "read at the opening of the Commission"?—I remember about it, but I do not think it has had any effect at all on the tenant farmers in Carmarthenshire.

38,006. It has had no effect at all?—No; as far as I know in Carmarthenshire it is not known.

38,007. "Why did you not call the attention of farmers to that letter?"—I am afraid I forgot all about it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,008. Has Mr. Vincent caused to be published any list of the landowners belonging to his association, and who authorised him to make that statement?—No, I have no means at all of knowing whom Mr. Vincent represents.

Chairman.

38,009. There are two more questions by Mr. Vincent: "Is it not a possible explanation "of the absence of farmers as witnesses that "they do not think they have oppression, as "distinguished from misfortune, to complain "of"?—No, that is not the reason.

38,010. "If landlords had given their tenants "permission to give evidence would you not

"have said that they insulted the tenants by "giving them permission when no permission "was wanted?"—We could do with a few more insults of that description.

38,011. We are much obliged to you for bringing forward your evidence, which you have evidently taken a great deal of trouble and a great deal of time in preparing, and before you retire I should just like to ask you two questions. You told us that with the old Welsh families a very good feeling still exists between the tenant farmers and their landlords?—Yes; there is a feeling on the part of the tenants which is not always reciprocated by the landlords. For instance, I may mention the Lloyds of Glansevin as one of the old Welsh families. During the last 25 years I think you will find, if you will ask the Llangadock witnesses from the district, that there is not a single tenant on any of the farms belonging to that estate whose family lived there 25 years ago—not a single one. I do not say that because the landlords belong to an old Welsh family they are better landlords because of that.

38,012. But there is a stronger feeling of attachment with the old Welsh families?—Yes

38,013. And you rejoice in that?—Yes.

38,014. And you wish in no way to disturb that feeling?—No.

38,015. Then in all your evidence there are no revolutionary principles that you wish to advocate?—No.

38,016. And nothing in any way to disturb the good relations between landlord and tenant?—No.

38,017. But what I understand is that in cases where landlord and tenant do not agree you are in favour of some tribunal, whatever the name may be, which would put a tenant on the same footing as the landlord?—That is exactly what I mean.

38,018. Not a court that it would be necessary to go to?—Oh no, by no means.

38,019. But a court which in cases of dispute which could not be arranged by mutual consent or arbitration the tenant could go to, and whose decisions should have the effect of law?—Exactly.

38,020. But by this court you do not in any way wish to dispossess landlords of any of their just or proper rights?—Not in the least.

38,021. One more question by Mr. Stephen has been handed in: "Have you any doubt "that Mr. Vincent represents a large and re-"presentative body of landlords"?—I have formed no opinion at all on the subject.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 42,656A.

Miss KATE JENKINS called and examined.

Chairman.

38,022. Will you kindly tell us the name of your farm?—My farm is called Glansawdde Farm; it is in the parish of Llangadock.

38,023. You are vice-chairman of the Llangadock School Board?—Yes.

38,024. Will you kindly read your evidence?—

RENTS.—There has been a great increase in rents during the last 36 years in the parish of Llangadock. The great rise took place soon after the selling of Danyrallt Estate by auction. It was bought by Mr. Gulston, who gave an exorbitant price for the land, and thereupon raised the rents of nearly all the farms on the estate by nearly 50 per cent. The rise in individual farms on this estate is very difficult to prove, owing to the acreage having much changed in the parish books, and the farms having changed hands, or the farmers not having kept their receipts. It is, however, clearly shown as a whole in the valuation lists and rate books. Most of the other owners of estates or farms, raised their rents at this time correspondingly.

LAND HUNGER.—Nevertheless, there existed, and still exists, such a land hunger that the farmers out-bid each other to keep their own or obtain other farms, owing to the scarcity of land, and the prices for stock standing well at the time. This land-scarcity continues to the present time; the sons and daughters married have to wait for a farm, sometimes two or more families live in one house. When a farm becomes vacant there are numerous applicants. Lately here, there were 30 applicants for a farm almost before it was known to be vacant. Farms are sometimes let by tenders, and eventually the highest bidder obtains it.

LEASES.—Very few leases, no new ones. When one expires, farm almost always raised in rent, naturally must be often on tenant's improvements. No desire shown for leases by landlord or tenant, land being much too dear at present for tenant to want lease.

SECURITY OF TENURE — Some security is much needed. Bad farming often due to insecurity. Scarcely a farm in this neighbourhood has come down from father to son, and the tenant's knowledge that he may be turned out at any time places him in a wrong position. It creates servility and a lack of manliness. He is afraid often to own up his political opinions, and sometimes his religion, before his landlord.

AGREEMENTS.—Tenants are very slack about agreements; find them often very difficult to obtain, and sometimes have to pay for them. Often do not understand them before signing, owing to being read out quickly in English. Attached are two agreements, in both of which the tenant has to do the haulage; in the one has to carry timber of the estate.

Chairman—continued.

RATES.—Rates and taxes are exorbitant, and, together with tithes, press heavily on the already over-rented tenant. Land Tax is also generally paid by the tenants.

BUILDINGS. — Buildings are on the whole improving, but there is still much room for improvement, especially on smaller farms. In this parish there are two or three farms which are a perfect scandal, no repairs having been done for years. The roofs leak, the walls are damp, doors rotten; in the Glassallt Farm last winter they had to move the bed three times in one night owing to the water coming in. The out-buildings at Glassallt and Plasnewydd are also a disgrace, corn sprouting in barn owing to no shelter from roof, cow-houses dilapidated, dark, and no ventilation. The Welsh farmers will inhabit houses no English farmer would live in. In one hillside farm I was in there is only one kitchen, overhead rafters, upstairs no fireplace, leakage in roof, no proper ceiling, draught all through the house. Dairy of the same wretched description. I saw one dairy with a big hole in roof, ceiling made by suspending sheet, damp earth floor, no ventilation; milk will not keep. Great reform is needed in many of the dairies. In some farmhouses the milk is even kept in the parlour, in others the butter is made in the barn. Much reform is needed in butter making. Butter is stored too long, and kept in large quantities.

LIVING.—The living is exceedingly frugal and scanty, even in large farms. Fresh meat only on Sundays, often never at all. No butter or meat for breakfast. Farmers will not eat butter if dozen tubs in dairy; it goes to pay rent. Broth for dinner daily, with a little salt meat; I have been in a farm where they were only eating broth of oatmeal and potatoes, with no meat at all. Farmers will offer you tea and bread and butter for dinner as a luxury. They are very hard-working, very little recreation, except to market. No holidays, except, perhaps, the sons go by an excursion train for two days, or the daughters for a few days to the seaside. No reading rooms or entertainments, or where they have been tried, unsuccessful. Singing schools and eisteddfods almost the only recreations. A weekly newspaper is looked upon as a luxury. Wife of a farmer who farmed 100 acres complained that her husband smoked and bought a daily paper.

FARMERS' CHILDREN AND WIVES. — Too many children are brought up to work on farm to save labour expenses. Receive no wages, either girls or boys. When marrying, they used to have a "'Stafell," which is an outfit, and a portion to stock a farm, but in many cases they have not been able to do so lately, even could they obtain farms. Then often commences farming with insufficient stock and no capital to fall back on, which is a source of great misery. All farmers say, did they pay sons and daughters wages, they could not pay the rent, and must give up their farms. One farmer told me lately, that after paying rent, taxes, &c., he had not enough to give his children all round a suit of clothes. He pays over 400*l.* rent.

The farmers' wives work very hard, also mind cattle often, and work both in and out. Cannot procure any dairymaids (competent) here, as they do all dairy work. Cannot afford to pay competent ones. Have generally equal share of work and management of farm with husbands, and often keep the money, hence the regular payment of rent.

ABATEMENTS, &C. — All the good landlords have made abatements to tenants lately; very necessary, but is a wrong principle, and shows land is rented too high. It is bad for both that the tenant should be dependent on the mercy and generosity of the landlord in this way, when he does honest work, which ought to pay. Rent is almost the religion of the Welsh farmer, and his pride makes him pay by hook or crook, even if he lacks almost the bare necessities at home. Nevertheless, many have had to borrow to make up the amount this year, and they will keep their tradesmen waiting three or four years while they pay their rent.

LANDLORDS AND TENANTS.—There is a great lack of human brotherhood between landlord and tenant in Wales. They are of separate language, religion, politics, often nationality, and the agent is sometimes an unhappy medium between them.

The tenants' interests have been but little considered. Property which Mrs. Saunders Davies owned in this neighbourhood was put up at public auction in May 1884, and the late Major Rice bought many of the farms. The tenants were nearly all yearly ones, and previous to the sale had received notices to quit owing to the estate changing hands. Upon purchasing these farms, Major Rice sent round to tell all the tenants that they were not to heed the notices. He sent his gamekeeper round, which is very often done. He wished them all to continue in their tenancies. Six days before Michaelmas he sent notices requesting them all to meet him at Landovery for the purpose of signing new agreements, and to their dismay they found that, with very few exceptions, the rents of all were raised for the purpose of meeting his expenses, &c. If they did not choose to sign, the only option left was to clear out stock, crops, &c. in six days. Of the three farms not raised, one tenant possessed a lease, and the other refused to pay an additional 20*l.* rent, which was demanded. He left in a year. I have possession of an agreement, in which a farm was raised from 45*l.* to 55*l.* The present landlord has reduced some of them to the old valuation, but in the meantime the tenants were paying yearly money to the landlord which ought honestly to have been in their own pockets. Surely this instance shows plainly the great necessity of the tenant farmer to procure some security of tenure, of which he now possesses absolutely none.

Lord Kenyon.

38,025. Then you have some tables to put in? —Yes. We have had meetings in Llangadock ever since we knew the Commission was coming, since last June, and the farmers came together, but we had no means of showing the rise in the rents; because we could not get at the registers. We know farmers who had had their rents raised, and who had the receipts to show it; they promised the receipts at first, but afterwards would not give them. I know one farmer had a receipt when he paid 28*s.* an acre, now he pays over 2*l.*, but he would not give us the receipt; he was too much afraid. It was proposed that we should get at the rate books, and in that way show the great rise in rent which we all knew had taken place. I searched the parish for them. We thought we could get them at the clerk's office at Llandovery, but I found the old ones had not been kept. Somebody told me to go to the Union. I went there, and found the old rate books, and brought them down with me to-day. I have made out a little table from these books, showing the increase in the parish of Llangadock, and this is the table. This is taken from the valuation lists and rate books, showing the increase in rents in the parish of Llangadock from 1858 to 1892:—

	£	s.	d.
Rateable value of hamlet above Sawdde in the year 1892 -	4,450	15	0
Rateable value in 1858 -	2,772	3	1
Increase - - -	1,679	11	11

showing an increase of over 50 per cent. Although this enormous increase took place from 1867 to 1883, the burden fell on the tenant farmers with a few exceptions, no freeholders being advanced.

	£	s.	d.
Rateable value of hamlet of Ceidrych in 1892 - -	4,134	4	0
Rateable value of hamlet of Ceidrych in 1858 - -	2 967	2	3
Increase - - -	1,167	1	9
Hamlet of Gwynfe in 1892 -	3,533	17	6
Hamlet of Gwynfe in 1858, excluding Quarter Bach, 685*l.* -	2,428	7	5
Increase - - -	1,045	10	1
Rateable value, parish of Llangadock, in the year 1892 -	12,188	16	6
Rateable value, parish of Llangadock, in the year 1858 -	8,912	12	9
Increase in 34 years -	3,276	3	9

The population and number of occupiers have decreased during this period. The following will show the increase in rent of a few individual farms and lands in this parish:—

* For 20 acres.

† For 18 acres.

I could have given a great many more, but the acreages were so changed; so I picked these out that were plainly seen, in case the Commissioners chose to look at the rate book.

38,026. You have given us the increase in the rateable value, not necessarily in the rent?—Oh yes, the rent. The rate books have the gross rent attached to the rateable value, and I have taken not the rateable value only, but also the gross rent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,027. Would you kindly hand me one of the rate books?—I shall have to send for them, but they are close by.

Mr. Seebohm.

38,028. May we have it distinctly on record that it is not the rateable value, but the gross rental?—Yes, the gross rental is given as well as the rateable value, and the gross rental is generally not as great as the farm is rented at because, if possible, it is kept back on account of paying the rates.

Lord Kenyon.

38,029. It is the gross rental in this table?—It is the gross rental there, but we found them in the parish books.

38,030. These are the gross rentals in 1858, 1873, and 1892, in your second table?—Yes.

38,031. But in the first table you say it is also gross rental, although it is taken from the valuation lists and rate books?—Yes, it is the gross rental, not the rateable value.

38,032. In 1873 I see the rents were rather higher than they are now?—Yes, that was the very best year for farming. It was the time just after the Franco-Prussian War, and there was a great demand for produce, and the farmers made a good deal of money at that time, and that is why they were willing to pay more rent for farms.

38,033. Who is the landowner of Glansevin isaf?—Mr. Pryse Rice, of Llwynybrain. I think it is a standing instance of bad buildings. You must not think that all the farms are as bad as that.

38,034. Who is the owner of Plasnewydd?—A Miss Lewis.

38,035. Has any application been made for buildings at Glassallt?—Oh, yes, over and over again.

38,036. And refused or put off?—Well, no, promised. I believe the agent, Mr. Wardle, who had no objection to the Commissioners seeing the buildings, told the tenant that they could not be repaired at present.

38,037. Perhaps it will be done in its turn?—Well, it is a very long turn to wait, for years and years, and in the meantime the rain comes pouring in on your bed in the night.

38,038. How long has the tenant been there?—I was up there two years ago. I was in the bedroom, and saw how the rain came down and how damp the place was. There were two little children in the house and I believe they have never been well on account of the bad state of the house.

38,039. Do you know whether the landlord is laying out money on the rest of the estate?—Yes, I say he has improved it somewhat. His uncle had the land before him, and raised the rents greatly. My father acted as agent in buying the land for him. These farms that I am speaking of, some were bought at, I believe, 100 years' purchase, so of course even if he had a good per-centage, and did no repairs on the farms, he could not get adequate return for them.

38,040. How long has he been in possession?—I forget when Major Rice died. The present landlord has not been very long in possession, perhaps five or six years I should think.

38,041. You say, I notice, under the head of "Dairies," much reform is needed in butter making?—Yes, I believe that is very necessary. Most of the dairies are very bad. I have a list here which was sent me, and I was asked to give it you, of bad dairies. There are quite a number of them. I know of many myself.

38,042. Do you think the butter making itself is satisfactory?—No, I do not think it is at all satisfactory. We do not advance with the times.

38,043. Is there any instruction given in butter making?—Yes, the county council sent down a lady to give lessons, and we got up classes. Mrs. Howel Gwyn kindly lent us a schoolroom. The landlords might have helped much in promoting dairy teaching, but none of them took any interest in it.

38,044. Did the farmers take any interest in it?—Yes, many of the farmers around.

38,045. Did the dairymaids think they were improved by those lectures?—I think so, because before that they refused to use the cream separators, and now they are taking to them. We had 24 pupils at Llangadock. It was one of the most successful centres in South Wales, I believe.

38,046. You would be glad of some more help in that way?—Yes, we should, and I think there is not enough given. If the landlords would only take more interest in their tenants and bring about all these reforms, and assist them to produce better teaching and so on, it would be a great assistance.

38,047. What one wants to find is that there is some interest taken in agricultural education. We were told in several cases in North Wales that there had been lectures, but that they were very sparsely attended?—If the first people, the landlords and the county people, took an interest in it, took the lead in it, it would prove successful.

38,048. You think they should take the natural lead, is that so?—Of course they ought to take the lead, but they do not. Might I be allowed to say a few words about the tenants giving evidence. I have attended every meeting in our neighbourhood from the beginning. I have also attended the meetings since we formed committees, and I emphatically say that the tenants are deadly afraid to give evidence. It may be an unfounded fear, but they are afraid, and nothing we could tell them would induce them to have belief to the contrary. If you notice, all the people who have given evidence to you have been people, very nearly all, who were either independent or had some other means of support. I have told them over and over again that they are protected in giving evidence, but they do not believe it. It is a very curious thing that we have been having meetings since last May and June to try to get up this evidence and bring the farmers together and yet the landlords have not sent out their notices permitting them do so, until when all available evidence had already been printed. I am not allowed to mention names, but when we had our meetings at Llangadock we had about 40 farmers at the first meeting, and great enthusiasm. They dwindled down at the other meetings to about a dozen; they were absolutely afraid to come. I may not give you the names so perhaps I ought not to mention it, but I know of one landlord who asked one of his tenants the next day after a meeting, "Do you know who was at the meeting "last night." The tenant gave a negative reply, but we never saw the man at the meeting again, and a great many other men did not come. They are afraid, it may be unfounded, but if the landlords had given them encouragement, and allowed them freedom they would have come.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,049. You are giving evidence chiefly for Llangadock?—I only give evidence for Llangadock.

38,050. Are most of the people there, the tenant farmers, nonconformists?—Oh, yes, very nearly all.

38,051. Do they habitually use the Welsh language for social and religious purposes?—Yes, more Welsh than English.

38,052. You mentioned in your evidence in chief that the reading room entertainments were rather unsuccessful?—Yes.

38,053. To what cause do you attribute that?—Because I do not think the right people take it up, or if they do, they do not take it up in the right way. A reading room was started at Llangadock. I happened to be away from home at the time, but when I came back I found it was not a success. The farmers' sons did not go there, but merely the church people went. I asked them why they did not attend, and told them it was very bigoted. They said instead of forming a committee and getting all the farmers together in that way, which would be self-government by the people, the vicar arranged everything, and when all was finished he called a committee together. It was kindly meant on his part to arrange it, and settle it all alone, but when the people came they found inside the books, "St. Cadog's Church Lending Library," and the nonconformists took umbrage and never came again, or at least, very few of them. It is extinct.

38,054. I see you take an interest in local politics?—Yes.

38,055. You are vice-chairman of the school board?—Yes.

38,056. Do you think anything could be done through the medium of the parish authorities to keep up reading rooms?—Oh, yes, certainly.

38,057. Supposing the Free Library Act, for instance, of course with modified machinery, were made to apply to the rural sanitary authority throughout the country districts, do you think it would have any practical application?—Yes, I am sure it would.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

38,058. You think it would not be afraid of a halfpenny rate, or something of that kind?—No, I do not think so. They might grumble, but they would pay.

38,059. But if people grumble very much, if, in fact, they will not pay, it is really no good having legislation at all?—Of course the rates and taxes press heavily on the tenant farmers. Then they have the tithes to pay, and they are often large sums. I know farmers who pay a tremendous sum of money between rates and taxes and tithes.

38,060. Nothing is more disappointing than one's experience in regard to the Free Libraries Act; you have important centres of population, like Gloucester for instance, where for years they have been trying to get the Free Libraries Act adopted, and the ratepapers always reject it. Do you think there would be any chance, supposing the parish council had power to start a reading room and lending library of its being adopted in any particular parish?—I am sure it would be if it were only gone about in a proper way, and everybody asked to help; a sort of local self-government instead of just one or two people doing it. People do not like being, as they say, "bossed." Of course it is much more difficult in rural districts, because the people live so far apart and they are very difficult to get at, and they are all so phlegmatic.

38,061. Is there much local jealousy between the villages in the same parish?—No, I do not think so.

38,062. Looking at the thing from another point of view, does your experience of the younger Welsh men and Welsh women lead you to suppose that they would take the trouble to go to reading rooms of that kind as they take the trouble to go to Sunday schools, and to go to religious services?—If the reading rooms were organised as well as the Sunday schools and religious services are, then they would go, certainly.

38,063. Now we have got the rate books here, and I should like to understand this table thoroughly. In the table you hand in, the first column gives the name of the present landlord; the second gives the name of farm or holding; then there is the acreage, and then you give the rents for 1858, 1873, and 1892. I will take the first instance. Glansevin isaf is a farm of 77*a.* 2*r.* 6*p.* The rent in 1858 was 76*l.* 15*s.* How have you got at that rent from the rate book?—It is under the heading "gross rental." I can show it you there.

38,064. Then the figures you have put under the heading "Rent" are taken from the column in the rate book headed "Gross estimated rental"?—Yes.

38,065. It is fair enough so long as it is understood?—The rate books are signed by the most important people in the place, the late Capt. Lloyd, of Glansevin, and other responsible men, so they must be correct, more or less.

38,066. There is another table which I do not think has yet been put in "Changes in tenancy?"

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

—I could have got numberless instances of changes in tenancies, but I had not enough time, and I thought it was not necessary. There was a witness (an agent) here this morning, Mr. Davies, who said that on his estates the farms went on from father to son and that there were very few changes. Mr. Davies is agent for the Glansevin estate. The four last farms I have given in the table apply to the Glansevin estate. This is my table:—

Changes in Tenancies

In farms in the neighbourhood within recollection:

Cwmsawdde, four tenants in 18 years owing to game; Tynlone, four tenants; Olchfa, five tenants; Cwrywaun, seven tenants; Lletty Rhyddod, four tenants, all preceding tenants having been more or less consumed by farm.

Reduction in Price of Stock.

Stock sold off farm, showing depreciation in prices during the last five years:

	£	s.	d.
„ sheep	55	0	0
1891, 5 yearlings	42	10	0
„ sheep and lambs	50	0	0
„ sheep and lambs	40	0	0

Same amount of stock sold yearly, and of pretty even quality each succeeding year.

38,067. In the first instance you give, there were four tenants in 18 years?—Yes, owing to game I believe.

38,068. Tynlone, four tenants?—Yes.

38,069. In your own recollection?—Yes; well, not quite my own, but people who know quite well.

38,070. According to rumour; within what period, roughly speaking?—Well, I know a man who settled at Llangadock. He has been there now about 27 years, and he remembers them all.

38,071. Olchfa, five tenants; Cwrywaun, seven tenants; and Lletty Rhyddod, four tenants?—Yes. It is evident from the rent of Cwrywaun that the tenant could not stay there because it has gone up so very much. It is reduced now again.

38,072. Yes. Cwrywaun was a farm which in 1858 was rented at 71*l.* 10*s.*, and the rent had risen in 1873 to 115*l.*?—Yes, and the tenant who was there at that time now tells me he paid 120*l.* He is in the room to-day. He paid 120*l.*, but it was not put down in the gross rental at that figure. It just shows that the farms are very often not put at their full value.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,073. What was the motive?—So as to pay less rates.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,074. Have you got the agreement you were good enough to refer to?—Yes, where the rent was raised from 45*l.* to 55*l.* That was by Major Rice. It is now reduced (handing in agreement).

38,075. Have you made any complaints of the ordinary agreement in vogue now?—I see so few of them. Tenants do not seem to be careful to have any agreement.

38,076. There are many who have no agreement at all?—Yes.

38,077. I see in the agreement you hand up to me clause 14 is "The tenant shall keep all buildings on the farm in good and tenantable condition, and shall put and keep all fixtures, &c. in good condition, the landlord finding all material; he shall do all the haulage and find all the materials which the landlord may require for repairs drainage, or improvements on the farm." Is that provision complained of by the tenants?—Yes.

38,078. Do you think it is an unjust one?—Well, if the buildings were in good repair when first rented by the tenant, it would not be unjust. We have been repairing some cottages lately—thatching the roof. Straw is very dear, and if the tenants had to do it now it would take a small fortune to repair a thatched farmhouse.

38,079. Did you ever hear any mention of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—Yes, but I do not think the farmers avail themselves of it.

38,080. You have no criticisms to offer upon it yourself?—No, none.

38,081. Do you wish this list of bad homesteads, bad buildings, to be read out—I do suggest that you should do it.?—Just as the Commissioners wish.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,082. Could you tell us how this gross rental is obtained?—May I hand up the rate book, and then you will see (handing in book).

38,083. Is it not based on the return of income tax sent in by the tenants?—Yes, I think it is.

38,084. Who were the agents of the estate on which the Glansevin isaf farm is?—Mr. Wardle, I think, is the agent.

38,085. He has been applied to, I suppose?—Oh, yes, many times; I do not think it is his fault.

38,086. Then you spoke of another place where Mr. Davies, the witness before the last, gave evidence as to its being out of repair as well. Mr. Davies, I think you said, was agent for that one?—No, I do not think I said so. I was alluding then to the changes of tenancy. There are a great many bad buildings on the estate.

38,087. Then you are not quite of the same opinion as that which Mr. Davies gave us this morning, that all the farms on his estate are in good repair?—Oh, no. I know of Coed Weddus, a dreadful place, where repairs are wanted badly.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

38,088. Are you acquainted with the neighbourhood?—Yes, I am perfectly well acquainted with it; we own farms upon both sides. My father was in business in the locality for 40 years and knew every farmer round and all their circumstances. I know most of them.

38,089. Have you ever taken any practical part in farm work yourself?—Oh, yes. I farm myself.

38,090. How are the servant men as a rule accommodated in these farm buildings?—Well, accommodation is improving. There is not much to complain of on some estates, but I know there are others which are very bad. It is very difficult to get servants.

38,091. Then it is not altogether for the reason that there is not good accommodation?—It depends. Up on the hillside farms it is very poor.

38,092. Children, as they are educated at the present time, would not put up with very poor accommodation?—No, when the children are educated, they go away and do something else, but the farmers have not means to educate their children; they keep them at home to do work, and that is why there is such a land hunger for farms.

38,093. Have the wages of female servants advanced very much?—Very much; you cannot get a good dairymaid now under 16*l.* to 18*l.*

38,094. Do you remember what you paid a dairymaid in the old days?—Well, people have told me you could get a dairymaid for about 5*l.* or 7*l.* long ago. I have been farming myself for five years.

38,095. May I ask whether you consider it a good system for the farmer's wife to keep the purse?—Yes, I do; they would never pay the rent if they did not, because they treasure up the money.

38,096. There is an old saying, "If you want "to get rich give the care of your money to "your wife"?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,097. I suppose the providing of reading rooms and other buildings would involve an addition to the rates, would it not?—I suppose it would involve a little addition.

38,098. What would you suggest to meet that difficulty. It would add to the burdens of the already overburdened farmer?—Yes, they are overburdened.

38,099. Then what would you suggest?—Well, some money might be forthcoming from Government, and so on. I do not quite know how, but I do not quite see why it should not be. Then there are a great many private people rich enough to assist who do not do so.

38,100. As a temporary arrangement would you recommend a division of the rate between the landlord and the tenant?—Certainly. I think the tenant is much overburdened with regard to his farm now. It is all he can do to meet his rent, leaving rates and taxes out of the question. I know of at least nine or 10 farmers who had to borrow money to pay their rent in January last.

38,101. Where do they borrow?—Some borrow from the bank, some from people who will lend it to them. I know of one farmer who came to a friend of his and said he had only 10*l.* to meet his rent, and asked him to kindly lend him some money. The friend was shocked at his having so little. I do not quite know what his rent was; it was not a large farm. The friend said, "You had better go honestly to your landlord, "and tell him how badly off you are, and state "the case to him." The tenant said he would rather die than go without the rent to his landlord. In a little time he came back again to the gentleman with half his rent, and asked him to lend him the other half, and he did so. I know the people on that farm. The daughters do all work on the farm that men would do with the exception of ploughing, they work very very hard, both the mother and the daughters.

38,102. What can be the explanation of this anxiety of the tenant to square the landlord before he pays the merchant or tradesman or any one else?—Well, I do not know. They do not seem to mind leaving the tradesman, but it is a matter of honour in a way about the rent. Also they are afraid, perhaps, that they may not be permitted to stay on; it is their security for their living, in a way.

38,103. I suppose the farmers' daughters are all thoroughly domesticated?—Oh, they work very hard.

38,104. It is not true that they are over-educated?—No, I wish they were better educated; then they would go away and do some other work instead of staying at home. I believe intermediate education is going to help us by getting boys and girls away from the farm; now they bring up two or three or four children where there ought to be perhaps only one brought up to farming.

38,105. We were told when we were down in Monmouthshire that farmers who paid about 100*l.* rent went in for the luxury of having a dogcart?—Yes, I noted that.

38,106. Have you anything to say about that?—Yes, I have. Llangadock farmers bring their produce down to Llandilo. Supposing they had not a trap—that means an ordinary market car, with the name on the side, usually, so that they have not got to pay a licence—then they would have to take a cart; of course a cart would take more than double the time going from Llangadock to Llandilo with the butter, and they would waste a whole day, whereas now they only take half a day. The time spent would be more valuable certainly than the money expended on the cart or trap.

38,107. You regard it as cheaper?—Certainly, a necessity for saving time.

38,108. Are the men as skilful and as competent now as they used to be?—The labourers, or the farmers' sons?

38,109. The labourers?—No, farmers say not.

38,110. Do you find it difficult to get a thatcher or a man to do odd things?—Oh, yes, there is only one thatcher in the whole of our neighbourhood, and he considers it a favour when he comes to work for one. Another thing that Mr. Herbert Lloyd said at Swansea before the Commission was that the farmers lost their time going to the market. I think that is very unfair, because if they do not go to market, how on earth are they to know the prices of things. I know farmers selling at home at a loss on account of not knowing the market prices. I know a man who sold his sheep last year without going to market, and he lost in that way. And surely, if they are farmers, they ought to have a little social recreation, and meet their fellow beings occasionally. See 24,065.

38,111. And it has an educating influence, has it not?—Certainly. They hear of what is going on in the outside world. It is the time they buy their newspaper for the week to take home to read.

Mr. Seebohm.

38,112. You made a very interesting remark just now about the cause of the land hunger. Do you think that the cause you mentioned just now, that is to say the want of education and the continuance of the children of farmers on the farms, is really the great cause of land hunger?—No, of course that is the original cause—that there are too many people for the farms; then the farms are consolidated. Then, again, Welshmen have less capital to farm with, I believe, than Englishmen. I have asked several farmers why they did not go to England and take farms that are vacant there which Englishmen leave vacant, and by their energy and thrift see if they cannot afford to live there. They say they cannot afford to move. Besides, some of them have such a love for Wales that they would rather work twice as hard here and have poor food than go to England. I know one old farmer who had to leave his place because of a dispute between his landlord and himself, which was decided in a court of law against the tenant. I went to the sale when he sold off. I never saw such a place; the house was really kept up by the furniture. There were oaken cupboard beds and presses, and so forth, which kept the roof up. They said they were afraid to leave the cows in the cow-house during any storms in the winter, least the roof should fall in. Now, he went to a nice farm in Breconshire, with a good house, and yet they say he died broken-hearted, he pined so much for his old home, where his father and grandfather were born and brought up. The people will not leave.

38,113. I suppose no agricultural country could find farms for the whole of its population?—No.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

38,114. There must be migration to other trades?—Yes, the land is limited, of course, and trade is not.

38,115. Then you think that increased education will ultimately lessen the amount of land hunger?—I hope so, very much.

38,116. Would you feel as hopeless as the last witness we had of a good feeling arising between the landlord class and the tenant farmers? Would you think that the difference in religion and politics and race was insuperable?—Well, I think if the landlords would learn Welsh, to begin with, it would improve matters. Of course, people who buy land and come to live here we cannot expect to do that, but there are races of squires, the estates going down from father to son, brought up in Wales, and they never trouble to learn the language at all.

38,117. May I ask how many landlords you have in this parish that you have given evidence for, more than the 10 that are put down here. I think there are 10 on your list?—Oh, those are only very few instances.

38,118. Do you know at all how many landlords there would be in the parish?—There are big estates, the Glansevin estate, and the Danyrallt estate; then there is Cwmglydach, where some of the farms have been sold. I think those are the three principal estates.

38,119. But I mean the smaller landlords as well as the large ones?—They can be seen in the rate books, I think, best. A great many people having two or three farms, or four or five farms, live away. They are seldom seen; they happen to have the estate left them, or something of that kind.

38,120. There is just one question about hillside farms. By hillside farms I suppose you mean farms that are right up-country away from the villages?—Yes, Llangadock is the centre. We have all sorts of little villages on the hills, and they have to come down to Llangadock before they can get to the railway station.

38,121. Do you think that that solitary life on the hillside farms is good for people?—Not exactly; but I think the hill people possess many good qualities.

Mr. Grove.

38,122. In your evidence, under the head of "Abatements," you say you think that that is a wrong principle?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

38,124. You mean, I suppose, that they ought to get a permanent reduction in their rent as a matter of right?—Yes, as a matter of right.

38,125. That is just what you mean by it?—Yes.

38,126. Do you think the land bears too many burdens?—Yes, I do.

38,127. In rates and taxes, and so on?—Yes, everything seems to go on the land.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,128. Did I understand you to say that the land tax is paid by the tenant?—Yes, by the tenant.

38,129. Is that general in Wales?—It is in our neighbourhood. I am agent for a few farms, and the tenants paid land tax first, now the landlord pays it.

38,130. Is there any insurance done on the estates about you?—I do not know of any.

38,131. Then you do not know whether the landlord or the tenant would do that?—I think the landlord would pay it. I have not heard of either side having any insurance.

38,132. What about cottages. Is there a sufficient supply of cottages for the labourers in your district?—I think there are more cottages than they want, but many of them are of a very poor description.

38,133. What sort of poor description. Will you describe some of those used now?—Well, I am agent for one or two which are not at all good. They have thatched roofs and very small windows, very dark and low, and then the floors are very bad. They are made out of lime and sand.

38,134. How many rooms?—Well, very old-fashioned cottages have two rooms, a parlour, and kitchen, where there is always a bed. Then there is a sort of loft, which sometimes has a window and sometimes has not, upstairs, and there the children sleep principally.

38,135. Is there more than one room downstairs?—There is generally a door in the middle, and then the room is on either side in most of the cottages I know.

38,136. Is there any accommodation outside?—No.

38,137. Do you think that this poorness of cottage accommodation tends to drive the labouring population away to trades and towns?—Well, I cannot say.

38,138. You think they are so used to it?—Yes, I think if they had a nice little place, and could keep a cow, or something of that, it would keep them there, because, of course, they would take a pride in it.

38,139. If they had a place to keep a cow, you say?—Yes, I think so 38,140. How much land?—Three or four acres.

38,141. Would that be practical, do you think, in your district?—I believe it used to be long ago, more than it is now. I do not see why it should not be.

Mr. Grove—continued.

38,142. Do you think it would pay the landlords if they did that now?—I think it would if they could get good workmen. There is great difficulty in getting workmen. I was without a workman myself once for three weeks. I could not get one anywhere.

38,143. But would it not be easier to get good workmen in that case; you would have a better choice?—Yes, I think you would.

38,144. And would not that benefit both the landlord and tenant?—Yes, I think it would decidedly.

38,145. How about the dairies; I think you said a great many of them are very damp?—Yes.

38,146. Then it would be very little use teaching anybody to do dairy work in dairies of that kind?—Yes, they want to have proper dairies first of all. The milk will not keep in a great many of the dairies now.

38,147. And the butter also is scarcely a success?—I think the Welsh way of making butter is quite wrong. Carmarthenshire butter is delicious when first made. I do not think there is better butter anywhere going; it is much better than the foreign butter, but it is kept for so long in these great wooden tubs and casks, and of course it cannot be nice after two or three months. Then some of it is heavily salted.

38,148. Do you mean the butter is kept or the milk is kept?—The butter is kept after being made. Then it is brought in several of these tubs or casks at a time down to market.

38,149. Do they make the butter often, or do they keep it a long time?—I know people who make butter in the autumn and keep it till after Christmas before they sell it. Our hands are tied in that way, because the railway rates are so expensive. I have found the difficulty myself. Before we can get it off to towns, the profit is taken away by the railway rates now, otherwise we could make a good thing out of the dairy and out of milk selling.

38,150. Can you not get any reasonable agreement with the railway companies if you try?—No, I do not think so. The people have taken to selling milk, but they have to pay one-seventh for the railway carriage out of that — one-seventh, I should say, of every gallon of milk. They get about 7*d.* a gallon, and they have to pay a penny of that to the railway.

38,151. That is the average about here?—Yes, it is dearer sending butter, much.

38,152. Ought it to be dearer?—No. They say you can get things over cheaper from America to Liverpool than we can get them from Liverpool down to us.

28,153 What is your suggestion for the remedying of that?—I think we ought to have cheap railway rates for farm produce. It would help the farmers a great deal I am sure. Also if they learned the proper methods of making butter, and it was sent off the next day after it was made, and all the fresh eggs sent off to these large towns, I believe farmers would do much better.

Mr. Grove—continued.

38,154. You mentioned fresh eggs. Is there much done in the way of poultry farming in your part?—No, very little indeed. There are no proper places for poultry. I do not know any farm that has a proper poultry house; the poultry roost in the cart-houses and so on.

38,155. If they had better poultry accommodation, would they use it?—I really do not know, because farmers' wives are very much overworked already, and wages are so high.

38,156. You do not know whether that would pay them?—I am sure poultry farming would pay in Wales. There is great difficulty in getting fresh eggs in London, and if we could send our eggs straight up to town, and the railway charge moderate, it would certainly pay.

38,157. Then I understand you think it would be a good thing?—People have told me so in London, and they complained that they could not get fresh eggs every day.

38,158. You have found, I suppose, that farmers and their wives have a reluctance to accept new ideas or new cares of that sort?—I do not think they would if assistance were given to take the new ideas in, and began and put them in the right way. They do not know how to set new schemes of worth.

38,159. What do you mean exactly by the right way?—For instance, if the landlords would take a great interest and talk to their tenants, and put them in the right way, and give them a little help about these things.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,160. Are you a freeholder?—Ours is a family farm. I am in possession at present.

38,161. It is your own farm?—Yes.

38,162. Do I understand your father was a valuer of land?—Yes, he was.

38,163. He acted as a land valuer?—Yes.

38,164. Did he act at the sale of 1884?—For Major Rice he did; he bought the property.

38,165. Did he act for him as a valuer?—No, I do not think he acted as a valuer, because Major Rice would have the land at any price, so that he could not have been valuer. He simply bought it for him.

38,166. That accounts for the land having been bought at a very high figure?—Yes.

38,167. It was not your father's valuation, but it was Major Rice's determination to have that land?—My father used to say that land about Llangadock has gone up from 1*l.* to 2*l.* 10*s.*, 3*l.*, and 4*l.* an acre.

Lord Kenyon.

38,168. Do you think a butter factory would be of any service?—I do not know. I have not had much experience of butter factories.

38,169. It is simply a place where they take their milk and have it made into butter?—If they got well paid for the milk it would be of service. It seems to pay so well in New Zealand and it might do so in some localities, but distances are so great in the country, it is difficult to fix on a suitable centre.

38,170. It is contrary to our ideas; I do not know whether it would answer?—The farmers are always more or less conservative.

38,171. Yes, they are in those things. Did I understand you to say that you were a land agent?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

I never met a lady land agent before.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,172. What price do you get for that butter that is sold about Christmas?—I know some that was bought at 9d. per lb. that really was not bad butter. It was bought about February; it was the lattermath butter. If it had been sold about the autumn it would have fetched 14*d.* or 15*d.* I got 15*d.* for my butter.

38,173. But more salt has to be put into the butter in order that it may keep till after Christmas?—Yes; it was nice butter, only very salty.

38,174. Not so marketable, of course?—No, people will not eat salt butter now.

Lord Kenyon.

38,175. What is the reason of their keeping it so long. Is it because they do not care to sell small quantities?—Yes, and it is an old-fashioned notion, and also they can keep it till the market rises a bit, and then sell.

38,176. Very often the market does not rise?—Very often the market does not rise, and then if everybody brings their butter in at the same time the price gets very low. At these times good butter can be bought from 9*d.* to 10*d.* a lb.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,177. You have spoken about railway rates. Would you advocate the establishment of parcels post for the distribution of small quantities of agricultural produce?—Yes; but the parcels post as it is now would be too dear for sending off butter.

38,178. It is largely used?—Yes.

38,179. But it should be in larger quantities than a pound—say 5 lbs.?—I send butter off to friends like that sometimes, but the postage amounts up to a good bit—it is too costly.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,180. Have you noticed that Welsh dairy people have a tendency to salt butter too much for the English market?—Yes, that is why no one will buy butter out of Wales.

38,181. But why can they not stop doing that. Do they find putting salt in is cheaper?—No. I think that that is partly an old fashion, and then it sells very well in these markets here. If you do not put much salt, they tell you to put more if it is sold about Llandilo and Llangadock. Then if we could only get our butter into the big towns we should get much more for it were it not that we have to pay such high railway rates.

38,182. Then you would have to put less salt in?—Yes.

Chairman.

38,183. The following questions are handed up by Mr. John M. Davies: "What kind of buildings are there at Glansevin isaf, Cwrywaun, Tynlone, Olchfa, Lletty Rhyddod; are they not first rate"?—Yes, but I did not complain of the buildings.

38,184. You did not complain of those?—No.

38,185. "You named Coedweddus?"—Yes; I said Coedweddus. That is on the Glansevin estate.

38,186. You named Coedweddus as having bad buildings?—Yes, they are bad buildings—thatched.

38,187. "Are not the outbuildings very good and recent?"—I do not think that they are, but the tenant had a lease and did all the haulage, and brought up everything, wood and all.

38,188. Is that Coedweddus?—I know the house is bad.

38,189. "The dwelling-house only being old and thatched?"—Yes, very dark, and poor.

38,190. Mr. Vincent asks: "Are not the "rents on Cwrywaun, Glansevin isaf, Olchfa, "Tynlone, and Lletty Rhyddod lower than they "were at his date of purchase." Do you happen to know that?—I do not know when they were purchased. I thought they had always been in the family. I know they are lower now, or else the tenants could not live there.

38,191. "Have not new buildings been made on Cae Sara Tynewydd?"—Yes; I did not complain of the buildings. I said that the rents have risen more than 50 per cent. there. The rents have risen in Tynewydd from 9*l.* to 20*l.*

38,192. You never made any complaint of that?—No, I did not. I did not intend that to include bad buildings.

38,193. Mr. Vincent also wishes to know: "Will you kindly mention the landlord who "asked who had been present at the meeting"?—I would mention for myself; I do not care at all; but I should get the tenant into hot water, and he has forbidden me to mention it.

38,194. The next question is, "If you decline, why do you decline"? You decline because you have been asked not to give the name?—I have been asked not to do it by the tenant.

38,195. Mr. Vincent says, "After all, is it "unreasonable that a landowner should take "some interest in a question of this kind"?—I do not understand what the question means.

Chairman.

38,196. No, I do not think there is any answer required to that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. F. D. Saunders called and examined.

Chairman.

See 37,076–37,199.

38,197. Will you kindly tell us where you live?—Glanrhydw, near Carmarthen.

38,198. How far is that from here?—About 15 miles, or rather more, I should think, by the road.

38,200. Would you kindly read out in the "Western Mail" what it is that you complain of?—"Some landlords made abatements, but "Mr. Saunders, Glanrhydw," and so on, "made "no abatements." That is a false statement, because I do. Then he says, "The relations "between landlords and tenants were not "cordial." I cannot tell if he referred to me or not in making that statement, but he included me amongst the other landlords with respect to making no abatements. As it happens, with the exception of this man, I am on friendly terms with all my tenants. I do not know why he and I are not on friendly terms, but with the others I am on extremely friendly terms.

38,201. I should think that that is an error in the report in the "Western Mail" in the process of condensing, because I have it on my notes that he said farmers are afraid to come forward?—I do not know why they are afraid.

38,202. He said farmers are afraid to come forward. He told us that he was a tenant farmer, that his holding was 20 acres, and his rent was 45*l.* under Mr. Saunders, who I take it is yourself?—Yes.

38,203. Who, he said, refused him 10 per cent. because he was coming to give evidence, though he gave it him back for two years. So that you see the report in the "Western Mail" is condensed, and perhaps gives you a wrong idea of what he said?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

38,204. He acknowledged that you had given him back the amount of 5*l.*, I think it was; I am speaking under correction?—Yes.

38,205. For two years?—Yes.

38,206. Then he went on to say that you had refused it for the third year, and his impression was that it was refused on account of his preparing to come forward to give evidence. Upon that I have nothing whatever to say. I remember, besides that, he mentioned other persons to whom you had made a return of rent. That is so far as my memory serves me. If you like, you can have the shorthand notes read, but there was, so far as I remember, nothing said against you not having made a return. Then he said, or he might have said, that his relations were not cordial. Of course he, and he only, can decide whether that is so or whether it is not so?—Yes. I do not know why they are not cordial, I am sure.

38,207. I do not think we need go into that. If he says they are not cordial, it is not for us to go into the question?—No, but with regard to people being afraid to give evidence, I do not see why they are afraid in any way. I never forbade anybody to go to the Commission. What I did was, I wrote to him to put him quite clear on one point. There was a meeting called at Llangendeirne close by us. As I am a landlord, and interested very much in agriculture, I thought it would be much nicer, as he summoned the meeting, to summon me to attend it, so that landlords and tenants could bring evidence before the Commission together, but instead of that, this meeting was got up without my having the smallest invitation to attend it, or to assist with any evidence that I could bring forward. At this meeting he made a statement about the letting of a farm of mine, the circumstances of which he knew nothing about. So that I wrote and said to him that I should be much obliged if he would not go to meetings and make statements about farms of mine of which he knew nothing, and as I had failed to satisfy him after giving him 5*l.* a year reduction, I refused to give him it any more. I thought I would not give him the 5*l.* in order to see if he would be satisfied then, because if a man does not try to meet me on friendly terms, I do not see why I should try to meet him. But I have never in any way so expressed any wish that anybody should not come to the Commission.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

if he chose to, but he neglects that, and simply chooses to go on with the farm alone.

38,209. Have you got a copy of your correspondence here, because although we have a full copy of the whole of the correspondence, it is in London?—I have not any copy, because I never thought of it.

Chairman.

38,210. You complain that this meeting was got up and that you as landlord were not asked to attend?—Yes, because I thought it would be a friendly thing for landlords and tenants together to get up evidence for the Commission, because I have nothing whatever to hide upon it.

38,211. Exactly. I want to ask you one question upon that; do you know of any instance in South Wales in which the landlords have asked the tenants to meet them and talk the matter over, so that they might give joint evidence before the Commission?—No, I do not know it, because landlords were never requested to do it by the Land Commission in any way. It was never in any way hinted to me that it was a good thing to give the tenants notice, but I have never expressed any objection at all to any one of the tenants coming forward to give evidence before the Land Commission, because I am quite willing they should all do so, and I wish you would write to some of the tenants now to come before you. I will promise to hold no communication whatever in any way with them, in order just to let you see that the feelings are cordial between us with the exception of this man. I will give you the names of all the tenants. Of course there is no time to ask you to go out and see the place yourself. It is only five miles from Carmarthen, but I should like you to go out and see the place yourselves.

38,212. But you quite understand, sir, that these tenants are protected by the law of the land?—Yes.

38,213. And that any interference with these tenants, if proved, is liable to punishment by fine and imprisonment?—Yes, but I have not interfered.

38,214. But you quite understand that they have every right to come forward and give evidence?—Yes, and I would like to encourage them to come in.

38,215. There is one question I would like to ask you further; do you consider that the tenants would, like yourself, consider themselves aggrieved because they have not been asked to the meetings of the association of landlords, who are represented by Mr. Vincent?—Well, I do not know. I do not belong to the association of landlords. I did not join it.

38,216. You do not belong to the association? No, I do not.

38,217. And you decline to give an opinion as to whether you think the tenants might consider themselves aggrieved in any way or not?—I think it is a great pity to divorce landlord and tenant in any way by any associations. I think it is much better for them to manage their own affairs.

Chairman—continued.

38,218. But your idea is that the landlords and the tenants ought to have met together and got evidence up for this Commission?—I think that they ought to have met together and got up evidence for the Commission; I certainly think so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,219. In order that there should be no misunderstanding, my Lord, I find in the statement made by Mr. William Thomas yesterday that "to his knowledge," Mr. Saunders made no abatement.

Witness.—I do make abatements; I could give you the names, and pretty well the sums, as near as necessary.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,220. As I understand, however, you saw a report in a newspaper of this meeting?—In the "Western Mail" this morning.

38,221. But I am talking about the meeting of the tenants to which you were not summoned?—No, I was told about it.

38,222. You got to hear that there was a meeting?—Yes.

38,223. Having heard that, I understand you to say that you wrote to your tenant the letter of which you have told us?—Yes.

38,224. Did it not occur to you that the letter, written in the terms which you have stated (a letter which has been laid before the Commission) might intimidate the tenant from coming before us?—I do not see it, because it was simply about this private meeting that he was ready to give evidence that I refer to, and about a statement that he made with regard to a farm of mine when he knew nothing about the circumstances of the letting of this farm; that is what I objected to. You see, if the tenant himself had gone and given evidence about the taking of this farm I should have been quite agreeable, but he did not.

38,225. I am sorry we have not got your letter here, because certainly the construction which you are now placing upon it is not the most obvious construction?—I wish the correspondence was here, because that was certainly it.

38,226. We have got the letter of the tenant, and I think we had better send it to you, so that you may see it?—That is certainly what I intended to say.

38,227. According to my recollection, this is how it was, and it is rather important under the circumstances. Just let us see what happened: there was a private meeting of the tenants, subsequently you hear something from somebody as to what took place there?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,228. Then you write the letter to Mr. William Thomas?—Yes.

38,229. And this phrase occurs in it: "If you "are not satisfied with me, you had better give "up your farm"?—Well, that is not giving notice.

38,230. Is it not?—I do not see it myself, because I had every opportunity of giving him notice last September, or any time I liked, but I do not wish now to give the man notice; I never give notice if I can help it, because I do not like changing a tenant. I am on very friendly terms indeed with my tenants.

38,231. I am not saying that the letter does not bear your construction; I am only asking your opinion as to whether the other construction is not, having regard to the fact that the man was a tenant from year to year, quite open to it?—Yes. He had no business to make these statements about abatements. You see I have never given so much per cent. all round; I have given it where necessary and where due, because sometimes some farms require more than others, where, for instance, a farm has been re-valued in the last few years, and the rent has been put up upon that, then there ought to be a bigger reduction than in the other cases. I cannot be considered a hard landlord, because some years ago I bought three farms for which I paid 14,000*l.*, which I only get about 370*l.* a year for, and I do all the repairs. It is a trifle over 2½ per cent. that I get returned on my money. I have never raised the rents on those farms one penny.

38,232. I do not think Mr. Thomas said you were a hard landlord, or used any expression of the kind?—But he referred to my having something between my tenants and myself. I have certainly no objection to their all being examined; I should like them all to come forward, because I know they could not say anything that I should mind being said. In the "South Wales Daily News"— I suppose this is a correct report—there is a statement which he made, and it is as follows: "Mr. Isaac Thomas, Blaenau, "wanted a farm called Pencelli, on Mr. Saun-"ders' estate. Mr. Peel, Ferryside, wrote for "him, and the answer he received was that he "was not a churchman." I do not know at all what answer he received; I was away abroad at the time, and I have no means of finding out whether that was so, but the present tenant, who has been there ever since, is a man called Thomas Davies. The late tenant died there; he was about 86 years old; he has a son at Oxford, and he lived in the country a great deal, and I thought perhaps he would like to stay in the farm, and I offered it to him, and begged him to take it on, and he said he did not care about taking it on. It was at his express wish that the present tenant, Thomas Davies, got the farm; I remember this perfectly well. Thomas Davies took Pencelli; he was not the man who offered the highest rent for it; I had a higher rent offered for it than that, and since that I have knocked off 10*l.* a year in rent. That was the very farm that this man referred to at this meeting which I objected to, because he did not know anything about the circumstances. The old tenant was a man who had lived on the farm for many years, and he had it at a nominal rent because he was a great friend of my uncle, who had the property before me.

38,233. What do you say about another statement of his: "The six vacant farms during the "last six years in the parish had all been given "to churchmen?"—I do not know, because I have not had six vacant. They are not mine. I know one farm where a man went in about three or four years ago. I do not think he has ever been to church in his life. I do not fancy so really. It is the man who has got the farm next to me.

38,234. That does not seem to apply to your estate then?—Then another statement of his is, "The present tenant of Gwempa used to attend "the Methodist Chapel, and his wife was a "member. Since going there he had become "a churchman." I do not know what has turned him; I have not; I do not know if he and his wife go to church now or not, because I do not go looking about to see. He has been in the farm now a short time, and he is perfectly satisfied there, and I am sure if you would kindly write and ask him to come to Carmarthen on Saturday, he would come and tell you all he knew, and very likely give you his ideas as to why he turned into the church. I should be very happy to give you the names of all the tenants if you can make use of them in any way, but I certainly have had nothing to do with turning him. Then William Thomas makes some kind of statement about the tenant of Bridge End.

38,235. You do not give any special favour in the course of the year to the church tenants, do you?—No, certainly not, because I have got dissenters and church people as tenants, but they are all equally friendly with me. I certainly make no difference with them, because there are good people in both denominations, and I cannot make any difference.

Mr. Seebohm.

38,236. Would you kindly say how many tenants you have, roughly?—I cannot tell you exactly; I should think about 30, but then a lot of them are very small, cottagers and so on. I have got some good farms and some small ones; I am always on such friendly terms that I cannot understand why this man should say I was not, because he knows very well it is a perfect untruth.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,237. Mr. William Thomas also said—I have it on my notes—"Not one of Mr. Saunders' "tenants came to the public meeting; they were "afraid of their landlord"?—I do not know why. See 37,175.

38,238. So far as you are concerned, you do not know anything about that?—Certainly I have always said that I should be very glad to see them go before the Commission; anything to improve the condition of land. I have certainly never stopped them in any way.

Chairman.

38,239. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Do religious "differences have any effect on the letting of "your farms"?—They may have had, but I do not know; I know now they have not. I do not know that they can have very much effect, because there are dissenters and church people on my farms now. I do not know if there are more dissenters than church people, but I know there is a farmer next door to me now who is a dissenter. He pays me about 200*l.* a year, and a very nice man he is, too.

38,240. Is your answer to that question yes or no?—No, certainly not. It is only just now that I have begun to manage my property. I have been living abroad for some years, and it is only lately that I have begun to manage it, within the last 18 months; I cannot tell you for certain what happened before, but it is certainly not so now.

38,241. "How do you know that Mr. Thomas "made any statement about a farm of yours?" —Because a man told me he had been at the meeting—no, I do not know if he had been at the meeting; he may not have been at the meeting, but a man told me.

38,242. Can you tell us the name of the gentleman who told you?—Do you want it particularly?

38,243. The question is, "How do you know"?—It is simply because a man told me, and I can tell you who it was; it was a tenant's son. I know who William Thomas thinks it is, but he is quite mistaken.

38,244. Your answer is, "Because I was told by a tenant's son"?—Yes.

38,245. "Do you know that Mr. Thomas "denies that he ever said anything about it?"— What, about this farm?

38,246. Yes?—No, I do not know it. I should like you to use this as a kind of test case. Could you form a sub-committee in any way—I am not far from Carmarthen—and send round. I promise not to have any communication with any tenants in any way, and if you could send round and make inquiries as to how things are managed there, I am quite willing for you to do it, and have the farms examined, and see how things are there. I will not communicate with them in any way. I should like you to hear every side, because it is rather unfair on me, who wish to live there quietly.

Chairman—continued.

38,247. We shall be very glad to hear them at Carmarthen, if they come forward?—I do not want to summon them, because perhaps they will think they have to give evidence for me, but I would like to give you the names of some farmers, if they like to come forward, and I will not even write to them to say I have done so. How many shall I give you the names of? I had better give you the name of the man who left the chapel, for one.

38,248. The Commission will be very glad to hear any of your tenants at Carmarthen on Saturday?—Which would you like to have?

38,249. It is perfectly impossible for us to make an exception in any one landlord's favour. We shall be sitting at Carmarthen, and we shall be very glad to hear any gentleman who chooses to come before us. You have stated perfectly clearly that you have no objection to your tenants coming forward, and if they come before us on Saturday at Carmarthen we shall be glad to hear them?—Would you like me to write to them?

See 43,170–43,212.

38,250. It has nothing to do with us at all. We are sitting here, and if your tenants choose to come forward we shall be glad to hear them? —Shall I give the ones whose names are mentioned in William Thomas' report?

Chairman.

38,251. We can give you no advice whatever. The Commission is sitting to hear evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Thomas called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

38,252. Is this your evidence; and has it been examined by Professor Rhŷs, and is it correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

Evidence of John Thomas, tenant farmer and butter merchant, Cwmcanol, Llandilo.

As one whose trade takes him here and there over the country, and brings him into close contact with the farmers, I am perfectly aware that very many of the farmers of this county suffer great hardship at present in many respects.

High Rents and Low Prices.—The demands on the farmers are greater than their receipts, and poverty threatens them in spite of all their efforts. I have paid 7*d.* or 8*d.* per lb. for butter to farmers whom double that sum would hardly enable to pay the rent. I know of many who have been compelled to borrow money to meet their demands, and I know of one who had to borrow money to pay his rent at the end of the last half year. The horned cattle and the butter are lower in price than they have been for 40 years, but in the same time the wages of workmen have doubled or trebled, the rates have gone up, and the rents have been raised, almost without exception, often without the landlord spending a penny in improving the land. The rents are much too high when compared with the price of labour and of farm products. Last year I know of a farm called Newfoundland, in the parish of Llangadock, being valued by a man appointed by the landlord, because the tenant complained of the high rent. The result of the valuation was a reduction of 20*l.*, about 12½ per cent. That is the only place I know of which was valued last year, but I know of many farms which have more need of being fairly valued. Landlords and agents often complain that farmers are always grumbling, but I doubt if farmers tell as much as they should of their hardships. For instance, I know of a woman who was the daughter of the farmer of a small farm rented at 28*l.* a year, and who for 29 years lived with her husband at a farm for which they paid 80*l.* a year, retiring to a smaller farm on her husband's death. She kept two cows, but in about 20 years her means were exhausted, and she went to live at Llandilo, receiving 3*s.* a week in parish relief. The landlord, however, seized upon and sold her goods under distress for rent, and she and her daughter had to remove to a small room, for which they paid 1*s.* per week They slept in this room for eight months without a bed, and the floor was not boarded. All their clothes were on them, or in a sack. The mother was 72 years of age, and the daughter 36. At last the neighbours came to know of their condition, and they were removed to Llandilo Workhouse. This instance I give to show the jealous pride with which Welsh farmers and their families conceal their poverty and distress. There are hundreds of farmers who live almost as meanly as these two women, and are too proud to own it.

Agreements.—I give the following as an instance how farmers are sometimes, if not often, treated with reference to agreements. At the end of last year I helped a friend, Mr. Joseph Morgan, Lan Farm, near Trapp, Llandilo, to rent a farm from Mr. Williams, Maesquarre, Bettws, Ammanford. We agreed that the landlord should send the agreement to his new tenant, and that, after I had looked it over, Mr. Morgan was to sign it and send it back by post. Within a week's time a letter was received from the landlord asking Mr. Morgan to go down to Llanelly to Messrs. Rees and Edwards' solicitor's office to sign the agreement. He does not understand English, and is no scholar, yet he went to the office and signed the agreement. The solicitors told him the charge was 5*l.* 5*s.*, but he only paid 2*l.*, as he had no more in his pocket, but, as a favour, the solicitors said they would only charge him 3*l.* 3*s* Next day he went to see the landlord, who let him off the 3*s.*

Bad Buildings.—Within five miles of Llandilo I will undertake to show the Commissioners six or seven farm-houses whose rents are from 60*l.* to 100*l.*, in the following wretched condition. The following are some of them, Ffynonddeilog, Ffosddu, Felincoed, Tircelyn, Rhydygwydd, and Cefn Hendre, all on the Taliaris estate; also Glanyrafon-ddu-ucha (in Talley parish), Bularth fach (in Llandebie parish), Lletty'rywen and Brynio in Llandilo parish. Many of those named have no partitions upstairs. One farm where all the buildings are deplorably bad, the farmer and his wife sleeping downstairs, and the men and maid servants, the carpenter, the tailor, and the sons on their holidays all sleeping in the same room upstairs—for there are a vast number of farm-houses which have no partition at all upstairs. Another farm, rent 80*l.*, where a visitor would have to sleep either with the servant over the cows or in the same room with the servant girl; the dairy is a little room behind the house, half the proper size, without benches at all but some half-rotten planks of wood, the floor without a stone or a brick, and every drop of milk that falls becomes sour at once. It would not do for a pig-sty, for pigs would, in a very short time, throw down the wall. The landlord lives close by, but cares for nothing but for his rent. In another farm, where the roof is thatched with straw (and the tenants have always to find the straw and pay the thatcher), 30*l.* worth of straw would be insufficient to put it in a proper state. In another farm, whose rent is 88*l*, there is only one fireplace, and that is in the kitchen—the only room where the women can do their work. The son of this farmer has a high social position but when he comes home for his holidays he has to sleep with the servant man on the 'dowlod' over the cows, or in the loft where the servant girl sleeps, and which is not partitioned. I know of another farm where the buildings are shockingly bad. One Sunday lately the tenant, on coming home from chapel, found the front wall of the cow-house fallen. The servant had let out the cows and carried his box from the 'dowlod' for fear the whole cow-house would fall. Luckily this did not occur, and the farmer built up the wall that had fallen at his own expense. Mr. Joseph Morgan, of Lan Farm, has made up his mind to go to Bwlchymynydd, although I have told him that it is not fit for him to go to. The only bedroom in the house, from the floor to the ridge, is 7 feet (the greatest height); from the floor to the slates, inside the house, 3 ft. 7 in.; from the floor to the tie is 2 ft. 9 in. The length of the room is 17 ft., and the breadth 12 ft. 8 in. I trust the honourable Commissioners will inquire carefully into the sleeping accommodation provided for young men, especially in the counties of Carmarthen and Cardigan. If the doctors of Wales told all they knew on this subject, they would put to shame many landlords who talk glibly of morality. It is sheer hypocrisy on their part to talk of it when they know that the hearts of many of their tenants bleed because of this perilous inconvenience.

Suggestions.—(1.) Some sort of a Land Court, composed partly of men who know what it is to pay the rent from the produce of the land alone.

(2.) Security of tenure, so that men who possess money and brains may till the land. Land is perfectly honest, and will repay well for tilling it if it is tilled properly. I am of opinion that the soil which is worth say 1*l.* per acre, can be made to produce twice as much by spending about 6*l.* per acre on it in labour and cultivation. There are some good landlords and land agents here who know their work thoroughly, but too often the agent is a solicitor, or a bank clerk, or an auctioneer, who knows little of the importance and responsibility of his office.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,253. Beginning with your evidence as to farms where repairs are very bad, is it not the duty of the sanitary authority to report upon such farms if they are unfit for habitation?—We, as farmers, do not understand much about the law, but we have not seen any representative of the sanitary authority about our houses for the last 16 years.

38,254. If farmers are obliged to borrow money to meet their rents, who lends it?—I have lent money to an occasional one.

38,255. Have you had it back?—Not nearly all of it.

38,256. Do you lend it for any definite period?—Until they were able to see the time when they could pay it; but times will have to improve much before they can do so.

38,257. Have you lent it for a longer period than one year?—Yes.

38,258. Do any of the tenant farmers borrow from the banks?—Yes.

38,259. Do they find a difficulty in obtaining credit?—They take a relative with them.

38,260. That is, for security?—Yes.

38,261. I suppose you think that cannot continue?—It cannot.

38,262. How long has it been going on?—From a twelvemonth to 18 months.

38,263. Was there any large amount of borrowing of money prior to that?—Not that I know of in the years that have passed—10 to 12 years.

38,264. Then the worst of the agricultural depression has been within the last 18 months? Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,265. What would you suggest with regard to this deplorable state of accommodation for the servant men in the farm-houses?—Some sanitary authority to go round to inspect the places.

38,266 But have you a sanitary authority at all in the place?—They say that there is a sanitary authority. I have not seen one. I think there ought to be somebody looking after the representative if there is.

38,267. Is there a salary paid to a man representing the sanitary authority in your parish?—I meant an official in the parish, I say that in order that he may understand.

38,268. Who?—In order that the official, the representative of the sanitary authority, may understand that he does not do his work.

38,269. The guardians, I suppose you mean?—When I used the word "officials," I referred to those who have the care of the sanitary authority, who have jurisdiction over the sanitary authority.

38,270. Do you mean the board of guardians?—I do not know who they are. I refer to those whose business it is to look after the sanitary authority, whoever they are.

Mr. Grove.

38,271. You say in your statement that butter is lower in price than it has been for 40 years. Is that so?—It has been so during this winter.

38,272. You are a butter merchant?—Yes.

38,273. Do you deal in Australian and New Zealand butters, or Danish butters?—No, I do not myself.

38,274. Is there any foreign butter of that kind, or anything from the Colonies sold in Llandilo, for instance?—Very little.

38,275. There is some, is there?—There is some, a little.

38,276. That is rather a reflection on the farmers near to Llandilo, is it not?—There is room for such a reflection.

38,277. I want to know the reason why; is the quality better?—It is far better than what was made last year.

38,278. Then is it exceptional, or does it go on each?—Last year was exceptional, but about one-third of the butter in Wales cannot be good in consequence of the dairies, and what was said on that subject by a previous witness. I have not a list of dairies here, but I can mention one or two if you like, or can prepare such a list.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,279. You said something about bad buildings?—Yes, here they are. I have given a list of bad buildings.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,280. That is apart from dairy accommodation?—I can mention three or four instances now from memory of dairies which are in bad condition.

Mr. Grove.

38,281. Do you object to put that list in?—No, I have no objection at all, I will mention them at once.*

* The witness subsequently forwarded to the Secretary this list of bad dairies:—

List of Bad Dairies.

Name of Farm.	Name of Parish.	Name of Farm.	Name of Parish.
Bankygwin	Llansadwrn.	Felincoed	Llandilo.
Cwmmeilath	„	Rhydygwydd	„
Cefn hendre	Llandilo.	Ystradaman	Bettws Ammanford.
Pontgarreg	Talley.	Rhydyfallen isaf	Pencarreg (near Llansawel).
Llwydcoedisaf	Llandilo.
Gorsfelen	„

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

38,282. Generally speaking, the bad condition of the buildings prevents butter being made of good quality?—If once the milk or the cream becomes sour, the butter cannot be good, and where there is no floor in the dairy, and no bricks or flags, the milk becomes sour at once.

Mr. Seebohm.

38,283. May I ask you how many parishes there are in your union?—Seven parishes, I think, I am not quite sure.

38,284. Are the representatives of those parishes chiefly farmers?—Yes.

38,285. That board of guardians is your sanitary authority, probably?—I do not know anything about that. I have made no studies in that direction.

38,286. You have no urban sanitary authority, have you?—There may be in the town. I live in the country.

38,287. Are you aware that the board of guardians in the rural districts have power under Acts of Parliament to inspect the dairies?—They do not exercise that right, if they have got it.

38,288. Do you think any Act of Parliament is of any use if the persons who are elected to carry it out do not choose to carry it out?—Not at all.

38,289. The tenant farmers have given evidence here of the inefficiency of their dairies, and they have made a strong point of it, that the dairies ought to be made better. Why should they not bring the Act into operation, and demand that they should be made better?—The landlords are the chief people in this place.

38,290. Not on the board of guardians?—The board of guardians do not desire to go against the landlords.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,291. Is there any foundation for the complaints of the landlords and agents that farmers are always grumbling?—They do say that farmers constantly do grumble.

38,292. I want to know if there is any foundation for it?—There is plenty of need for that.

38,293. I think that will be generally admitted. You say they are always grumbling. I want to know if there is any foundation for it?—They do not meet with the landlords often, and when they have an opportunity of meeting they make their complaints.

38,294. Do you think this is put forward as an excuse for not meeting the case of the tenants, that they are always grumbling?—It may be on some estates, but it is not so on the estate on which I live.

38,295. Are there any vacant farms in this district?—No.

38,296. Have any farmers failed?—Not one in this immediate neighbourhood, you may say.

38,297. Are they able to pay the poor rates?—I do not know.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

38,298. You say in your statement with regard to agents, "There are some good landlords and land "agents here, who know their work thoroughly, "but too often the agent is a solicitor or a bank "clerk." Do you refer to anyone in particular when you mention bank clerk?—No, I do not refer to any particular one, but I am thinking of those who know nothing about farms.

38,299. You have not got anybody in your mind by that, then?—I have plenty of instances in my mind, but ——

38,300. Will you finish the sentence?—That is the agreement of one of them, that cost 3*l.* (The witness handed in agreement.) The tenant second time went down the to see his landlord, and he said, "If you give me up the sovereign I "will settle with the solicitor," because the tenant had paid half-a-crown to and fro by the train.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,301. Do you buy a considerable quantity of butter in the course of the year?—I have bought about 2 tons for 6*d.* per lb. this winter.

38,302. You have mentioned some very bad dairies where this butter comes from at 6*d.* per lb. Can you tell me the estates on which these dairies are; I do not care about naming the farms but only the estates?—If you go to the estate of Mr. Herbert Peel, Taliaris, the buildings are worth looking at. As all things remained he was ashamed of acknowledging them. Some of the buildings are not fit for habitation.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,303. Are these dairies as a rule situate in the proper place; are they in an airy place without any smell?—One on the Taliaris estate is in a house with a small window behind. The other, to which I refer here, is in the back. I know of some with calico ceilings.

38,304. On what sized farms do you generally find this 6*d.* per lb. butter?—All sized farms last summer, because it was a hot summer.

38,305. Do you find it in large farms as well as anywhere else?—Yes.

38,306. What loss would that be to the farmer to sell butter for the whole season at 6*d.* per lb.?—They do not sell all the butter like that; the autumn butter was 13*d.*

38,307. You say on the whole there would be a good deal of butter bought at 6*d.* a lb.?—I bought it in the winter but it had been made in the summer.

38,308. But is it not a fact that the butter last summer reached as high as 16*d.* a lb., well-made butter?—We did not pay over 13*d.*

38,309. There is a considerable difference between 13*d.* and 6*d.*?—Yes, but the autumn butter was worth 13*d.* and that of midsummer 6*d.*

38,310. Do many of the farmers keep a winter dairy?—As many as can, according as the hay is; if there is much hay they keep them.

38,311. A great many of the cows get dry by the autumn, do they not?—Not until they are brought indoors.

38,312. Then you spoke about the accommodation for servants. Do not the farmers find a difficulty in getting servants to come to these bad houses?—I should think so. I should think that such ought to be case, because the houses are so bad the buildings are so bad.

38,313. Are they not obliged to pay higher wages to them?—Wages have risen two or three times more than they were in the times that I can recollect.

38,314. Is it not a fact that a servant would go to a place where he knew that there was good accommodation and not bad, in preference to a farm where the accommodation is so very bad?—Quite so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,315. I only just want to ask you one question, I think. Do the landlords usually supply the timber for the repair of the woodwork of the houses, and for the repair of the fences?—I get all the rough timber from my own agent, but there is nothing mentioned in the agreement about it.

38,316. I was going to say, in this agreement that is handed in, by clause 4 it is provided that "The tenant shall keep the farm-house and "buildings in good and tenantable order, and so "leave the same at the end of the tenancy. He "shall also well and sufficiently lay, cut, repair, "and keep repaired, all hedges and gates, and "open and cleanse all ditches, water-courses, and "drains, and so leave the same at the end of the "tenancy." There seems to be no clause in this agreement for the supplying of the timber?—I went to see that landlord, and I showed him my evidence, and I told him that I was going to appear before the Commission, and I asked him if he expected the tenants to buy posts and leave them for him. With regard to the gates, there is only one gate there now, and I asked him if he expected the tenants to make new gates, and to leave them for him.

38,317. What did he say?—He did not answer. I also asked him what was the meaning of the words that he reserved the seedlings and saplings.

38,318. Quite so. I was going to call your attention to that. All timber and timber-like trees, wood, underwood, seedlings, saplings, and plantations are reserved by this agreement to the landlord. So that the only way of complying with clause 4 is for the tenant to buy timber?—I asked him if he was going to leave it to be a seed ground for white thorns and black thorns, because there was no wood there.

38,319. It seems an unusual kind of agreement. I do not think we have seen one of that kind before?—I hope that it shall be preserved as an agreement worth 3*l.* in Wales.

38,320. Do you mean that 3*l.* was paid to the solicitors for this?—Yes, there is a receipt for it (handed in).

38,321. The stamp was half-a-crown, so that they charged for drawing and engrossing it 2*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

38,322. Do you think that with good dairies the butter might still be improved in this district?—Yes, I hope it will. I am sure it will, too.

38,323. With instruction?—Yes.

38,324. Is it usual to keep a carpenter and a tailor in a farm of this description?—With us here they live on the farmer's food when working at a place, and they sleep whilst they are there.

38,325. Who is the landlord of that farm?—Mr. Herbert Peel, Taliaris.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,326. In answer to Mr. Grove, you said something about foreign butter. Do you deal with St. Clear's butter factory?—I have seen it, but I have not bought any.

38,327. Have you sold any butter to it?—No. I buy butter. They in the factory do not buy butter, so far as I know.

38,328. You do not know?—No. It is a factory.

38,329. You answer me by saying you do not buy produce?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Herbert Peel called and examined.

Chairman.

38,330. What is it you wish to state?—May I be allowed to offer an explanation at this meeting respecting what has been said as to my estate here to-day.

38,331. Where do you live?—Taliaris.

38,332. How far is Taliaris from here?—Four miles.

38,333. What do you wish to tell the Commissioners?—I wish to state with respect to the buildings that were alluded to on my estate, that

Chairman—continued.

I am quite aware that there are some very bad buildings on it—one or two farms and a few cottages—but I beg to say, in explanation, that I am doing all I can with regard to it; I have been in my property 11 years, and I have expended a great deal upon it since, and I am still doing so. I hope before many years are over that I shall not have any bad buildings or bad cottages on my property. I am quite aware that there are such buildings. I have nothing more to say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Moses Williams called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

38,334. Is this your evidence, and is it correct?—This is my evidence taken before Professor Rhs this morning, and it is correct.

The statement of the witness was read as follows:—

Evidence of Moses Williams, tenant farmer Gellifawnen, Glanamman.

Rents and Tenure.—I am a tenant farmer on the Stepney estate. Rents too high; farms are sold and no compensation is given to tenants for improvements. Farmers have no union, but one bids against the other. Few leases; farmers not anxious for them while rents are so high. Clauses in agreements are hard on the tenants. No doubt land is neglected owing to insecurity of tenure. Farmers never get compensation for damage done by hauling timber, &c.

Labour.—Wages have gone up. Thirty years ago a labourer got 1*s.* 3*d.* per day and his food, and now 3*s.* 6*d.* and food. Hard to get a labourer to work on farm, owing to nearness of works. Servant man 30 years ago got 10*l.* a year, now 30*l.*; servant girl 30 years ago 4*l.*, now 12*l.* to 15*l.* Blacksmith for shoeing a horse then 1*s.* 6*d.* a set, now 3*s.* or 3*s.* 6*d.* a set; for fixing tyres to the (cylcho) wheels then 3*s.* 6*d.*, now 7*s.* 6*d.* Carpenters then 2*s.* a day, now 5*s.* or 6*s.* The shoemaker and the tailor have raised their price accordingly.

Prices.—Coal 30 years ago could be had at 2*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.* per ton at the pit's mouth; now 12*s.* per ton. Wheat then 10*s.* per bushel, now about 4*s.*; and other farm produce has gone down as well. Taxes and rates greatly increased in the same time.

Buildings.—Buildings are as a rule in a bad state. Straw-thatched houses to be thatched at expense of farmers. As for repairs, they have to be done at the farmers own cost, or not at all.

Tenants and Children.—On account of all these expenses our children have to be kept at home to work without wages. Seldom, when the children marry, can the parents afford to stock a farm for them.

Insecurity of Tenure.—Evan Llewellyn, of Penybont, had worked hard, with his children to improve the farm, and brought it into a high state of cultivation. When in this condition the farm was advertised for sale. The tenant went to the landlord and asked for compensation for improvements. 'Buy it yourself' was the landlord's answer, and so he did rather than lose the fruits of his labour, though he had but little money for the purpose. Workmen were the keenest bidders for the farm at the sale, and ran up the price. The tenant, however, bought it, though at far too high a price. The rent before the sale was 24*l.*, and he pays 36*l.* interest on the money he borrowed to conclude the purchase.

Chairman—continued.

Common Land.—Years ago the farmers of this parish had a right of common over a portion of the Black Mountain, but the common was inclosed years ago, and the loss is now keenly felt. The farmers, however, received, I believe, a portion of the mountain themselves, as compensation for their loss, but now they are obliged to pay for it approximately the same amount as they pay per acre for their farms.

Relation of Landlord and Tenant.—I remember 60 years, but I have only seen my landlord once on my farm, and that was before he came into the estate. I do not know his address, though I have wished to write to him, but have to do all my business with the agent. There have been seven agents in my time, only two of them being able to understand Welsh.

Suggestions.—1. Land Court. 2. Security of tenure. 3 We have to compete with foreign produce in the market. We cannot continue to do this unless we can compete with them also in the price we pay for land. The rates for carrying goods from New York to London are lower than from Wales to London. I submit copy of a letter sent to Mr. Wilson, the agent." There was a previous agent to Mr. Wilson there, and Mr. Wilson did not know how things had been carried on, so that I wrote to him saying how things had been carried on.

38,335. I do not quite understand?—The present agent does not know, and so I wrote to him to say how things had been carried on in this farm from the outset.

38,336. Then you put that letter in?—Yes.

38,337. Has there been any reply to that letter?—No, I received no answer. This is a copy of the letter:

"Gellifawnen,

"Dear Sir, July 7, 1893.

"May I ask you to be so kind as to read "the following. I write it to let you know how "we have been treated at Gellifawnen by "different agents. My parents rented Gelli-"fawnen at an annual rent of 15*l.*; since then "a colliery was opened in the neighbourhood, "and the company took four of Stepney's farms, "viz., Llwynrhaf, Abernant, Ynysyfawnen, and "Gellifawnen (my farm). After that we had "to rent the farms off the company, and that "on an advance, provided that they were to "give us the value of the advance to us in coal

Chairman—continued.

" and lime, which they did so long as the colliery " was working. But before long the colliery " stopped, and the company gave the farms back " to the landlord, and we have had to pay the " same rent ever since, without getting anything " towards the advance; and, therefore, these " farms went up higher than any other farms in " the district. They raised my place from 15*l.* " to 20*l.*, and again to more than that. Some " time ago the Llandebie parish portion of the " Black Mountain was enclosed, and a plot of it " was given to each farmer, according to the " size of his farm, as a compensation for his " rights of common. But sometime afterwards " we had to pay rent for these plots of mountain " the same as the other land we had, and I have " to pay 1*l.* 15*s.* a year for the little plot I got, " and now my rent is 21*l.* 15*s.* against 15*l.* to " my parents. At the time I took the farm my " mother was a widow, and none of her children " were with her at home, but she tried her best " to get one of us to assist her for the remainder " of her days, as she wished to die at her old " home; but she could not get anyone to go to " her, as everyone of us knew very well that " they could not get a living from so small a " place and such a bad soil, and it was only to " be counted as some kind of home more than " anything else. And after I had been away " working at my trade as a smith and implement " maker for about 12 years, and was a single man " and did save a little money, I resolved, through " taking pity for my dear old mother, to come " home to help her for a bit. But within a short " time after I came home my mother wanted " me to give my name to the agent to be a joint " tenant with her, but I refused unless I should " have some repairs done. As the old buildings " were in a very bad condition, the old timber " had the dry rot, and the old walls were not fit " to put a roof over them, I went to the agent " and he promised us repairs. Then I allowed " my name to be entered on the books at the " office as a joint tenant with my mother, and " soon after that I built a workshop for myself " to work my trade in it, to assist us to pay the " rent for the farm. I kept a man on the farm " to drain and clean it and get it into good " order. But before long the old building began " to fall in, and I went to the agent for the " repairs, but the answer I had that it was " impossible for me to have them made then, as " he did spend already more money than was " allowed for him to do. And now as the winter " was coming I knew not what to do. And he " told me if I only could put them up myself, " that he would come up to see and value them, " and that I should get his valuation for them, " provided that I should make a good job on " them. But before he came up to value my " building he ceased to be an agent over the " estate; and that after I spent from time to " time over 150*l.* of my own money that I did " save when working at my trade, and that " makes my rent higher still. But the agent " who came after him did come up to see, and " he made some kind of valuation of them, but

" he wished me to wait until Sir Arthur Stepney " would return from abroad, and then everything " would be settled, but before Sir Arthur " returned home the agent left. And now, sir " I have only you to apply for the settlement of " this affair. You know that I sent you the " paper you asked for, but I have not heard a " word of you since; and I can tell you, sir, that " I could never be able to pay this high rent if " I was not to get them by working at my trade, " and employing others at it too. I kept the " same man to work on the farm for the last 23 " years, but this year I cannot afford to keep a " man all round, as the time is so bad on the " farmers now, and has been for the last three " or four years, they cannot afford to have any " new implements, and many of them could not " pay for what they had years ago, and there is " not the least sign of a better time to come " soon.—P.S. I ought to have stated before now " about the workshop. I builded it on a very " poor and rough ground on Gellifawnen, and I " had to pay 10*s.* a year as ground rent for the " few perches it stands on; that makes my rent " now so high as 22*l.* 5*s.* And if Sir Arthur " Stepney only knew exactly how matters stand " between him and me, I could not believe for a " moment that he could be the man to suffer it " and covet my money.

" Now, sir, I must conclude, with the strongest " hope that your humanity leads you to give due " consideration to this affair, and that I shall " hear from you soon.

" I remain, dear Sir,
" Your humble servant,
" Moses Williams.

" To W. J. Wilson, Esq.,
" Stepney Estate Office,
" Llanelly."

Professor Rhŷs.

38,338. When was the letter written?—Last July.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,339. In which parish is your farm?—Llandebie.

38,340. Is that completely a Welsh parish?—It is exceptional to find an Englishman there.

38,341. Most of the people there speak the Welsh language habitually, do they?—The Welsh language is the language that is spoken most there by the labourers and the farmers with the exception of an occasional squire who talks English.

38,342. When you say that the farm buildings are in a bad state, what do you mean by that?—That they have been in a very bad state. There are other places which have been worse than my place, because I did my own place myself at the request of the agent, and the agent said that if I would only do it myself he would come yonder to value it, and he would give me money if I did the work. See 41,640–41,660.

38,343. Did he supply the timber or did you supply the timber?—The agent supplied the timber for the roof only, but that was not included in the valuation.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

38,344. Have you received any money in respect of the value of the materials that you used?—Nothing but a promise so far.

38,345. Am I to understand that you have expended any considerable sum upon the farm buildings?—On several occasions I have done this.

38,346. When did you send in your last claim for any money?—The agent who ordered me or asked me to do it went away, and then a new agent came.

38,347. Does the new agent repudiate any bargain that was made between you and the former agent?—Yes. He is constantly promising to come yonder, but he has not come yet to see it, although it is three or four years ago.

38,348. I see that you were claiming as far back as the year 1885?—That man the agent came yonder to value it, and I think he valued it at 113*l.*, the out-houses which I had, but he made no valuation at all with regard to the dwelling-house.

38,349. Are the out-houses large enough now for the purposes of your farm?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,350. You have another trade besides farming, have you not?—Yes.

38,351. What is that trade?—Smith and implement maker.

38,352. Do you get any assistance from that trade to pay the rent for the farm?—I would never pay the rent were it not that I gain from the occupation I follow.

38,353. You say that the agent has been changed several times?—Yes.

38,354. And they have not all been able to speak Welsh?—There have been seven agents on that estate within my recollection, and only two were able to speak or understand the Welsh language, and that is a great loss to the farmers in our district.

38,355. In what way is it a loss to the farmers?—Because they are not able to show to the agent what they want; they are unable to approach them except through another man.

38,356. How long has the present agent been appointed?—It may be four or five years; it may be a little more perhaps.

38,357. Has he not been to see the farm during that time?—He has never been yonder to my knowledge.

38,358. You quote the wages of a labourer at 3*s.* 6*d.* a day and his food?—Yes, what I paid them last year, last March and April, 12 months ago, but I do not keep one now.

38,359. What is the average wage of a labourer, except at harvest time; of course he gets something extra at harvest time. What is the general wage of a labourer?—You cannot get men near these works unless they get almost as much as they would earn at the works themselves.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,360. It seems to me very high. Do you complain that the labourers get too much?—We could not get them without that. We say that they ask too much, but we could not get them without.

38,361. Do you complain of the labourers having too much?—I do not pay more than any others in the same district, and so how much better am I if I do complain?

38,362. Are there many of these straw-thatched houses in your district?—Yes, many.

38,363. Do not the farmers find it a great burthen to thatch these houses?—Yes, it is a great burthen on them.

38,364. Are there many cattle sheds erected at the farm-houses in the district?—I failed to sell some cattle two years ago. I had to keep them. I bought some cast pillars to put up sheds, and then I went to the agent and asked him if he would be good enough to give us some timber in order to roof it. The answer that I received was—that he would come yonder to see what I was going to do but he never came, and I did not put the shed up, but so I was obliged to keep the cattle out in the open air, because they had served me so badly with regard to the other building.

38,365. So that really we are to understand that the landlords do not meet the necessities of the tenants for increased accommodation owing to the altered circumstances of farming?—No. It is done in an occasional place, but it is the exception when it is done.

Chairman.

38,366. I have a few questions to ask you, which are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "How many acres is your farm"?—Gellifawnen is about 41 acres, and I have some other land; the total is about 55 acres and some roods; and I had a piece of land from Lord Cawdor.

38,367. "How much do you pay for house and land?"—I pay now 22*l.* 5*s.* for Gellifawnen, without the other. It was 15*l.*

38,368. "If Sir Arthur Stepney had repaired "the house at an expense of 150*l.*, would you "have been ready to pay 7*l.* 10*s.* more rent?" —I refused to take the land unless they gave me the building free, because the old building was in too bad a state at that time.

38,369. That means "no" does it?—No, because I in a way paid that 7*l.* 10*s.* for a building.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Lewis Bishop called and examined.

Chairman.

See previous examination, 5002–5064.

38,370. You are a land agent, an owner, a tenant, a solicitor, a magistrate's clerk, county court registrar, and tithe collector?—Yes, and insurance agent.

38,371. What district are you prepared to give evidence for?—Central Carmarthenshire.

38,372. How much land does your evidence refer to?—About 7,000 acres as agent, about 200 as owner, and about 30 as occupier.

38,373. Are there any Manor Courts that you are connected with, or Leet Courts?—Yes, Leet Courts, not in connexion with the estate.

38,374. There is not much glebe land, is there?—Very little.

38,375. Are there any copyholds; have you anything to say about recent inclosures?—There have been none of recent years, not really within my memory.

38,376. You know on your own estates that politics and religion makes no difference?—None at all, although I have often been accused of favouring liberals.

38,377. Are the agents in your neighbourhood pretty well up to the work?—Yes.

38,378. Do they understand the duties of a land agent?—I think so.

38,379. What is the usual date of entry?—The 29th September.

38,380. The tenants are yearly tenants?—All annual tenants, from year to year.

38,381. There is no demand for leases?—No, none—I will not say none—there is only one on the estate anyhow.

38,382. Only one on Lord Dynevor's estate?—Only one on Lord Dynevor's estate.

38,383. Do you pay compensation liberally?—Yes, rather in the tenant's favour.

38,384. Could you produce a copy of your agreements?—We have none.

38,385. They are all verbal?—They are all verbal.

38,386. How many tenants may there be on this estate?—Farm tenants, do you mean.

38,387. Yes?—Something over 100.

38,388. Do you find the smaller tenants pay a higher rent than the big farmers?—Yes, they do slightly.

38,389. What is the usual rent of upland and lowland farms?—They vary from about 10*s.* to 15*s.* upland, and 25*s.* to 40*s.* lowland.

38,390. Do you consider that it is fair that the tenants should do the haulage?—I do, because they thereby get rid of the thatching. I do not think it is out of the way. They do not thatch now so much as they used to.

38,391. You do not let to the highest bidder at all?—Oh, no, that is a very wrong principle, I think.

38,392. Have rents been raised in the last 50 years on Lord Dynevor's estate. Could you give us any instances?—In 1874 the whole estate was re-valued by a professional valuer, and all the farms were taken by the then sitting tenants at a very considerable reduction below what that valuer valued them at.

38,393. Was it a rise on the original rent?—Oh, yes.

38,394. And since then have any rents been raised?—Yes, occasionally some few, a very small sum. I think I made out the total rise as 21*l.* on the whole of the estate since then.

38,395. What have been the permanent reductions?—The permanent reductions during the same period have been 99*l.*

38,396. Can you give us an account of any temporary abatements?—Yes; in 1885, 10 per cent.; in 1886, 10 per cent.; in 1887, 10 per cent.; in 1892 and 1893 varying from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. In addition to that, his lordship has given many sums to tenants who have been unfortunate in losing cattle.

38,397. On accommodation lands, has there been any abatement there?—Half what was allowed to the farms.

38,398. Has there been much fluctuation in prices in the last 50 years?—Oh, yes, considerable.

38,399. Has it gone up or down?—Up in all cases except wheat and barley.

38,400. Everything has gone up?—Everything has gone up but wheat and barley. I have noted the following articles.

	Fifty Years ago.	Now.
			Per cent.
Beef - -	6*d.* per lb.	8*d.* to 9*d.*	33 rise.
Mutton -	4*d.* to 5½*d.* per lb.	8*d.* to 9*d.*	100 „
Veal - -	3½*d.* to 4*d.* „	6*d.* to 7*d.*	60 „
Butter -	9*d.* to 10*d.* „	1*s.* to 1*s.* 3*d.*	33 „
Fowls -	9*d.* to 1*s.* each.	1*s.* 9*d.* to 2*s.* 3*d.*	Over 100 „
Ducks -	1*s.* to 1*s.* 3*d.* each.	2*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* 9*d.*	„ 150 „
Wheat -	8*s.* 3*d.* per bushel.	3*s.* 6*d.*	„ 100 fall.
Barley -	6*s.* per bushel.	3*s.* 6*d.*	60 „
Oats - -	2*s.* „	2*s.* 9*d.*	rise.

38,401. When do you get your rents after they fall due?—The Lady Day rents are received after the August fair; the September rents after the February fair.

38,402. I suppose you think the preferential claim for rent is an advantage?—I do, to the tenant, and consequently of course to the landlord.

38,403. What charges on the land does Lord Dynevor pay. He pays tithes I suppose?—Yes, he pays the tithes indirectly no doubt.

38,404. Does the tenant pay the land tax?—Yes.

38,405. And the chief rent?—Yes.

38,406. And the local rates?—Yes, except on accommodation land.

38,407. Who pays the Income Tax?—The landlord.

38,408. Of course the rates have gone up here as well as everywhere else?—Oh, yes.

Chairman—continued.

38,409. And the tenants pay the increase?—The tenants pay the increase: there is no alteration.

38,410. What is the average size of farms?—From 30 to 120 acres.

38,411. There has not been much consolidation, has there?—I think only in two or three instances.

38,412. Which do you think does better, a large or a small farmer?—In what way?

38,413. As regards their condition in bad times?—I think the small tenants have the advantage in bad times.

38,414. The small tenants have the advantage?—Yes, in bad times.

38,415. You think that?—Oh, I do.

38,416. Some agents have told us that they think the large tenants have the advantage?—Well, we may all differ.

38,417. Have you any scarcity of labourers?—Yes, weekly labourers.

38,418. There is no land going out of cultivation, you say?—No.

38,419. I suppose there is not as much arable land as there used to be in old days?—No, not nearly.

38,420. Root crops have increased?—Yes.

38,421. You complain of the low prices of corn, I suppose, and the high price of labour?—To a great extent.

38,422. With regard to improvements, what does the landlord, Lord Dynevor, do in the way of improvements?—Of late years his lordship has had so much to do in replacing thatch that his attention has been chiefly drawn to the matter of repairing the buildings, but there is at times a little draining done; not as much as his lordship would like to do.

38,423. Do you consider that the estate is in a fairly good condition?—Under the circumstances I do.

38,424. It might be better?—I should like, if we could afford it, to do a little more draining, that is all.

38,425. But as regards the farm buildings; are they in a pretty good state of repair?—I consider they are very fair. I go round once a year and examine them.

38,426. What have you to say as to hay sheds?—As to hay sheds, the same practice that I found I adopt now—the tenants provide their own hay sheds.

38,427. Do you make them do all the hauling?—Oh, yes, they do all the hauling.

38,428. As to compensation, is there any custom on Lord Dynevor's estate?—There is no custom; it is the goodwill of the landlord, and I know scarcely any case but where compensation has been paid when claimed in due time.

38,429. How does the Agricultural Holdings Act work?—It is a farce here.

38,430. You do not know of any cases where outgoing tenants have failed to obtain what you think is proper compensation?—I do not know of them. I have heard of instances.

38,431. Is there any custom as to the sheep farms?—We have very little to do with sheep farms on his lordship's estate.

Chairman—continued.

38,432. Does Lord Dynevor preserve much game in this part?—He has two preserves, one round the house and the other some four or five miles away.

38,433. Is there much damage done by the game?—Occasionally. Last year was an exceptionally bad year, because rabbits bred very much, very quickly. Nobody could possibly have foreseen it.

38,434. Do you try and meet tenants in every way?—Oh, certainly; his lordship thinks it best to do so.

38,435. And it makes no friction between his lordship and the tenants?—None whatever.

38,436. Does the Crown let the sporting rights over the Crown lands in this neighbourhood?—In some instances.

38,437. There is very little attention paid to agricultural education, you say?—There has been none excepting what you have heard today, that they have had lectures here, which were, to my mind, very improperly advertised and very poorly attended.

38,438. There is no co-operation or combination of any sort or kind which you know of?—None.

38,439. Have you many small freeholders in the neighbourhood?—There is a very fair sprinkling of them.

38,440. Are they doing pretty well, too?—I think so.

38,441. You have nothing to say on that point?—No, they are doing fairly well, I think.

38,442. You consider the farmers an industrious and hardworking lot of people?—As a rule, most decidedly.

38,443. Their wives work very hard, do they?—Yes.

38,444. And their children work very hard too?—Yes, those that are at home.

38,445. Do you consider that rents could be maintained if the farmers paid wages to their children?—I do. I think very often farms would be better if they had more labourers on them.

38,446. Most of the labourers, or a great proportion of the labourers, we are told are lodged on the farms?—Oh, yes, most of them; very few of them lodge out.

38,447. The wages are about 13*s.* to 15*s.* a week?—About that. I am wrong there; I would go as far as 18*s.*

38,448. Have you known them as low as 9*s.*; have you ever heard of them being as low as 9*s.*?—I remember them being 9*s.* perfectly well.

38,449. We have heard that the accommodation for the farm servants is very bad in the farm-houses; is that your experience?—I think some years ago it was so, but in every instance in which my attention has been called to it it has always been remedied.

38,450. Then you think there is nothing to complain of on Lord Dynevor's estate as far as that goes?—Not that I am aware of, at any rate.

Chairman—continued.

38,451. Are the cottages pretty good on the estate?—We have 40 or 50 cottages, I think, on the estate, and there are only two occupied by persons who work on the farms.

38,452. Have you any small holdings or allotments in the neighbourhood?—Small holdings.

38,453. But no allotments for labourers?—Well, many of the small farmers do a certain amount of labour.

38,454. But I mean a tenth of an acre, or quarter of an acre, set apart?—No, we have not many of those.

38,455. Do the farmers in this neighbourhood ever keep accounts?—Very few.

38,456. When do you think the bad seasons began; when did the depression really begin?—There was one before I had the honour of being an agent, but it began in the end of 1884 or the beginning of 1885.

38,457. You do not throw it back as far as 1879?—Well, I was not then his lordship's agent. My father was then agent, and there was a time—I do not quite recollect the year.

38,458. But you have put it at about 1884?—That is the first I had to deal with.

38,459. I suppose prices of fat cattle have been low?—Yes; it is the lean cattle that we have suffered most from.

38,460. Are you a fair trader, or a protectionist, or anything?—Well, I think I am a fair trader.

38,461. You recommend fair trade?—Yes, and that foreign merchandise should be marked, too.

38,462. And you hope for better seasons?—Yes, I certainly do.

38,463. The general relations between Lord Dynevor and his tenants are, I take it from you, very good?—I consider them so. He goes round continually to see them, and I think they are always very pleased to see him.

38,464. Could you tell us what money has been spent in repairs and improvements on the estate during your management?—I have made it out at about 1,100*l.* a year.

38,465. May we have the income of the estate. Is there any objection to putting that in?—I do not know that I need object to do so; I think you could get it elsewhere if I did not give it you. It is about 6,000*l.* That is from land only in this county.

38,466. From this estate alone 6,000*l.* a year comes in, and you calculate that there is 1,100*l.* a year spent on repairs?—No, not on that. Of the total amount spent the proportion on the land would be about 855*l.*

38,467. 855*l.* on the land?—855*l.* spent on the land which brings in about 6,000*l.* Then his lordship also pays out of that 600*l.* a year for drainage, and the average nett rent per acre on the estate is 13*s.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,468. Do you mean the average rental?—The average net, after paying for repairs and so forth, leaves his lordship 13*s.* an acre without any deduction for bad times.

Chairman.

38,469. Have some of the farms been owned by some families for generations?—Yes, further than we can ascertain.

38,470. They have been on the land longer than you can ascertain?—Longer than living memory. I have a list of them here.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,471. You mentioned lectures given in your district. I wish to ask you under whose auspices were they given?—Professor Parry, from Aberystwith.

38,472. Why were they inadequately advertised?—I am sure I cannot tell you.

38,473. Was it the business of the people of the neighbourhood to do that?—There were no advertisements sufficiently placarded about the country. There were some few put in the town of Llandilo, but there were none circulated round the neighbourhood.

38,474. Were the lectures given under the auspices of the county council?—Yes.

38,475. Would not it be the business of some official of the county council to see to that work of advertising?—Well, I do not know whose duty it was to do it; I only know the fact that it was not done.

38,476. And in consequence of their being badly advertised the lectures were not well attended?—Very badly attended.

38,477. Otherwise do you know whether the lectures were suited to the people and so on?—I think they were very suitable, and I should like to see more of them. I think also leaflets sent round, particularly on the necessities for the management of dairies generally, would be very useful; we want rules.

38,478. In what language would these lectures be given to be understood by the people whom they should concern; they would have to be given in Welsh, I suppose?—I was here myself and heard them, but I really forget which they were in.

38,479. You mentioned just now that there were about 40 cottages, and only one or two of them occupied by men who work on the land?—Quite so.

38,480. By whom would the others be occupied?—By colliers, tailors, carpenters spinsters—workwomen.

38,481. Have they any gardens belonging to them?—All of them have gardens.

38,482. About what size?—Some 12 to 20 or 24 perches.

38,483. Is there much demand?—Oh, yes, too much in many instances.

38,484. How do they keep their gardens as a rule?—All excepting the tin workers keep their gardens very well; the tin workers do not care about gardens.

Mr. Grove.

38,485. Were the cottages originally built for farm labourers?—I was not alive at that time, but I found them scattered about on the different farms, and in many instances they were let with the farms. Of late years his lordship has been asked to take them up, and that has been done in all instances where he has been asked.

38,486. Do you think they have got into other tenancies in consequence of the agricultural depression?—No, I think the reason very probably is the introduction of machinery in this country, less labour being required, for one thing, and, secondly, that the high wages at the works attract our labourers away.

38,487. Do you think the land itself would carry more labour if it could be obtained?—In many instances farms would be very much improved if there was more work upon them.

38,488. You think, then, that the tenant cannot afford to pay for the labour?—I think they could if they would only be alive to the fact that farms pay better when well worked.

38,489. Do you get many claims for damage by game?—No, not many; I had one last year.

38,490. Did you settle it satisfactorily?—I think quite satisfactorily; in fact his lordship allowed me to give what the tenant asked instead of what I valued it at.

38,491. That ought to satisfy any tenant, I should think. When you make abatements for rent do you give notice of them?—Yes.

38,492. What length of notice?—About the same notice that the rent is to be paid. In spite of the notice, the tenants are very fond of bringing the money in full and taking home the allowance.

38,493. Is that usual now at the present time?—They do so now, they did it at the last audit.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,494. Do you think that the difference is concealed from the wife by the tenant?—I do not know. I am afraid the receipt would show it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,495. When you say that everything has gone up during the last 50 years except wheat and barley, you make that statement in order to justify the rises in rents?—No, I do not at all. I was asked the question, and I answered it.

38,496. But of course you will admit that the cost of production is increased as well?—I do not know, when you compare it with the introduction of machinery.

38,497. But the introduction of machinery, of course, is a very big item, and it requires a long time to work out that expense?—Yes, but it does not eat. It does not require keeping like labourers.

38,498. That is true; but on small farms, where machinery is not much used, the cost of production, of course, would increase. That only applies to large farms?—On small farms they usually do it themselves or their families; they do not want to hire there very much.

38,499. You say there are only three instances of consolidation on Lord Dynevor's estate. Why were those farms consolidated?—To please the tenants of the adjoining farms, when the other ones became vacant, in order to give employment for the sons of the one; when one farm became vacant the adjoining farmer asked for it, so as to keep his sons at home and employed.

38,500. Then the son would live in the other house?—Oh, no, he would let the other house out as a cottage.

38,501. But you had to erect buildings on the other farm in order to meet the new tenant?—Oh, no, they keep the young cattle then on the other holding.

38,502. But that is rather inconvenient, is it not?—We cannot help that; that is their look-out when they ask for consolidation. We cannot move the buildings because they want to have two farms.

38,503. Do you think it is a desirable thing to do?—I never found any complaint. In the three instances where there has been consolidation they seem very happy over it.

38,504. The son may be a married man?—In some instances. In one instance I am sure he is, and in one instance the son is married and lives at the other house.

38,505. Then, practically, it is not a consolidation. If the son and his wife live at the other house, it would not be consolidation?—But he has nothing to do with the farm. He has only got to live in a cottage; the son is a collier, I believe, and the whole of the land is in his father's hands.

38,506. Is it very frequently the case that the son of the tenant farmer is in the position of a collier?—Oh, dear me, it is very often the case.

38,507. It pays them better to work in the coal pits than to be farming, does it?—No. This particular tenant I am talking of has a very large family. He has, I think, three sons and a daughter on the adjoining farms. We could not find any farms for the rest, so they have to go out and look for their bread and cheese elsewhere.

38,508. You say that the tenants have erected hay sheds?—Yes, on the Dynevor Castle estates, but I believe on other estates timber is given them very often.

38,509. You will admit that that is a first class improvement, and should be done by the landlord?—Well, as I said before, his lordship has had plenty to do in doing the main buildings, and I have no doubt when the time comes he will help his tenants in that way; but he cannot do everything at once.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,510. I think you said that you have neither leases nor agreements on this estate?—Neither.

38,511. Do you agree with that system?—Well, I do. Tenants do not like, as a rule, putting their hands to paper.

38,512. But do not they sometimes suffer a loss owing to it?—We have never had one; we have never had any bother with them.

38,513. I think you say you have known cases of hardship on your estate?—No, I cannot call to mind one—not on the Dynevor Castle estate, anyhow.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

38,514. Do you know a farm by the name of Penlan, in the parish of Cidweli?—It was part of the estate—yes, I do know it.

38,515. Do you know the tenant there?—Yes.

38,516. A man by the name of Anton?—Yes, Anthony.

38,517. Did he do much to improve that farm while you were agent?—No, I saw no difference the time I was agent. There was a good deal spent on repairs there by his lordship.

38,518. Was not there some good part of the farm covered with furze?—Not in my time. I know he ploughed up all the fields that he had to give up the last year he had it.

38,519. He had been a tenant for many years, had he not?—Yes, and had a great deal done for him, too.

38,520. And his father was a tenant before him?—Then he went and ploughed up every acre that he had to give up.

38,521. Why did you give him notice to quit?—The farm was sold, and these lands were kept out. I thought that the farm would be too big for him to buy as one, so I cut out a very nice ring fence for him, and we let him have the farm at a very fair price; in fact it was sold under our valuation. Then we kept the outlying lands to let out as accommodation land. Directly he saw that he ploughed up every acre of what we were going to take away.

38,522. Then you consider this man made no improvements on the farm?—None during my time. I did not see a bit of difference in the farm.

38,523. How long have you been agent?—I have been agent since 1880, but I have been connected with the estate since 1860.

38,524. Were you never told that this man had laid out a good deal of money on his farm before he had notice to quit?—I do not think so. If so, I think I should have had a claim like I had from all the other tenants, when we sold. We compensated every tenant on the estate when that sale took place for any improvements that they had done.

38,525. Did he not tell you that he had spent 760*l.* in cleaning the place?—No, I never heard of such a thing, and I should like to know what for.

38,526. And other improvements to the amount of 1,400*l.*?—Well, I do not know where it could have gone to.

38,527. It was never mentioned to you, was it?—I never heard of it.

38,528. Did he do any haulage to the buildings?—During my time there was some little haulage, but not much. He had only, I think, some roofing to do.

38,529. Had not the farm-house been built before your time?—Yes.

38,530. The tenant did the hauling, did he not?—Very likely, I cannot say as to that.

38,531. But do not you think it would be fair for this man to be recompensed before the farm was sold?—He would have been, like the others. His lordship has compensated every man that has made a claim in respect of the portions that were sold. I can produce the books, and show that every one of them was compensated.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

38,532. But I am given to understand that he had to pay more for the farm, although he had to pay over twice?—He got his farm at a very fair price indeed.

38,533. Did he not wish to purchase the other part of the farm which you had reserved?—Not that I am aware of.

38,534. Did he not make you an offer for it?—I do not think so.

38,535. Who was it that purchased the other farms, do you remember?—No, I do not remember now. There is some part of it unsold now.

38,536. You do not remember the reply you gave him when he asked you to let him have it?—No, indeed I do not. I do not remember his asking me.

38,537. You say the estate was valued. Was it by a professional valuer?—Yes.

38,538. Who was the gentleman?—It was Mr. Keary, of Bridgenorth. He was a very noted man in those days.

38,539. Is not the land tax considered to be a landlord's tax?—The land tax is only about 1*d.* or 2*d.* in the £.

38,540. But it is generally considered to be a landlord's tax, is it not, legally?—If so, it would be an awful nuisance to have anything to do with such a trifle as that. It is a very small matter. It is a landlord's tax no doubt.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,541. In what parishes does this Dynevor estate chiefly lie?—Llandilo fawr, Llandyfeisant, Llanarthney, Bettws, and Cidweli.

38,542. Are those Welsh parishes?—All.

38,543. The people habitually speak the Welsh language there?—Yes.

38,544. Are all the tenants of Lord Dynevor Welshmen; Welsh-speaking men?—I think every one.

38,545. Are they mostly Nonconformists?—Yes, mostly.

38,546. About how many Churchmen are there now tenants?—I never counted them. I should say half-a-dozen or so; there may be more.

38,547. Are there more than formerly?—No.

38,548. Not more than when you became agent in 1880?—No; at least, not that I am aware of.

38,549. I am of course asking you of what you are aware?—No, I say not, unless some tenants have changed, of which I am not aware.

38,550. You say that there is not a single agreement?—I said one lease.

38,551. The farms are let simply upon a tenancy from year to year?—Quite so.

38,552. Is there any custom of the country regulating such a tenancy as between landlord and tenant?—No, unfortunately not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

38,553. Then why does the tenant pay the land tax?—It is such a small thing I suppose he does not care to bother about it. I do not know. Very likely they think it is their own tax. I cannot say.

38,554. Do you mean to say if you let a farm to a tenant from year to year, and nothing is said about the land tax at all, that the land tax would fall upon the tenant?—If anyone came and asked me or his lordship, I am sure he would get it.

38,555. Have you ever told the tenant who has paid the land tax that the legal liability would fall upon the landlord?—If anyone came and asked me or his lordship I am sure he would get it.

38,556. Have you ever told the tenant who has paid the land tax that the legal liability would be upon the landlord?—No.

38,557. Ever since you have been agent you have allowed these people to pay the land tax without telling them?—Yes.

38,558. How about the tithe rentcharge before the recent Tithe Act?—What about that?

38,559. Before the recent Tithe Act who paid the tithe rentcharge?—The tenant.

38,560. Is there any custom of the country that obliged him to pay the tithe rentcharge?—No, I think that was an understanding.

38,561. You told me there was no understanding beyond the fact that the tenant was becoming tenant from year to year?—Well, I do not think I was asked that. It was a yearly tenancy. No one has asked me yet whether there were any conditions attached to that verbal tenancy.

38,562. I asked you whether or not the farms were let upon a tenancy from year to year without a written agreement?—Yes, I say without a written agreement.

38,563. Then I am to understand that there are special verbal terms arranged?—Yes.

38,564. What are the verbal terms that you super-impose?—They are different upon different parts of the estate. On some parts his lordship reserves the right to take any portions for building purposes, and on other parts the game is reserved; in others it is not.

38,565. Do you mean he reserves these rights verbally?—Yes, certainly.

38,566. Do you think it is better for him not to have a written agreement?—Well, it has never worked badly.

38,567. That is a somewhat qualified answer?—Well, I cannot give you any other.

38,568. Let me ask you why do you think that these varying verbal arrangements as to which men's responsibilities may vary are better than written agreements?—For this reason, that we have never found any difficulty with the old condition of things which I found when I came in, and which my father found when he came in, and we did not see why we should alter them.

38,569. Are those the ordinary special terms made upon these verbal agreements?—I say in some places the game is reserved; in other places not.

38,570. Is there any special arrangement made about improvements?—Excepting for the haulage the tenants are expected to do the haulage.

38,571. Do you arrange that with them?—I do not know that it is arranged, but they always do it. It is an understood thing on the estate. You may say it is a custom of the estate; not a custom of the country.

38,572. I gather from what you say that the condition of farmers at the present time is, to use the term which has been already used, deplorable?—I have not said it.

38,573. I say I gather it?—I say they are in a very much worse condition from a monetary point of view than they were.

38,574. So badly off that they cannot pay their rent?—Well, we have had to give time to some.

38,575. What is the reason that abatements have been given on the estate?—To try and show them that the landlord sympathises with them, and meets them half way.

38,576. It is, I suppose, because it would not be fair to ask them for the full rent, having regard to the great fall in prices?—I do not know that, because many of them could pay in full if they liked.

38,577. Then the abatement is made in many instances, not because the tenants could not pay the rent if their legal liability was insisted upon, but it is done out of a purely friendly feeling?—Quite so, and in the hope of enabling some of them to stave off what is undoubtedly a very difficult crisis.

38,578. Then, I take it, your view is that the rent which a landlord ought morally to demand, is a fair rent?—Oh, yes, his lordship is most anxious to have a fair rent, and nothing more. I do not think 13*s.* an acre is very exorbitant.

38,579. You give an abatement on that, too?—Yes, and I say an abatement out of that leaves no very handsome profit on the way in which you buy land here now.

38,580. Then supposing there should be some difference between a landlord and a tenant as to what is a fair rent, who is the best judge of what a fair rent is, the landlord, or some third party?—That is a matter of opinion, but whenever there has been any complaint, his lordship has always desired the farm to be re-valued. Throughout the whole time I have been agent there has been only one instance where a tenant has not been satisfied, to my knowledge, and the tenant and the under-agent and myself have generally valued the farm together, discussed matters, and met afterwards in a friendly way, and we have failed but once. On one occasion we did take an outside farmer, and we arranged amiably.

38,581. You appointed?—Yes, but he was the other way in politics to myself, and a good non-conformist. I thought we should be a good mixture.

38,582. You thought as you had not adjusted this matter with the tenant, it would be just as well to get a valuer in whom the tenant had confidence?—Yes, for this reason, I must say at that time the under-agent was not able to go with me, and I had to get someone else.

38,583. That arrangement worked well in that instance?—Like it did in all others excepting one.

38,584. You only got an independent valuer in whom the tenant had confidence in one instance, and it worked well?—Between the independent valuer and myself there was very little difference.

38,585. If that worked so well, why should it not work well generally in regard to disputes between landlord and tenant?—Why go to the expense if you can do it yourself? A valuer must be paid.

38,586. Here the tenant was not satisfied with your aid alone?—Only in one instance, and I am quite satisfied that you should come and see the farm with me now, and you will agree with me that I am not very far out of the way.

38,587. I understand you could not arrange with the tenant what the rent should be?—There is only one tenant I say I know of is not satisfied with our valuation.

Lord Kenyon.

38,588. Was that the occasion on which you took this independent valuer?—Oh, no.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,589. When you did have the independent valuer it worked well?—I do not think there is any reason to go into that. As some people present may think I want to keep something back, I will tell you why. There was a very large arrear on the farm, and therefore we do not know yet whether it will work or not. In fact they have paid half what we valued it at since that.

38,590. If you admit the principle of a valuation by somebody or other when there is a dispute between the landlord and the tenant, why should it not become the ordinary law of the land. You say the landlord only wants a fair rent, and if the tenant and he do not quite agree, why should there not be an independent tribunal to settle that?—Then I do not see any ground why it should not be the same between me and my coachman.

38,591. Do you compare the relations between yourself and your coachman to the relations between a landlord and tenant?—I should not like to have a third party to come in if I could settle it myself. I mean to say I think it is very much better for the landlord and themselves to agree in preference to any third party coming in.

38,592. So we are all agreed; but supposing they cannot agree?—They will soon come to their senses if they cannot get a tenant.

38,593. Who would soon come to their senses, the landlords?—Yes.

38,594. And the tenant?—Very likely, because he could not continue.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

38,595. The tenant cannot get rid of his landlord and remain on his holding?—He can go; he may leave.

38,596. According to your own evidence, the families of these tenants have been there very long?—We have no difficulty, I say with those. We have never had any difficulty in that way I suppose you are talking now generally.

38,597. Yes. Coming to another topic, in which parishes are the Crown lands of which you spoke?—We have the Black Mountain between this and Brynamman and some between this and Cardiganshire.

38,598. Are they in possession of the Woods and Forests?—They are in possession, so far as the herbage goes, of those who are entitled to graze.

38,599. The tenants do not simply pay quit-rents?—I think there are chief rents payable all over the country, if you mean that, but there is no rent payable in respect of the mountain.

38,600. Have there been any inclosures of common land in this neighbourhood?—I said none in my memory.

38,601. We have heard of some copyhold here. In your experience as a solicitor, is copyhold tenure inconvenient?—Yes, I do not like copyhold myself; it is a cumbersome procedure.

38,602. How does the recent Enfranchisement Act work? Have you had any experience under it?—No, none at all.

Lord Kenyon.

38,603. I take it, Mr. Bishop, from your answers to Mr. Brynmor Jones, that you are not in favour of a Land Court?—Well, I do not know really what you mean by a Land Court. What is it to do?

38,604. This third party who is to step in, whoever it is?—No, I think it would be disastrous to tenant and to landlord.

38,605. And why?—Well, it would undermine the good feeling that exists between them now.

38,606. The mere existence of such a tribunal, whether they need apply to it or not?—Yes, speaking generally I do not think it would answer.

38,607. Do you think a landlord would be anxious to carry out his repairs in such a way if there was a Land Court?—For my own part, if a tenant came to me, and there was a Land Court, I should say "Go to the Land Court and "see what they will give you, and then I shall "know what I have to do."

Chairman.

38,608. These are some questions handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Does religion affect the "letting of land in any way?"—Not at all.

38,609. "Have you known tenants changing "their religion on getting farms?"—I believe there is one instance on the estate.

38,610. Do you understand the question, "Have you known tenants changing their

Chairman—continued.

"religion on getting farms?"—Change their place of worship, that is what I took it to mean.

38,611. Then there is another question: "Are "tenants allowed to take advantage of the "Ground Game Act themselves?"—In all cases, except in, I should say, one.

38,612. "Or does the landlord find men to keep down vermin?"—Yes, always whenever we have any complaints.

38,613. "Does not the tenant in the first "instance pay the Income Tax, getting it "deducted from his rent some time after?"—No; it used to be so years ago.

38,614. That is not the case now?—No, not for many years now.

38,615. "Would you grant leases if applied for?"—I do not think I would, because I do not think it would be advantageous as a rule from my experience; I would rather have a good custom or good Act, one of the two.

38,616. Then the answer to that is no?—Certainly.

38,617. "Did you, in the year 1892, refuse "to let, lease, or sell to Mr. D. Williams, jun., "the secretary of the Llandilo Liberal Asso-"ciation (of which Mr. Gwynne Hughes is "president) a portion of Lord Dynevor's "estate?"—I cannot make out what that refers to.

38,618. "Did you refuse to let, lease, or sell "to Mr. D. Williams, jun., in the year 1892, a "portion of land on Lord Dynevor's estate?"—Who is D. Williams, jun.? I am told by a gentleman here it refers to a cabinet maker's son. That is a fact.

38,619. You refused to let, lease, or sell to him a portion of Lord Dynevor's estate?—Yes.

38,620. "Did you assign as a reason that you "were afraid of the Liberals, and asked why he "did not go to Mr. Gwynne Hughes?"—Oh, yes, I chaffed him in that way, but that was not the reason; the reason was this, that there should be no misunderstanding about it. That portion which was referred to is in sight of Dynevor Park Gates when they come out of the park, and his lordship would not even let me put a shed on it when I held that land myself.

38,621. "Do you know of cases on Lord "Dynevor's estate where tenants have built "houses without leases or agreements?'—Not of late years. I believe there are instances; indeed, there are now instances where we recognise their right to hold for periods where there are no leases.

38,622. "For instance, at Llandebie?"—No, his lordship has no property in Llandebie village.

38,623. "Has Lord Dynevor disposed of any "of his property of late years?"—Yes.

38,624. "And, if so, was any compensation "paid to the tenants for improvements?"—Always; except in the case Mr. Griffiths referred to of Anthony, which I never heard any claim in respect of.

38,625. "Have the rents of Lord Dynevor's "Llanarthney estate been raised of late years?"

Chairman—continued.

—Since 1874 I think I told you there was a rise of 21*l.* on the whole estate, and a reduction of 99*l.*

38,626. "For example, Rhydymerdy, Clos-yryn?"—I can supply you with all that information, but I cannot remember now off-hand.

38,627. That is all in your evidence, I think?—Yes.

38,628. "Do you know that the tenant of "Penybank Farm was a member of Penybank "Independent Chapel and his wife of Capel "Isaac Independent Chapel before they became "tenants of Penybank, and that they now go to "church?"—I have been told so.

38,629. Do you know that they now go to church?—I have been told so.

38,630. "Do you know that Lord Dynevor's "farm of Bankyffynnon, the farm-house on "which was erected by the tenant, was sold by "public auction, no compensation being paid "to the tenant?"—What house was that?

38,631. Bankyffynon?—I should like to be careful about that. I do not think Bankyffynon has been sold.

38,632. It is still on the estate?—Yes. If it is Williams of Bankyffynon he still pays rent; it has not been sold.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,633. Do you know of any instances where the tenants have ploughed up some meadow land in the absence of penalising clauses. You have no lease and no agreements, and no penalising clauses?—Well, we have had no change of importance during the time I recollect the estate; in fact all the cases where there have been changes have been owing to the unfortunate condition of the tenants who have really drunk themselves out of their houses, and they have generally given them up, and were glad to go out without notice at all.

38,634. They have never been inclined to plough up meadow land?—I do not find fault in that way at all with them. I do not think there is any real grievance in that way.

Chairman.

38,635. There is another question by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Did you not leave rubbish "on the bit of ground refused to Mr. D. "Williams, opposite the park gates?"—No. I suppose he refers to a bit of manure thrown by the hedge side. I kept manure there twice I think since I had that, almost out of sight in the hedge.

38,636. In fact this is the piece of land that Lord Dynevor would not allow anything to be put on?—Quite so.

38,637. Did you leave rubbish on this plot of ground?—The only thing that has been on that at all was sufficient manure to manure that field with; nothing else.

38,638. Another question, "Did you refuse to let Lanfawr to a relation of the old tenant?"—No, if you call him a relation. There was a young fellow living at the farm of Lanfawr, who was not the son at all of the late tenant, and he applied to me about 12 months before the farm became vacant for a promise of it, and I told him to find a decent wife, and then we would talk about it. The farm became vacant suddenly; he was not married, and the consequence was we could not let the farm to him

38,639. It was let to a stranger?—Oh, no, to another tenant. I think, my Lord, I ought to be allowed to state, with reference to one tenant

Chairman—continued.

I have been asked about, in regard to the change of religion or place of worship; I had nothing to do with that letting. It was a farm adjoining the Castle, and I thought it better that his Lordship should, in this particular instance, select his own tenant, and he did so without my knowledge. It turns out it was under an old promise; and the wife of the tenant who has gone to this farm of Penybank was a daughter of an old tenant of his Lordship.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Harris called and examined.

Chairman.

38,640. Where do you live?—Penybank Farm, near Llandilo.

38,641. Have you anything to say upon the evidence just given?—In connexion with the question asked of Mr. Bishop as to the tenant of Penybank changing his place of worship, I must state that I am the tenant of Penybank. I used before to go to an Independent Chapel. I am nearer to the church now than any of the dissenting places.

38,642. Therefore you go the church now?—Yes, and I would rather worship God in church than with the dissenting parties. I choose their way; I believe their way is the better way to worship God than the way of the dissenting parties. From a child I was brought up in the midst of Nonconformists, and, as you know, there is so much dust thrown in the eyes of people that I know that if many such as me would go to the church they would choose that way to worship God rather than the way of the dissenting parties.

38,643. There is a question put in by Mr. Bishop: "Did Lord Dynevor or his agent make "it necessary for you to go to church"?—No, my Lord, I am going from my own wish and my own decision.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,644. When did you make the discovery that you would rather worship God in the Church of England than in a dissenting chapel?—Since I have been in church.

38,645. Had you never been in a church before?—Yes, I had been.

38,646. How was it you did not discover it then?—Because the Independent Chapel was within the hit of a stone of my house.

38,647. Before you went to a chapel?—I had been to the chapel first of all. I was brought up in the midst of nonconformists, and a lot of dust has been thrown in the eyes of people by them.

38,648. You admit you had been to church before you went to this farm?—Yes, when I was a boy, I went sometimes.

38,649. Not after you had grown up?—No.

38,650. Not on any occasion at all?—When I had to come to understand between good and bad I should choose the church.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Nathaniel Williams called and examined.

Chairman.

38,651. Are you a farmer living at Talardd, Llandilo?—Yes.

38,652. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—My evidence refers mostly to the parish of Llandilo and the borders of adjoining parishes. The district comprises all sorts of land—good, poor, and indifferent.

Rents vary from 6*s.* per acre for farms to 2*l.* It is impossible to get information as to the advance on each farm, but the rateable value will show the extent of the increase. The rateable value of the parish of Llandilo, leaving out the town, was—and the tenants pay all the taxes. Tenants generally complain that rents are too high; though they work hard and live hard, they cannot pay their way. No labourer would think of living or working so hard as the hill farmers do. They rise early and work late, and yet it is as much as they can do to get any sort of living. The farmers and their wives and children work on the farm, and in many instances do all the work of the farm, the children getting no wages. I have heard many complain they could not pay wages, and others who employ servants say they spend the income they have from other sources.

Rents have advanced considerably since the beginning of the century, but it is very difficult to get at the figures and get proofs. So many changes have taken place that many of the present tenants do not know what rent was paid for their farms 30 years ago but by hearsay. Others will not give any information or show any papers. They are afraid of their landlords. It may suffice to give the rents of three adjoining farms. The three were leased about 1790. The term of lease was three lives. These leases ran out between 1860 and 1870.

On the three farms the landlords did not spend one penny. The tenants made all improvements and repairs, the landlords granting rough timber for repairs.

Abatements from 5 to 20 per cent. have been granted by many landlords for the last few years, but very few permanent reductions.

INSECURITY OF TENURE.—The tenancies are yearly, terminable by six or 12 months' notice. Very few improvements are made. The landlords generally will not improve, and the tenants are afraid because of the insecurity of tenure. I do not believe tenants would take leases just now—rents are too high. I do not believe landlords would grant leases if applied for. There are so many farms sold, and they sell better without leases.

AGREEMENTS.—On some estates there are no agreements. On others there are very stringent agreements, with penal clauses. As far as I can find, agreements are made solely to guard the landlords' interest and bind the tenant to do his duties; the landlord is free to do as he likes. Some agreements bind the tenants to give up at the expiration of the tenancy all improvements without compensation, and even gates put up by the tenant are claimed as the property of the landlord

COMPENSATION.—Farms have been greatly improved by tenants and then sold, no compensation being paid to the tenants, though the farms are sold at much higher prices owing to their improvements.

GAME.—The district generally is free from game, but in the neighbourhood of parks and one or two places where a gamekeeper is located. The gamekeeper selects a field in the middle of the farm, and fences it out to rear his pheasants. Sometimes compensation is given, not at a fair valuation, but at the agent's valuation; and if the damage be fairly valued, it is impossible to compensate a farmer for the loss of his crops. He depends on the crops to winter his stock. If it is destroyed by the landlord's stock, what is he to do? If he buys fodder he will very soon buy the money value of his stock, and will soon find that the compensation allowed will cover but a small part of his loss. On most estates the tenants are now allowed to kill the rabbits, but some tenants are afraid to do so.

DIFFERENCE IN RELIGION, LANGUAGE, AND POLITICS.

The majority of the tenants are Welshmen, nonconformists, and Liberals. The landlords, with few exceptions, are Englishmen, churchmen, and Tories. Agents generally know little if anything about farming, much less live on a farm and make it pay. They are either lawyers, or merchants, or relations of the landlord, or anything but farmers. It is the general feeling amongst tenants that a churchman and Tory stands a better chance for a farm than a dissenter and a liberal, and we know instances of dissenters going to church after having taken a farm.

COMMONS.—Part of the Black Mountains, a very extensive common, lies within the parish, and the right of pasture is let with the farms, and always taken into consideration when settling the rent or when a farm is sold. The minerals are claimed by the Lord of the Manor, and are let by him to those who work them. There is a field at Ffairfach; I do not know if it was a common or not. Two fairs were held on it on the 5th May and 22nd November, and the children of the village played on it, and it was considered as public property. About 30 years ago farmers were refused admittance to hold the fairs, and ever since they are held in the town, and the field is enclosed as part of Ffairfach Farm.

LABOURERS.—There are very few agricultural labourers. Servants are kept, living in the house, sleeping generally in the outhouses, above the cow-house or stables. The accommodation is often very poor. There ought to be room for all the family in the house.

Chairman—continued.

BUILDINGS.—On many farms the buildings are in a disgraceful state, tumble-down walls and thatched roofs, which are very expensive. The buildings are often insufficient, no room for man or beast, cattle crowded in the cow-house, horses crowded in the stable, a bed in every room in the house, and often the loft not divided into rooms at all, and no ceiling, only the bare slates or tiles or thatch overhead, and no sheds to keep implements; they are often left out in the rain and sun all the year round for want of room, which causes a great loss. Very few farms can boast of a poultry house. The fowls often roost in the cart-house, or trees, or hedge, or anywhere they can. The dairy is often a very poor arrangement, some sort of a room in any part of the house, where almost everything is kept. It serves as a pantry. In it the cheese press is kept, the bacon, and salter, simply because there is no other place. It is seldom we see a good dairy, even on large farms. We often hear that Welsh butter does not compare favourably with foreign butter, and is not as good as it ought to be. It will never be—can never be—till we have better dairies. At a meeting of farmers held lately at Carmarthen, Mr. John Francis, auctioneer and valuer, said that the dairies on some estates would be a disgrace as pig-styes. The Welsh farmer, as a rule, will suffer almost anything rather than quarrel with the landlord. He looks to his landlord as the highest authority, and is so attached to the land that he will not leave it if he can get any sort of living on it. When a farm comes vacant there are plenty of applicants for it. One reason for this is that farmers keep their children to assist them on the farm as long as they can, that they cannot do anything else for a living. The result of the present system of land letting is only what can be expected. Insufficient and inefficient labour is employed; boys only are kept. Scores of them come from the Middlesex Industrial School. There is an agent at Cefn cethin, under the London County Council, bringing these boys to our doors, but the demand is more than the supply, because their wages are low, but the work is badly done. The farms are starved as a consequence, and the farmers suffer. The labourers leave the land and crowd to the works and the towns. In the hamlet of Gwynfe over 50 houses that were inhabited 45 years ago are in ruins; 11 have been built. The number of houses inhabited in the hamlet now is about 102. It is much the same in other rural hamlets; I name Gwynfe because I know it well, being brought up there. Several of the houses now in ruin were farm-houses; others had small plots of land, sufficient to keep a cow. Farms are thrown together to save the expense of building, and when prices were good farmers were willing to pay the same rent for the plot the labourer had to keep his cow on, and let the house, which was generally in a bad state, fall, and now the farmer has to pay the penalty. He has no labourers for his harvest no boys or girls are brought up in the neighbourhood as servants, and he has to engage such inferior boys as the industrial schools supply.

Chairman—continued.

REMEDIES.—The remedies I would suggest are substantial reduction in rent, compensation for improvements security of tenure, and a Land Court to settle disputes between landlord and tenant. A tenant when leaving a farm should be paid the full value for improvements of whatever kind, regardless of the first cost. If the tenants improvements add to the market value of a farm, that increase should be the property of the tenant. Some improvements are worth more in 20 years than at first, and the tenant should be paid the value when he gives them up, and if the condition of the farm is generally improved that should be taken into consideration.

38,653. To whom do these properties belong that are let annually by auction?—One belonged to the late Dr. Morgan, of Rhosmaen, and the New Inn Farm belonged to Colonel Woods; it has been sold lately, and it now belongs to Mr. Hughes, the manager of the Llandilo Bank.

38,654. Do you think that farmers are afraid to come forward and give evidence before the Commissioners?—There was a great difficulty to get them to give any facts at all, and they were not willing to give them unless we promised to keep their names unknown. We could not do that in every case.

38,655. Was there a great general wish for evidence to be brought forward before the Commission?—Yes, at first; but when they saw that the examination was to be public, most of them withdrew, and it was very difficult to get at any facts at all and to get anyone to come and give evidence.

38,656. Were there meetings of the tenant farmers in the district got up for the purpose of obtaining evidence?—Yes.

38,657. But they were not well attended?—No, not near so well attended as we could expect.

38,658. Were they better attended at first, when the Commission was first talked of, and then did they dwindle away?—Yes.

38,659. Then the feeling in your district, rightly or wrongly, was that the landlords were not sympathetic with the Commission, and that it would be better to leave it alone?—Yes, that was the feeling, rightly or wrongly.

38,660. Rightly or wrongly, that is the general opinion?—Yes.

38,661. As regards game, you said: "On most "estates the tenants are now allowed to kill "the rabbits, but some tenants are afraid to do "so." Do they not avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—Not always.

38,662. Do they know of its existence?—I am afraid some of them do not know much about it. They have heard others say so, but nothing more than that.

38,663. Then what is the feeling. They know that it is the law, but they think they had better leave it alone?—They have heard others say that it is the law, but it is very difficult to get a Welsh farmer, who has been living in the middle of the rabbits and dare not look at them for many years, to realise that he has the power to kill them now, and in other cases there are a good many that do not know the way to kill them; they cannot kill them, and they are not allowed to put other people to kill them.

38,664. Then they do not avail themselves of the Act?—They cannot, they are not able to kill them.

38,665. Are there not any rabbit catchers in the neighbourhood that come and help the farmers to keep the rabbits down on their farms?—I doubt whether they would be allowed by the landlord to do that. I doubt if the landlords would be willing for them to do it. They do not want these rabbit catchers on the estate; they are generally poachers as well.

38,666. Then do you consider that the tenant farmers in the neighbourhood are so much attached to the land that they will not leave it if they can get any sort of living on it?—I do.

38,667. There is a great feeling in Wales, and especially in this part of the country, of attachment to the land?—Yes, my lord.

38,668. They will put up with a great deal sooner than leave their home?—Yes, with great inconvenience.

38,669. With regard to these boys that are brought down from the Middlesex Industrial School, is that the school at Feltham?—Yes.

38,670. And is application made by the farmers for these boys?—Yes. There is an agent living at Cefn Cethin, and they are sent down. I asked the agent the other day the number that had been sent down, and since August 1889 I believe the number was 471.

38,671. How have these boys turned out—well on the whole?—Some of them pretty well, some middling, and some very bad.

38,672. Are they kindly treated by the farmers?—I believe so.

38,673. There have been no complaints of ill-treatment of these children that have been sent down?—I have not heard of any.

38,674. None have come before your notice?—No, my lord.

38,675. You are in favour of a Land Court?—Yes.

38,676. To settle disputes?—To settle disputes when a tenant and landlord cannot settle themselves.

38,677. Not to be brought in under all circumstances, but in case of disagreement to be brought in as a final arbitration?—Yes, my lord.

38,678. But in no way to promote friction or disagreement between the landlord and the tenant?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,679. Would you kindly tell us on what estate the farms that you have mentioned are of which the rent was advanced, namely Blaenllanan, Ddyfadfa Uchaf, and Ddyfadfa Isaf?—Two of them are on the estate of Mr. Thomas, of Caeglas, and the owner of one of them lives at Bettws; his name is John Jones.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

38,680. Was the rent advanced on a valuation?—No, they were settled between them, and these are considered very moderate cases. I give them only to show the advance that there has been in rents since that time. They are considered very moderate cases, all of them.

38,681. You say there are some agreements which are very stringent?—Yes.

38,682. And that at the expiration of the tenancy the landlord claimed even the gates which the tenant had put up?—Yes, they do not give gates themselves. I think I put in one agreement in which there was a clause that all improvements whether put up by the landlord or the tenant, such as gates, grates, or anything of the sort, should belong to the landlord. I think I put it in before the Commissioners.

38,683. You say that the accommodation for farm servants is very inadequate, their sleeping accommodation?—Yes, they sleep in very inconvenient places, and in places not fit to sleep in, many of them.

38,684. This is generally a dairy district, is it not?—Yes.

38,685. And the dairies on the whole are very badly arranged?—Very badly arranged.

38,686. The accommodation is bad?—I know very few really good dairies, such as they ought to be in a district like this.

38,687. The labour prospect of this neighbourhood is a very bad one according to your statement?—Very bad. It is very difficult to get labourers, and we have to pay very high wages for them.

38,688. If you look to the future it appears rather dark?—Yes, with the present expenditure, if times will not improve or some relief comes from somewhere soon.

38,689. How do you explain that some improvements are worth more after 20 years than at first. What kind of improvements are those?—Suppose a tenant should plant an orchard, he would get very little out of it for some years, but in 20 years it would pay very well, I should think. A white thorn fence, afterwards, on the hills, where the growth of wood is very scarce, would be very valuable in 20 years.

38,690. Do many tenants make such improvements?—They have been making them. I know of miles of fences of that sort put up by tenants.

38,691. Are they ever compensated for them?—No, I do not think they have been. I put many of them myself in the place where I was before, and I was compensated when leaving for them; I was compensated for the buildings, and for what I had done on the farm. I had as much as I asked.

38,692. Whom do you farm under?—Mr. Thomas, of Caeglas.

Chairman.

38,693. Might I ask you what the acreage of your farm is?—187 acres.

38,694. And the rent?—200*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,695. You have no hostile feeling against your landlord, Mr. Williams?—On the contrary, we are very friendly.

38,696. You simply complain that the rent is too high, and that the place does not pay?—Nothing else.

38,697. You have mentioned that the tenant pays all the taxes?—Yes.

38,698 Income tax excepted?—Oh yes, the landlord pays the income tax.

38,699. You say in your statement, "I have "heard many complaints that they could not "pay wages, and others who employ servants "say they spend the income they have from "other sources." What other sources?—Private income; those that have money on interest or anything of that sort.

38,700. Then in the case of people who have no private sources, it follows that they must go to the wall soon?—Well, I should think so. I must say that I should have gone to the wall if I had not got some other little money coming in from somewhere else.

38,701. Of course it is very hard that money that you have from other sources should go to pay for the farm?—Yes.

38,702. Has there been any change in the method of farming in your district?—Yes, in some instances, since I remember there is a great change. We grew a lot of corn when I was a boy; now there is very little corn grown, in fact, we would not grow any corn at all hardly if it was not for the straw to winter cattle.

38,703. Do you grow wheat?—A little of everything; a little wheat and oats and barley.

38,704. But as little as you can possibly of of wheat?—As little as we can of everything.

38,705. But you grow a good deal of oats, do you not?—No, not much.

38,706. Nor barley?—No.

38,707. Do you not grow a deal of oats?—No.

38,708. You lay the land down to grass then?—Grass and hay.

38,709. Do you find that under this method of farming you have to keep an increased stock on the farm?—Yes.

38,710. Of course that necessitates additional accommodation?—Yes.

38,711. Is there a general complaint that this accommodation is not provided by the landlords?—Yes. There is not enough accommodation on many farms. I cannot complain of that. I have enough accommodation for my cattle and for my horses, but on other farms, especially on the highlands, they are obliged to get every beast in, and not to leave them out; their accommodation is very often very insufficient.

38,712. Of course they are not able to make the best of it?—No.

38,713. We have been told to-day by one or two of the agents that penalising clauses in the agreements are never enforced. Is it because the restrictive clauses are always observed?—I suppose so. I do not know what the penal clauses are good for unless it is to keep the tenants well in hand; they are afraid to trust us; the landlord can do as he likes, but it is rather hard on the tenants. As I mentioned in my evidence, the agreements generally are made to protect the landlord's interest; there is nothing to protect the tenant. A landlord very often promises to make repairs and improvements, but does not do them. Why not put a penal clause that he has to pay 10*l.* a year for that neglect? I think it would be quite as fair to have penal clauses to bind the landlord, and then they would be almost on the same footing.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

38,714. Are the penalising clauses all observed when you lay down the land to grass?—I cannot say that they are strictly observed, but they are very nearly.

38,715. Is there a very keen anxiety among the farmers in your district to do the best for their children?—Yes.

38,716. Generally?—Generally.

38,717. They deny themselves in order to give them a good education?—Some do.

38,718. Are there any that you know who have given their children a good start?—Yes.

38,719. Are you the brother of Dr. John Williams, the London physician?—Yes. I can only give you the instance of my mother.

38,720. She denied herself perhaps many luxuries in order to give your brother a good start?—I am sure no woman in Wales worked harder than she did.

Mr. Grove.

38,721. Are there any farmers' clubs in this district?—There is a farmers' club meeting at Carmarthen, and sometimes at Llandilo, I believe.

38,722. Do you think if there were more farmers' clubs, and intelligent men appointed as secretaries to those clubs, that the Ground Game Act and the Agricultural Holdings Act, and Acts that have been passed for the benefit of agriculturalists, would be better understood?—As they are carried on now, I do not think they are any benefit at all. They meet there, and get a dinner, and drink to the health of so and so, and leave, and someone reads a paper on some subject. I do not believe any good comes out of them.

38,723. But still if there was co-operation amongst farmers, it might be beneficial in the purchase of manures and other matters, might it not?—No doubt.

38,724. And even in the selling of the produce it might be beneficial?—No doubt of that.

38,725. Do you think that a dairy farm and a butter factory would be beneficial?—I do not know much about that. If it can be worked practically, no doubt it would do good here as elsewhere. If the farmers could dispose of their milk as soon as it is milked, and at a fair price, to a factory or anything else, I think it would save them a lot of labour and anxiety. There are a good many farmers about here sending their milk to Swansea now. That was begun about four or five years ago.

38,726. Have you followed at all the course of butter making in Denmark by reading about it?—Not much.

Mr. Grove—continued.

38,727. Do you know that in Denmark there are a thousand butter factories?—No, I did not know it.

38,728. And there are not perhaps 20 I suppose in this country. There are 1,000 there, and only 2,000,000 of people. It just shows what different lines they go upon. Do you think that butter might be sent some distance away with advantage, in hundredweights, I mean made up in pound packets, but sent away a hundredweight at a time?—No doubt of it.

38,729. In Pembrokeshire we found a farmer who was doing very well by sending his butter to Bristol. I daresay you know that under the railway rates you can send 1 cwt. of butter at a cheaper rate in proportion than you can any smaller quantity. This farmer, therefore, makes up about 110 lbs., so that the package should just come under the hundredweight, and that enables him to come under the lowest rate, and he finds it pay remarkably well. Again, one of our Commissioners sends butter through the post, and another of them, who lives 150 or 200 miles from him, has his butter every week through the post, and it pays them both, because the one gets a very fair price, and the other gets it fairly cheap. It is sent through the parcels post at the present time. Do you not think something more in that direction might be done?—I believe so. I send the milk to Swansea and the Mumbles, and any milk that may be left is made into butter, and sent with eggs, and so on, to the Mumbles.

38,730. I suppose that is a pretty fair market; as a rule a lot of people go there?—Yes, I have a customer there who takes everything.

38,731. Do these boys that you speak of get any training in farming?—Yes, they get training at the school. They know how to do a lot of things. They can milk and do some little of the ordinary farm work.

38,732. Because in our county of Monmouthshire we have the same thing, and there we turn out boys who do very well, as a rule, and a very small number of them go astray. Have you had many cases where the boys have lapsed?—Yes, many. They get discontented, and go back to London. I had a case myself last year; a boy was discontented, and grumbled every day. I asked him what was the matter with him, "Oh, we did not pay him enough wages." I asked him, "Do I not give you as much as you want?" "No." "Are you tired of it?" "Yes." "Would you like to leave?" "Yes." "I will pay you." He went straight to London, and he wrote to me after six months, begging me to take him back or find a place for him. I agreed to take him back if he would behave himself. He came back and did just the same thing again this year, and I had to pack him off again.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,733. Do you confirm the statement made by a previous witness, that the farmers have to pay 3*s.* 6*d.* a day to their labourers?—He was from a different district to me; he was near the tin works. I have no doubt it has been paid there. They are rather high here about Llandilo. See 38,334.

38,734. What do you pay for labourers in the district?—It is indoor servants I keep. £31 is the highest wages I have paid.

38,735. You paid that this year?—No, not this year. £24 I pay this year.

38,736. When was it?—Two years ago.

38,737. Then wages are lower?—No, they are not lower now; it is two years ago, 1891 and 1892.

Chairman.

38,738. I have one question handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "How far off are these two "farms that are let annually situated? Do "they not consist of accommodation land. How "near Llandilo Station are they?"—One is about a mile, and the other about a mile and a half, or about a mile both may be; they are let annually by auction in fields as accommodation land.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

38,739. Is this your evidence as it has been verified by Professor Rhŷs, and is it correct?—Yes.

38,740. What is your address?—Gwernoglebach, Llanfihangel Rhosycorn, near Nantgaredig.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

"I wish to inform you that the farmers and workmen of Llanfihangel Rhosycorn, in the county of Carmarthen, have nominated me as their representative to appear before you this day to give evidence on the following subjects:—Firstly. That the farmers must have security of tenure before it is possible for farming to be a success. Secondly. To have fair rent, i.e., having a farm at what it is worth, and not at an exorbitant price as at present, and that the landlord will have no right to increase the rent in consequence of improvements made by the tenant. Thirdly. Having a Land Court to fix fair rent when the landlord and tenant do not agree, and if leaving the farm to receive compensation for improvements made by him. Fourthly. To improve the the law as regards labourers' cottages, because most of them have been left to fall into ruins, and it is impossible to get labourers to work on the farms. I have a list of those that have fallen during the last 40 years. I may add that the farm I occupy, Gwernoglebach, is a farm of 8 acres in extent, and is owned by Mr. John Jones, Cross Lane, Pencader."

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Grove.

38,741. Were you asked at a public meeting of the farmers to represent them?—Yes.

38,742. How many farmers were present at that meeting?—From 15 to 20.

38,743. And they were all in favour of a Land Court, were they?—Yes.

38,744. Have you a list of some cottages to put in?—Yes (the witness handed in list of cottages, for which see Appendix).

38,745. These cottages have fallen into disuse. They are now unoccupied are they?—Not all of those which appear in the list as a total, but 53. There are four columns.

38,746. How many are unoccupied. Are any unoccupied at the present time?—No, all these 53 houses have fallen into ruins. No one occupies them.

38,747. Do you remember the time when a good many of them were occupied?—Yes, I do. I have been in most of them.

38,748. Then who were they occupied by. What did the men work at?—They were farm labourers.

38,749. Does not the land want as much labour on it now as it did then?—Yes, but the farmers fail to get labourers there to work it.

38,750. Is it because the depression in agriculture prevents them paying for labour?—That and the fact that no labourers are to be had, They are well known in the district.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,751. What was the reason given by these farmers that they wanted security of tenure; had they any reason, had they suffered?—Because the rents of the farms as a rule were raised after they had improved them.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

38,752. Do you consider that there are some farms now let at an exorbitant rent, more than they really can pay for them?—Generally they are not able to pay for them.

38,753. Then I suppose they cannot get any reduction from the agent or landlord?—No.

38,754. Is that the reason why they wish to appeal to another court?—Yes; and they feel that the laws, as they are at present, are more favourable to the landlords than they are to the tenants.

38,755. Are the labourers' cottages in a very bad state in your opinion?—Yes, most of them.

38,756. Are there a sufficient number?—No.

38,757. Do any of these labourers keep a cow?—Yes, some keep one, some keep two, and one or two may keep three.

38,758. Do those that keep cows live better than the rest?—Yes; it is a great advantage, and having been brought up in the country they have a fancy that it is a good thing to keep cattle.

38,759. Is there not an advantage to the labourers to be considered?—Yes, it is a great advantage for the parents, in rearing children, to keep a cow or two; but the rents are far too high.

38,760. You consider then that the rents of these cottages are much higher than the general farm rents?—Yes, they are rented with the farms, and the farmer again sub-rents the cottages.

38,761. Do not the children of these labourers grow up to be more useful servants for agricultural purposes?—Oh, yes, because they are accustomed to it.

38,762. Do you think it would be a matter of general advantage that all labourers should have a cow?—Yes, that is the general feeling in the neighbourhood, that they would like that every labourer should have a place to keep a cow, provided the rent was no too high.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Llandovery.

FORTY-EIGHTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Llandovery, Carmarthenshire, Wednesday, 18th April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord Kenyon.
Sir John Talbot Dillwyn Llewelyn, Bart.
Mr. David Brynmor Jones, Q.C., M.P.
Professor Rhŷs, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.
Mr. Edwin Grove.
Mr. Richard Jones.
Mr. Frederic Seebohm, LL.D., F.S.A.
Mr. Cecil E. Owen, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Gwilym Evans called and examined.

Chairman.

38,763. You live at Pencastell, Llanelly, and are chairman of the Carmarthenshire County Council?—I am.

Chairman—continued.

38,765. We will take that from you generally?—I have no hesitation in saying that the small farmers live a harder life than any other class (except the very poor) in the country. They work diligently; their hours are very long in all seasons, and they have to stand all kinds of weather, and live on plainer food. The women have a particularly hard lot, their duties being never ending, and even the children have to start working at a very early age, earlier even than the children of farm labourers. Of that again I can give plenty of instances. The absence of combination among tenant farmers, and their distrust of one another, are features of farm life which have operated to retard the development of better conditions of land tenure in this county. In the past, more so than at present, there was a great demand for land. This demand was occasioned, in my opinion, by one or more of the following causes:—The majority of farmers were, and are imperfectly educated, their knowledge of English being similarily imperfect; and knowing this, they feel that if they lose their little farm there is no prospect before them, excepting that of a day labourer, or by keeping a horse and cart, or becoming tenant of a country public house. During late years some of the best and more independent farmers have thrown up their holdings in the county and migrated to English counties, where, through their thrifty and industrious habits, they are able to make a comfortable living on farms given up by their predecessors, accustomed to a more refined and expensive standard of living. I should like to add to that, that the rents of these farms in England have been considerably reduced in consequence of the previous tenants leaving.

Chairman—continued.

Indeed, notwithstanding their love of home, I have met many Welsh farmers abroad who are now prosperous, but had been unsuccessful while in this country; and I met one in the State of Kansas, from this very district, who assured me that he would have been still farming in the county of Carmarthen had it not been for the game laws; and although he had been in the States for nearly 20 years, he still retained the most bitter feelings of resentment against these laws.

There is a marked change in respect of the men engaged by farmers for carrying out farm work. Twenty-five years ago farmers engaged servants specially adapted for the work, men trained up from boyhood. Now I find that their places have been taken by boys brought down from the reformatories, and who, in the great majority of cases, possess no knowledge whatever of farming when they arrive. I submit that their introduction into the county is a doubtful gain to the agricultural community, particularly as I am informed that a considerable proportion return to their early habits.

Land has been purchased in this district at extraordinary prices, and I submit a list of farms sold, together with the prices, which are, so far as I have been able to ascertain, correct. The only authority I have for this list is a copy of the conditions of sale, supplied by one of the public who attended and took down the prices at the time. I cannot verify them beyond that, but I have every reason to believe that they are correct.

The witness handed in the following list:—

Chairman—continued.

These farms and fields were sold in 1884, and there is no suggestion that they were under-rented. I may say there is a suggestion that some of the rents were increased after this sale.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,766. Can you give us the acreage of the farms with the table?—Yes; you can see them from the conditions of sale. (The witness handed in the Conditions of Sale.) There are many causes for the abnormal prices which are paid for land:—

1. The prestige of being a landlord.

2. The purchase of farms by landlords for completing their ring-fence, for the purpose of preserving game, and in some instances through the jealousies of neighbouring landlords; the list already submitted being a striking example of the latter.

Farmers are frequently anxious to buy their own land, but in the face of the conditions I have named, it is beyond their reach. One of the complaints frequently heard is, that farms are being sold by one landlord to his neighbouring landlord by private contract, without the tenant having the offer of the farm, indeed, without his having the slightest suspicion of any exchange being contemplated. I can give several instances of this being done in this neighbourhood, the first intimation the tenants had was an agreement from the new landlord to sign. In one instance particularly, I know that the tenant, having inherited money, could have paid for the farm.

This again tends greatly to the tenants' timidity and fear of change. They never know who their landlord is from year to year.

Contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act is not only a general thing, but compulsorily imposed, that is to say, I know of tenants who, refusing to sign the agreement, had notice to quit, and when they did sign, the notices were withdrawn.

The Ground Game Act is not acted upon, and hares and rabbits are not only preserved on many estates, but one landlord, to my knowledge, has it printed in all his agreements, that hares and rabbits are included with other game. I can produce a copy, and there are scores of similar agreements now in existence.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,767. Do you produce that copy?—Yes. (Handing.) The clause is numbered 3, and it reads as follows:—"The landlord reserves . . . . "also all game, wildfowl, and fish (inclusive of "hares and rabbits), and nest and eggs of game, "with the right for himself, his friends and "servants at all times, to enter the farm for the "purpose of sporting and preserving the same, "except that the tenants shall have such right "concurrently with the landlord to kill and "take hares and rabbits as is given to the "tenant by the Ground Game Act, 1880."

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,768. Can you also produce an agreement where contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act took place?—If you look at the three agreements which are printed you will see the Act is contracted out of, except when it suits the landlord not to do so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,769. This one handed up is dated 1891?—Yes.

Tenant farmers who have the highest regard for their landlord and agent, very often, indeed generally, view with unfailing distrust the gamekeeper. This man causes more mischief between landlord and tenant than all the other causes combined. This is a recognised and acknowledged fact, and I affirm in the presence of farmers in this room, without fear of contradiction, that it is necessary—at all events, expedient—to be continuously currying favour with the gamekeeper by standing him drinks, or making him other gifts of a more tangible nature. The best tenants will not lend themselves to this practice, and consequently run greater risk of being misrepresented to the landlord. I will give the Commission one instance of the mischief caused by gamekeepers. I will give this instance in the presence of the landlord and the tenant who are here to-day.

e 39,118, ,207. My brother James is a tenant farmer, living at Dolauhirion. This farm has been in the occupation of my father and of my brother for nearly 70 years, and under four or five different landlords. He is acknowledged to be a good farmer, and a most desirable tenant in every possible way. On the 29th September, 1892, he was handed by a solicitor's clerk a notice to quit. Until that moment he believed that he was one of the last men in the county who would be served with such a notice. He had always been well treated by both landlord and agent; in fact, he considered himself, rightly or wrongly, one of the first favourites on the estate, and he had never received any intimation or suggestion that he had in any way incurred his landlord's displeasure. On the following day he sought an interview with his landlord, and the reason given for the notice was, that he was too fond of killing rabbits; even this my brother was in a position to deny, although he well knew his right to the same; and after explanations had been made the notice was withdrawn, and good feeling now prevails, not, however, I fear, without having given not only my brother, but every other farmer on the estate and the surrounding district, a rude awakening as to the uncertainty of their tenure. I may say this is not the only instance of a similar character which has taken place in this neighbourhood.

38,770. Who is the landlord?—Mr. Carbery Vaughan Pryse-Rice.

Since this occurrence, it has come to my knowledge that the gamekeeper attached to the estate, at a public auction stated that this farm had been long enough in the same family, and boasted that he would soon see a change. Nobody at that time attached any weight to his remarks, but in the light of subsequent events, and the fact of his still being in the same employ, he certainly appears to have the ear of his employer. I have many other things I could say of this man. I repeat again that men of this class are the greatest enemies of both landlord and tenant. I have known of instances where tenants could neither keep ferrets nor guns, and it is only fair to say that this was on one estate only; but it was a very large estate.

I mean to say I can only prove it on one very large estate; on other estates I am not able to prove it.

I hold that it should be impossible to make it criminal for a farmer, or his sons, or his men, to kill game on land for which he pays rent. Farmers have few forms of amusements to relieve their laborious and monotonous lives, and I think it is a great mistake to deprive the young people in agricultural districts of the only recreation which Providence and their calling have provided for them—shooting and fishing; and I submit, without any want of respect to the landed gentry, that it is of much greater importance to offer inducements to young agriculturalists to remain on the land than to preserve shooting for a comparatively few sportsmen. As the law stands at present, it has and will drive spirited young men away from their homes to the towns, where they enjoy greater liberty. Besides, once let a tenant feel that he has co-equal rights with the landlord in the game, he will take as much care of the game as the landlord himself, and he will take pride in providing sport for his landlord and friends. I know of numerous instances where tenants, who are unchecked by game laws, do this. There is another thing, it has a very great influence on the young people on the farm. I believe where there are no game laws or strict game preserving, the boys are brought up with the true instincts of sportsmen; whereas if the game laws are too severe, they are poachers before they know where they are.

A return of the convictions under the game laws in this county for the last 25 years would satisfy the Commission, I believe, that the preservation of game is an incentive to crime.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,771. Can you produce that return?—No, I cannot; but I was thinking that any order from this Commission or recommendation to the Standing Joint Committee would obtain the returns.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,772. I do not think we have had complete returns in any county?—It would be impossible for any individual to get the return. If there is a wish expressed by this Commission I am quite willing to bring it before the Standing Joint Committee so as to get it from the clerks of the petty sessional divisions.

Chairman.

38,773. Will you kindly do that?—I will. The most objectionable form to tenant farmers is the underletting of game, which is not an uncommon practice by small landowners, and I have very striking instances where tenants have suffered in consequence. As an instance of the effect of game preservation, and other unfair conditions in an agreement, I respectfully submit a copy of my brother Evan's proposed evidence. At the same time I put in a copy of his agreement.

COPY of AGREEMENT between W. D. H. CAMPBELL DAVYS and EVAN EVANS and DAVID EVANS.

38,774. Is your brother in the room?—Yes. He lives in Monmouthshire, but he has come down specially to give evidence to-day. I will leave my brother's evidence for him to speak to. The other agreement I wish to put in is that of David Evans.

Copy of Agreement between R. Campbell Davys and David Evans, of Penlan.

An agreement made and entered into the twenty-sixth day of April, 1887, between R. Campbell Davys, of Neuaddfawr, Esquire, who, and whose heirs, and assigns are hereinafter called the lessor of the one part, and David Evans, of Penlan, in the parish of Cilycwm, in the county of Carmarthen, farmer, who, and whose executors, administrators, and assigns are hereinafter called the lessee of the other part. The lessor agrees to let, and the lessee to take the premises described in the schedule hereto, hereinafter called the farm with the appurtenances with a right of Common and Mallean Common from the 29th day of September, 1886, from year to year, and so on, determinable by six months' notice to quit, and section 33 of The Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (hereinafter called the said Act) shall not apply. The tenancy shall also determine at the option of the lessor at any time when any rent or payments reserved are in arrear for 21 days, whether legally demanded or not, and there is no sufficient distress upon the farm, or upon breach by the lessee of any of the covenants and conditions of this agreement, or upon the lessee committing an act of bankruptcy or executing a bill of sale of his effects upon the farm, or being convicted of any offence against the Game Laws, and on any of such events happening the lessor may re-enter on the farm. Excepting all wood and woodlands, trees, tellars, pollards, and saplings, all royalties, mines, minerals, and quarries of stone, sand, or gravel. The lessor reserves the right to enter at any time to view the farm, or for building, planting, draining, improving, diverting, and altering watercourses, or for repairs, or to take any part not exceeding 10 acres for any of the purposes mentioned in section 41 of the said Act, or the first part of the first schedule thereto. The rent shall be thirty-seven pounds per annum, payable quarterly on the 21st day of December, the 25th day of March, the 24th day of June, and the 29th day of September in each year, and the lessee shall also pay all existing and future rates, taxes, and out-goings, payable either by lessor or lessee in respect of the farm, and all valuations including a proportion of all rents and outgoings up to the end of the tenancy, in case the tenancy determines between two quarter days. If at any time the lessee shall receive notice requiring payments in advance of rent due on any quarter day subsequent to such notice, all such rent shall at once be considered due, and payable in advance, and may then be recovered as rent in arrear. In consideration of the lessee undertaking to keep the land in good heart and condition, and undertaking to execute the improvements mentioned in the first schedule of the said Act, the rent shall be thirty-seven pounds per annum instead of forty pounds, which should be, and has hitherto been, the rental of the farm, inasmuch as the lessor has spent large sums in building without charging any interest thereon. The lessee to pay all rates, land tax, chief rent, taxes, tithes, assessments, and outgoings of every description, except the landlord's property tax becoming due at any time during this tenancy, including a proportion of all such payments up to the end of the tenancy; in default the lessor may recover the same, or any of them, by distress, or otherwise as rent in arrear any of such payments, if the lessor require, be paid to him. Any such payments remaining unpaid at the end of the tenancy may be deducted from any valuations owing to the lessee. The lessee to pay all the rent-charge in lieu of tithes, including the rent-charge which shall become due on the 1st day of October succeeding the expiration of the tenancy, and that to be due and payable to the lessor, along with the last quarter's rent, on the 24th day of June preceding the termination of this tenancy. The lessee to pay further yearly rent by quarterly payments, recoverable by distress, at the rates following, namely:—At the rate of 50*l.* for every acre of meadow, pasture, or woodlands, which shall be pared or broken up; 10*l.* for every acre of arable land not cultivated in manner herein-after mentioned; 5*l.* for every ton of hay, and 3*l.* for every ton of straw, green crop, or fodder sold, or carried off the farm, without the consent of the lessor, unless an equal amount of good manure shall have been brought on, and vouchers and samples for the same have been produced to the satisfaction of the lessor; double the rent made payable for the farm by this agreement for holding over after the determination of the tenancy, where such acts are done without the consent of the lessor. Any such rents to commence from the quarter day preceding the act or omission on which they become payable, and to be recoverable and subject to the same conditions as the other rents of the farm. The lessee to keep and leave all parts of the premises, and all wire and other fences, walls, gates, arches, windows, bridges, and stiles, including lessor's fixtures, in good condition and repair. The lessee to maintain and keep, at his own expense, in good and sufficient repair all the thatched roofs of buildings and cottages upon the farm, and to renew the same with good wheat straw as often as need shall be. The lessee to haul gratis all materials for repairs of the farm buildings, and to keep and leave all parts of the farm, including all fixtures, wire and other fences, drains, ditches, cesspools, watercourses, and outfalls, in good condition and repair. If the lessee neglect to repair after twelve days' notice in writing to do so, the lessor may repair and may deduct the lessee's share of the cost from any valuation owing to the lessee, or may recover it as rent in arrear. All fixtures belong to the lessor. The lessee shall not remove any lessee's fixtures put up by him without giving option of purchase to the lessor. The lessee to allow use of his name in actions or prosecutions for trespass. In the event of any claim of the lessee under the said Act, interest from the date of outlay at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum on all moneys expended by the lessor on any improvements shall be deducted from such claim. The lessor may set off against any claims for compensation by the lessee under the terms of this agreement the cost, or estimated cost, of any repairs necessary at the end of the tenancy and moneys or payments due or accruing to him under the terms of this agreement, and any estimated damage resulting from breach of any provision of the agreement by the lessee, also the reduction of 3*l.* per annum now given in full compensation for any improvements executed or to be made by him on the premises, and doth hereby agree that such annual reduction of 3*l.* per annum shall be considered as a benefit within the meaning of section 6 of the said Act. No allowance shall be made for any improvements which may be made or brought on the lands after notice to quit has been given, unless with or at the written consent or request of the lessor. No allowance shall be made for manure applied where two white straw crops have been taken consecutively or in one course of rotation, for or manure, or cake used or consumed in lieu of fodder, straw, or manure sold or carried off the farm, and inasmuch as the farm-yard manure was received by the lessee gratis of the outgoing tenant, in accordance with the estate rule, so therefore the same shall be left without compensation at removal, and after notice to quit none shall be drawn off under an additional rent of 20*s.* for every cartload so drawn off or sold at any time. To manage, manure, and cultivate the said farm properly, according to an approved course of good husbandry, and particularly not to break up into tillage any ground without first spreading thereon in a husbandlike manner fifteen teals or seventy-five of imperial bushels of well-burnt lime, or half a ton per acre of superphosphate of lime, guaranteed to contain 25 per cent. of soluble phosphates, and it is agreed that such manure as aforesaid shall be held due to the land in return for such reducing into tillage. Not to take more than two successive crops of grain or corn out of the said lands, nor suffer the same, if in tillage, to become lay without sowing therein, in a proper manner, twenty pounds of good clover or an equivalent quantity of other grass seeds per acre, and to produce proof of having applied and bestowed such manure, and of having sown such seeds as aforesaid, and when such land shall have been laid down with clover or grass seeds, not to break up or plough the same for the period of three years from the time it was so laid down. Not to break up into tillage any meadow, old pasture, or hay ground. It is agreed that the matters specified in this agreement as the subject of allowance or set-off are the only questions relating to compensation which a valuer or umpire shall, without the consent of the parties, have power to entertain. Not to depasture any agistment stock of any kind upon the said farm in the last year of this tenancy, under a penalty of 4*l.* for every head of live stock that shall be so depastured thereon. And it is further agreed that no customs of the country shall have any operation upon the contract of tenancy, but the rights of the parties shall depend only on the terms of this agreement. All matters in dispute under this agreement and claims for compensation shall be settled by reference in manner provided by the said Act, but without any appeal to the county court. All questions relating to distress shall be determined by a court of summary jurisdiction as provided by section 46 of the said Act.

As witness our hands the day and year aforesaid,

DAVID EVANS.

Witness, LEWIS RODERICK.

In addition I will give evidence of the information I have received in connexion with it.

38,775. Where does David Evans live?—At Penlan in the parish of Cilycwm.

38,776. Is David Evans any relation of yours?—No, unless he is a Welsh cousin.

38,777. Who is the landlord?—Campbell Davys, Esq. I have looked in vain for a single clause in the agreement which protects the tenant. I am informed that in some instances these agreements were put before the tenants, and they were expected to sign them at once, and were invariably told it was only a matter of form. In this agreement of David Evans's, the Agricultural Holdings Act is set aside, except where it favours the landlord; the rent is to be paid quarterly; the large sums spent in building referred to in the agreement were:—

(1.) Small sloping shed for calves against the barn.

(2.) A small pigsty.

The reduction of 3*l.* per annum is carefully noted, and is given in full compensation for any improvements executed or to be made by him on the premises, notwithstanding the fact that when this agreement was signed two acres of land were taken away, and that the tenant had already lived on the farm 28 years.

Repairs.—Some idea of the cost of keeping in repair may be gained from the fact that the dwelling-house, cart-house, cow-house, and the cottages were thatched, only the barn and pigsty having slates on. The tenant declares that he paid 20*l.* for the farm yard manure, seeds, &c. to the outgoing tenant, and I can prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that it is not in accordance with the estate rule that the farm-yard manure should be handed over gratis to the incoming tenant. The reference to the County Court, I am unable to understand. I have other agreements by me, dated as late as 1889, and as one of these agreements applies to the farms adjoining that which my brother vacated in 1880, I will put it in. It may be of interest to the Commission to compare the two agreements, particularly as to the sheep.

COPY of AGREEMENT between R. CAMPBELL DAVYS and THOMAS JONES of Cwmfranganol.

An Agreement made this day of November 1889, between R. Campbell Davys, of Neuadd-fawr, Esquire, who and whose heirs and assigns are herein-after called lessor of the one part, and Thomas Jones, of Cwmfranganol, in the parish of Cilycwm, in the county of Carmarthen, farmer, who and whose executors, administrators, and assigns are herein-after called the lessee of the other part.

The lessor agrees to let, and the lessee to take the premises described in the schedule hereto, herein-after called the farm with the appurtenances from the 29th day of September, 1889, from year to year, and so on, determinable by six months' notice to quit, and Section 33 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, herein-after called the said Act shall not apply. The tenancy shall also determine, at the option of the lessor, at any time when any rents or payments reserved are in arrears for 21 days, whether legally demanded or not, and there is no sufficient distress upon the farm, or upon breach by the lessee of any of the covenants and conditions of this agreement, or upon the lessee committing an act of bankruptcy, or executing a bill of sale of this effect upon the farm, or being convicted of any offence against the Game Laws, and on any of such events happening the lessor may re-enter on the farm. Excepting all game and eggs of game and rabbits, with the right to kill and take the same, in so far as the same may be excepted by law having reference to the Ground Game Act, 1880, also all wood, and woodlands, trees, tellars, pollards, and saplings, all royalties, mines, minerals and quarries of stone, sand, and gravel. The lessor reserves the right to enter at any time to view the farm, or to hunt, shoot, course, kill, and take the game and rabbits, or for building, planting, draining, improving, diverting, and altering water-courses, or for repairs, and to take any part not exceeding 10 acres for any of the purposes mentioned in Section 4th of the said Act or the first part of the first schedule thereto. The rent shall be ninety pounds per annum, payable quarterly on the 21st day of December, the 25th day of March, the 24th day of June, and the 29th day of September in each year, with compound interest at the rate of five pounds per centum per annum from the respective dates at which the rent is due and payable till paid; and the lessee shall also pay all existing and future rates, taxes, and outgoings payable either by lessor or lessee in respect of the farm, and all valuations, including a proportion of all rents and outgoings up to the end of the tenancy in case the tenancy determines between two quarter days. If at any time the lessee shall receive notice requiring payments of rent due on any quarter day subsequent to such notice, all such rent shall at once be considered due and payable in advance, and may be then recovered as rent in arrear. In consideration of the lessee undertaking to keep the land in good heart and condition, and undertaking to execute the improvements mentioned in the first schedule of this Act, the flock of sheep are handed over at the price as herein-after mentioned, which shall be considered as a benefit within the meaning of Section 6 of the said Act. The lessee to pay all rates, land tax, chief rent taxes, tithes, assessments, and outgoings of every description (except landlord's property tax) becoming due at any time during this tenancy, including a proportion of all such payments up to the end of the tenancy; in default the lessor may recover the same or any of them by distress or otherwise as rent in arrear. Any of such payments may, if the lessor require, be paid to him. Any such payments remaining unpaid at the end of the tenancy may be deducted from any valuations owing to the lessee. The lessee to pay all the rent-charge in lieu of tithes including the rent-charge which shall become due on the first of October, succeeding the expiration of this tenancy, and that to be due and payable to the lessor along with the last quarter's rent on the 24th day of June, preceding the determination of this tenancy. The lessee to pay further yearly rent by quarterly payments recoverable by distress at the rates following, viz., at the rate of 50*l.* per every acre of meadow pasture or woodlands, which shall be pared or broken up, 10*l.* for every acre of arable land not cultivated in manner herein-after mentioned; 5*l.* for every ton of hay and 3*l.* for every ton of straw, green crops or fodder sold or carried off the farm without the consent of the lessor, unless an equal amount of good manure shall have been brought on, and vouchers and samples for the same have been produced to the satisfaction of the lessor. Double the rent made payable for the person under this agreement for holding over after the determination of tenancy, where such acts are done without the consent in writing of the lessor. Any such rent to commence from the quarter day preceding the act or omission on which they become payable, and to be recoverable and subject to the same conditions as the other rents of the farm. The lessee to keep and leave all parts of the premises and all wire and other fence walls, gates, arches, windows, bridges and stiles, including lessor's fixtures, in good condition and repair; the lessee to maintain and keep at his own expense in good and sufficient repair all the thatched roofs of buildings and cottages upon the farm, and to renew the same with good wheat straw as often as need shall be. The lessee to haul gratis all materials for repairs of the farm buildings, and to keep and leave all parts of the farm, including all fixtures and other fences, drains, ditches, cesspools, water-courses, and outfalls in good condition and repair. If the lessee neglect to repair after twelve days' notice in writing to do so, the lessor may repair and may deduct the lessee's share of the cost from any valuation owing to the lessee, or may recover it as rent in arrear. All fixtures belong to the lessor. The lessee shall not remove any lessee's fixtures put up by him without giving option of purchase to the lessor. The lessee to allow the use of his name in actions or prosecutions for trespass. In the event of any claim of the lessee under the said Act, interest from the date of outlay at the rate of 5*l.* per centum per annum on all moneys expended by the lessor on improvements shall be deducted from such claim. The lessor may set off against any claims for compensation by the lessee, under the terms of this agreement, the cost or estimated cost of any repairs necessary at the end of the tenancy, any moneys or payments due or occurring to him under the terms of this agreement, and any estimated damages resulting from breach of any provision of this agreement by the lessee. Also the new building lately erected on the premises and other improvements made by the lessor at his sole expense, to be held to be in full compensation to the lessee for any improvements executed or to be made by him on the premises. And it is further agreed that such outlay as aforesaid shall be considered as a benefit within the meaning of Section 6 of the said Act. No allowance shall be made for any improvements which may be made or brought on the lands after notice to quit has been given unless with or at the written consent or request of the lessor. No allowance shall be made for manure applied where two white straw crops have been taken consecutively or in one course of rotation, or for manure or cake used or consumed in lieu of fodder, straw, or manure sold or carried off the farm; and inasmuch as the farmyard manure was received by the lessee gratis, of the outgoing tenant in accordance with the estate rule, so, therefore, the same shall be left without compensation at removal, and after notice to quit none shall be drawn off under an additional rent of 1*l.* for every cartload drawn off or sold at any time. And the lessee covenants to manage, manure, and cultivate the said farm properly according to an improved course of good husbandry, and particularly not to break up into tillage any ground without first spreading thereon in a husbandry-like manner fifteen teals or seventy-five bushels of well-burned lime, or half a ton per acre of superphosphate of lime guaranteed to contain 25 per cent. soluble phosphates, and it is agreed that such manure as aforesaid shall be held due to the land in return for such reduction into tillage. Not to take more than two successive crops of grain or corn out of the said lands nor suffer the same if in tillage to become lay without sowing thereon in a proper manner twenty pounds of good clover or an equivalent quantity of other grass seeds per acre, and to produce proof of having applied and bestowed such manure and of having sown such seeds as aforesaid, and when such land shall have been laid down with clover and grass seeds not to break up or plough the same for the period of three years from the time it was so laid down. Not to break up into tillage any meadow, old pasture, or hay ground. Not to depasture any agistment stock of any kind upon the said farm in the last year of this tenancy under a penalty of four pounds for every head of live stock that shall be so depastured thereon. It is agreed that the matters specified in this agreement as the subject of allowance or set off are the only questions relating to compensation which a valuer or umpire shall, without the consent of the parties, have power to entertain. And it is further agreed that no customs of the county shall have any operation upon this contract of tenancy, but the rights of the parties shall depend only upon the terms of this agreement. All matters in dispute under this agreement and claims for compensation shall be settled by reference in manner provided by the said Act, but without any appeal to the County Court. All questions relating to distress shall be determined by a Court of Summary Jurisdiction as provided by Section 46 of the said Act.

And whereas the said lessor in consideration of the lessee executing the improvements herein-before mentioned hereby gives up to the lessee the said flock of sheep belonging to the said farm, being two hundred and forty-seven sheep and one hundred and seventy-two lambs (247 and 172 lambs), at the price of 12*s.* per head for every sheep and 8*s.* per head for every lamb, making in the whole the sum of two hundred and seventeen pounds, which sum the said lessee hereby agrees to pay unto the lessor upon the execution of these presents. And it is expressly agreed between the said parties hereto, that the said flock of sheep reared upon the said farm and grassing on the Mallaen Mountain Common, to the number of 419, are to be handed over by the lessee to the lessor at the end or determination of the tenancy hereby created at the said price of 12*s.* per each head of sheep and 8*s.* for each lamb, and the lessee further agrees during the whole of the tenancy to keep upon the farm the full number of four hundred and nineteen sheep and lambs, to be earmarked annually under the superintendence of the lessor or his agent, and will not sell or dispose of any of the sheep or lambs after the receipt or delivery of a notice to quit under an extra rent of four pounds for every head that shall be sold or disposed of, such rent to be subject to the same condition as the other rents of the farm. And it is further agreed that if and in case the said flock of sheep and lambs at the end of the tenancy shall exceed the said number of 419 then and in that case the number in excess shall be drawn off from the said flock by two persons, one of whom shall be appointed by the lessor and the other by the lessee. And further it is hereby expressly agreed that in case the said flock of sheep at the determination of the tenancy shall be less than 419 in number, then the lessee shall pay the lessor twenty shillings per head for any deficiency, such twenty shillings per head for the deficient number of sheep and lambs to be deducted from the amount then to be paid by the lessor to the lessee for the said flock.

As Witness, &c.

I may say as to the penal clauses of 50*l.* an acre and so on, the freehold land is not worth one third of it, and the clause is put in with no other object than to put the tenant completely in the hands of the landlord when he chooses to leave. I pass the agreement simply by saying I am ready to answer any question upon it.

Nothing but an appeal to a Land Court, or some other independent authority, or tribunal, properly appointed for the purpose, can possibly protect tenants in cases of this kind. I believe that the landlord in the face of free trade, cheap water-transit, preferential railway rates, the silver exchange, and the almost entire absence of taxes which foreign produce is subjected to, should appreciably reduce the rents and that the rates and taxes which land now carries should be as far as practicably lightened. And I also believe that steps should be taken to readjust the values in purely agricultural districts, having regard to increasing value of accommodation land, and the generally increasing value of property in the manufacturing centres. I am fully convinced that the rateable value of the strictly agricultural districts have not been seen to, to the extent they ought to be as compared with the manufacturing centres. There is a rating committee compulsorily appointed by every county council, and the committee of this county are going to take the matter in hand; shortly, from what I understand.

I have a very great objection to abatements; it has a strong tendency to undermine the independent spirit of tenant farmers and savours too much of charity.

I also regret to add that within my own knowledge, that when receipts are given for rent with abatements, that advantage has been taken of it to write on the receipt, "In discharge of all improvements,"—and in another case that I know of, a tenant had to pay several years' back abatements when leaving the farm, because each receipt given him had written on it, "On acct."

Mr. Grove.

38,778. Do you produce one of the receipts?—No, I do not, but the letter there refers to it.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,779. I do not quite follow that?—Abatement was granted, and the receipt was given. The landlord writes on the receipt "On account." The tenant leaves after some years, and he is called upon to pay up some arrears. The man is in court to-day, if I could only get him to come into the witness box, but I cannot.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,780. You mean at the date of the receipt it should be in full discharge?—In full discharge.

38,781. Instead of giving a receipt for the abatement, and thus releasing the tenant the words "On account" were put, which of course, left it an open question as to whether the arrears could or could not be recovered?—Yes.

Chairman.

38,782. Is it impossible to get this tenant to come forward?—I will see what I can do by the afternoon. It is a matter which should be cleared up, and a thing of this description should be known.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,783. May I ask you to explain a little further. What was the account which was kept running. Were they arrears at some previous time?—The understanding was that the rent should be reduced by a certain amount.

38,784. That was in the nature of an abatement?—Yes, but when the receipt was given the tenant found on the face of the receipt the words "On account."

38,785. May I ask if that is the only instance of "On account"—in reference to the question of abatement?—I believe so.

38,786. I have a case in my own mind in which a certain year's payment for rent was not made for a totally distinct purpose, not a question of abatement, and from that time forward there has been a receipt "On account"; because the tenant paid a certain portion of the arrears off year by year. That has gone on for years and a receipt has been given "On account." I ask you this question: Can you say that where the receipt was given "On account," it was given because of the abatement only?—I cannot say anything beyond the letter that Mr. Grove now has in his hands. That letter makes it perfectly clear it is a question of rent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,787. The amount asked for when he left to pay the arrears of rent?—Yes.

38,788. And the only arrears were the amounts abated?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

38,789. Did he pay the full rent with the exception of the abatement?—Yes.

38,790. He had paid it up to that date?—Yes, he had paid it up to that date.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,791. So that it was abatement only?—Yes. I believe I am reading that letter perfectly accurately in the way in which I put it.

Chairman.

A note has been handed up to me by Mr. Vincent who represents the landlords in which he says "Will you ask who the landlord is? I "might get a guarantee out of him if I knew "who he was." I do not propose to ask that question, unless I have it as an absolute certainty from Mr. Vincent that there is no "might" in the question, but that there is an absolute guarantee given.

Mr. Vincent. If he is one of the landlords I represent I can give it; if he is not, I cannot.

Chairman.

You pledge yourself if he is one of the landlords you represent, that there is an absolute guarantee given.

Mr. Vincent. Yes.

Chairman.

That question need not be answered.

The Witness.

I think it is only fair that we should know who Mr. Vincent does represent in this county. I think he has taken rather an advantage.

Chairman.

Can you do that?

Mr. Vincent. It would take sometime to go through all the names of the people I represent.

The Witness.

Then I decline.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,792. This tenant has left the farm apparently?—Yes.

38,793. Is he a farmer now?—Yes, and doing well. Will you kindly read the letter?

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,794. I see it speaks of a sum of 70*l.*?—If you say any more, Sir John, you had better give the name at once.

Chairman.

38,795. That question is put and refused; but I am bound to put this question to you. Without the sanction of the tenant it would be impossible to give the name of landlord or tenant?—I have nothing but that letter before me and I do not see how I can go beyond that. When a man says at the end of his letter, "For "God's sake do not give my name," what can I do?

38,796. That is the answer?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,797. Whatever the amount was you understood that that included the abatements only?—Not only from that letter, but from what I have known previously of my own knowledge and from information from many people in the neighbourhood, I am perfectly satisfied of the fact that the amount referred to was abatement only. I have another letter which will support that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,798. Did he pay the arrears?—Yes. I may say that letter which I now hand in is from another brother. It was in consequence of that first letter that I wrote to the other brother. There is a gentleman present in the room who holds a public position, and I challenge him to state, what he is reported to have stated—I refer to the Rev. Mr. Phillips. I have not spoken to him, or seen him on the matter at all, but the information handed to me is this:—that Mr. Phillips was one of these men who received a receipt with the words "on acct." on the face of it. It will be possible to verify this if you call him later on.

Chairman.

38,799. That is the proper way to do it. You give us to understand that the Rev. Mr. Phillips can state that?—Yes. That is information received since I have been before the Commission to-day.

38,800. The Rev. Mr. Phillips is a tenant of Mr. Campbell Davys?—Yes.

38,801. And has received an abatement of rent?—Yes, and there is the same thing on the face of the receipt.

38,802. There is something on the face of the receipt of the nature which you have described?—Yes. I cannot speak of my own knowledge. I am only speaking from information sent up to me here, now.

38,803. We shall ask the reverend gentleman afterwards if that information is correct?—I hope so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

38,804. If this money was claimed at any future time, in your mind, it would reduce it from an abatement to a loan?—I cannot conceive that an abatement could be regarded as a loan.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,805. It would be a loan in the peculiar circumstance of the man not knowing it was due?—Coupled with the peculiar fact of the man being called upon to pay it when he left.

Chairman.

38,806. Will you please proceed with your evidence?—I do not suggest that these practices are common, but I am in a position to prove that this has been done. There are very many instances in this particular district where tenant farmers could not have paid their rent had it not been for assistance they had received from some of the other children who were brought up on the same hearth, and who were not possessed of greater ability or application than they had, but who had by the force of circumstances been compelled to seek their livelihood in other channels. It is difficult to suggest a remedy. I should like to see land reduced in rent, and all encumbrances on estates reduced to a corresponding degree; State loans to tenants to purchase their own farms, provided suitable precautions are taken that these farms are purchased at reasonable prices, and that they do not pay twice over for their own improvements; abolition of the game laws; simpler and less expensive transfer of land and registration of titles. If one goes into the Land Court in the State of Kansas you can simply ask for plot so and so, and you can see to whom the land belongs, and whether it is mortgaged or not. You can turn to a ledger and see it. I do not say that it is possible to do that in this country, but we can go some way in that direction. I am told by a man in our neighbourhood that he bought a farm for 3,000*l.*, that the cost was

65*l.*; then he had a mortgage, and the mortgage, I believe, cost 85*l.*, besides many other expenses. I would suggest light railways, at the expense of the State, but the land at the expense of the adjoining owners—that tenants should go in for better breeds of stock, and a more modern system of doing dairy work. One of the many mistakes that tenant farmers will persist in doing is to cask their butter in summer for winter use as of old, forgetting that butter of splendid quality can be, and is being imported, even from the uttermost parts of the earth, as Australia, and New Zealand, and delivered at our homes within six weeks. So important is the fresh produce for the English market, in the eyes of the Australians, that they pledge themselves at some of their Chambers of Commerce to give preference for freight to vessels carrying refrigerating chambers.

I think it also only fair that some distinctive mark should be placed as far as practicable on all foreign produce. I believe that tenant farmers would become more manly, straightforward, and fearless if they felt themselves less in the power of the landlord than at present, and the only way that I can see is the establishment of a land court, which can be appealed to in extreme cases only. This court cannot affect a good landlord; and the majority of landlords, after all, come under that designation; neither can it affect industrious tenants, but it should be a terror to unjust landlords and slothful, indolent tenants. There are many landlords who are now giving better treatment to their tenants than they could expect from an appeal to any land court, but there are others with whom tenants can only fairly negotiate by resort to some independent tribunal. Besides it would act as a very great deterrent to prevent landlords taking advantage of tenants and vice versâ.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,807. Will you kindly look at the first agreement that you have put in, of Mr. Evan Evans. There are certain reservations?—Yes.

38,808. First the timber and game?—Yes.

38,809. And secondly, power to enter for the purpose of inspecting the repairs and planting trees, and thirdly, power to enter to cut down timber and underwood. I do not see in that part of the agreement any undertaking on the part of the lessor to make fair compensation for any damage done by the exercise of those powers?—I may say that the landlord, Mr. Campbell Davys, is before the Commission to-day in Court, and I took the opportunity of writing to inform Mr. Campbell Davys that I would put this agreement in, or rather that I would refer to the estate, and as my brother is here, who is the tenant, and the landlord on this particular agreement is here, I think it would be better if it were left to them. But there is nothing on the face of the agreement that shows it.

38,810. Then look at David Evans's agreement which you have also put in. The first thing that strikes me on this agreement (which is an agreement of the 29th September 1886), is that Section 33 of the Agricultural Holdings Act is not to apply. That is as to notice?—Yes.

38,811. Then do you wish to say anything about the clause for determining upon breach of the covenants and conditions, or being convicted of any offence against the game laws?—I beg to submit that there are so many conditions in this agreement that it is impossible for the tenant to keep them. The question of the game laws is the first. Then there is the part as to taking 10 acres of land, which is lower down in the agreement. Then "if at any time the lessee shall receive notice requiring payment in advance of rent due"—that the rent in advance shall be treated as rent in arrears. To an impecunious tenant, supposing that this man were so, it is a very harsh condition.

38,812. "If at any time the lessee shall receive notice requiring payments in advance of rent due on any Quarter Day subsequent to such notice, all such rent shall at once be considered due, and payable in advance, and may then be recovered as rent in arrear." You complain of that?—I do.

38,813. The effect of that seems to me that, we will say on the 1st July, the landlord may give notice to the tenant that the rent due on the 29th September shall be paid in advance, and thereupon, according to this clause, it becomes rent in arrear?—Yes. Then the next clause.

38,814. "In consideration of the lessee undertaking to keep the land in good heart and condition, and undertaking to execute the improvements mentioned in the first schedule of the said Act?"—Yes.

38,815. That implies making buildings and so on, and fencing, and silos—"the rent shall be thirty-seven pounds per annum, instead of forty pounds, which should be, and has hitherto been the rental of the farm, inasmuch as the lessor has spent large sums in building without charging any interest thereon." You say that is virtually endeavouring to contract out of part 1 of the schedule of the Act of 1883?—Yes, and what is recited is not correct as to facts. The tenant says that no buildings were erected beyond a small sloping shed for calves against the barn, and a small pigstye, and he also says that a reduction from 40*l.* to 37*l.* was not in consequence of those improvements, but that there were two acres of land taken away. I am only stating what I have been informed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,816. What will be the estimated cost of those two buildings mentioned—the pigstye and so on?—I cannot give it.

Lord Kenyon.

38,817. He has made no estimate?—I have no idea of what it would be.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,818. Then this clause seems strong: "The "lessee to pay further yearly rent by quarterly "payments, recoverable by distress at the "rates following, namely:—At the rate of 50*l.* for "every acre of meadow, pasture, or woodlands, "which shall be pared or broken up; 10*l.* for "every acre of arable land not cultivated in "manner herein-after mentioned; 5*l.* for every "ton of hay, and 3*l.* for every ton of straw, "green crop, or fodder sold, or carried off the "farm, without the consent of the lessor, unless "an equal amount of good manure shall have "been brought on and vouchers and samples "for the same have been produced to the "satisfaction of the lessor." Is that complained "of in the neighbourhood?—I do not know that it is complained of in the neighbourhood, but I wish to point out this, that the freehold of the farm is not worth the money. There is no land in that district worth 50*l.* an acre.

38,819. Then there is another clause lower down. "If the lessee neglect to repair after "12 days' notice in writing to do so, the lessor "may repair and may deduct the lessee's share "of the cost from any valuation owing to the "lessee, or may recover it as rent in arrear." Do you complain of that?—12 days' notice seems on the face of it not to be necessary in my opinion. Then there is the next clause. "The lessor may set off against any claims" and so on.

38,820. "The lessor may set off against any "claims for compensation by the lessee under "the terms of this agreement the cost, or "estimated cost, of any repairs necessary at the "end of the tenancy and moneys or payments "due or accruing to him under the terms of "this agreement, and any estimated damage "resulting from breach of any provision of the "agreement by the lessee, also the reduction of "3*l.* per annum now given in full compensation "for any improvements executed or to be made "by him on the premises, and doth hereby "agree that such annual reduction of 3*l.* per "annum shall be considered as a benefit within "the meaning of section 6 of the said Act." So that you say that virtually the 3*l.* that is given in the earlier part as consideration for the avoiding of the effect of the Agricultural Holdings Act is taken back again by the landlord under this clause?—Yes, it is taken back again, and also further this clause itself is wide enough to make it impossible for a tenant farmer to claim anything for improvements at all.

38,821. Seemingly if the lessee claims compensation, the landlord may meet him by this reduction of 3*l.*, and charge it as rent in arrear?—Yes, and also the improvements in putting up the buildings.

38,822. Certainly it does seem a little inconsistent with what has gone before. Then "not "to depasture any agistment stock of any kind "upon the said farm in the last year of this "tenancy, under a penalty of 4*l.* for every head "of live stock that shall be so depastured "thereon." Do you complain of that in your experience?—I do not know quite how it applies to the farm. The sheep I do understand, but I do not understand what right the landlord had over the cattle on the tenant's farm.

38,823. Mr. Griffiths suggests that the object of that clause is to prevent the tenant farmer taking the cattle of other persons. Then I see that the custom of the country is not to have any operation upon the contract of tenancy?—No.

38,824. "All matters in dispute under this "agreement and claims for compensation shall "be settled by reference in manner provided "by the said Act, but without any appeal to "the County Court." Your point there I suppose is that the appeal is given by the Act to the County Court by the effect of the statute?—Unfortunately I have a case here where appeal was made to the County Court, and the Statute of Limitations was put in as a defence by the landlord. You will find that in connexion with my brother's evidence later on.

38,825. Are there many cases of application to the County Courts under the Act of 1883?—I do not know of many.

38,827. If you please. I am only reading it in order that we may have the benefit of any remarks that you wish to make?—I may say that this agreement was copied by my brother, and it is done as correctly as he could copy it. There are some little errors in it, but they do not affect the sense whatever. In consequence of having a lease, the rent is increased by 20*l.* Then there is an extraordinary clause, I think—"yielding and delivering in the month "of December" (the worst month of the year) "in every year during the said term at Neuadd-"fawr aforesaid two tons of best bituminous "coal, and will at the same time deliver to the "said lessor, his heirs or assigns, or his or their "steward, the merchant's certificate of the "quality thereof."

Lord Kenyon.

38,828. Are all these written agreements, may I ask?—I have not the originals.

38,829. They are all written?—Yes, they are all written, so far as I know. I have only seen copies.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,830. I did not refer to that agreement, because that is your brother, and I understood you to say you wanted to pass by that?—Yes, but I thought I would call your attention to that part of it.

38,831. Is that payment of coal usual on Mr. Campbell Davys' estate?—I really cannot say.

Chairman.

38,832. Is it enforced?—It is a very unusual clause. At least I point out that clause particularly to show the splendid relationship that exists between landlord and tenant, and that the tenant has to bring actually the merchant's certificate as to the quality of the coal.

38,833. Is that clause enforced?—The tenant has left the farm.

38,834 Yes, but it is always enforced; does your brother produce this two tons of coal?—But he has left.

38,835. Did he deliver the coal?—No. You will find the agreement was never signed.

38,836. It was set aside?—Yes. I wish to just further say in reference to this lease that a second name is introduced into it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,837. What is that for—guarantor for the rent, to recover it?—On the face of it, yes, but as a matter of fact, at the time we were under the impression that it was not that. Then comes the fencing of the Leave Hill "to fence "and enclose the whole of the hill boundaries, "wherever at present unfenced, as well as "those abutting upon the Leave Hill, with a "fence to be composed and made of six No. 5 "best annealed drawn fencing wire, and will at "all times during the said term maintain and "keep the same in good repair and condition, "and will at the expiration or other determina-"tion of the said term leave the wire fence on "the said premises for the benefit of the lessor, "his heirs and assigns."

38,838. That is to say, the tenant had to buy the annealed drawn fencing wire?—Yes, and as a matter of fact he did so, and put them up and left them there.

38,839. Then this a somewhat antiquated clause again. "To grind the whole of the grain "and corn produced on the said demised lands "during the continuance of the said term at "at Abergwenlas Mill, in the parish of Cilycwm "aforesaid"?—Yes, but the worst clause of all is the clause about the sheep. "To permit the lessor, "his heir or assigns, or any person or persons "authorised by him or them in the last year of "the said term to enter on the said lands to "sow clover or other grass seeds with the "spring crop of corn, and harrow and roll the "same, and will not graze or feed off, or permit "his or their cattle or sheep to go thereon "under a penalty of one pound per head." If cattle strayed in, the tenant would have very little to take with him. There is no provision for any accident of any sort. Then "to leave without compensation all dung and "compost which shall be produced in the last "year of the said term for the benefit of the lessor, "his heirs or assigns, or his or their incoming "tenant." As a matter of fact, my brother will prove that he paid for that, and that he had his landlord's word that he would be paid in a similar manner when he left.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,840. What is the custom with regard to manure, is it generally left on the premises?—On this estate it is so, and I believe in the neighbourhood, but I would rather you asked that of some tenant farmer. Then there is a condition lower down again, which seems to hedge in the farmer in every possible way.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,841. With regard to this penalty of 1*l.*, if one head of cattle went in for one hour, the 1*l.* damages would have to be paid?—Yes, and if 20 went in, 20*l.*

38,842. If 20 young cattle went in there for half an hour, and they were driven off, then there is 20*l.* according to the interpretation of this clause, to be paid?—Yes, that is so. Then later on: "That he will upon the satisfac-"tory completion by the lessee of a substantial "wire fence as aforesaid, erect and build a "pigstye and carthouse." He first of all sees that his tenant spends about 70*l.* in putting up wire fencing, which he has to leave on the farm without compensation when he quits, and then he will have a carthouse and pigsty, put up at his landlord's expense.

38,843. You have put in these agreements, and they will be printed and we shall consider their effect?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

38,844. With regard to the first part of your evidence, you say that one farmer left on account of the game laws. That I see was previous to the passing of the Hares and Rabbits Bill?—Yes. I mentioned that because I met him in Kansas in America.

38,845. Did he complain of the rabbits, too? What portion of the game laws was it he complained of?—As a matter of fact, I asked him how it was he was out in the State of Kansas farming, and he said he would have been farming in the county of Carmarthen at the present day had it not been for the game laws.

38,846. It is rather a vague statement?—He was so fond of the gun—he could not possibly put a gun on one side.

38,847. Perhaps he had been poaching?—No.

38,848. It is called poaching sometimes?—Perhaps it is poaching for a man to kill game on land he pays rent for, I am not prepared to admit it myself.

38,849. Perhaps he had been found killing game—an offence against the laws. Then this contracting out of the clause of the Act is only with respect to the clause that you are allowed to contract out of?—Only that it is compulsory, and that men have to leave if they do not do it—they have notice to quit.

38,850. Have these agreements been offered to them after they have been in possession of their farms?—Men who have been on the estate for a quarter of a century.

38,851. This clause is put in?—Then they have notice that they have these agreements to sign, and in consequence of refusing to sign they have notice to quit, and if they do sign, the notice is withdrawn.

38,852. You say here, "one landlord, to my "knowledge, has it printed in all his agree-"ments that hares and rabbits are included "with other game"?—I have put that in.

38,853. Who is the landlord?—The name is on the face of it.

38,854. The Llwynybrain estate. That is Mr. Pryse-Rice. Is that what you complain of—that hares and rabbits are included with other game?—Yes, inclusive of hares and rabbits.

38,855. I see in the agreement, "also all "game, wild fowl, and fish, inclusive of hares "and rabbits." It is only according to the terms of the Ground Game Act, I suppose?—I should be very glad to have some light upon the fact why that is included, unless it is to convey to the tenant-farmer that he is not to kill hares and rabbits. What possible advantage can there be?

38,856. I do not see any advantage in putting it in at all, either to the tenant or landlord?—Except to convey the intention.

38,857. I mean, it is a matter of fact that the landlord has a concurrent right with the tenant-farmer?—And it is equally a fact that in this district the tenant-farmers dare not kill their hares and rabbits.

38,858. That is quite another thing. You say you have known instances where tenants keep neither ferrets nor guns, but you are prepared to say that that is on one estate only, and it is a very large estate. Would you mind stating what that estate is?—Am I to state it?

38,859. Just as you please; I mean you made a statement that it is only one estate, and it is only fair to state what that estate is?—Neuadd-fawr estate.

38,860. Whose is that?—Mr. Campbell Davys'. I am not speaking of the present time. I cannot say what has occurred in the last few years.

38,861. You wish to abolish the game laws, you say?—Yes, distinctly.

38,862. What do you mean by that?—I believe that tenant-farmers or farmers that pay rent for land should have co-equal rights with their landlords, so that it would be impossible to make a tenant-farmer contract himself out of the right to kill his own game.

38,863. Have you any experience of where such a case has happened?—I have no experience of it except in practice.

38,865. Have you any experience of tenants letting the game?—Underletting—yes, I have. I have a case in my mind's eye now, which I think the Commission ought to know. I have not the permission of the landlord or the tenant to bring it forward, but it is a well-known and notorious case in this county, where the largest tenant farmer in the county, the man, who, I believe, pays the largest amount of rent in the county, received notice to quit within the last two years because of a difference that arose between himself and the gentleman who had the shooting rights over his land.

38,866. But you misapprehend me; have you any knowledge of tenants letting the shooting on their farms?—No, none.

38,867. None?—I do not think they have ever had the chance in this district.

38,868. I have had experience the other way, that I rent several farms from the tenants themselves. Do you think there would be quite as much game as the land could support if the tenants had their own shooting?—I do.

38,869. Some people differ from you, I think?—I am surprised to hear it.

38,870. I hope you will forward those convictions under the game laws; they would be very interesting?—I will do so.

38,871. I think you said with regard to that agreement of your brother's, that coal was never delivered?—I would rather he spoke upon that himself. But, while we are on the subject of game, I may mention this, that my brother, when sowing the seed on this farm, could not cover it over with the harrow before the pheasants pecked some of it, so plentiful was the game, and that when they went out coursing one day, two dogs were slipped from the leash, and they got perfectly stupified, and did not know where to go, because there were so many hares on the field. I am speaking now of years ago.

38,872. That is previous to the Act?—Yes.

38,873. With regard to the clause as to the sheep, in which you said there was a penalty of 1*l.* a head. Would not that be in order to protect the incoming tenant as a matter of fact. It says, "If the lessor, his heirs or assigns"—as a matter of fact it would be the incoming tenant. You said with reference to the clause with regard to the sheep that there is a penalty of 1*l.* per head for the sheep trespassing on newly-sown seeds. That would be to protect the incoming tenant, if there was any carelessness on the part of the outgoing tenant?—It all depends upon whether there is an incoming tenant to come in, but in this particular case the farm was in the hands of the landlord for the ensuing year.

38,874. But we have had evidence that farms are very seldom vacant in this part?—Yes, and if I may be allowed, I should like to point out to the Commission that some of the best land in this county has been obliged to lay fallow because they could not get sufficient rent.

38,875. The incoming tenant might be the landlord himself, or anyone taking it from him. It seems to me to be a merely protective clause?—The only way in which I differ from you, my Lord, is this, that the penalty is utterly absurd.

38,876. It is too stringent, you think?—Entirely so.

38,877. Yes, but there should be some penalty for the protection of the incoming tenant?—I should very much like to know where the protection of the tenant comes in in this agreement. I have looked in vain for a single clause protecting him.

38,878. Then with regard to this payment of rent when due: "all such rent shall at once be "considered due and payable in advance, and "may then be recovered as rent in arrear"?—Yes.

38,879. Do you complain of the rent not being paid when it is due?—No.

38,880. I do not understand your complaint then?—My complaint is this, that it is possible for the landlord upon any whim of his to send notice to his tenant and say that he wants this quarter's rent as well as the next one, and that he can treat both quarters rent as in arrear and issue a distress.

38,881. Would it be wise for the landlord to ask for the rent when it is not due? As a matter of fact it is generally paid after it is due?—I should like him to follow the customs of the country, and not put that in the agreement.

38,882 As a matter of fact the rent is paid after it is due. Do you suggest it should be paid before it is due?—No, I do not suggest that.

38,883. Would you suggest that he should give three months' notice?—No, I suggest he should follow the customs of the country, and not markedly take out the customs of the country from his agreements to overawe his tenants.

38,884. It is only a question of his right to collect it when it is due?—It is only a question of what the landlord's rights are.

38,885. I presume his right is to collect it when it is due; if he chooses to give three months' notice that is another thing?—My contention is that the first returns are due to the man who tills the land, and not to the landlord.

38,886. I only point out that the rent is due three months in advance?—It is not due until it is made to be due.

38,887. It is not usually due until it is made to be due, but by this it is?—Yes, that is what I complain of. It is an agreement that is unheard of, I think.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,888. If the landlord had no right prior to all other claims you would have thought, perhaps, that there might be something in that?—I think there might be something in that, but at the same time I believe that it would be wiser for this landlord to refuse to let his land at all than to go and inflict conditions of this sort, which it is impossible for the tenant to keep.

38,889. But as long as the landlord has a preferential claim, you do not think there is any sufficient ground for inserting such a clause as that?—It is quite unnecessary.

Lord Kenyon.

38,890. The penalties seem to be very excessive with regard to the ploughing up of pasture, I suppose you admit there should be some penalty?—Yes, certainly.

38,891. Because otherwise a tenant farmer might farm so as to destroy the value?—Yes.

38,892. They are very excessive?—Yes, but what I want to point out on the whole agreement is this. I have a note here in my evidence that one mistake would ruin the tenant.

38,894. It is rather a favourite hobby of mine, and I was glad to see it mentioned in your statement, and I was sorry you did not read it out?—It was an oversight entirely. I would suggest light railways at the expense of the State, but the land at the expense of the adjoining owners. I am led to make the remark because in the Western States of America the railways are put down, and not only do they have the land for nothing but they have a square mile of land alternately on either side of the railway for laying down the line through a new country. But as these light railways would be made for the benefit of the adjoining land in this country, I think that we should not have the trouble to get land for improvements of that sort that there is usually, and that the land should really be practically paid for by those who benefit by it.

38,895. May I ask you how the landlord would benefit by the light railways?—He would have benefit to this extent, that he would have tenants who would remain on the farm and pay him rent.

38,896. Would that be an increased rent?—No, but my opinion is this, and I am sorry to have to say so, that I fully believe that if things continue as they are, rents will be reduced to one half.

38,897. You think that such things as light railways would tend to maintain the rents?—They will maintain the rents better.

38,898. I think you said this, that the tenant should go in for better breeds of stock?—Yes.

38,899. And that there should be a more modern system for dairying?—Yes. We are doing what we can in this county in order to bring that about, but it is a slow process.

38,900. With regard to the better breeding of stock, do any of the landlords in this county assist in regard to that; do they keep any bulls or shire horses?—There is a Stud Company, and many landed proprietors and successful tradesmen subscribe to that, and there are many good horses, but I do not know much about it.

38,901. It is a travelling company?—Yes.

38,902. And it does good?—Yes.

38,903. What is the condition of things with regard to dairy work?—We spend 500*l.* a year in dairy work in this county here now.

38,904. We heard yesterday that the lectures were successful and well attended?—Yes, and particularly the dairy schools. We have lectures and dairy schools, and we have 12 scholarships for girls who go up to Aberystwith each year. That was started last year. Then again, if those girls show any particular aptitude they will be selected to do dairy work as a kind of assistant teachers.

38,905. Do you find plenty of dairymaids willing to go?—Yes; the competition unfortunately caused a good deal of friction, because so many wanted to go.

Lord Kenyon.

38,905*a.* You also wish that a distinctive mark should be placed on all foreign produce. I am glad to see you say in your evidence at the end that the majority of landlords are after all good.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,906. I just wish to examine you on one point, and one only, that is with regard to the game laws. If I have followed your evidence correctly, you wish to secure the same sort of rights to the tenant farmers that the landlord now has?—That is so.

38,907. Some kind of game laws would be required to protect the interest of the tenant farmer?—Oh yes. I only want to go as far as to let those who live on the farms and their landlords have co-equal rights.

38,908. You do not suggest the repeal of those statutes which have modified the common law of trespass in regard to game offences?—No, I do not, excepting so far as the rivers are concerned. I think that the rivers ought to be free to anyone.

38,909. What I mean is this: you think that unless of course game is to entirely disappear, there must be some statutory regulation of the right of killing game?—No doubt about that.

38,910. But your point is that the existing law or custom—call it what you like—is unfair on the tenant farmers, the actual occupiers of the land?—That is so. There was some evidence that was put into my hands which I had forgotten to attend to to-day, showing the inconvenience which is caused by the farms being exchanged without the tenants knowing any thing at all about it. [Witness handed in statement] The man is here himself, and if you wish to call him at a later period will you please do so. I cannot speak at all as to it myself; I do not know anything about it.

Lord Kenyon.

38,911. I might point out to you that the occupier has the right to kill game unless it is expressly reserved by the agreement?—It is expressly reserved.

38,912. As a rule it is?—Yes.

38,913. Then of course the tenant need not sign unless he likes?—It is a question whether the tenant farmer is a free contractor, and I am prepared to argue that he is not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

38,914. What law do you abolish. That is what is in Lord Kenyon's mind and in mine?—I do not wish to abolish the game laws provided it be made impossible for a tenant farmer to be deprived of the right to shoot game—that it applied to a tenant farmer or those working on the soil.

38,915. Then you suggest that the Ground Game Act should be extended to all game?—Certainly, unquestionably.

Chairman.

38,916. Is this gentleman whom you have mentioned ready to come forward?—Yes, he is here.

38,917. Is he prepared to state what appears upon the document you have handed in?—Yes, when it suits your Lordship.

Mr. Griffiths.

38,918. You confirm what we have heard at various places that the tenant farmer really refuses to come forward although he has had permission of his landlord to come?—I have never been more certain of anything in my life. There are men in this room to-day that I know, who have complained to me for years and years of different things, and I cannot get them to step into the box and say one word. I had to send to Monmouthshire for my brother to come down to give evidence.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

38,919. Would you kindly explain in which way tenant farmers are less self-reliant than you think they ought to be. Is their position more humiliating, or how do you explain it?—I can only speak of the customs of the country. 25 years ago when I was a boy in this neighbourhood, I remember distinctly upon coming to the town here or elsewhere that tenant farmers did not seem to have the respect that they ought to have for themselves; if they saw their landlord at one end of the street and they were at the other, they would touch their hat and say "there is master." It is perfectly true, and up to the present day the conditions of the tenant farmer are such that when a gentleman who is now present in the room intended coming forward for the county council, he had no end of trouble in getting a seconder to his paper, and what canvassing he did, I understand, was done at night. Notwithstanding that, he was returned to the county council with a majority of 13 or 17 votes over his opponent, the squire of the parish. Those are facts which you can verify before the Commission to-day.

38,920. Then with regard to the hard life of the farmer, do you consider that many farmers' wives actually work harder than the farmers themselves?—I believe that farmers and their wives, and particularly the children, work harder than any other class in the county. I may say, if you will allow me, that unless the custom is altered very considerably, the boys and girls of tenant farmers used to earn their breakfast before they got it, and had to go to school, and after they went home from school they had a lot to do also.

38,921. Do you think that the children are in consequence able to compete with the labourers' children?—I think that their early training makes them so that they can live anywhere.

38,922. I mean to say with regard to the time they have to study their lessons in, before they go to school. Have they the same chance as the labourers' children?—No. There comes in the fact that many of the tenant farmers are so imperfectly educated, and I refer the Commission to a letter I have handed up to-day, written within the last fortnight.

38,923. You mentioned a good deal about the game laws and so forth, but there is a unwritten game law on this estate, is there not?—Yes.

38,924. Which they are rather more afraid of than the other. It is rather the dark side of the question, is it not, to find that you are obliged to go to reformatories to get labourers for the district?—I can only say that when I was here as a lad (I was here till I was over 17 years old) I attended the Welsh chapel here, and the seats in the gallery were full of men trained to the work—what they call gwas mawr and ail was—the different terms for the chief servant and second servant. The very farms where these men were then I have an intimate knowledge of, because I have a large number of uncles, aunts, brothers, and sisters farming in the district, and I am surprised to find that now these boys take the position of those men.

38,925. Do you consider that many farmers' children go elsewhere instead of staying at home on the farms?—The feeling is so among the boys, particularly if they can get a little education, and I am bound to say that in this particular district they have always had great educational advantages, in consequence of the excellent school which there is here. I do not believe any district in Wales can show a larger number of men who have gone in for the professions, medical, legal, and the Church, than the immediate district of Llandovery, owing to the fact of their having such an excellent school close by.

38,926. Then you mentioned with regard to the gamekeeper that he is very much studied in this neighbourhood, is he not?—Yes; always has been as far as I remember.

38,927. What is your opinion with regard to that. Do you think that if the landlords were to give the game entirely to the tenants, and have them for their gamekeepers, that they would have any support?—I give you an instance: I am prepared to name the farm, if necessary, where a man has never been troubled with a gamekeeper at all. His landlord lives in another county, and though I have been intimately acquainted and closely connected with this farm for 20 years, and I am very fond of the gun, yet I have never been over that farm, and never would have asked, because he was so thoroughly trusted by his landlord. He takes the greatest pride in putting out corn to keep the game until his landlord and his friends come down.

38,928. You think it a hard case if the landlord can ask whoever he pleases to go over your farm, and you cannot ask the best friend you have to go?—I may say there is nothing I should like more than a week over by my old home, and I have not been on the farm for 20 years.

38,929. You have been to see your brother in Monmouthshire, I presume?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

38,930. Do you consider that they are in a better position there to farm than they are here; are the farmers, as a rule, on better terms?—They are on very much better terms, and they have smaller rents and have greater liberty.

38,931. Is it possible that any landlord in this district would compel a tenant to come into a farm, pay for all the manure and the seeds, and let that tenant leave the farm without having a penny of compensation for it. I am referring to what you say in your statement with regard to that?—This is what one of the tenants says:—"The contract was, that whenever I moved from there I was to receive the "two last items back from the landlord or incoming tenant. Mr. Campbell Davys' bargain "was to repair the house for me, but when the "time came to move into it he said that he had "been offered 20*l.* more rent for the farm, and "I had to repair it myself before I could set up "a bed in the house. It cost me 10*l.*"

38,932. Do you know of many instances where children have gone to get their livelihood elsewhere, and have assisted their parents in paying the rent?—Yes, there are many instances in this district.

38,933. In the majority of cases in this district if a land court or any other outside authority were established, do you consider that the majority of the cases would be settled without going to the land court?—I think it would have a deterrent effect, and that it would be unnecessary, except in extreme cases only. May I refer to the statement of my evidence, upon a formal matter, as to whether it would not be as well to ask my brother James to corroborate that statement, so as to make him a witness.

38,934. Which portion of your statement do you refer to?—I say in my statement, "My "brother James is a tenant farmer living at "Dolauhirion." I just want to call him to corroborate what I say there. See 39,118.

38,935. Is he in the room?—He is here. I want to make him a witness, that is all.

Chairman.

38,936. Mr. Vincent submits that that portion of the statement of your evidence setting out the evidence of your brother is not evidence at all till the gentleman has been called, so to save the time of the Commission, I propose to call upon your brother as an incidental witness.

Mr. EVAN EVANS called, and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

38,937. You wish to give your evidence as it appears in this statement?—Yes.

38,938. It is accurate as it appears there?—Yes.

38,939. It has been read over to you, and you perfectly understand it?—Yes. There are some few words which are not right, but nothing of importance.

Chairman—continued.

The statement of the Witness was read as follows:—

Evidence of Evan Evans, The Farm, Penrhos, Abergavenny, Monmouthshire:—

I live now at the above farm, which consists of 308 acres of arable and pasture land, on which are employed my four sons, two servant boys, my two daughters, and a servant girl, besides my wife and myself, who all work upon the farm.

Chairman—continued.

The landlord lives at Bournemouth.

I began farming on my own account at Garth, Llandingat, Carmarthenshire, under the late Mr. John Jones, Blaenos, and lived there very happily for six years, and I found him a good landlord.

In 1859 I removed to Cwmfranfawr, Cilycwm, under Mr. Campbell Davys. This farm was 282 acres of arable, pasture, and hill land. Rent 100*l.* The farm was out of condition, and I began to improve it. The first amount I had to pay there was 70*l.* to Mr. T. Morgan, the outgoing tenant, as follows:—

Hauling to buildings, &c. -	25	0	0
To lime - - -	10	0	0
To yard manure - -	30	0	0

The contract was, that whenever I moved from there I was to receive the last two items back from the landlord or incoming tenant. Mr. Campbell Davys' bargain was to repair the house for me, but when the time came to move into it, he said that he had been offered 20*l.* more rent for the farm, and I had to repair it myself before I could set up a bed in the house. It cost me 10*l.*

When I settled down I began to work on the farm by draining, pulling away old hedges, and planting new ones, to straighten the fences, and have an entrance from the road, making gates, and raising some of the buildings, carrying to repair, dairy, kitchen, and barn, &c.

1860.—I began to drain in Caecadno, and made in that field 168 perches. No allowance. Cost, 14*l.* 14*s.* 0*d.*

1861.—I drained 56 perches in Caegwarbwlle. No allowance for this also. Cost, 5*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

In 1860 and 1861 I made 14 field gates, and one gate for front of the house, sawing and chipping posts, digging holes for posts, new hinges and hooks to hang 21 gates, also small hooks to fasten them. For this I only had the timber, as and where it was felled. Cost, 10*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

1862 and 1863.—Quarrying, hauling, and breaking stones, and filling 406 loads of them to Caeeithin. Cost, over 30*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

1864.—Quarrying, hauling, breaking, and filling 209 loads of stones to Caeflandrws. Cost, 13*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.*

1865.—Quarrying, hauling, breaking, and filling 60 loads of stones to Caecefn. Cost, 3*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

Also 140 loads, do., to Caeceffyl. Cost, 7*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.*

Built carthouse on forks and thatched with rushes. 2*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

I estimate the cost at the rate paid by my then landlord, viz., 5*s.* to 6*s.*, for a man and team of horses, and it would cost me now half as much again.

Chairman—continued.

I received four or five notices altogether. I cannot say for what reason they were sent me. I also received a notice to have a lease. He said my name would be sufficient, but he wanted to have my brother's also, and I believe I know for what purpose. I used to pay the rent regularly and as punctually as any of the others. I received notice also to contract out of the new Act. When I first went there, it was agreed that I should have all the rabbits. After some years I had to give up ferretting. Ferretting only had been allowed me. The first thing after I gave up ferretting, a man came there to wire them, and killed about 300 every year for a few years, and carried them away on horseback to Noyadd. I have been helping the man to lift them on horseback

I bought two tons of wire and made the fence round 'The Leave,' in conjunction with my neighbours, and carried the timber from Cwmrhaid, all at my own expense, the timber only being given free. Cost, 70*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

I had to carry seven loads of flagstones from Coedshon for dairy tables and floor, and kitchen floor. To perform this journey in a day we had to start at 2 a.m. Cost, 4*l.* 11*s* 0*d.*

During these years I pulled down 180 perches of old hedges, and planted 100 perches of new ones, to square the fields, and have an entrance into them from the road. Cost, 20*l.*

After the Crippe was burnt down I had to build it up, and was allowed only some wood. Cost, 4*l.*

When the lease expired, the yearly rent was raised to 105*l.*

I cut and opened the road to the house, making it wider, and made one culvert. 1*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*

The labourer that lived at Groes Cottage wanted a little beast-house to tie a cow. The landlord would not do it, so I had to make it myself, or lose the tenant. 1*l.* 1*s.* 0*d.*

1878.—To hauling material from Craigybwlch, Coedshon, Glanrhyderryd, and Glanrhydymoch to build pigstyes and w.c. 20*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

To thatching the Groes House with wheat straw. 4*l.*

Game was very plentiful there, the farm being in the centre of the preserve; shooting, only once a year.

I have seen the pheasants so numerous and tame, that they came and picked up the corn, after I sowed it, before the harrows came on to cover it.

At first I kept no sheep on the hills, and I was obliged to purchase some and place them on the mountain land. This put me to great trouble and expense. I took pains to obtain good rams—they were second to none on the mountain anywhere. I received notice that Mr. Campbell Davys required that the sheep should be bound to him on the farm on valuation. I had a large family, and could not find another farm, so I had to submit; but I was not happy there for a single day afterwards. On the 1st of July, 1880, I told Mr. Richard that I could no longer bear to allow the matter to remain so, viz., that my own sheep should be signed over to them, and unless this was altered, and the sheep made over to me, I would quit the farm. He answered that he did not mind, and had no objection if his father would consent. I went in a fortnight to have their reply, and was told that the sheep should not stand in my name. I then said I should quit the farm. He then asked me if I would sign an agreement to do so. I consented on condition that he also signed it. It was agreed that I should give up possession at Michaelmas, and we both signed the paper. This was on July 15, I think. Things went on very well after that until Michaelmas, when we went to value the sheep. We could not agree—they wanted to value them at market price, and I wanted them valued at stock price, as they were to remain as stock upon the farm. This was a difference of at least 6*s.* each. The agreement was silent on this point. We failed to come to an agreement the first day, as each of us stood firm, and would not give in. I sent again to the agent to fix another day, because the time was come for my leaving. When I had got the sheep together ready, the agent came and said that his master would not want the sheep at any price. At the same time he offered me 15*s.* each for the ewes, and 7*s.* each for the lambs. I moved them away at once, and took them to a place close by the town, where they were put up for sale in a week's time, and sold for double the money the agent had offered me. The agent came to the sale, and seeing so many there, tried to say that he had not given up the sheep to me. The ewes were sold, some at 30*s.*, and some at 31*s.* each, the lambs at 15*s.* and 16*s.* each. After the commencement of this dispute about the sheep, they sent men to me with orders that I should carry materials towards the repairing of the house and barn. I did so, believing they would pay me for it, but was allowed nothing. Amount due, 4*l.* 4*s.* Many other instances of a like kind could be given.

Had Mr. Campbell Davys only kept the bargain which we made at the commencement of my tenancy, and which he promised faithfully to fulfil, he would have paid me as under when leaving—

	£	s.	d.
1859—December, for dung -	30	0	0
Do. do. clover (as per bill) -	5	0	0

but not a penny of this sum was repaid me.

There are one or two other things I wish to state. One coursing day there, two dogs were slipped from their leashes, and so many hares rose around them, that the dogs were stupified, and stopped short, not knowing what to do.

Chairman—continued.

I now have the whole of the game and the fishing in my hand, and find it of very great service. I look after the game well, and the farm has on it as much as it will comfortably carry. Neither I nor my sons take any interest in shooting or fishing, but living as we do ten miles from Abergavenny, where the doctor and other customers reside, is very inconvenient, I find that game pays me well, although there is no attempt to make any direct profit out of it; and one of the greatest pleasures I have is to send an occasional supply to my landlord, although it is not a part of my agreement with him.

Mr. Richard Jones.

38,940. I should like before Mr. Evan Evans leaves to ask a question with regard to the amount that was paid to the outgoing tenant—the sum of 70*l.*, hauling to buildings 25*l.*, 10*l.* for lime and so on. When was that haulage done by the outgoing tenant?—A portion had been carried for the buildings a couple of years previously.

38,941. Was it in accordance with your agreement that the outgoing tenant should do the haulage?—I do not know about his agreement—that is, the outgoing tenant's agreement.

38,942. Is it customary for the tenants on the estate to do the haulage without having the privilege of making any charge for it?—Yes, it is. I did a good deal without getting anything for it.

38,943. So that really what was done by the outgoing tenants would also apply to you?—Yes, only that I received no benefit from the buildings, as I had to leave.

38,944. Going to the next clause in the statement, "Mr. Campbell Davys' bargain " was to repair the house for me, but when the " time came to move into it he said that he had " been offered 20*l.* more rent for the farm, and " I had to repair it myself before I could set up " a bed in the house. It cost me 10*l.*" Did he offer this as an excuse for not repairing the house—that he had been bid 20*l.* more rent for it?—I do not know what was present in his mind.

38,945. What was present in your mind?—The answer is sufficient in itself. I had to do it.

38,946. What is the custom with regard to sheep on the mountains as between the incoming and the outgoing tenant?—There are different customs.

38,947. Will you kindly state what are the different customs?—In some estates the sheep are constantly kept on the land.

38,948. And the prices are settled by valuation?—Yes.

38,949. Are they generally valued higher than the market price?—Yes.

38,950. How much per head?—About 6*s.* to 7*s.*

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

38,951. When you went to this farm were there any sheep on the mountain?—They had sold as many as were near the place.

38,952. So that really the outgoing tenant had broken the custom on the estate by selling the sheep off?—Perhaps it was not in his bargain that he should do so.

38,953. At any rate you had the trouble and expense of settling the sheep on the mountain?—Yes.

38,954. And you complain of this, that when you went out the landlord was only willing to pay you really the market price for the sheep?—Yes, and he had no claim to them.

38,955. But would you have any objection to sell them to the incoming tenant provided that you had the 6*s.* or 7*s.* per head more?—I would have no objecting to selling them to the tenant, but on the higher scale.

38,956. Practically of course they would go to the tenant. You say there was a dispute between you and the landlord with respect to these sheep, and you had been trying to bargain together, and at last the agent came and said that his master was not wanting the sheep at any price. Further on you say "At the same "time he offered me 15*s.* each for the ewes and "7*s.* each for the lambs." Did the agent make that offer on his own account?—I do not know.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

38,957. Who was the agent?—Daniel Williams, of Cilycwm.

38,958. How about the manure. When you left the farm did you get payment for it?—No.

38,959. So that really you had to pay for manure when you were entering the farm, and you did not get any when you left?—No, I did not.

38,960. Do you know whether the landlord recovered any payment from the incoming tenant for manure?—No, I cannot say. The land remained vacant for a twelvemonth.

38,961. So that really the landlord had the benefit of the manure?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Then it was a case of confiscation.

Mr. Gwilym Evans re called and further examined.

Chairman.

38,962. Then will you continue the evidence that we were taking?—I should like to put in some notices. Reference was made to notices which my brother has received. He happens to have two or three of them here. Perhaps they will be useful.

38,963. You had better put them in now?—These are copies of the county court papers in the case in which my brother was plaintiff (handing same). This is the original copy which he took of the lease or agreement (handing same). This blue paper referred to an order to go to Coed Shôn quarry for stone flags. I should like that blue paper read very carefully showing the peremptory instructions of Mr. Campbell Davys and the relationship between landlord and tenant.

38,964. Do you wish this blue paper read out. I think it had better be read out?—Very well, my lord.

38,965. It is an order from the landlord to draw the stone flags:—

Mr. Evans, Cwmfranfawr.

"Neuaddfawr, 1st February 1878.

The stone flags to cover Pig-stye yard walls are now ready at Coed Shôn Quarry 13 lineal yards of thin flags not over 2 inches thick and 22 inches wide. Evan the mill is also going, arrange to go together to-morrow.

Yours truly,

R. Campbell Davys.

You should go yourself and take rule to measure the flags to be not over three inches thick."

(Witness.) That refers to this. My brother said he had to carry 7 loads of flags and it just confirms that.

Mr. Seebohm.

38,966. May I call your attention if you please rather more to the general aspects of your evidence. You state I think that the fear of landlords is very general in this district?—Yes, I do.

38,967. Do you think that fear of landlords is chiefly as regards the large landlords or the small ones?—My opinion has been that the older the estate and the older the landlord the better treatment the tenant has.

38,968. And greater or less fear?—They do not come so closely in contact with the tenants as a rule, the tenants have more to do with the agent. Tenants on large estates and on old estates have more to do with the agent than they have to do with the landlord himself. On that particular point I should like to explain one thing. One of the great difficulties that has been experienced in one district in this county has been that on one estate we have had a landlord who has been an absentee landlord. I venture to say, 16 years out of the 20 he has been a good deal out of the country, not only living out of Wales, but out of the country. During that time he has had no less than 4 or 5 agents. Each of those agents comes down and has his own ideas of farming, also, I am sorry to say, they have rather a high opinion of their abilities as compared with those of the tenant farmer, and by the time the tenant farmer understands them the agents have to leave. That is a difficulty, and a very serious difficulty, that farmers have to contend with.

38,969. Do you find the same fear existing as regards a new landlord who has recently purchased an estate?—Yes; I take it that a new landlord is looked upon as a man who is very anxious to get a good return for his money, and he is a man who, as a rule, is not looked upon with favour by tenant farmers. Another class of landlord is the man who has not been trained up who has not had the early training, if you will allow me to say so, the hereditary training of a large landlord who may be placed in that position.

38,970. Would you say that on the good estates there is rather another side to the question—that there is really a very large amount of good feeling existing between landlords and tenants?—Oh, yes, I quite admit a very large amount of good feeling. I could mention an estate in this county—that is Lord Cawdor's estate—where the tenants are so situated that practically I do not believe any land court or any recommendation that might be made by the Commission could to any extent affect the tenants to their advantage.

38,971. So that the case after case of hardship which has been brought before us does not disturb the feeling that you have that on such an estate as Lord Cawdor's estate, there is really a substantially good feeling and one which you would be content with if it were universal?—The only thing in reply to that is this: What I should like to see removed is this feeling of dependence. When they see their sub-agent they treat him with a certain amount of respect; when it comes to the agent it is with considerable deference, not that these men particularly want it. The higher and better the class of landlord or agent the less they wish to have treatment of that sort. Still owing to former treatment, possibly of their fathers, I cannot say what it is, but there is that feeling of fear—uncertainty.

38,972. What you want to see is more independence and manliness?—Certainly; just the same as with the workmen in the towns, like we see at Llanelly. At a meeting there you will find the manager of the works and the proprietor of the works and the workmen in the same meeting, and there is not the slightest fear or hesitation in expressing opinions whether in favour or otherwise of the views held by their employer. In the country it is different, and I have given an instance of it to-day in the case of the election for the last county council.

38,973. I was going to ask you that question—whether there was a better feeling between say colliery owners and factory owners and their workmen, than there is between landlords and tenants?—I do not say there is better feeling, but there is more independent feeling amongst themselves. The collier and the tinplate worker combine, and they demand that as a matter of right which they do not ask individually as a matter of favour. The tenant farmers do not combine, and they are jealous and distrustful of each other.

38,974. Then on the whole, though there may be other sides to it, the combination of workmen has fought out its battle probably better than any interference by the law?—I am prepared to say that, and I am prepared to go further and say that if there is no Land Court, and if my opinion were asked upon the question, I should like to see a land league amongst the farmers.

38,975. Do you think that in any legislation that could be made this feeling of dependence would at all suddenly vanish?—I do not say suddenly, but it would vanish with the education that is now being given to the children, with their greater ability to understand the legislation of the day and to understand their position better. Unfortunately now the small tenant farmer if he wants to understand the Agricultural Holdings Act, or any other Act, or any other resolution or byelaw that is passed, has to go to the town or to the village, and see somebody who knows more about these things than himself, and he has to depend on that to a great extent.

38,976. I understood you to say that you think legislation is required for exceptional cases?—Yes, just as all other protective legislation is, I think.

38,977. But over and above that, what you have in view and what your evidence has in view is a change in the feelings as between landlords and tenants: you want the tenants to be more independent?—I do.

38,979. Do you think there is a good feeling existing between tenant farmers and their labourers?—Well, I am not in a position to answer the question. The system is altogether altered since I was at home on a farm, but at that time there were farm servants and very few labourers—just a few labourers living in cottages and these labourers were not in the service of one particular farmer, but moved about from farm to farm as and when required.

38,980. From year to year?—No, from day to day and week to week.

38,981. Are they hired by the year in this part of the world?—Not the labourers.

38,982. And still do the largest proportion of the labourers live in the houses of the farmers?—My experience coming back now to the old district has been this: I find, for instance, in the old neighbourhood of my home (if I may be allowed to give a case) at that time there used to be a Sunday School in the district; there used to be several farmers and several labourers and a large number of children the sons of labourers and farmers; I go back there now and I find that practically many of these houses are empty and that the hill side is depopulated.

38,983. Do you think that the hill side farmer is in a good position for taking advantage of education and these movements we have been speaking of?—Are you speaking of intermediate education.

38,984. Education generally?—They have greater disadvantages but I think in proportion to their disadvantage they value the advantage of education much more than the children who are better situated.

38,985. And you find that their sons often go to colleges, become ministers, and go into professions?—There are a large number of boys that were brought up in this district, sons of mechanics and artisans and small tenant farmers who hold now the best positions that they can hold in the various professions owing to the fact that they had a good school, if this particular school was not situated here, they would have been at the plough now and possibly as servile as those who were left.

38,986. With the multiplication of these good schools, do you not think that naturally there will grow up, and that there is growing up, a greater independence of feeling?—Yes, chiefly because they come in touch with men who are independent.

Mr. Grove.

38,987. Do you think there is sufficient labour on the land now?—I can only say that what was arable land is now being laid down to pasture.

38,987*a*. Do you think that the land would carry more labour?—The land would carry very much more labour, but I doubt very much if some of the farms were to be had for nothing it would pay to grow corn, in consequence of the foreign competition.

38,988. You think the want of labour is partly caused by the agricultural depression at the present time?—It has been gradual, but at present I believe the silver question has much more to do with the very extraordinary low values of corn now than we quite recognise; the Indian corn and the South American Republic corn being particularly cheap, owing to the exchange.

38,989. There is just one point you have not touched on in your evidence; that is the question of railway rates. Do you think they are moderate, or that agriculture is suffering because of heavy railway rates?—I was talking to one of the largest millers in Birmingham about a fortnight ago, and he said he used to buy corn very extensively in the home counties, and he assured me that he could afford to pay half a crown a quarter more for wheat of the same quality in New York than he could in Cambridge, and that there were unquestionably preferential rates between foreign productions and home productions.

38,990. You are speaking now of the preferential rate on foreign produce?—Yes.

38,991. But what about the local railway rates?—I think the farmers and a very large number of the small tradesmen pay what they are asked. I do not think they are quite alive to the mileage system of payment, and there ought to be some association or direction to these men to show them what they ought to pay.

38,992. You think that a freighters' association, say for the county, would be beneficial?—I do.

38,993. Are there any farmers' clubs which could bring that sort of thing about?—There is one farmers' club in the county.

38,994. Would not they take it up as far as their industry of agriculture is concerned?—I am a member of that club. I do not know whether it has been done, but I am certain of one thing: whether it has been thought of being done or not I cannot say, but as to any practical effect being given to it I can say that there has been none.

38,995. You know, of course, the Board of Trade shilling book that is published that gives you all these rates?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

38,996. You suggested just now that all legislation or most legislation was for exceptional or bad cases?—Yes, I did.

38,997. You admit that most of the landlords about here—I think most—are good landlords?—Yes.

38,998. What you really want to do, if it could be done, would be to force the bad landlords to deal by their tenants in the same way as the good landlords do of their own free will?—Yes, and also to let the tenants know that even if the good landlord wishes to act differently he cannot do so.

38,999. I did not follow very closely whether you suggested any means?—I suggested that there should be some tribunal not too easily approached by either side. I think it is a matter of very careful consideration what that court should be.

39,000. It has been urged against any such idea that the existence of a court of the kind, although very few landowners or tenants might require to appeal to it—the very fact of its existence—would make the good landlords cease to deal by their tenants as they do now. What do you say to that?—I say that it would have that tendency which I am seeking; it would have that tendency to discontinue this dependent feeling of the tenant on the good will of his landlord, and by establishing the court I am prepared, if necessary, to admit that it would remove a good deal of the feudal spirit that is now existing in some districts; but even as to the removal of that let it be a question of arrangement between landlord and tenant and an appeal in extreme cases.

39,001. I do not quite see whether you meet the full objection on the other side, that the good landlords would cease to take any interest in their tenants; that landlords who now feel a great interest in their tenants and are very friendly with them would cease to take any interest; in fact, that they would get into a sort of chronic sulk. Do you believe that?—I must say this, that I have more confidence in those landlords than the people who doubt them. I do not believe any good landlords would object to any legislation which was intended to do good and to interfere with the bad landlords: no good landlord would allow it to interfere with him.

39,002. I suppose the cases you expect to come before such a court would be a very small proportion in number?—Cases such as I have put before you to-day—leases that are in themselves a perfect justification for a Land Court and a disgrace to the county.

39,003. With regard to the schools and to the elementary education, what do you think about the boys who leave school—the tenant farmers' boys—do they get too highly educated. We have heard that they are too much educated in some parts?—I have put before you to-day, two letters which I think are very fair specimens of the tenant farmers of the present day. I do not think as to either of those letters it could be suggested that they are too well written or too well constructed, but I do believe that if our farmer's sons had better education, Land Court or no Land Court they would not stop very long in this country after that.

39,004. The handwriting of these letters is nearly as bad as my own. Would you say that they know enough arithmetic when they leave school really to do any ordinary farmer's business: do they possess sufficient facility in working figures to do their own business?—I believe the most difficult thing that a tenant farmer has to do is to keep his books—all the books he does keep.

39,005. Do they ever keep books?—Yes, as a rule a sixpenny book. They buy a sixpenny book once a year, and jot down without any arrangement just a few facts, and if you look at that book that is about the worst thing on the estate they can show.

39,006. But do you think they know enough arithmetic as a rule. So far from its being the case that they have too much education, is it not very often the case that they have too little?—No, they do not get too much education, there is no doubt about that, but I do not think in this particular district they are so badly off in that respect as they are in many.

39,007. I am coming to that; but even supposing that they had rather more education, and that a great many of them were to leave the county, is not that to be encouraged?—Certainly.

39,008. If all the farmer's sons wished to have farms of their own, what would that lead to?—Provided they had them at reasonable rates, I should encourage it.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

39,009. But would there be enough for them?—No, I do not think there would.

39,010. So that we ought to encourage a certain number to go out from the agricultural districts?—Yes.

39,011. Else they would get congested?—Yes.

39,012. Now with regard to the schools; you have alluded to the Welsh College here at Llandovery. This has been undoubtedly the means of educating a great many talented boys from this part of the county, and you think that would be an advantage to have more institutions of this kind in the Principality?—Provided great care is taken to see that manual instruction is introduced into the curriculum, and to impress on the minds of the boys who take the instruction that it is quite as respectable and honourable to get their livelihood by the work of their hands as by the work of their brains, or in any other form.

39,013. You do not wish to encourage every educated man who gets honours at the university, or anything of that sort, to make it his aim to become a clerk?—No; some productive employment.

39,014. But the county councils have this matter a good deal in their own hands now, have they not?—Yes, and they are taking advantage of it.

39,015. Has the dairy instruction been satisfactory here?—Very, I think.

39,016–7. Who manages it; who publishes it and advertises it?—In this county we are affiliated with Aberystwith as far as the dairy instruction is concerned, and we are affiliated with Cardiff as far as the technical instruction is concerned. We spend 500*l.* a year on the dairy education in connexion with Aberystwith, and the balance in connexion with Cardiff for mines, &c.

39,018. With regard to the parishes you know best, what is the language of the people generally; I mean in this part?—In the immediate neighbourhood of the towns English is spoken, but Welsh is the language of daily use.

39,019. You say that on some of these estates there have been changes of agents from time to time pretty frequently?—Yes, I have given you instance where there were four or five agents in 20 years.

39,020. They all talked Welsh fluently, I suppose?—Not one of the last four.

39,021. What would make the landlord select a man who could not approach the people direct?—Well, the idea, I believe, has been that Scotchmen are good farmers. One or two of these gentlemen have been brought down from Scotland, but the experience of the farmers of this county—I appeal to those who know the county well—is that Scotch tenant farmers who have started in this county have not been successes.

39,022. There has been a small colony of them, has there not?—In places. We have had one or two successes; one or two men have succeeded, but the rest have been great failures.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

39,023. About what is the proportion?—I could not say.

39,024. About?—I should say about two-thirds failures.

39,025. But would you consider it was a good thing, a wise thing, from a business point of view, for the landlord to appoint a man who did not understand the language of his tenants?—No.

39,026. Would you do that as a matter of business?—I should think that having such large interests to consider, other things being nearly equal, preference should be given to a man who could speak the language.

39,027. With a man who cannot understand the tenants, what happens. There is a go-between?—Yes, as a rule.

39,028. What happens then?—Want of confidence.

39,029. Any amount of trouble, I suppose, and misunderstanding?—And want of confidence.

39,030. How about cottages in the district. Are there sufficient cottages for the labourers required on the land?—Well, I believe there are.

39,031. You have not been much in this district lately, have you?—I can only say this ——

39,032-3. I mean that I can ask somebody else if you like?—I can only say there are some cottages that are deserted: that is to say, there are no tenants in them. I drive a good deal about the country, and the conclusion I come to is this, that there are more cottages than there are tenants.

39,034. But you do not know whether there are more cottages than would be occupied if the proper amount of labour was employed?—No, I do not.

39,035. What about the nature of the cottages here. Are they good or bad?—I would rather not give an opinion about that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,036. At this hour I will not keep you long. There is just one question with regard to the boys being brought down from the reformatories. Can you tell me from what parts they have been brought?—I believe they are from London chiefly.

39,037. Those are the boys you speak of?—Yes. I believe there is an agent at Pontardulais; I am not quite sure.

39,038. Do you know whether those boys are well looked after or not?—By the farmers?

39,039. I mean by the agent who is in charge of them?—No, I cannot say.

39,040. I am sorry to see that you say a considerable proportion of them return to their early habits, whatever those may be. Are you not aware that many of them turn out very well?—Oh, yes.

39,041. And that the object probably is for the benefit of the boys; it would not hurt the community amongst whom they are sent, but would very largely benefit the boys themselves You say that it is not a gain to the agricultural community?—I say when you come to consider that the large number of boys who have gone wrong in their early youth are sent down here to be trained, and a large number of them break out again.

39,042. You think a good many of them do break out again?—That has been my information and it is my experience on the Bench. I have had more than one case in the neighbourhood during the last few years.

39,043. I wanted to learn from you what you know about it of your own knowledge?—I have simply given that.

39,044. I have taken some interest in these boys and have known several of them turn out excessively well, and I have known very little difficulty or danger to the agricultural community, and I wish to ask if you know of any cases in which the agricultural community has suffered through their introduction?—Of course I do not live in the country, and I cannot say beyond this, that my information is this, that it is well that they should have these boys because they could get no one else.

39,045. Then do you object because of the competition with the agricultural labourers?—Oh, dear no, on the contrary.

39,046. I suppose their introduction is to a certain extent in competition with the agricultural labourer?—Well, unfortunately I do not think there are any agricultural labourers in some districts to compete with.

39,047. Then they are better than nothing perhaps?—That is exactly the position.

39,048. I am happy to say that I know of my own knowledge some of these boys have turned out extremely well?—I do not mean to say that they do not in this county; but a large number of them go wrong. I cannot go behind the words I have down here.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Well, it is contrary to my experience.

Lord Kenyon.

39,049. Your brother has put in a number of notices to quit. Was any reason given for those?—(Mr. Evan Evans.) I received no reason for them.

39,050. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) There are three of them. Did you receive no reason for any of them?—I had five altogether, but those are all I kept.

39,051. There was no reason for any of them?—No.

39,052. None of them were acted on except the last I suppose?—On the contrary I had given no cause for receiving any of them.

39,053. Did you bring your case before the Court as to compensation for clover?—Yes, but did not proceed as the landlord pleaded the statute of limitations.

(Mr. Gwilym Evans.) May I explain? I know the case exactly. My brother says he did bring an action against Mr. Campbell Davys for the seeds, only for the seeds, but he did not do so for some time after he left, as you see there.

Lord Kenyon.

39,054. (To Mr. Gwilym Evans.) Did he lose it through the Statute of Limitations?—The Defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations. That is on the face of the paper.

39,055. Did the Defendant win his case or not?—No he did not go on with it, he was in Monmouthshire.

39,056. Was the agreement a verbal one. He says in his evidence "The contract was that "whenever I moved it, I was to receive the "last two items from the landlord or recover "it?"—Yes.

39,057. Was that a verbal agreement?—He says he was for years without an agreement at all.

39,058. But was there any verbal agreement, or what—I want to know whether the contract was merely verbal or not?—Yes, verbal.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,059. Do you mean to say that Thomas Jones signed the agreement of which this is the copy?—I am not in a position to prove it, but the landlord is present. Perhaps he will say whether the agreement is in force. The agreement was handed over to me as a copy and I should like the landlord to say.

39,060. At any rate we will take it for granted that this is in force unless the landlord makes a statement to the contrary, after you have given your evidence. I must say that I should be very sorry for any tenant who had to go through the form of putting his name to this agreement, because it stipulates the number of sheep which he has to keep on his farm. It stipulates further that he shall earmark his sheep only in the presence of the landlord or his agent, it stipulates further the price of the sheep at the termination of the tenancy, possibly for 20 years, whatever may be the state of the market. I must say it is one of the most oppressive agreements I have seen?—May I point out one thing more. It stipulates that the price of sheep shall be 1*l.* each. When they are handed over it is 12*s.* for the sheep and 8*s.* for the lambs; but if there are any number short it will be 1*l.* for the sheep.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,061. On this sheep questi n I should like to ask Mr. Evan Evans a question. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) What extra value per head is placed upon the sheep that have been habituated to a mountain?—From 6*s.* to 7*s.*

39,062. That is rather valuable information. (To Witness.) Would you think that farmers in addition to a little arithmetic should have an insight into agricultural chemistry, and so on?—I am very strong on that myself, and, what is more, that they should have a little further education than the three Rs. They ought to be able to draw sufficiently to convey their intention. If a man wanted a little wood-work or iron-work or anything done on his farm, he should be able to show the man who comes to do it in half the time that he could speak about it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,063. Would the natural consequence of such stringent agreements be that a good landlord like Lord Cawdor would get the best tenants?—The result is this, that one bad landlord can do more harm in every possible way than six good landlords can of good, and that is the result in this county. To me the great surprise is that men who have any spirit at all stop not only in the county but in the country under such agreements as those.

39,064. Would the effect of a man desiring to remain in his own immediate neighbourhood be so strong as to prevent his going away so far as Llandilo and the neighbourhood where Lord Cawdor's property is?—It is extremely strong.

39,065. It is extremely strong as to residing in the immediate neighbourhood?—And in the old home if possible.

39,066. The old home and the neighbourhood?—Yes, the old home particularly.

Professor Rhŷs.

39,067. But nevertheless the tendency would be for the good landlords to have the good tenants. The good tenants would leave the bad estates?—You very rarely have a vacancy under the good landlord, because he gives the chance to his tenant's child or children, whichever it may be.

Chairman.

39,068. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) Some questions are put in by Mr. Vincent, "Who offered 120*l.* "for the farm?"—I do not know.

39,069. "Did not you yourself offer 120*l.* for "the farm which you got afterwards for 105*l.*?"—Yes, provided I had a lease.

39,070. "Did not Mr. Davys agree to do "certain things on the condition that you should "pay 120*l.*?"—I heard nothing except about the timber required for the wires

39,071. "Did you sign the document marked A.?" [handing same]—Yes, I signed many documents that the landlord read to me. The plan was, to give me notice, then send for me in August, and state that if I signed certain documents I could stay on,—if not, I was to go in September.

The following is the document marked A.:—

"Cwmfranfawr farm as now occupied by Evan Evans let to David and Evan Evans on a lease to be prepared by landlord's solicitor at the lessees' expense for 21 years at the annual rent of 128*l.*, free from all reductions except the landlord's property tax: the lessees covenant to fence the whole of the hill boundaries with a fence of 5 No. 5 best annealed drawn fencing wires, the landlord providing therefor the larger drawing posts, such fence to become the property of the lessor at the expiration of the lease. The landlord to put the buildings in tenantable repair and to build a pigstye and carthouse upon the lessees carrying materials to the same, and the lessees covenant to deliver all the buildings in the same state of repair as the landlord may now put them in, and to that end to perform such repairs as may be necessary during the continuance of this demise. The lessees agree to accept the lease with such conditions and reservations as is usual in such cases and as are embodied in the agreement now in force between the said parties.

W. H. CAMPBELL DAVYS.
EVAN EVANS.
Sept. 8th 1873. DAVID EVANS."

(Mr. Gwilym Evans.) My brother Evan Evans signed this; but I venture to express a great doubt as to the other signature. His son is in Court.

Chairman.

39,072. (To Mr. Gwilym Evans.) Whose is the signature you mean?—David Evans.

39,072*a*. There is Mr. Evan Evans' signature and two more. There is Mr. Campbell Davys' and Mr. David Evans.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,073. (To Mr. Gwilym Evans.) David Evans is the guarantor I suppose?—The guarantor. My brother says David Evans never signed it.

Chairman.

39,074. You express a doubt as to the other signature "David Evans"?—He says that David Evans did not sign it in his presence, and I go further. I say that when the agreement was put before David Evans it was put before me at the same time, and we both laughed at it, and refused to have anything to do with it. I am speaking of the agreement that I put in.

39,075. There is a doubt about the genuineness of the signature of David Evans?—Yes.

39,076. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) Then Mr. Vincent asks "did you then become tenant under "document marked C. in which the rent is "105*l.*, not 120*l.*"?—I signed it, but I did not know what was contained in it beyond that he read something out.

39,077. You signed that without the knowledge of its contents?—Yes, beyond that he was reading it out.

39,078. Was that read out to you and explained?—It was read to me but not explained.

39,079. Was it read in English?—Yes.

39,080. Do you understand English?—I understand a little.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,081. (To Mr. Gwilym Evans.) As I understand the agreement that is put in was made in 1874. It is dated the 28th September 1874 and then there is this paper A. which is a further agreement between the parties, which stipulates "the lessees agree to accept the leases with such "conditions and reservations as is usual in such "cases and as are embodied in the agreement "now in force between the said parties." After that Mr. Campbell Davys submitted the lease and a copy of it is set forth in your evidence?—That is so. When that lease was put before my brother and myself we saw the conditions were so thoroughly out of reason that we refused to have anything to do with it, and advised our brother to leave the farm, and did what we could to get him a farm elsewhere.

39,082. You said the conditions and reservations were not usual in such cases and were not the conditions embodied in the original agreement?—I never saw the original agreement.

39,083. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) The rent in the agreement of 1874 is 105*l.*, the rent on the paper marked A. is 120*l.*, and the rent mentioned in the agreement is the same, 120*l.*?—I got the farm for 105*l.*, after refusing to sign the lease at a yearly tenancy.

(Mr. Gwilym Evans.) I think I can clear that up. It was this way. The rent was 105*l.* He was receiving repeated notices. At last we were anxious that he should have a lease. There was a promise of a lease provided he paid 120*l.* When the lease was not signed my brother, I understand, remained on the farm at 105*l.*; the old rent; but without a lease. It was 100*l.* at first; then it was 105*l.*

Chairman.

39,084. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) Mr. Vincent also asks "Was not the farm cheap at 105*l.* in "1874"?—No, it was not. I have not found it cheap.

39,085. "Was not the farm cheap at 105*l.* in "1874"?—No.

39,086. "Do you know that 300*l.* were spent "on your farm by the landlord?"—Not in my time.

39,087. And 100*l.* on draining?"—Not in my time.

39,088. "Were you not permitted at your own "request to throw the farm up at six weeks' "notice?"—Yes, because of the sheep.

39,089. Did you sign the document marked B [handing the same to witness]?—Yes.

The following is the document marked B:—

"I the undersigned do hereby agree to surrender and yield up to my landlord W. H. Campbell Davys on the 29th September next the farm lands and tenements I now hold of him called Cwnfranfawr and Cripaucochon free from all spoil and all in accordance with the terms of my agreement of tenancy dated the 26th September last as if I have received notice to quit as therein provided in consideration of my landlord's accepting of this surrender of my tenancy which I do hereby execute this 16th August 1880.

EVAN EVANS.

Witness
David Davies,
Butler."

Chairman.

39,090. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) Mr. Vincent also asks—"Did you lose anything over the "sheep?"—No, I did not, because I decided to take them away.

39,091. "Although you did not keep your agreement?"—By permission it was broken with regard to the sheep.

(Mr. Gwilym Evans.) May I be allowed to explain one thing there? The agreement was silent as to the valuation. My brother contended that the sheep should be valued as stock. They contended that they should be valued at market price. As the agreement was silent my brother took away the sheep to the field near this very town, and when the auctioneer was putting them up for sale the agent went into the field and tried to create a difference or doubt in the mind of the purchaser. My brother had double what he was offered by the landlord or his agent.

Chairman.

39,092. (To Mr. Gwilym Evans.) That was a difference of 6*s.* each?—No; Mr. Campbell Davys, or his agent, offered 15*s.*, and my brother sold them for 30*s.*

Lord Kenyon.

39,093–4. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) I think in your answer to me you said you had had no agreement?—Not for years at the outset was what I said.

Chairman.

39,095. (To Mr. Gwilym Evans.) These are questions put by Mr. J. E. Vincent. "Do you "know that the tenant of Penlan has had an "abatement of 10 per cent. on his last three "rents"?—No, I do not. I do not say that it is not so. I am not in a position to say of my own knowledge.

39,096. "Have you ever known any of the "penal clauses in Mr. Campbell Davys' agree-"ment to be enforced"?—I do not know of any, but I know of their being kept as a threat over a large number of the tenants.

39,097. You know of their existence?—Yes.

39,098. "Do you know anything, except what "the tenant has told you, about Penlan"?—Yes, I do. I know what others have told me, but I know nothing of my own knowledge, except the fact that the agreement is there and speaks for itself.

Chairman—continued.

39,099. "Do you deny that 50*l.* has been "spent on Penlan by the landlord"?—It will simplify matters very much if I say that I know nothing beyond the facts I have put in this paper, and that the agreement is what I rely on mostly.

39,100. "Please refer to the agreement with "David Evans. What section, other than sec-"tion 33, which is optional, is avoided"?—I have not followed this very carefully, but there is the provision as to quarterly rents. Is not that an extraordinary provision?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,101. Section 33 is the one as to length of notice; that is optional?—Yes, but the quarterly rents are payable in advance.

Chairman.

39,102. "Have you not heard that some "tenants prefer this short notice"?—No, I have not heard of such a thing.

39,103. "Are the references to the Neuaddfawr "estate made by you concerned with the time "of the present or the past owner"?—The past owner chiefly.

39,104. "Am I to understand that one of the "agreements which you have submitted was in "fact never an agreement at all, and was never "executed at all"? That is the one that was not signed I take it; the one that was refused to be signed?—The principal agreement was not signed, the agreement where David Evans' name is entered as a guarantor.

39,105. I think that is the one that is referred to.

Lord Kenyon.

39,105*a.* It was a lease; not an agreement?—A lease. It was not signed, because David Evans refused.

Chairman.

39,106. It was never executed at all, on account of the refusal of the tenant to sign it?—No; the tenant would have signed anything in order to keep his family going anyhow. It was the tenant's brother, who was to become the guarantor, who declined to have anything to do with the lease. The tenant would have signed anything.

39,107. The tenant would have signed it, but he was prevented from signing it by his guarantor his brother?—The tenant had to sign it before he had it.

39,108. It was placed before him and he refused to sign it?—No, he, the tenant, signed it. It was then brought down to Llanelly to be countersigned by the guarantor, and the guarantor knew a little too much and would not sign it.

Chairman—continued.

39,109. Then Mr. Vincent asks, "Will you "mention any condition in any of the agreements "which is, to use your word, 'impossible'?"—Well, I would respectfully ask the Commission who have read these agreements whether it is necessary for me to give an opinion of these agreements after what has been said by members of the Commission. I am quite prepared to go through the agreements and point out every case if you wish, but the agreements on the face of them are so—well, so unreasonable that I have no hesitation in saying that it would be difficult to find anything like them in the country.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

They are the most stringent that have yet been laid before us, I think.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,109*a*. We have had agreements before us where a stipulation was made that sheep should be taken at a valuation, but never that they should be taken at a fixed price?—And not only at a fixed price, but there is one thing here that I had not thought of before. He pays 12*s*. and 8*s*., 12*s*. for the sheep, and 8*s*. for the lambs. Every year the landlord has the advantage of seeing what the numbers are, and he has absolute power to give this man notice whenever he likes, and if the sheep are few, owing to some cause the tenant may have no control over, the landlord may give him notice to leave; what is the result? He has to pay 1*l*., the price of a sheep and a lamb, for every sheep or lamb that is short.

Chairman.

39,110. There is a second question on that by Mr. Vincent. "Is it impossible not to break up "old pasture or not to take more than three "successive green crops or to put in lime?"—No, it is not impossible, but I do venture to say this, that it is very impracticable to go and ask a tenant farmer to tie himself down to pay 50*l*. an acre for doing so, whereas the land itself is not worth more than 15*l*.—the freehold of it.

Chairman—continued.

39,111. Then another question by Mr. Vincent is this—"Was not the Squire of the parish whom "you named beaten at the County Council Elec-"tion partly because the Conservatives ran two "candidates?"—I really do not know, but I may tell you this, that a majority of the voters in this particular parish at all events had a greater respect for the man who had trouble in getting a seconder than for the man who ought to have been carried shoulder high on the back of every tenant farmer in the district if they were properly treated.

39,112. Then there is a question by Mr. Llewelyn Williams "When you say that on "Lord Cawdor's estate the tenants have nothing "to desire, you only allude to farms you know "yourself of; there may be grievances that you "do not know of?"—I cannot say I know much of Lord Cawdor's estate, but I know there is one very good custom in connexion with the estate, that when a man dies and his widow is left great concessions and considerations are given to her to bring up her children and so on. I am only speaking from general impression; I have not any facts to put before the Commission. It is generally regarded as a good estate.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,113. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) Would you kindly tell us who informed you that there was an offer of 120*l*. for this place?—The agent sent to tell me.

Professor Rhŷs.

39,114. Is this difference between the prices of sheep, the market price and the stock price, a recognised thing, or is there anything new about it, or was there anything new about it at that time?—It is always in every valuation.

39,115. It is understood?—Understood.

39,116. Why was it not in the agreement?—I do not know. (Mr. Gwilym Evans, interposing.) He did not draw out the agreement himself.

Professor Rhŷs.

39,117. (To Mr. Evan Evans.) But it ought to have been in the agreement, ought it not?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JAMES EVANS (of Dolauhirion, Llandovery) called and examined.

Chairman.

e 38,769, 934.

39,118. You have heard the evidence of the last witnesses?—Yes, my Lord.

39,119. You understand English?—Yes, a little.

39,120. Sufficiently well to follow the evidence that was given?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

39,121. And the evidence was correct as far as you were concerned and as far as you know the circumstances of the case?—Yes, my Lord.

39,122. Is that all you wish to say?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Davys Harries Campbell-Davys called and examined.

Chairman.

39,123. Would you kindly tell the Commission where you live?—At Neuaddfawr, 5 miles from here.

39,124. Is there anything you wish to say with regard to the evidence which you have heard this morning?—First of all the matter occurred in the year 1859, or commenced rather then, during my father's time.

39,125. Which matter, if you please?—The matter that has been gone into this morning as regards me. It occurred in the year 1859, and therefore I know nothing of it. Next there was produced an agreement signed by Mr. David Evans, and if that agreement is produced to me I am prepared to look at the signature and to say that I think it is signed by Mr. David Evans.

39,126. That is the paper marked A.?—I have no papers before me now.

39,127. When did you go into your property?—My father died in the year 1885.

39,128. Look at that document [handing document A. to witness]?—Is it intended that I should say who signed this agreement? I do not notice my signature as witness to this agreement, but I notice that the document is in my handwriting, and from recollection—it is now 11 years ago—but from my recollection, and with two letters that I have to compare with the signature, I say this is without any doubt the signature of David Evans, to take the farm at 120*l.* a year, which subsequently was given at 105*l.* I have also to say that the said David Evans paid the costs of the preparation of that agreement to the solicitor who drew it. I did not draw it—the agreement that is found fault with here.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,129. It is more than 11 years ago; it is in 1873?—I am talking now of this agreement with regard to the signature of David Evans.

39,130. What is the date of it. I make it September 8th, 1873?—Yes, in 1873. I said 11 years ago next September; that would be 21 years. Well, it is rather a long time to remember; it is 21 years ago. It is a long time to be hauled over the coals for.

Chairman.

39,131. Your belief is that that is the signature of David Evans?—So much so that I can produce the correspondence with David Evans referring to this lease. Here are the letters. I am sorry that there should have been any imputation in the way of saying that David Evans did not sign this agreement, because I produce his letters with reference to this very agreement, and also I can produce his receipt for having paid the solicitor's bill who drew the agreement which was based upon this.

Mr. Grove.

39,132. You say "with reference to the agreement." Do you mean in accord with the agreement, or disagreeing with it?—Being drawn by a solicitor, I can give no opinion.

39,133. But you say that David Evans has sent you a letter relative to that agreement?—I did not say that David Evans did anything with me. I was not the possessor of the property at the time. I am only referring to letters that I have found directed to my father referring to this agreement, and also I can prove that the said David Evans paid the solicitor's costs.

39,134. Although that letter is addressed to your father, have you read the contents of it yourself?—Certainly.

39,135. You have?—Carefully.

39,136. Is that a letter disagreeing with the agreement, or refusing to sign the agreement, or what is the object or nature of that letter?—Well, it is simply this. Here are two letters [handing same], and perhaps I should hand you in the original agreement again, to compare their signatures [handing back document marked A.].

(Mr. Gwilym Evans.) I simply say that the signature now and 21 years ago are very different. That is all I have to say. I do not deny that that is the signature. He has altered his signature very much; that is all I know. I am quite prepared to admit that that is the signature.

Lord Kenyon.

You admit the signature. That will save trouble.

(Mr. Gwilym Evans.) Oh, yes, I think so.*

Chairman.

39,137. Is there anything else you would like to say?—Certainly. One of the Commissioners mentioned just now with reference to this sheep question and mentioned that it would be a loss to the tenant to go into a farm at a fixed price for sheep and at that fixed price to give them up. Now I beg leave to mention this, that the lower the price the sheep are given to the incoming tenant when he enters the farm the better for the farmer, because he thereby saves a certain amount of capital. A certain agreement has been produced here, showing that the sheep were to be given up at the expiration of the tenancy at the same price as was paid for them at entry. Now if that price was cheap at entry, surely the farmer has the benefit of that at once when he enters the farm, and as a matter of fact I can prove—the agreement has been put in here—that the farmer actually sold those sheep within a month of entering the tenancy, or within a very short time, at an actual profit. Surely it is rather hard that that agreement should be put forward here as a loss to the tenant, when he was getting the sheep, in fact, too cheap in the end. Of course the matter of the sheep is a very vexed matter, because the point is to get the same sheep and the same stock when the man leaves as when he went in. It is a very good thing for the farmer to get the sheep cheap when he enters the farm, and I cannot think it unfair that he should only get the same for the sheep when he leaves the farm.

* Mr. Gwilym Evans subsequently explained that in questioning the signature he was referring to the proposed lease and not the preliminary agreement, hence the misunderstanding.

Chairman—continued.

39,138. Is there anything else?—Only that I would wish to impress upon you that this man, David Evans, is no tenant of mine. He has never been tenant of mine.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,139. I thought he left in 1880?—Yes, and I said my father died in 1885.

39,139*a*. Had Mr. Evans gone in 1885?—The correspondence and the leases show that he left in 1880, I think, or in 1872, or something like that. It is rather a long time ago.

(Mr. David Evans.) In 1880.

The Witness.

I should like to say with reference to this farm at 40*l*. a year the man was in very bad circumstances, and the farm was given without any security. A reduction was made of 3*l*. off the 40*l*. Another 10 per cent. has been given the last three half-years off that 40*l*., making altogether in round numbers 7*l*. a year off the 40*l*. I never heard any complaint from that man, nor I think will that man enter this box and make a complaint against me before the Commission.

(Mr. Gwilym Evans.) I hope the Commissioners will ask the tenant. He is here.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,140. (To the Witness.) Will you permit him to come?—I have never had any correspondence with any of my tenants with reference to their coming here. I have asked some of them to come here.

Chairman.

39,141. What is the name of the 40*l*. a year tenant?—Another Evans, I believe.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,142. Is it David Evans?—Yes.

39,143. David Evans, of Penlan?—Yes.

Chairman.

Is Mr. David Evans, of Penlan, in the room?

(The Reverend Thomas Evans.) My Lord, if I am allowed to speak, I will answer for him. It is my doing bringing that agreement. David Evans is my brother. I have a copy of that agreement. I took a copy of it.

Chairman.

If you represent your brother, will you kindly come and say what you have to say when we have heard the evidence of this witness.

39,144. A question is handed up "Was not "Mr. Campbell-Davys the only son, and was he "not assisting to manage the estate"?—At what time?

39,145. At the time when this transaction took place?—It is so long ago now that I cannot say.

39,146. Can your memory carry you back 20 years, and can you answer the question whether you were assisting to manage the estate in your father's time?—Oh, certainly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,147. You signed the agreement for him—the paper marked A?—I signed it.

39,148. I understood the signature to that document of September 8th, 1873, was in your handwriting?—It is quite a mistake. I could not let a farm which did not belong to me.

39,149. You could act as agent for your father if he gave permission?—He signed it himself.

Chairman.

39,150. I must have an answer to this please. "Were you the only son, and were you not "assisting in the management of the estate at "that time"?—At a certain time; I do not know what time; a certain time I was; I do not know what time is referred to; we have gone over a period now of 35 years.

39,151. Well, in 1880, the time when this gentleman left the farm, were you helping to manage the estate at that time, five years before your father's death?—Oh, certainly.

39,152. Then there is a question by Mr. Gwilym Evans: "Is not this document dated "1879 signed by Mr. D. Campbell-Davys." It is a receipt "received of Mr. Evan Evans, July "1st, 1879." Is that your handwriting [handing document to witness]?—Certainly.

39,153. That was in your father's lifetime, six years before his death?—Certainly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,154. We have had mention about the words "on account" being put on receipts. You do not wish to rebut the statement made by Mr. Gwilym Evans in reference to that, do you?—I should like to explain that if one cannot get the amount of rent I do not know any other way of putting it except by the words "on account."

39,155. But had you given an abatement of so much per cent.?—The abatement would only be given when the rent was paid, the balance, and in the meantime the receipt would be given "on account."

39,156. Yes, but had you announced in any of these years that you were going to give an abatement of so much per cent of the rent?—The reference brought forward was a mere gift to the tenant. It was given when he left I believe. On the day when he left the balance was paid and on that day the 70*l.* was handed to him as a gift.

39,157. But according to the evidence when the tenant left you demanded the balance from him?—The balance left the 70*l.* the present. He was given a certain amount, I do not know what, because I do not know exactly what the figures are now, but a certain heavy allowance was made to him although he was leaving on that day.

39,158. But the point is did you demand that abatement when the tenant left the farm?—The letter to which that refers has never been produced to me.

39,159. I do not know what the tenant's name is, but your name was mentioned in connexion with this abatement?—There was some letter handed in I understand which I have never seen. I do not know what that refers to. Therefore I had better see the letter first before I answer. There was some letter handed in.

39,160. I thought you had better have an opportunity of explaining it, and that was the reason I was putting the question?—I am very anxious to explain that when I did not receive the full amount of course like many other people I put "on account of," and if no settlement was come to for many years I should be obliged to keep putting "on account."

39,161. But we have always understood in this country that when a landlord gives an abatement he gives it once and for all. If he has promised a 10 per cent. abatement he does not treat the payment of 90 per cent. as a payment on account, but he gives a receipt in discharge?—Certainly, but this only refers to one isolated case in which there was no settlement of rent for some years, and in the meanwhile a receipt was given on account.

Lord Kenyon.

39,162. There were arrears, I understand?—There were arrears, yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,163. But even if the tenant was in arrear, if you did not exempt him particularly, he would expect to get the abatement when it was given?—But, in this case, it was not a general abatement all over the estate; it was an abatement of some 5*l.* a year, as a matter of conversation between the landlord and tenant, and as it was a matter of honour, at the end of the year I gave him, I think, 70*l.*; but we never settled the rent for some time.

39,164. You say you did give him 70*l.*?—I think I can produce the account; I do not say 70*l.* exactly, because I do not know the letter referred to; but I know it was a large sum of money. I do not know really what sum, but I should be delighted if you would ask the tenant in the room.

39,165. It was put the other way, that the tenant paid 70*l.*?—Then the boot was on the other leg. I should like to ask the tenant how much he was allowed on that date. Was it 70*l.*? [addressing a man in the Court].

39,166. Is this the tenant referred to?—Well, I cannot tell without having seen the letter.

Chairman.

39,167. There is a question handed in by Mr. Gwilym Evans, "Have you ever put in your "'receipt, 'in discharge of improvements'"?—I dare say.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,168. Is there anything sacred in the number 419?—The same number, I suppose, a man would have when he went in.

39,169. Do you not think it rather humiliating on a tenant to bind him down to a particular number of sheep?—It plays both ways Of course, when he goes out he delivers the same number.

39,170. But he ought to be a judge of a thing of this kind—how many sheep a hill would carry?—It is well known that stocks are always kept at something about the same figure. They always remain at about the same figure.

39,171. And, again, if you fix the price that a tenant has to pay for sheep when he goes in, and he has only got the same amount when he goes out, what encouragement is there for the tenant to improve the class of sheep?—Well, it acts both ways, of course. He tries to make it as poor as possible, I suppose. Hill sheep cannot be improved in size; they will not live on the ground.

39,172. You can improve the breed of Welsh sheep, certainly—most certainly. I am rather too practical for you to try to convince me about that?—Large sheep will not live on high land.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

39,173. No, it is true that large sheep will not, but you can improve the class of Welsh sheep, without having them large?—Well, we have heard of losses in that way.

Lord Kenyon.

39,174. I understand that you only put "on account," when there are arrears of rent, and not when you had given an abatement, and the rent less than abatement was paid in full?—Oh, of course not; I am much obliged to your Lordship for clearing that up.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Griffiths

39,175. Would not the fact that these sheep being sold at 30*s.* per head, in a public market, go to show the unreasonableness of the offer made by the landlord of 15*s.* per head?—Probably they did not all realise 30*s.*; only a few selected ones; so that would not give a guide to the value of the whole of them.

The witness withdrew.

The Reverend THOMAS EVANS called and examined.

Chairman.

39,176. Where do you live?—Henllys, Llandovery.

39,177. How far is that from here?—Two miles from here.

39,178. To what Church do you belong?—The Church of England.

39,179. What have you to say?—With respect to this agreement, it is my doing that it has been brought here before the Commissioners. With respect to Mr. Campbell Davys' agreements, there is great difficulty in getting any copy whatever. This happened to be signed by my brother; he did not know what was in it, and I had warned my brother before, that if ever an agreement was brought before him, he was to send to me.

39,180. That is your brother David Evans?—Yes, David Evans; he had to sign this agreement. And I must say this also with respect to the explanation about asking the tenants to sign these agreements, I think it is a perfect disgrace to the country that such a thing is allowed. The agreements are not explained as they are read, and I am quite certain of this: that Mr. Campbell Davys has not one tenant that will understand one of those agreements; they may be read through there, and they are asked to sign, but they do not know what they are signing. This agreement came into my hands, and I copied it. It was to be returned within a few days. I copied this agreement, and that is how I got hold of it; I believe that is the first agreement that has really seen daylight.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,181. Are the clauses in it stringent?—Yes, very stringent.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Chairman.

39,183. This is the agreement of which you took a copy in 1887?—I do not remember the date, but I guarantee it is a correct copy.

39,184. Of the agreement which you say is a disgrace?—It is a disgrace that a tenant should be allowed to sign a thing that he does not understand, and I may say the same of all Mr. Campbell Davys' tenants.

39,185. You say this agreement was put before your brother?—Yes.

39,186. And he was requested to sign it?—Yes.

39,187. Not understanding it?—Not understanding it.

39,188. Not understanding in the least what was in the agreement?—No.

39,189. And that that is the case to your knowledge on the estate of the gentleman who has just come before us?—Yes.

39,190. Is there anything else you wish to say?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,191. Has Mr. Campbell Davys given any abatements to your brother during these bad years since 1879?—Well, he has made an abatement of 10 per cent., but he has put down "allowed for improvements," as it is on all the estates, I understand. I have seen one of the receipts; I have not seen my brother's, but I understand that that is so with all.

39,192. You mean the balance of the rent is put down as being due in respect of improvements?—No, I beg pardon. He has given a return of 10 per cent. this year, but the 10 per cent. is put down on the receipt as "Allowed for improvements."

39,193. Allowed for improvements effected by the tenants?—Yes.

39,194. So that in case the tenant at the end of his term were to apply for compensation this 10 per cent., which he calls abatement, would be put against him in valuing for compensation?—Yes.

39,195. Have you seen another receipt of that sort?—I have only seen one. I was so astonished at seeing this one that I copied it, and I have made inquiries since of other of his tenants, and they seemed to be all the same as far as I could find out.

Chairman.

39,196. Might I ask this question: Would you be in favour of a land court before which cases of this description might be taken?—Yes, I should be in favour of some sort of tribunal. I certainly would.

39,197. A tribunal that would prevent the recurrence of these things?—There should be justice on both sides. I do not say but that there are bad tenants as well as bad landlords, but there should be justice on both sides.

39,198. A question is handed up by Mr. Vincent—"Did not your brother have his agree-"ment to take home and consider?"—Yes, that is how it came to my hands. I lived at the time in Swansea, and it was sent down to me in Swansea, and I copied it, and if Mr. Campbell Davys himself denies its contents I may say that in a friendly way I asked him to withdraw these agreements because they were a shame to the country. He made no promise to withdraw them, but he gave me to understand that he would take them in. I reminded him again about three months afterwards, and he gave me a very short answer, that he would not wish me to mention to anybody about these agreements—that he did not want people to know about the agreements.

39,199. That is all you wish to say?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. John Pugh Carbery Vaughan Pryse-Rice called and examined.

Chairman.

See 37,825.

39,200. Will you tell us where you live?—Llwynybrain.

39,201. How far is that from here?—Between two and three miles.

39,202. What do you wish to tell the Commissioners?—I wish to refute certain statements that were made yesterday at Llandilo regarding my farm at Pentre-Meurig. I was unable to attend at Llandilo, but the case has been reported in the papers, I cannot however say whether it is accurate or not. It was kindly handed to me by a friend early this morning, that is to say, just before the Commission arrived.

39,203. Whose evidence do you wish to speak to?—The evidence of Mr. Llewelyn Williams. He stated a good deal about Pentre Farm which was not quite accurate, but very probably he did not know as much about it as I do. He further stated that, "On the death of Major Rice, "after a short interval, on Morris leaving, the "farm was rented by a tenant named Davies, "who still lives there, who has five sons and "two daughters working hard on the farm and

Chairman—continued.

"improving it. His rent is, I believe, 280*l.*, but "he has no security that it will be continued at "that price after the farm has been increased in "value by the expenditure of his capital and "his children's labour." He has a 21 years' lease, and I being merely a tenant for life, it is all I could grant to any tenant. I wish to refute that. With regard to Mr. Gwilym Evans, I think Lord Kenyon asked him whether landlords did anything for their tenants here, and I think perhaps I may remark that for three years I held an agricultural show for the benefit of my tenants, which cost me 90*l.* a year clear; that is a matter of detail. I have spent one third of my income on buildings for my tenants, never taking a halfpenny back. Further, I had a shire stallion down for the use of my tenants and the neighbourhood, which they were really too apathetic to send mares to. That horse's progeny is now winning at every show—that is to say, ploughing matches and things of that sort.

39,204. Did you keep that horse free for your tenants?—No, I did not keep him free; I charged them a sovereign; I think I charged the country two guineas, and my tenants one guinea generally. I have nothing further that I wish to say.

Mr. Richard Jones.

See 37,961–2.

39,205*a*. Have you announced to your tenants that they were at perfect liberty to come forward?—Yes, my letter was handed in to the Commissioners yesterday, at Llandilo. It was dated March 22nd, which was as soon as I knew that the Land Commission was going to sit here, having seen it in the "Western Mail."

Mr. Grove.

39,206. That is when the dates were fixed?—Yes. Perhaps I might mention that it is a well known fact on my estate that any tenant who likes can have a lease, and also that no farm on the whole estate has been increased, but as I can prove by my rent roll, several farms have been let at a lower value when the tenants asked me, and said that the farms were too high.

Mr. Richard Jones.

See 38,769–38,770.

39,207. Did you give Mr. James Evans, Mr. Gwilym Evans' brother, a notice to quit last year?—Yes.

39,208. What was the reason?—The reason was that he was reported to me as having been shooting close to the covers, but I had no means of ascertaining at the time whether he was shooting rabbits or game.

39,209. Do you not think it was your duty to ascertain first of all?—I had no time. I should have had to allow him to remain there a year if I had not given him the notice at once. As soon as I ascertained what he did go to shoot, I tore his notice up.

39,210. Was it on the land that he occupied from you?—I am unable to say whether he fired the shot on the land that he occupied from me, or whether he fired it in the cover and got over the cover hedge—it was as near as that—I cannot say whether he was inside the cover or out. I may state perhaps with regard to game and rabbits on my estate, as the matter has come forward, I have my game books here, if the Commissioners would like to see them, and all my tenants, if they do not understand it, ought clearly to understand that I ask them not to employ any outsider to kill their rabbits, and that I will send my men to do it, and give them the rabbits free of expense. The expense is mine in sending the men to kill the rabbits. Also I give them, whenever I shoot, a brace of pheasants, and I have killed 45 pheasants, and come back with one for myself, which seems a small per-centage perhaps.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

39,211. You have had no complaints on your estate as to the quantity of game?—No, certainly not. I cannot call to mind a single complaint. If you will allow my agent to come forward, he can say the same thing, I think.

Chairman.

39,212. The following questions are put in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams. "Do you consider that "the buildings of Lasallt Isaf are in a good "state of repair"?—Certainly not, but being but a tenant for life I am unable to repair them, as my trustees intend selling a part of the property.

39,213. "Is it true that the tenant of Lasallt "Isaf had notice to quit recently"?—Not that I know of. I have never heard of it. Someone else may have given notice. I did not. I think he is here now. I do not think he has had notice. Somebody might call him in from the next court, and I should be glad, because it seems rather a funny statement to me. See 37,825, 39,412.

39,214. "Do you agree with what was said "about the leaving of Mr. Lewis Hillman"?—I do not know what was said about the leaving of Mr. Lewis Hillman. See 37,826

39,215. What was said was this: "Last year "for instance, Lewis Hillman, of Waunrhebog, "a tenant of Llwynybrain, was turned out of "farm and home without any compensation for "the improvements he had made. His family "had lived at the farm for generations—as far "as the memory of man can reach—he had "been brought up on the farm, and had grown "to love it. Recently a new house had been "sold; he himself had built at his own expense "sheds for cattle, and had been at great pains "to beautify the surroundings of his home. "He tried every means to induce his landlord "to allow him to remain, but nothing availed. "The only conceivable reason for evicting him "was that his wife had been caught by the "gamekeeper setting a snare to catch a rabbit "in the garden hedge"?—I think, my Lord, in the first place, he says that he built the house at his own expense. I did not quite catch that. What did he say about the building?

39,216. No, "he had built at his own ex"pense sheds for cattle, and had been at great "pains to beautify the surroundings of his "home." A new house had been built; he did not build the house?—I built an entirely new set of buildings at Waunrhebog. He was not, nor was his wife, given notice for killing the rabbits. I believe she did kill the rabbits, in fact I know she did, but he was not given notice for that reason.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,217. Would you mind stating what was the reason?—Am I obliged to state the reason?

Chairman.

39,218. You need not if you do not wish to?—I do not mind telling the reason; it was because Waunrhebog Farm was a most extraordinary taking. He ought to have paid a certain amount of rates, and instead of that Glasallt Fawr paid the whole of the rates for Waunrhebog and themselves, and my wish was that he should pay it, and I asked him four or five times to do so, but he did not take the trouble to do so, so that I gave him notice.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,219. So that it was really to try to have a change in the incidence of taxation?—It was really to try and get fair play for Glassallt Fawr.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

I do not see why one man should pay for another man's land.

Chairman.

39,220. These questions are also put in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "When did you know "that the Commission were coming to Carmar-"thenshire?"—Well, I really do not know. I think the first intimation was when I saw it in the "Western Mail."

39,221. "Did you know that the Commission "were in Glamorganshire in the summer of last "year?"—I am afraid I do not know anything about where they were. I do not think I noticed anything about it in the papers.

39,222. "And did you know that meetings "were held in June last to prepare evidence for "the Commission?"—By the farmers certainly. There were certain meetings held about the country, I believe. I took no interest in them.

39,223, "How was it that your notice was "only sent out in March last?"—Because it was the first intimation I had of the date when the sittings would be held.

39,224. Do you wish to make any statement with regard to the evidence of Mr. Gwilym Evans?—I do not wish to make any further statement.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examine 39,412.

Mr. David William Jones Thomas called and examined.

Chairman.

39,225. You are a solicitor, and you live at Brecon?—Yes.

39,226. You own 1,000 acres in this neighbourhood?—Yes, about that.

39,227. Do you consider that difference in language and religion alter the relations between landlord and tenant?—I do not find it so at all. It would be more convenient if I could talk to some of the tenants in their own language.

39,228. What do you charge per acre as an average rent?—I find that upon the estate I inherited—the estate proper—it comes to 15*s.* an acre, but including farms that I have bought recently, it makes it 16*s.* 6*d.*

39,229. Have you made any permanent reductions in rent?—No permanent reductions, but I have allowed 10 per cent.

39,230. You have allowed 10 per cent. in 1886, 1887, the first half of 1888, the second half of 1892, and the whole of 1893?—Yes, up to the present time.

39,231. Have you anything to say about the rents on your estate?—I consider them fair and I do not think they are higher than the neighbouring estates.

39,232. When do they pay the rents?—I receive them about twice a year, from four to five months after they become due.

Chairman—continued.

39,233. I understand the tenant pays the tithes, land tax, and rates, and the chief rent and income tax are paid by the landlord?—Yes.

39,234. Does the tenant still pay the tithes then?—Not in all cases. Upon accommodation lands I pay tithes and taxes, and upon some holdings I pay tithes, but as a rule the tenants pay them.

39,235. What is the custom as to outgoing tenants?—I am not aware of really any custom in this part of the world, but there is a very bad practice of outgoing tenants selling everything they have upon the farm, even down to the manure, which I consider very detrimental, as well to the interests of the tenant as to those of the landlord.

39,236. Do you preserve game very much?—I do not keep a keeper myself; my tenants look after it for me.

39,237. And the effect of that upon the relationship between your tenants and yourself is that it is very friendly?—Yes. They give me very good sport.

39,238. Do you complain of the law as regards trespass?—I find that the tenants do. They have complained to me, some of them, that during the summer months they are very much trespassed upon by people going over their lands after blackberries, mushrooms, and nuts.

Chairman—continued.

39,239. Can you tell us anything about improvements?—I have of late years improved many farms by erecting French barns, and I have also put new buildings up. I have in five cases put up French barns.

39,240. Some of your tenants, I suppose, have been on the land some considerable time?—I have no tenant on the land that has been there less than 22 years, and a great many have been there for a considerably longer period. I believe some of them have been born there.

39,241. Has there been any alteration of the rents on your estate?—My father had the estate valued a few years after it came to him, and that was, I should think, about the year, 1864—about 30 years ago—but since then there has been no alteration except one or two slight reductions.

39,242. Were the rents then fixed according to the valuation?—He wanted to have a fair value arrived at between himself and the tenants, and he employed four different valuers from different parts, one from this county, one from London, who had considerable experience of estates in Carmarthenshire and Breconshire, one from Newport, Monmouthshire, and another from Hereford. When those valuations came in he took the average and let the farms at the average of the four valuations.

39,243. The rents have practically remained the same?—Yes, with the exception of one or two slight reductions. There has been no increase since then, and I do not think that the rents as they now stand are higher than on the neighbouring farms; at least I find that everything I have bought since which adjoins me is let at a considerably higher rate per acre than my farms which adjoin those.

39,244. Do you employ an agent?—No, I am my own agent.

39,245. Do you know anything about farming yourself?—No, I cannot say that I do. I know when a farm is badly farmed, but I should not like to say that I have any practical knowledge.

39,246. Do you think the tenants are satisfied with the 10 per cent.?—They would like as much as they could get, but I am on very friendly terms with my own tenants. I have no agreements in writing with them, and I think that they feel quite satisfied without. I am satisfied.

39,247. Do you think that you take your proper share of the burthen of the present depression by giving 10 per cent.?—Yes, I think I do. I think it is a very fair adjustment between landlord and tenant.

39,248. Has there never been any attempt made to establish anything like a custom in your neighbourhood. I quite agree with you that it is a very bad practice indeed in the interests of agriculture generally that everything should be sold off the farms when a tenant terminates his tenancy?—My knowledge of the customs about here would not be sufficient to authorise my making a definite answer. Whenever I have had an agreement I have myself stipulated against their removing the crops or manure, and have put in a clause that they shall in the first instance give me the option of buying them at a valuation, and that in the event of my refusing then they can sell, or in the event of our failing to agree, but for my own interests that would not be often. I am sure it pays the landlord better to take to those things than to let them go off the ground.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Mr. Grove.

39,249. When you make abatements what notice do you give to your tenants that there will be abatements. What notice do you give; do you say there will be abatements?—I have not sent formal notice to them, but I generally intimate to one or two and they all know it before the rent day comes round.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,250. You are agent for other estates besides owning your own, in this neighbourhood, are you not?—Not in this neighbourhood.

39,251. I thought you said just now that you had no written agreements on your own estate?—Not with my present tenants.

39,252. Then when you spoke of some clauses being embodied in agreements you referred to other estates?—I had another estate in a valley near the town which I sold some four or five years ago. I had one or two agreements on that estate. On my present estate I have none.

39,253. You have no written agreement on your present estate?—I have no written agreement on my present estate.

39,254. Do you and your tenants rely on the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, we trust each other, and rely upon the Act, I suppose.

39,255. When you speak of 10 per cent. abatement being a fair adjustment, I suppose you look upon the rent as being equalised over a series of years, taking good and bad together?—I consider the rents fair, and it is only during the depression, I think, that the tenants are entitled to any reduction.

39,256. That is what I mean. When you speak of the custom as being a bad one with regard to the sale of the manure, do I understand that the sale of the manure is an open sale of manure to anybody, and not to the incoming tenant?—They sell it at the auction.

39,257. That is very unusual in Wales, is it not?—I have never heard of it being done in Breconshire; but I know they do it in Carmarthenshire, about here.

39,258. I know that you have experience of other counties besides this?—Yes.

39,259. Do you know of that custom operating elsewhere?—Unless prohibited by agreement.

39,260. You have not prohibited it upon your own estate?—I did in the agreements for the property I sold; but I have not any agreements in writing with my present tenants; therefore it is not prohibited. But there has been no change for the last 25 years.

Chairman.

39,261. There is a question handed in by Mr. Gwilym Evans: "Are you satisfied with "the sport you have in shooting, notwithstanding your not keeping a gamekeeper?"—Yes, perfectly; but I must say my tenants treat me very well. I do not know that it would be the same everywhere. I have known them for a good many years, and I have always found that they looked after my interests, and always took a great pleasure in doing so.

39,262. These questions are handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "You say that the "rent on your inherited estates is 15*s.* an "acre?"—That is the average; excepting of course the accommodation fields, which are separate.

39,263. "And on the estate you have bought "it is 16*s.* 6*d.*" Is that right?—No; the whole average is 16*s.* 6*d.*, putting the new farms in.

Chairman—continued.

39,264. "Does this mean that your bought "farms are higher in rent than the farms which "you inherited?"—Much higher.

39,265. "You say that the adjoining farms "are let at a higher figure than your own?"—That is these new ones; I only bought what adjoin me.

39,266. "Does this mean that these adjoining "farms are too highly rented, or that yours are "too low?" That refers to the farms on the adjoining estates: do we understand that the farms on the adjoining estates are let at a higher rent than yours?—No; I did not say that they are higher, because my knowledge would not allow me to say so; but I do not think mine are higher than on the neighbouring estates. I can only judge from what I have purchased: those were certainly higher than mine.

39,267. "If yours are too low——"—I will not put that question?—I do not consider mine too low; I consider them fair.

39,268. "What estates are adjoining yours?"—On one side Mr. Campbell Davys; on another side, the representatives of the late Mr. Rees, of Diflyn; on another side Mr. Carbery Pryse-Rice; on the remaining side the late Mr. John Jones's estate—the B'aenos estate.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Davies called and examined.

Chairman.

39,269. You are a freeholder and an auctioneer?—Yes.

39,270. Where do you live?—Rhyblid, Myddfai.

39,271. How far is that from here?—Five miles.

39,272. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—My father became a tenant of Mr. Saunders Davies in the year 1859, in succession to his uncle. The rent of the farm in my uncle's time was 50*l.*, but it was raised to 65*l.* when my father took it. The name of Mr. Saunders Davies was a loadstone attracting to itself the whole confidence and respect of the tenants, and my father laid out his capital freely. Mr. Saunders Davies, however, died, and the estate was revalued and the rents raised. The rent of Rhyblid was raised to 68*l.* 10*s.*, the additional 3*l.* 10*s.* being raised on the right of common which belonged to the farm, or rather it did not belong to the farm, but the farm had a right to it. My father went on improving the farm, by draining the wet ground, and clearing the undergrowth of thorns on other parts, and clearing stones from patches of land which are now under cultivation. He also did all the haulage for the new buildings free of cost. Unexpectedly in March 1884, the estate was sold by public auction at Llandovery. It was so unnatural for my father to see his own improvements sold by public auction, that he tried to get Mrs. Saunders Davies to sell it privately, but she refused, as it would probably spoil the sale, and she was determined to get as much money as possible for it, as she wanted to pay for another estate which she had recently bought. My father bought Rhyblid at the sale for 2,590*l.* He was prepared to give more for it, if it had been necessary, but even as it was he had to buy back the improvements he had himself made, and it was not due to Mrs. Saunders Davies that he had not to pay much more for them. Not more than 3 or 4 of the other tenants purchased their farms out of 96 lots. I consider that my father doubled the value of the farm during the years 1859–1883 by his own labour, skill, and enterprise, and that he should have received some better security for his investment than chance at a public sale.

Chairman—continued.

INSECURITY OF TENURE.—The sale of a whole estate, and the change of landlords, no doubt lead to insecurity of tenure. But there are instances in this district of farmers being ejected from their holdings for no reason except that the landlord wanted to consolidate a dozen farms into one. About 35 years ago Mr. Bree, clerk in holy orders, came to live at Llwynwormwood in this parish. He rented the 12 adjoining farms (from the same landlord) for the term of 21 years, at a higher rent than was paid by the tenants. All the tenants and several cottagers were compelled to leave, but before the end of seven years he became insolvent, and absconded without paying his rent, and left the buildings in a very bad state. Owing to this, a large part of our parish is unpopulated, and only 6 of the 12 tenements have been since occupied, while the others are still in ruins. There are extensive areas of land where the soil has been neglected, which, if properly cultivated, would produce treble the results, and would be sufficient to maintain many families. The soil is not good enough for permanent pasture, but it is very convenient for the market. The landlord was Sir Erasmus Williams.

LAND HUNGER. — Such policy is, in my opinion, criminal when land hunger is so keen in the district. There are not so many applicants for a large farm as there are for smaller ones, whose rents are between 20*l.* and 50*l.* A very compact little farm, named Blaendynfych, became vacant in this parish last Michaelmas, and there were about 30 applications. Landlords probably wondered at this and thought the land must be let very cheap. But what surprised me was that there were not three times as many applicants, as the two previous tenants had been prosperous, and while men live in slavery, it is very natural that there should be a rush for the first to be freed.

HIGH RENTS.—Rents in this neighbourhood have been raised of late years from 20 per cent. to 50 per cent. and even 100 per cent. In order to pay the rent, the majority of our farmers are obliged to be farmers and something else, such as butchers, timber hauliers, and labourers. While they are thus compelled by circumstances to take to other occupations, it cannot be expected that they should continue to be as expert in managing the soil as their fathers.

There are farmers in this district that are not able to obtain the necessaries of life, and cannot get sufficient clothing for their children to attend a place of worship. I refer to men who work hard to pay their rent and earn an honest living.

The general rule is to let farms to the highest bidder, though there are some exceptions.

Rents have been increased owing to improvements made by the tenants, and the result is that they have often spent their all before leaving a farm. It very often happens that tenants pay rent with borrowed money.

LABOUR.—Servants are engaged by the year, and it is the custom to retain them during this term except owing to exceptional circumstances.

Wages have increased during the last 10 years. The best man could then be got for 20*l.*, with food and lodgings; now I have to pay 25*l.* to a boy under 20 years of age, 20*l.* to a boy under 18, and 17*l.* to a boy under 14. It is impossible to get a married couple to come and live out of the towns and villages. I have offered as much as 12*s.* week, with house, garden, board, and part of fuel, but I have failed to get anyone, as the house is some distance away from the village. Farmers have consequently to give up tilling the soil and go in for more grazing. We depend mostly in this district on raising sheep, cattle, and ponies.

PRICE OF CATTLE.—Prices have fallen during the last 10 years, the average being as follows:—

Mountain lamb -	12*s.* per head -	6*s.* per head.
Cross bred - -	24*s.* „ -	12*s.* 6*d.* „
Mountain wethers -	25*s.* „ -	16*s.* 6*d.* to 18*s.* per head.
Mountain ewes -	21*s.* „ -	10*s.* per head.
Wool - - -	8*d.* per lb. -	6½*d.* per lb.
Yearling colts - -	6*l.* per head -	3*l.* per head.
Yearling cattle -	9*l.* „ -	3*l.* „
Two-year old cattle -	16*l.* 10*s.* per head	8*l.* „

LOCAL RATES.—The local rates have been assessed very unequally. Gentlemen's mansions have been rated very low up till lately. The valuation list, however, has lately been revised, and they are now rated on the same basis as the adjoining farms. Sir James Hills-Johnes lately proposed at the Assessment Committee that all woodlands should be assessed, whether they were enclosed or unenclosed, as they profited the owner in either case, but the proposal was rejected.

The Assessment Committee take care to levy rates on woodlands that have been planted for shelter, on land that was already rated, and which was a long distance from the railway station; while gentlemen that occupy a prominent position on the Assessment Committee neglect to assess extensive woodlands of their own, which are enclosed and convenient to the railway station.

During the last few years this parish has been burdened with heavy rates owing to extra haulage of timber, the property of the Earl of Ashburnham. The hauling of timber lasted for years, about 12 tons daily being taken from Llanddeusant through this parish. Not a penny compensation has been received from the owner, nor did he pay rates on the land where the timber grew. (I know that it is the practice of some highway boards to apply for compensation, but they failed to agree at our board. Nothing has been done. The question is, what constitutes "extraordinary traffic"?

39,414. Four fields belonging to Mr. Lloyd, Glansevin, are let out as accommodation land in this parish. They are let by the year, and all rates and taxes are paid by the landlord. Their rateable value was 77*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*, but Mr. Davies, Froodvale, Mr. Lloyd's agent, appealed and demanded a reduction. He succeeded in getting it reduced to 55*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, while he receives for one of the fields 51*l.* a year. Tenant farmers, on the other hand, are rated according to their rent, however extortionate it may be.

Game.—There is a good deal of game preserving in this district, and the agreements, especially old ones, are most atrocious on this point. I produce some agreements I have been able to get. Some of the clauses are illiberal and tyrannical. There are instances where farmers, sooner than submit to be tied hand-and-foot to such conditions, gave up farms which they had held for a long time and had greatly improved. (Farmers gave such instances at our first meetings, but it is impossible now to get them to stand to what they then said).

Most of tenants, however, have taken advantage of the Ground Game Act, but they still suffer much, as there are so many reserve plantations in the district. Scores of dogs have been poisoned and shot, for which the farmers had in some instances been offered 5*l.*

Railway Rates.—I get my artificial manures from Birkenhead and Wednesbury, and am obliged to pay from 17*s.* 6*d.* to 18*s.* 6*d.* per ton in railway rates. It is often the case that farmers send to the pit's mouth for coal, though the distance is great. We pay 10*s.* per ton for it at the pit, while the railway rates would result in doubling the price Tenants' Children.—Farmers' children are obliged to work without wages, and very often without pocket money. Farmers provide for their children when they get married, often at the cost of impoverishing themselves.

On small farms, if the family is large, the children are obliged to go to service, and transfer their earnings to help their parents to pay the rent.

Freeholders.—Small freeholders are numerous in this district, especially in Llanddeusant parish. Lord Ashburnham offers his farms for sale by treaty, the sitting tenant having the first offer, at 40 years' purchase. The tenants, however, are unable to do this as the rents are so high. Seven tenants have bought their farms in this way, but many of them are already freeholders, having inherited farms.

Condition of Farmhouses.—The dwelling-houses and outbuildings on some estates are very poor, but they have improved somewhat since the sanitary inspector has made a few reports.

Chairman—continued.

The following instance fell under my notice lately. A widow named Mrs. Rees lived with her boy of 14 at a little farm called Rhandir Wyn, in the parish of Cil-y-cwm. The farm belongs to Mr. Campbell-Davys. The building is in a wretched condition. She had sold the landlord two tons of hay, and though he was allowing 10 per cent. abatement to the other tenants, he refused to give her any abatement, as he had bought the hay from her. He had raised the rent 5*l.* a year since he had bought it.

Commons.—There are extensive common lands in this district, known as the Black Mountain. It is managed by court leets. Each parish has its own court, and its byelaws and customs. The court leet is composed of 12 jurors and a steward, but it is too weak to defend the public.

Encroachment. — Mr. Sharp, a Scotchman residing at Brecknock, who has no right of common in Carmarthenshire, has fenced across the River Usk, which is the boundary, and has enclosed some meadow-land known as Ynys Wysg, the best plot of land on the whole mountain. He has had a notice from the court leet to remove the fence, but he has not complied. He offers rent for the land. A field in this parish, which was under the same management as common land, but was rented for 1*l.* a year to the pound-keeper, has been sold and re-sold. See 51,601–51,611.

Grievances of Commoners.—The advertising of strayers has become a common practice. There is no protection for pitch-marks, ear-marks, &c. There should be a registry office where each of the commoners might register his mark in order to protect his property. The "liberty" of one is now often encroached upon by the other. As soon as the shooting season comes in there is a good deal of trespassing on the lower grounds.

There is no doubt that farmers have to pay more for farms which have the right of common. (See above, where my father had to pay 3*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* more when the estate was re-valued.) Some farms that adjoin the Black Mountain are let at an average of 1*l.* per acre, though they are 2,700 feet above the level of the sea, and their subsoil consists of badger's earth (pridd mochyn bychan).

Take also the instance I have given of the price demanded by Lord Ashburnham for his farms.

Migrations.—Farmers from this district have migrated to Brecknockshire, where they are thriving.

Leases and Agreements.—Some of the best landlords have poor agreements and bad customs. It is the practice to raise the rent when a tenant dies. A neighbour, of Tynewydd, died, leaving six orphan children. The landlord, Mr. Gwynne Holford, advanced the rent 12*l.* The agreement I produce. My father and another neighbour were obliged to become sureties for the rent before the orphans were allowed to have the place.

Leases have been offered on some estate, but the farmers refuse to accept them owing to the high rents.

Welsh farmers have been in the habit of looking up to their landlords for favours rather than for the satisfaction of their just claims. Landlords insist upon their old privileges, even at some expense (e.g., fowl duty).

The Agricultural Holdings Act has a good name, but 90 per cent. of the farmers are ignorant of its provisions.

SUGGESTIONS.—The following suggestions were made at a public meeting:—

"(1.) Rent should be adjusted on a sliding-scale, as tithes in past times.

"(2.) Land court should arbitrate between landlord and tenant in case of dispute. A land court would not deprive landlords of their rights, but of their unjust privileges. Landlords at present get their rents, but the land is being starved owing to the fact that no capital is spent on it. This is because (a) rents are too high, (b) tenure is too insecure, and (c) no certainty of compensation for improvements.

"(3.) The law of distress should be amended. In cases of insolvency the landlord should be on the same basis as other creditors. Then landlords and land-agents would let land, not to the highest bidders, but to the best tenants.

"(4.) The Local Veto Bill, if it becomes law, would be a great advantage to the farmers, as they would then have it in their power to sweep away a fruitful source of pauperism."

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,273. Is your father alive now?—No.

39,274. Then you are the freeholder of the farm in which you live?—Yes.

39,275. You would remember, probably, the sale of 1884?—Yes.

39,276. Do you consider you are better off as a freeholder, or as you were, a tenant farmer?—As a freeholder.

39,277. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, do you think it is satisfactory?—It does not apply to our district at all.

39,278. You have just said that the Agricultural Holdings Act has a good name, but that 20 per cent. of the farmers are ignorant of its provisions?—I said 90 per cent.

39,279. Then that comes very much nearer to what we have heard elsewhere. I can quite understand it now. Do you think it would be better understood if it was published in Welsh?—I do not know. It has been published in Welsh. We had a meeting, and a very popular meeting, held the week before last, and some person mentioned that it had been printed in Welsh, but they were all ignorant that it had been printed.

39,280. Then if it has been printed in Welsh it has not been circulated?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,281. It has not been officially printed?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,282. You are aware of its provisions yourself?—Not to a great extent; only a little.

39,283. With regard to railway rates, have you a farmers' club in this neighbourhood, or an agricultural association for the county?—There is a branch here of a club the West of England. I believe it is called, but I am not a member myself.

39,284. There is an agricultural society for the county?—Yes.

39,285. Do you take any interest in that society?—I am a member of it.

39,286. Do you not think it would be a very good plan to get a committee of your agricultural society to approach the railway companies for special rates?—Yes, I think it would be advantageous for the farmers.

39,287. I believe the railway companies are quite prepared to meet their freighters in a fair spirit?—I do not know, indeed.

39,288. Well, I can speak with some authority on that subject. I think they are very glad to meet their freighters, and learn what their views are. At all events you do not suggest that the rates which are charged upon the railway are beyond the maxima?—Yes, I think they are.

39,289. You think they are beyond the maxima?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

If you think that, that is a very strong position from which to approach the railways, but I do not think you will find that to be the case. However, I make the suggestion to you that it will be a very good thing to take action through your existing organisations, and I think you will find that the railway companies will be prepared to meet you.

39,290. You said that you thought that the Agricultural Holdings Act did not meet the case of your district. What particular, chiefly, had you in your mind?—Well, I do not know of any case that it has been applied to in our district.

39,291. Is it chiefly with regard to the sheep that you think it insufficient?—I have not seen any clause in it referring to sheep.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,292. It has no reference to sheep at all; there is no mention of sheep in it?—No; I have not seen it.

39,293. You think there ought to be a rule that the incoming tenant takes the sheep from the outgoing tenant do you?—I do not believe I referred to that in my evidence.

39,294. It is simply in general that you think that it does not meet your case?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

39,295. I have only one question to deal with, that is, with regard to this matter of railway rates. Do you say that the coal costs 10*s.* a ton at the pits?—Yes.

39,296. And that the railway rates would result in doubling the price?—Yes.

39,297. Then does that mean that the railway would charge 10*s.* a ton, or what does it mean? What pit does it come from, and how far do they carry it?—We get it at Brynamman.

39,298. Where does it go to?—To our place; and if we get it from Llandovery, and get it at 6*d.* per cwt. at Brynamman, it would cost 1*s.* over here.

39,299. That is, you buy it of a coal merchant, and give the coal merchant 1*s.*; but it does not follow that that is all for railway rates. That is the coal-merchant's profit as well, because he sticks it on a bit?—Yes, he does.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,300. Do you think that the fact that there is competition for farms is a proof that farmers are doing well?—No, I do not think it is a proof that they are doing well, but that they are doing it badly, and that they try to do it better by risking some other farms.

39,301. It may be taken in this light, that a farmer finds he is going back, and says, "Now "such and such a farm has become vacant, my "lot cannot be worse in this one, therefore I will "go and try that one"; and a lot of them being of the same mind there is competition for that farm?—Yes.

39,302. So that really it is no proof whatever that a farmer is doing well because there is keen competition for farms?—No.

39,303. And possibly, in some instances, a landlord may think his farms are let cheap, because the competition is so keen?—Yes, they think it.

39,304. That is the interpretation they put upon it?—Yes.

39,305. You referred to this farm of Mr. Campbell-Davys. Did Mr. Campbell-Davys pay more than the value of the hay that he bought of this widow?—No, it was the ordinary price.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

39,306. Do you think she was in arrear of rent and that he took the hay instead of the rent?—By what she told me she was not.

39,307. And practically he went and broke the agreement himself, because I think on Mr. Campbell-Davys' estate he binds his tenants not to sell any hay off the farm?—Yes.

39,308. He broke the agreement himself and the tenant had to pay the penalty. Is that so?—Yes, if he had an agreement with this widow. I do not know whether he had.

39,309. Whose estate is Tynewydd farm on?—Mr. Gwynne Holford's.

39,310. Is this condition observed: "the "tenants to deliver annually at Cilgwyn at "Michaelmas two fat turkeys or two fat geese "for the use of the landlord his heirs or assigns?"—Yes.

39,311. Do the tenants feel that this is rather humiliating?—They were glad to do it when he used to hold Cilgwyn as his residence in our parish, but since he has taken them up to Buckland, in Breconshire, I do not believe they are willing to comply with that clause.

39,312. Do they have to pay the carriage on them?—No, he is making something to transfer them from one place to the other.

39,313. Do you think that this condition is undesirable?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,314. It is a very ancient custom, I believe?—Yes, I believe it is on that estate.

39,314*a.* It used to be called duty fowls?—Yes.

Chairman.

39,315. The following questions are handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "What was the name "of the widow whose rent was raised by Mr. "Gwynne Holford?"—She was not a widow. They were orphan children living at Tynewydd. The name was Price.

39,316. "You say your father improved his "farm?"—He did.

39,317. "Did not the landlord pay the ex-"penses of permanent repairs except hauling?"—He did not.

39,318. "Did not Major Watkins buy most of "Mr. Saunders Davies' estate?"—Nearly all.

39,319. "Was he not the landlord?"—He was.

39,320. This question is handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Did your father go surety "for the orphan children on the Gwynne Holford "Estate?"—He did.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS EVANS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

39,321. Do you live in this neighbourhood?—Yes.

39,322. How far off do you live?—I live in Llandovery now, but I have been living at Abergwenlas, near Cilycwm.

39,323. How far off is Cilycwm?—It is about four miles off.

39,324. Do you believe the differences of language creed or politics make any difference in the relations between landlord and tenant?—No, I do not.

39,325. Are you a tenant-farmer now?—No, I have not got a farm now.

39,326. Is your son a farmer?—Yes.

39,327. And you live with your son?—No, I live in Llandovery by myself.

39,328. Your son is a farmer?—Yes.

39,329. Do you prefer a lease or a yearly tenancy?—I would as soon have it by the year.

39,330. Do you think that the tenancies are reasonably secure?—According to the master—according to the landlord.

39,331. Are you in favour of a land court of any description?—I do not care very much which it is. I have left them.

39,332. Do you think that there is any ground for saying that farmers are afraid to come forward and give evidence?—I daresay there are some who are afraid.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,333. How many tenants are there on Mr. Campbell-Davys' estate?—I do not know.

39,334. Are you authorised to speak on behalf of the tenants generally?—No, I am not.

39,335. You only speak on behalf of yourself?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

39,336. You say that it depends a good deal on the master whether a tenant would be rather under a yearly tenancy or under a lease. Which would you prefer upon Mr. Campbell-Davys' estate with a reasonable rent?—I would not want a lease; I have been for 33 years on that estate without.

39,337. Was your rent raised during that period at all?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,338. You said that the tenancy was reasonably secure according to the landlord?—Yes, according to the landlord.

39,339. Then you were quite satisfied with your landlord?—Yes.

39,340. Is your son perfectly satisfied with his landlord too?—I have not heard him say that.

39,341. Because you went on to say that you objected to a land court because you had left the farm?—No.

39,342. It was not because you had left it. Will you give me your opinion upon it?—No, I do not want to give an opinion upon it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

What he said was this, that he did not care much.

Chairman.

39,343. Is your evidence to be corroborated by Mr. David Harries, Mr. Thomas Powell, Mr. William Jones, and Mr. David Williams, all from the neighbourhood of Cilycwm?—I do not know.

39,344. You know nothing about it?—I know nothing about what these men are going to say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID HARRIES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

39,345. Where do you live?—Bryndar, Cilycwm.

39,346. How far is that from here?—About three miles away.

39,347. Did you hear the evidence of the last witness?—Yes.

39,348. Do you agree with it?—Splendidly.

Mr. Grove.

39,349. Are you in favour of security of tenure?—I do not wish for anything better than I have so long as my landlord is alive.

39,350. Yes, but suppose the landlord dies?—Oh, I do not know how to do after that.

39,351. Suppose the landlord sells the property, and it gets into someone else's hands?—Then I would have to go under the terms of that landlord.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,352. Supposing you left this farm, do you know at how many months' notice you would have to go?—Yes; I am willing to go away on six months, and I will get 12 months if I want it.

39,353. But according to this agreement it is six months. It is the one that has been signed in 1889?—I did not sign that one.

39,354. It is under an old agreement then?—Yes.

Chairman.

39,355. The Reverend Thomas Evans asks, "Can the witness deny that he has not been "asked to give evidence by his landlord, Mr. "Campbell-Davys?"—Yes, I can.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Powell called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

39,356. Where do you live?—Cefntrenfa.

39,357. How far is that?—About three miles from here.

39,358. Did you hear Mr. Thomas Evans's evidence?—Yes, my Lord.

39,359. Do you in the main agree with it?—Yes, I agree with most of it—all that I heard of him.

39,360. Are you perfectly satisfied with the conditions under which you hold your tenancy?—Yes, I am.

39,361. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Campbell Davys.

39,362. What is the size of your farm and the rent?—120*l.* is my rent for 160 acres.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,363. You had an abatement, I think?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

39,364. Did you understand that that abatement was given you permanently, or that it was only on account?—For ever—permanent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,365. What was the amount of the abatement?—2*s.* in the £.

39,366. Were you satisfied with it?—I had to be satisfied.

39,367. Would you like to have more?—I would.

39,368. Do you think you ought to have more?—Yes, I believe I ought to have in these bad times.

39,369. But you have to take what your landlord chooses to give you?—Oh, yes.

39,370. Were you asked to come forward by your landlord to give evidence?—No.

39,371. Not by anyone?—No, by no one.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

39,372. Where do you live?—Cwmcroiddwr.

39,373. How far off is that?—About 4½ miles.

39,374. Are you a tenant farmer?—No, I have given up my farm.

39,375. Whom did you rent under?—Mr. Campbell Davys.

39,376. What was the size of your farm?—120 acres wood and hill and everything—upland.

39,377. What was the rent?—45*l.*

39,378. When did you give up your farm?—About two years ago.

39,379. How long had you been on your holding?—I was paying the rent to my landlord for about 42 years.

39,380. You gave up two years ago, and were 42 years on the farm, is that right?—Yes.

39,381. Did you do any improvements on the farm during those 42 years?—Yes, I improved it as much as I could for my own sake.

39,382. How much money did you spend on the farm in improvement?—I did not spend anything on the farm. If anything, I put something by for myself; I made something for myself; it paid me.

39,383. You made no improvements on the farm?—Yes, as best I could, only that my landlord did all the repairs that I wanted, and built a carthouse and a stable; but I did all the haulage. The landlord also did the dwelling-house.

39,384. Did you do the haulage to the dwelling-house?—Yes.

39,385. Did you receive any compensation for that?—No, that is the custom; that is, that we should haul, and that the landlord should do the rest.

Chairman—continued.

39,386. Did you receive any compensation on leaving the farm?—No; my daughter had the farm.

39,387. Your daughter is in possession of the farm now?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,388. Did you give up the farm because you found it a losing business?—No, never.

39,389. When was the most prosperous time in farming?—A good many years now.

39,390. Twenty?—I will not be quite certain about that, but the times have turned for years.

39,391. Has farming been a paying business since about the year 1879?—I cannot say, but it paid me something.

39,392. Not a great deal?—Not a great deal; a little, but it was paying; I could get the two ends of the string to meet.

39,393. Nothing more?—A little.

Mr. Grove.

39,394. I suppose you mean that the two ends of the string would meet and a little bit lap over?—Yes, a little was over, but there has not been the last few years. It is so now that no one can do anything; and half of them fail to pay.

39,395. Was your farm considered to be a fairly cheap farm?—Well, I cannot say, but it paid me pretty well.

39,396. You got your 120 acres for 45*l.*; that is about 7*s.* 6*d.* an acre?—Yes; the farm was 120 acres, and my rent was 45*l.*, but there was some upland and woodland, but it did not hurt me; it did me good.

Chairman.

39,397. A question is handed up by Mr. Gwilym Evans: "Have you been asked to give "evidence?"—My landlord has a paper showing how it was. I never received anything but from my landlord. Broderick had a paper for me.

39,398. Do you quite understand the question? You need not be afraid to answer any question. We bear you harmless for anything you say?—I am afraid of nothing.

39,399. Have you been asked to give any evidence?—No, nothing about this evidence here.

Chairman—continued.

39,400. "Did you come down this morning in "your landlord's carriage?"—Yes; not in Mr. Campbell Davys' carriage, but in the steward's.

39,401. "Is this usual?" Is it usual for you to drive about in the steward's carriage?—I have not been for several years before.

39,402. "Is Broderick referred to Mr. Camp-"bell Davys' agent or sub-agent?"—He is Mr. Campbell Davys' butler.

39,403. This is a question by Mr. L. Stephen: "Have you come here entirely of your own free will?"—I was coming down myself without anybody forcing me.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

39,404. You are Mr. David Williams, of where?—Erryd.

39,405. How far off is that?—About three miles.

39,406. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

39,407 Who is your landlord?—Mr. Campbell Davys.

39,408. Did you hear the evidence of Mr. Thomas Evans?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

39,409. Do you agree with it?—Yes, I can agree with everything he said; I have nothing to deny.

39,410. What is your acreage, and your rent?—140 acres for 100*l.* rent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,410*a*. Have you any mountain land?—No, none.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN PRICHARD was called and did not respond.

Mr. Gwilym Evans.

39,411. My Lord, I tender this Mr. John Prichard as a witness on the part of the tenants, and he is here. If he does not choose to come forward I cannot help it.

Chairman.

Is Mr. John Prichard in the room?

Mr. John Prichard.

Yes.

Chairman.

You can come forward with the greatest possible confidence. You need not be afraid of anything happening to you. The Commission are perfectly determined to do everything in their power to protect any person upon whom any pressure is put. We are unanimous upon that point

Chairman—continued.

Mr. John Prichard.

No, I shall not.

Chairman.

You would rather not come forward?

Mr. John Prichard.

No.

Mr. J. P. C. V. PRYSE-RICE recalled and further examined.

Witness.

See 39,213. 39,412. With reference to the statement that Mr. E. P. Evans, of Lasallt Isaf, received notice to quit, I wish to explain why he had notice two years ago. It was because the farm was going to be sold, and my trustee informed me that every tenant should have notice that the farm was going to be sold.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,412*a*. When was it?—I think it was two or three years ago. Further than that, the tenant knew at the time why I gave him notice; it was distinctly stated to him, as it is to most of my tenants when I do give notice. I have only given seven notices in three years.

Chairman.

39,413. Notice was given to this gentleman about two years ago?—About two years to two-and-a-half years ago.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN DAVIES recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

39,414. Do you wish to make any further statement?—I want to rebut a statement which was made by Mr. David Davies, of Rhyblid, Myddfai, to-day He said that "three fields "belonging to Mr. Lloyd, Glansevin, are let out "as accommodation land, they are let by the "year, and all rates and taxes are paid by the "landlord. The rateable value was 77*l.* 5*s.*, "but Mr. Davies, Froodvale Mr. Lloyd's agent, "appealed, and demanded a reduction. He "succeeded in getting it reduced to 55*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, "while he receives for one of the fields 51*l.* a "year. Tenant farmers, on the other hand, are "rated according to their rent, however extor-"tionate it may be." I simply wish to state that I attended before the Assessment Committee, and laid before them the Ordnance Plan of the Glansevin lands in the parishes of Llangadock and Myddfai; I accounted for every field upon that plan to the committee. I produced my books showing the rentals of the estate, to prove my figures. The chairman of that committee was the late Mr. Jones, of Ystrad, who was the county councillor for the parish of Myddfai, the very parish of which Mr. Davies speaks. Of the guardians present, one was Mr. Griffiths, who knows the Glansevin Estate, as well as I do; the other Mr. Rees, of Talgarth, who is a well-known practical farmer; and there were other farmers present at the time I made this appeal. The assessment was, before that time, very excessive. The Assessment Committee, after my statement, confirmed by the documents which I produced, reduced the assessment. That is all I have got to say.

39,415. Do you contradict this, then?—I contradict it most emphatically.

39,416. But you do give us to understand that the rateable value was reduced?—It was reduced, but the inference which is drawn from this is that I had stated what was not true

39,417. I do not think so?—I take it so. He says, "He succeeded in getting it reduced to "55*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, while he received for one of the "fields 51*l.* a year."

Chairman.

39,418. Do you let that field at 51*l.* a year?—I have no idea what field he refers to There are many fields.

39,419. He refers to one particular field, which is let at 51*l.* a year?—The demesne lands of Glansevin are assessed in one sum. I could not possibly, at a moment's notice, refer to any one particular field.

39,420. Then I do not understand what you wish to contradict. You do not contradict the statement that you were successful in getting it reduced to 55*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*?—Certainly not.

Chairman—continued.

39,421. And you do not contradict that one of the fields was let for 51*l.* a year?—I do not adopt his figures at all. The assessment of the demesne lands was reduced on the whole. I cannot refer to one field.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,422. You are not prepared to say he is wrong, are you?—I am prepared to say that if the rent of the field is 51*l.* the assessment of the parish could not have been reduced as he states. The inference that I deduced from his evidence was that he accused me of having made a statement or representation before the Assessment Committee which was not correct. I contradict that.

Chairman.

39,423. I do not think that is so. The rateable value of the three fields was 77*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*, and you were successful in getting it reduced to 55*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Is that right?—I could not tell you. I have not the papers with me.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,424. I think it is put in rather a complimentary sense to you—that your influence was so great that you got the assessment reduced from 77*l.* to 55*l.*?—Thank you, sir. I do not think my influence would have very much effect upon the Assessment Committee in the Llandovey Union, who are very shrewd men; they would require something more than that to be satisfied.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,425. May I ask whether these three fields were all that were assessed at the time?—No, there was a large area assessed. If it had been only these three fields, I should have had them in my mind. I come to rebut this on the assumption that Mr. Davies was accusing me of having gone before the Assessment Committee and misled them.

Chairman.

39,426. I do not think you need trouble yourself about that?—Then I am sorry to have troubled you.

Chairman.

39,426*a*. You do not want to make any imputation of that kind, Mr. Llewelyn Williams?

(Mr. Llewelyn Williams.) Oh, dear no.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EVAN WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

39,427. Where do you live?—Glanmarlais, Llansadwrn.

39,428. How far is that?—Llansadwrn is eight miles from here.

39,429. You are a freeholder?—Yes.

39,430. You live on your own land?—Yes.

39,431. Are rents too high in your district in your opinion?—Yes.

39,432. You say "especially where there are thatched roofs"?—Yes.

39,433. Are the tenants obliged to keep the roofs in repair?—Yes.

39,434. That is part of the conditions?—Yes.

39,435. And, straw being very dear, you find that a difficult thing to do?—Yes.

39,436. You think the dairies in this part of the country are very bad, and not what they ought to be?—Yes.

39,437. Is there any common land in the parish of Llansadwrn?—No. I have got the book here to prove it.

39,438. Is any chief rent collected by any person?—Yes.

39,439. Who is that person?—Mr. Pelham, or Major Pelham for the lady of the manor, his wife.

39,440. Are fines ever imposed?—Yes.

39,441. On what occasions?—When a person marries or buys land. I can prove that by this letter. (Handing.)

39,442. This is dated the 20th September 1888: "Plas-y-Dderwen, Llandovery. Dear sir, "Manor of Llansadwrn; Court Leet held the "20th October 1886; mortuary fee on the "death of your mother, 10*s.* Court Leet held "on the 9th November 1887. Fine due on "your daughter's marriage, you being a free-"holder of the said manor, 10*s.*; total, 1*l.* "Please send me the above amounts at once, or "my instructions are to take proceedings. "Yours faithfully, J. R. Price, steward of the "said manor. Mr. B. Williams." Does that go on to the present time?—Yes.

39,443. Then I understand you to say that fines are imposed when a person succeeds to a freehold in the manor, when a freehold is bought, when a freeholder's son marries, when a freeholder's daughter marries, and when a freeholder marries. That is the custom?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,444. Are there many freeholders in this manor?—Yes.

39,445. Do they pay these fines on these occasions?—Yes, they do, for fear.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

39,446. And have done from time immemorial?—Yes.

39,447. You think that in the nineteenth century this kind of thing ought to be abolished?—I think so. I will show you this book (handing in tithe rent apportionment book).

39,448. Have you ever attempted to enfranchise your holding, so as to get rid of these payments?—I stopped my payment the last time, and told Mr. J. R. Price, the agent, I should not pay it, and if I did not pay it to put me in the county court, and I would defend myself.

39,449. Then you were obliged to pay, were you?—No, they never tried.

39,450. Do you think it is an illegal demand then?—I think it is not legal. That book shows plainly that they had paid the lord of the manor off.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,451. You have handed in the inclosure award, and this is sworn before a Commissioner. One of the provisoes, on page 5, is: "It is hereby "further enacted that nothing herein contained "shall prejudice, lessen, or defeat the right, "title, or interest of the lord of the manor herein "mentioned in or to the seignorage or royalties "incident or belonging to the said manor." Is not that so?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,452. Do we understand that you are advised that these payments are illegal and cannot be enforced?—No, I have had no advice, but I took it on my own sense.

39,453. It is simply an old custom, which you think ought now to be abolished?—If you look at that, there is no common in Llansadwrn parish.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,454. No, but the inclosure award says that the interest of the lord of the manor is not to be "prejudiced, lessened, or defeated"?—But he had a portion of it that came off.

Mr. Seebohm.

This I think had nothing whatever to do with commons or common land. It is simply an old manorial right, which has been retained probably.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JAMES REES called and examined.

Chairman.

39,455. You are a farmer, a cattle dealer, and a labourer?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

39,456. And you live at Talgarth, Llandovery?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

39,457. How far off is that?—4½ miles from here.

39,458. Will you kindly give us your statement?—

Personal.—I took possession of Talgarth Farm in the year 1854 at an annual rent of 127*l.* The rent before I took it was 123*l.*, 4*l.* being charged as interest on money laid out in draining a field of about 11 acres. About 15 years after, the estate was sold, and my farm amongst others. Talgarth was sold in several lots, and some fields were therefore taken away from it and others added to it. The best way in which I can show the increase in the rent is by taking the case of another farm with mine from which a portion has been taken to add to mine. The old rents were as follows:—Talgarth and Bronfelyn, 247*l.* The present rent of the same land is now 375*l.*, showing an increase of 128*l.*, or over 50 per cent. Before the estate was sold I had drained a lot of wet land, and now it is worth about 10*s.* an acre. Before it was drained, it was not worth more than 5*s.* an acre. Also I have hauled all the stones towards the buildings, and I never received a penny as compensation. I did all the haulage for the outbuildings, drained 12 fields at my own expense, and four other fields at my own expense, except the cutting. I have also made new fences.

Rents.—The following table, which shows the increase in the rents in the farms of this parish during the last 25 years, will speak for itself.

DEPOPULATION.—There are 28 cottages gone to ruin in the Hamlet of Perfedd, or Rhandirganol, as they call it, and it is difficult to get labourers to work on the farms. I do not know what will become of farming in this country if more care is not taken to build suitable cottages for the workmen where the future generation of labourers may be brought up. In Cil-y-cwm, within a radius of four miles of the village, 50 cottages have disappeared. (For these lists, see Appendix.)

CONSOLIDATION OF FARMS.—In addition to the instances already given of the consolidation of farms in Llanfair-ar-y-bryn, the following 23 farms in Cil-y-cwm have been consolidated:—Penrhiwraiadr, Troedrhiwcaglau, Penybanc, Glanrhosan, Cwrt Henry Cae'r Beili, Gilwen Fach, Melin Cwmfran, Eithyn Duon, Efel Fach, Tan-y-Lifai, Penlifai, Bryniau Bychain, Cripe, Ty Isaf, Rhos, Cefnbrith, Cwm Coed Ifor, Henllys Farm, Glan Towy, Glan Ogwrn, Holborn, Cwm Gwenlais, Aber Rhaiadr.

SUGGESTIONS.—I believe that farmers ought to have security that they shall enjoy the benefit of their own improvements, a land court to settle disputes between landlord and tenant, and rent to be fixed according to a sliding scale of prices, such as the colliers have. Farmers should feel sure that they would be paid for their work, like other people.

39,459. What is the increase in the Glanbran estate in the parishes of Glandulais and Llanwrtyd. Do you consider it has gone up 80 per cent.?—You have the figures before you.

39,460. The total increase on the Glanbran estate since 1869 is 1,106*l.* 10*s.*?—That is only part of the estate. The whole estate is not here.

39,461. That is an increase of nearly 70 per cent?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,462. Will the parish of Llanwrtyd take in the town of Llanwrtyd on the other side?—No. It is in this union.

39,463. It is a different place. It is not Llanwrtyd in Breconshire?—It is in Breconshire, but in this union.

39,464. Does it take in that popular watering place that we know as Llanwrtyd?—There are only two or three farms on the whole estate in Llanwrtyd Parish.

39,465. Is any part of that given up to modern houses?—No.

39,466. Does this strictly apply to agricultural land?—Oh yes, agricultural land, not near the villages.

Chairman.

See 40,589.

39,467. Then, on Lord Cawdor's estate, there are nine farms, and they have gone up, according to your table, nearly 30 per cent?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

39,468. There are 10 other farms in the parish of Llanfair-ar-y-bryn, and you estimate that the increase in their rents is 33⅓ per cent.?—Yes, but those are not Earl Cawdor's.

Mr. Grove.

39,469. You say that 50 cottages have disappeared; who used to occupy those cottages—farm labourers?—Most of them.

39,470. So that there is a great deal less labour on the farms now than there ought to be, according to your evidence?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,471. You speak of depopulation; but has the population of the whole district increased recently?—No, I do not believe it has.

39,472. Then, how do you account for the increase in the rent on the value of the land?—This estate was sold, and sold in very good times. Of course the landlord that bought it took advantage to raise it.

39,473. Then on Lord Cawdor's estate, which we are told is a very good one, there is a rise of 30 per cent. What is the reason of that?—I suppose he had a valuer over the estate.

39,474. Does that apply to other parts of his estate?—I suppose so.

39,475. You do not think there has been any increase of population or rise of other industries in the neighbourhood which has given an increased value to the land?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,476. Your last suggestion was that farmers should feel sure that they would be paid for their work like other people?—Yes.

39,477. Very right, but I see in the beginning of your statement under the heading "Personal" a great grievance of yours is that you were not paid for certain drainage which you did?—I was not paid.

39,478. You drained a lot of wet land and you were not paid for that on going out?—When the estate was sold I did not receive a penny.

39,479. I think the law will protect you as it now stands, will it not, under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, I suppose we must give notice.

39,480. You must give notice, but still, you have not got to require the consent of the landlord; all you have to do is to give him notice to do it, and then you are secure to get compensation for it?—So I understand.

39,481. But at that time you were not; the law had not then been passed. How long ago was it? It was the year 1854 when you took it; I do not know when you went out?—I am there still.

39,482. When did you do this drainage?—The first field was drained (the one which I say would show 4*l.* to 5*l.*) the year before I took it, in the year 1853, and I had to pay interest on the drainage when I went in.

18 April 1894.] Mr. James Rees. [Continued.

39,483. Are you still enjoying the benefit of those drains?—Well, it is in my possession; I have redrained some of it this year.

39,484. Some questions are handed in by Mr. "H. L. Stephen:—"Who are the chief landowners "in the parish of Llanfair-ar-y-bryn, and who "owns the Llanfair-ar-y-bryn estate." ?—That was sold in several lots; Lord Cawdor has got one hamlet.

35,485. Who are the chief landowners in the parish?—The whole of Rhandir Abbott hamlet with the exception of one farm belongs to Lord Cawdor.

39,486. "What buildings have been made on "your farms since you took them"?—All the buildings, besides the dwelling-house and one barn.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

39,487. "From what source have you got the figures you put in evidence"?—As to these farms, from the tenants themselves.

39,488. This is a question by Mr. Llewelyn Williams:—"You give evidence relating to the increase in all that portion of the Glanbran estate which is situated in the parishes of Glandulais and Llanwrtyd"; is that so?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,489. Do we understand with regard to Talgarth farm that the rent was raised before or after the sale?—After the sale.

39,490. By the purchaser?—By the purchaser.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Hopkins called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See 39,671

39,491. You are a tenant farmer, at Cefngornoth, Llangadock?—Yes.

39,492. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—Having been requested by the tenant farmers of the parish of Llangadock, in conjunction with Mr. Phillips, to give evidence before the Welsh Land Commission, to avoid repetition of evidence from the same district, I shall confine myself to show that rents in this neighbourhood are out of all reason too high, and Mr. Phillips will give evidence regarding the present great insecurity of tenure also in this district.

Rents.—The present high rents were fixed from 1870 on. The better times and the rising prices of all farm produce from that date and for some years afterwards were taken advantage of by nearly all landlords in this part of the country to raise their farms—some landlords at one valuation, others more gradually, varying from 15 to 50 per cent. To prove the great advancement of rents, and that it was general over the whole parish, I cannot do better than compare the valuation list in force in 1868 in the parish of Llangadock, with the one that came in force in 1893. I wish to point out that the valuation list in force in 1868 had only been made, I believe, in 1863, in which list all holdings were carefully got up to the then rents, and the freeholds and leaseholds were re-valued.

The rateable value of the parish of Llangadock in 1868 was 11,589*l.*, which included Quarter Bach. In 1892 the part called Quarter Bach was separated from the parish of Llangadock and made into a separate parish; the rateable value of which, at the time it was separated, amounted to 1,930*l.*, which is to be deducted from 11,589*l.*, the rateable value of the whole parish in 1868, which would leave 9,653*l.*, as the rateable value of the parish of Llangadock as it is now in 1868. The valuation list of the parish which came into force in 1893 amounted to 12,118*l.*, which makes a difference of 2,465*l.*, from the one of 1868, a rise of some 35 per cent. in 25 years. But the actual rise to the tenant farmers is more than that; in the revaluation of lands held by the owners to make the present valuation list, the rise to them was not more than 25 per cent. The persons appointed to value the freeholds were of opinion that the rents paid by the surrounding farmers were out of all reason, too high.

Next I beg to point out the difference of the selling prices of farm produce in the last 20 years, taking the prices that ruled in 1873, and those of 1893. Cattle, sheep, and dairy produce are our chief dependence to pay our rents. In these parts we sell our cows and heifers fat, and the steers as yearlings. The price of fat cattle in 1873 ranged from 12*s.* to 15*s* a score; the price of the same sort in 1893 ranged from 5*s.* to 10*s.* a score, which is 6*s.* a score less in 1893. The price of yearlings in 1873 ranged from 8*l.* to 16*l.* each, making an average of 12*l.*; in 1893 again the same sort made from 3*l.* to 7*l.* a head, which is an average of 5*l.* each, making a difference of 7*l.* a head in favour of 1873.

Sheep: By live weight sheep are mostly sold in these parts. In 1873 fat ewes sold from 5½*d.* in early summer to 4½*d.* in autumn. In 1893 fat sold from 3*d.* to 2*d.*, which is one-half of what the same sort in 1873. Fat lambs sold in 1873, from 7*d.* in early summer to 5*d.* in autumn, and in 1893 fat lambs sold from 4*d.* to 3*d.*, which is 2*d.* difference again in favour of 1873. Wool is down more than one-half. Dairy produce: Butter in cask in 1873 ranged from 1*s.* 2*d.* to 1*s.* 5*d.*, making an average of 1*s.* 3½*d.* Butter in 1893 from 10*d.* to 1*s.* 2*d.*; average of 1*s.*, which is again a difference of 3½*d.* in favour of 1873. To sum up difference of prices in 1873 and 1893—fat cattle 40 per cent. down; store cattle over 50 per cent. down; sheep over 40 per cent. down; wool 50 per cent, and butter 20 per cent down from 1873.

But our rents have not been reduced. It is only in two instances in the whole parish that an old tenant has had reduction in their rents; to new tenants of late some reductions from the former rents have been made for the last two or three years of from 5 to 15 per cent. So far three things have helped us to go on, the abatements that our landlords have made, the little money saved in good times, and most of us have children that work for nothing on our farms. But the last two named helps cannot help us long again. Our spare capital is nearly gone, going less and less every year, and most of us have spent all. And as to our children, we cannot expect them to remain with us much longer, seeing that all hope of better times has entirely left us. What the import of foreign corn has done to the English farmer, the import of foreign stock, dead and alive, has, and is doing, unto us. All agree that it is a ruinous business for the English farmer to raise wheat and sell it under 30*s.* a quarter; it is quite as ruinous for the Welsh farmer to rear calves and sell them at or under 5*l.* a head as yearlings. I can add that thousands of two-year-old and upland cattle have been sold last summer from 4*l.* to 5*l.* each. Our present position is most deplorable and peculiar. We work hard we live thriftily and frugally, get most of our labour done for nothing, save very plain food and scant clothing for our children, but after all, we live on the charity of our landlords. At the same time we maintain, after taking into consideration the abatements, say 15 per cent. allowed by the best landlords, that we pay them from 15 to 20 per cent. more than the actual value of the lands we rent.

That is our present position; how to better it is very difficult to answer. Some advocate protection, others to lighten the burden of local taxation; but it is plain to all that neither of the two suggestions will ever come to pass. So we are compelled to the conclusion that rents must be lowered to answer the present selling prices of farm products. To get that again is a very difficult affair. The landlords know quite as well as their tenants that their farms are too high rented, but lower them they will not. Some of us have appealed at rent audits for lowering our rents, if it be only as much as they give in abatements so that we may get lowered in our taxes on that amount. The only answer we receive is: 'It is bad times and something must be done,' and to finish, 'We shall consider,' that is all we have had, and very likely all we shall have voluntarily.

I have advocated sliding-scale of rents, rents to be adjusted according to the selling prices of farm products. I have done so for years. But now, taking all the circumstances of farming into account, I believe a land court would be best. We want security of tenure as well as just rents. Reasonable security of tenure with fair rents would work wonders in the better cultivation of the country in a very few years.

The Carmarthenshire Black Mountains.—It is to this part of the country that the right of pasturage belongs, namely, to the parishes of Mothvey, Llanddausant, Llangadock, Llandilo, and Quarter Bach. The mountains are some 12 to 14 miles long, by some three to six miles broad. Different parts of the mountain are supposed to belong to each of the different parishes. But there are no walls, banks, or fences whatever on the mountains. There is a Leet Court belonging to each of the different parishes, which take on themselves to see that the rights of common are not infringed. There used to be great importance given to the Order of the Leet Court in regard to boundary fences and different encroachments on the mountain. Now no one heeds any such orders, and their only work at present is to declare the unclaimed impounded stock forfeited. What I wish to draw the attention of the Commission to is that no benefit accrues to the tenant farmer from these mountains. All go to the landowner. The farms that are within range of the benefits of pasturages on these hills are rented at a much higher rent than they would if no such rights existed. In this district, when a farm or farms are to be sold, good care is always taken to show that such rights do belong. This is one of the particulars of a sale of land in the neighbourhood:—

"7. The rights of common pertaining to the estate are an important feature, and should not be lost sight of. In addition to rights of commonage over about 30,000 acres on the Black Mountains (whereon one farmer alone has pastured 1,200 sheep), there is a right of commonage on Carn Gôch Common extending to about 500 acres and on Carreg Sawdde Common about 300 acres. If these last-named commons were enclosed (which could easily be done by arrangement with the adjoining owners, who are very few indeed), it would give, at least, another 200 acres to the Dirleton Estate, and the Common herbage is so excellent (especially on Carreg Sawdde) that the land would readily let at from 2*l.* to 3*l.* an acre for grazing. The vendors are not to be called upon to define any rights of commonage."

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Llansawel.

FORTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Second Court.

King's Head Hotel, Llandovery, Carmarthenshire, Wednesday, 18th April 1894

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. David Brynmor Jones, Q.C., M.P.
Professor Rhys, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.

Mr. Charles Bishop called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

39,493. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—I live at Cwm Rythan, near Llandovery, and I am a solicitor and small landowner. I reside near Llandovery, where I have followed the legal profession since 1850, and farm pasture land in a small way. For many years I assisted in the agencies of the two former Lord Dynevors, of the late Earl of Ashburnham, and of other landowners in Glamorganshire, Carmarthenshire, and Breconshire, forming an aggregate of some 30,000*l.* or 40,000*l.* a year; and in that way have had long experience in the letting of lands and dealings between landlord and tenant. As an almost universal rule I have found farmers object to lettings for terms longer than from year to year; with that objection the time-honoured covenants and clauses usually inserted have little or nothing deterrent—the farmers prefer yearly lettings simply because they seldom make any outlays on their farms when they have leases, and because if they find their farming ventures do not pay they can throw up their holdings in any year. Under a lease they feel they have no right, and know they have no power, to get their rents reduced. The old-fashioned forms of leases and agreements are getting obsolete, and most landowners have simplified them, leaving the tenants almost unrestricted in the prescribed course of husbandry. The Agricultural Holdings Acts are often excluded at the desire of both parties, as being too intricate and expensive in their procedure. A few landlords still retain the stringent clauses of bygone times, but rarely does such a landlord attempt to enforce them—practically the clauses are allowed to remain as a dead letter, for actions by landlords against tenants for breaches are scarcely ever resorted to.

In the nine parishes in Upper Carmarthenshire, constituting the Llandovery Union, there has been a great increase in the number of landowners during the last 40 years, through sales of some of the larger estates; and there is no difficulty in acquiring land if the money be forthcoming. In 1840 when the Parochial Tithe

Apportionments were made there were in this area, in round numbers, 645 landowners. In 1894 the numbers in some parishes have nearly doubled and three fifths of the land changed hands.

The lands (except where reductions have recently been made) are many of them high let, when compared with former prices of agricultural produce and labour—the smaller the landowner, generally, the higher the rent. The principal landowners have lately made abatements in their rents varying from 10 to 25 per cent., some announcing them beforehand, and if times do not improve, will have to make permanent reductions accordingly. Some have already made them. Some few years ago rents became unduly inflated, that was before the agricultural depression was felt in Wales. Two causes aided in that direction—the one created by the landowners; the other by the tenants—by the landowners because for some unaccountable reason lands sell at exorbitant prices; for instance, one property comprising some 2,300 acres sold in 1884 for about 90,000*l.* for prices varying from 30 years purchase to 100 years. Another property of 1,587 acres sold in 1888 for 27,000*l.*, averaging prices of 42 years purchase. Another property of 675 acres sold in 1890 for 23,355*l.* for prices varying from 32 to 35 years. Another property of 4,466 acres, with a rental of 5,378*l.*, was sold in 1881 at very high prices. Similar auctions have occurred realising between 30 and 40 years purchase, with this result, that many of the purchasers (the small ones especially) afterwards squeezed the rents up to get a return for their purchases. Through the tenants themselves the rents have sometimes risen, because whenever a farm becomes vacant the number of applicants is great, and the competition becomes so keen that the farmers offer more than the true rent in many cases, and make the landlords think the lands are of more value than they are. Though local agricultural depression is less than it was, it still exists in a somewhat acute form; but not nearly so severe as in some parts of England

owing to the system of husbandry being pastoral and not cereal—corn being only grown more for the farmer's convenience than for his profit. Store cattle, young horses, and sheep form the staple items of produce, and on the prices paid for these by dealers who attend the fairs the profits of the farmer mainly depend. The prices realised for dairy produce and for poultry are insignificant in comparison. For dairy produce and poultry excellent markets by rail are found, being close to the mining and manufacturing parts of Glamorganshire and Carmarthenshire. Friendly and even cordial feelings, with few exceptions, exist between landlord and tenant, and it is seldom any friction arises between them in matters of rent, buildings, or sportings. Any law abolishing distress would seriously injure the smaller class of farmer—it is his safe guard in time of trouble, and is very rarely had resort to. At present, when a tenant is unable to meet his rent-day, his landlord, feeling secure under his right of distraint, bears with him, and gives him time, rather than he should borrow at a high rate of interest, until the market takes a better turn. Abolish distress, and the landlord ranks as any other creditor, and would extend no time for payment, and probably require rents paid in advance, or security given. Among other causes there are five at least that have brought about the depression in agriculture. 1st. High rents, where no abatements made; 2nd. Higher class of living among the peasantry than formerly; 3rd. Fall of prices through foreign competition; 4th. Increased price of labour; and 5th. Bad seasons. With regard to remedies, the tenants have the remedies in their own hands with regard to the two first. With regard to the third, the cause being on the increase and beyond the control of landlord or tenant, there appears to be but one remedy, and that by legislating a protective duty upon foreign corn and cattle, based upon a sliding-scale similar to the Tithe Table, and creating distinguishing trade marks upon the foreign articles.

1. Many farmers buy their own farms. The first option is frequently given them. Lord Cawdor and Mr. Gwynne Hughes are instances. They are, in these parts, hardly ever sold to strangers by private contract, nearly always by auction.

2. Game laws no longer press hardly on tenants; exceptional cases occur. If done away with, the little game that is left would quite disappear, which, in a commercial and national point of view, would be a great loss to the country in many ways. Each tenant would kill for himself everything he could. Game laws might be worked more satisfactorily if the tenants were paid capitation money for each head killed on their lands. Give the tenants a pecuniary interest in the game their land rears, and all friction would be removed, and no gamekeeper necessary. I have known this practised and answer well.

3. Farmers' sons do sometimes get wages. I have known them charged for in Inland Revenue accounts. Having been bred upon the land, they, by working, make some return to their parents, and properly so. They soon become emancipated and take farms, and then get started from the farm where they were bred and born.

4. Regulation of the width of wheels would save the roads and the rates, but the County Council has turned a deaf ear to petitions on the subject.

5. Fixity of tenure is not what the farmers want, for they refuse to take leases. What they are aiming at is to get their rents reduced, having got possession of their lands.

6. I am a titheowner, and to take away my tithe would simply be confiscation.

7. Farmers used to do all cartings for buildings. Now they stand out for payment.

8. A Land Court is thought a panacea for all agricultural distress. It would create ill feeling between landlord and tenant, and be an unmitigated evil.

9. In the evidence of Williams, of Brown Hill, it is not true to say that landlords keep fewer tenants in consequence of decline in political influence. No recent amalgamation of farms has taken place. Party colours were, by Dolgarreg tenants worn, as every one used them before the new election laws. The tenants enjoyed the fun, and went more with their landlords then than now. Since we have had land agitators spring up, there is not that cordial feeling that there used to be. See 37,825.

39,494. Have you any other remedy to suggest besides protection?—I have mentioned permanent reduction of rents—not abatements—if times do not mend, and I do not think times are likely to mend.

39,495. Do you think that the class of farming might be improved by education at all?—Decidedly. Technical education may make a very great improvement upon the style of farming here; the farmers are totally ignorant of chemistry and general technical knowledge.

39,496. Have there been any lectures on chemistry?—Not that I am aware in this locality.

39,497. I hear someone say there have been?—There may have been, but not that I am aware of in this locality—very few at any rate.

39,498. Do you think the farmers would attend if there were some?—If the lectures were delivered in Welsh, but not in English. They do not understand an English lecture.

39,499. What do you think the farmers mean when they say they want security of tenure?—They mean that they would like to have their land entirely to themselves, that they might be perfectly safe for any outlays they choose to make. They know the black sheep amongst the landlords, and they know whom they can trust, and whom they cannot trust.

39,500. Do they want to be able to give the farm up when they wish, and not to be turned out?—They would like to remain in, no doubt, as long as they wished, and not to be turned out. Of course they would.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,501. Do you find in your experience that the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, works well?—Not in these parts; it is quite a dead letter here.

39,502. Is there no custom of the country as to compensating a tenant?—No doubt if a tenant makes an outlay he never in vain appeals to his landlord to recompense him if it has not been fairly worked out. I never knew a landlord refuse to entertain a fair claim put forward by a tenant for compensation. It is very little a tenant does except a bit of draining. The outlay by them is very small.

39,503. Then I understand there is no custom of the country which by law gives them a right to compensation?—No, there is no custom of the country by law which gives them a right to compensation.

39,504. For what district do you give evidence?—I am speaking of Upper Carmarthenshire, the nine parishes that constitute this Poor Law union.

39,505. I suppose there is no doubt the large majority of the people, tenant farmers, their wives and other members of their family, and the labourers, speak the Welsh language habitually?—Oh, yes; it is their Bible and hearth language no doubt.

39,506. Is it also the fact that they are nearly all Nonconformists?—Yes, the farmers, certainly. I should say by far the greater majority are Nonconformists; there is no doubt about that; but I do not think the difference of creed makes any difference in the relations between landlord and tenant.

39,507. You have recommended a general reduction of rents unless the present depressed state of agriculture should improve?—Yes, I think the rents are too high.

39,508. That being one of the proper remedies, what do you suggest in case the landlords do not voluntarily agree to the adoption of your remedy?—I would recommend the tenant to go out of possession—give it up. It is very easy; there is no outlay made by him as a rule.

39,509. You recommend all the tenants to leave in a mass?—I would if they are not satisfied. They took their farms upon a certain condition, and if things have altered, let them come to a new arrangement or leave.

39,510. Instead of suggesting the depopulation of the country, and allowing the land to go out of cultivation, do you not think the institution of a land court might be a good thing?—I do not think a land court is required at all, because we find in practice all differences between landlord and tenants are settled between themselves. Sometimes a land valuer is called in to value the land.

39,511. Do you find in practice during the last years there has been a permanent reduction in rent?—No, I say abatement—I draw a distinction between abatement and reduction. Abatement is a temporary thing; reductions are what I call permanent.

39,512. Quite so; but you recommend reductions?—Where there have been no reductions. Where there have been abatements they should be made permanent reductions. Where there have been no abatements, there should be not only abatements but reductions too—if I make myself understood.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

39,513. How do you practically propose to carry out your recommendation?—By the tenants appealing to the landlords, and asking the landlords for a reduction, and they have done so in 90 cases out of 100 here, and they have their abatements, and I want those abatements to be reductions permanently.

39,514. You recommend reductions, you say; appeal to the landlord, and all he gives is an abatement?—There have been some reductions made. They have not been ordinary abatements. Most of them are abated, and there are some reductions. I think that where the abatements only have been made they are temporary, and I think they ought to be permanent. They are practically permanent. They are repeated over and over again, although they are not put down in black and white. In practice they operate as a permanent reduction.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,515. Why do you think that farmers are induced to purchase their holdings?—They have a great land hunger. A Welshman loves a bit of land. He will buy although he has not got the money to buy, and mortgage the land, so as to become the owner of the land.

32,516. Is it not because the farms are so often sold, and they have no security?—I do not think I can call to mind a single case where the farm was sold, and where the rents have been raised in consequence of having change of ownership, excepting what I said as to many years ago. There was an instance: Mr. Gulston bought a large estate, and he raised the rents, but with those exceptions I do not know any landlord who has bought and raised the rents except it be a small freeholder.

39,517. Has not this selling of land tended to bad farming throughout the neighbourhood?—No, I do not think it has at all. Why should it be so? It is only a change from A. to B. There is no reason why the farming should deteriorate in consequence of the change of landlord, unless the new landlord is not so good a landlord as the former one.

39,518. Are not the farmers too afraid to lay out money on the land, knowing it might be sold?—But I do not think they have the money, unfortunately. They have neither the money nor the fear. No doubt the farmer would not like to lay out money unless he had some security for his money; that is clear; but, as a rule, the landlord never does refuse to give him some assurance for an outlay if he chooses to make one.

39,519. I think we shall have some evidence contrary to what you state?—Very likely. I hope, if they are exceptional cases, the rule will not be attacked.

39,520. How do you account for this, that agricultural depression is felt now as bad as ever it was?—I think the prices of stock have improved. Certainly they never had so good a fair for years as they had yesterday.

39,521. Do you hold any land of your own at present. Do you farm at all now?—I have some 25 to 30 acres of land.

39,522. You are in a position to state at what rate things are sold at present?—Yes.

39,523. And the price of labour?—Yes, I know precious well the price of labour from experience and the price of agricultural produce.

39,524. You say that tenants are offered the refusal of the farms when they are offered for sale?—I said there are many instances in which tenants have the first refusal of the farms before they are offered at public auction. I have offered them myself frequently.

39,525. Do you consider the farms are generally rented fairly now?—That is a very nice question to answer before knowing what the abatements are. I still think many of the farms are highly rented, but I do not know and I could not form an opinion without knowing what abatements have been made.

39,526. Is it not a fact that these farms are offered to farmers at the rate of 40 years purchase?—Oh, no. They are offered at the rate which they are supposed to realise at an auction if an auction was held; that is to say, if it is estimated that a farm will fetch 40-years' purchase at an auction, then the first option is given to the tenant to buy at that valuation.

39,527. Do you not consider that if a farm is fairly rented it is very high at 40 years' purchase?—Supply and demand regulate the price. If people are willing to give 100 years' purchase I suppose the farm is worth it, if they will give it. An Englishman would say it was very high, but a Carmarthenshire man here would say it was not high.

39,528. Do you not consider it is the best way at all times for the landlord to pay for the haulage?—I think it is. I think the landlord had better pay for hauling, so that there should be nothing upon the back of the tenant, and then the tenant cannot complain. It has been the custom always for the tenant to do the hauling, but now the tenant asks for payment for the hauling, and I think it is desirable that the tenant should be paid for the hauling.

39,529. I think you admitted that there are some black sheep amongst the landlords as well as amongst the tenants?—Not many of them. I must say I think, taking the generality of landlords here, there is a good feeling existing between landlord and tenant.

39,530. You said so just now?—There is an exception. One exception is the gentleman you had before you to day, Mr. Campbell Davys. I call him a black sheep, although I have had a good deal to do with him for many years.

39,531. He is certainly the only one we have had before us to-day?—He is the only one, I think, anyone can put their finger on here, so far as I can gather. I think the tenants and the landlords get on very well

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

39,532. Do you not think that the proposed land court is suggested for the purpose of meeting such case?—No, I think the court will take away all dealing between landlord and tenant. Now the landlord meets the tenant, and they come to an understanding between themselves; put the power in the hands of a land court and there will be no connexion between the landlord and the tenant.

39,533. How would you treat with such a gentleman as we had before us to-day?—I should give him the cold shoulder if I was the tenant. I should find a landlord more generous to me.

39,534. You said just now you would recommend the tenants to leave their farms?—Where are all the tenants to go to?—I do not know that I should recommend all to leave. I said where tenants were dissatisfied. Many of Mr. Campbell Davys' tenants, I believe, are not dissatisfied.

39,535. I believe the majority of farmers in the room, if you had a show of hands, would say they are dissatisfied with the rents at the present day, and you say that they are too high?—That might be so, but they are not dissatisfied with their landlords, I think.

39,536. But with the rent?—Yes. I do not take the rent to be the sole question between the landlord and the tenant.

39,537. You say you do not think they grumble at the landlord; they only grumble at the rent?—Just so. I sympathise with them fully about the rents.

39,538. That is why they wish to appeal to a court outside, I suppose?—The landlord will never refuse to have his land valued if the tenant appeals, by a paid valuer—an impartial paid valuer would do all that the land court could do under any circumstances.

39,539. That is just what they want, they say?—Yes, but both parties have confidence in him. They appoint him.

39,540. What would you consider the difference between a valuer appointed by Government, and a valuer agreed upon between the landlord and tenant?—In one case, if he is appointed by the Government, the landlord would have no voice in his selection. If they are both agreed they would both signify their trust in him.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,541. Supposing the landlord and the tenant cannot agree upon a valuer?—I never knew such a case.

39,542. Supposing there is such a case?—In such a case let the tenant give up his farm. That is an isolated case.

39,543. If you agree to the principal of valuation, is it not simpler to let the Government appoint the valuer between them, than that the tenant should give up his farm?—It will ruin the good feeling which exists between landlord and tenant if the Government steps in.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,544. Do you think the present system is satisfactory where the landlord alone appoints a valuer and pays him?—The landlord pays him, but he does not always appoint the valuer without the concurrence of the tenant. He suggests a certain surveyor, and that land surveyor values. Sometimes he is paid by both.

39,545. If that is the case I do not know it?—He ought to be paid by both.

Lord Kenyon.

39,546. Did you observe the statement of Mr. Llewelyn Williams in his evidence before the Commission, that you marched voters to the poll on one occasion?—That was my father. He marched voters to the poll. Very likely they did go in a body. I do not deny that which I heard was a fact, but I say the tenants as much enjoyed the fun as the landlord. I do not know that the tenants went with him personally, but they seemed to like the fun.

e 37,826.

39,547. In those days, I suppose landlords were of both opinions?—They were. It was not only one party that marched their voters to the poll, but the Nonconformists did much the same kind of thing. The Nonconformists met at the chapels—it was both sides.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,548. Where did your party meet?—I do not know what you mean by my party. I am a sort of advanced Conservative. I do not know why you allude to me

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

39,549. Your fathers party The Liberals asembled at the chapels you say. Where did the Conservatives assemble?—They would assemble at the public-house perhaps. That was before the reformation of the election laws; that was under the old state of things, and of course that does not exist now.

Chairman.

39,550. There is a question by Mr. Vincent: "May I take it that your objection to a land "court or to a valuer appointed by Government "is an objection to that which is compulsory"?—One of my objections also to the land court is this, that now what is a voluntary act altogether between landlord and tenant, if a land court was established would entirely disappear and become one of compulsion—"you shall—you must."

39,551. Why should it?—It should not be compulsory between landlord and tenant. There ought to be freedom of contract between landlord and tenant.

39,552. You object to any outside interference. Is that so?—I do very much, because I do think a great deal of this agitation has been got up by outside agitators.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Davies called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

39,553. Do you say that the statement which is about to be read is correct?—Yes.

39,554. You know enough English to know that it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement was then read.]

Evidence of John Davies, tenant farmer, Aberllechach, Llanddeusant.

Rents.—There has been a general advance in the rents during the last 25 years in this district. The rents on Lord Ashburnham's estate have been raised 6*s.* in the pound in 25 farms, and that rise remains still in force, except that an abatement has been made of 3*s.* in the pound in some seasons, and 2*s.* in other seasons,—a very inadequate acknowledgment of the depression in trade, and in the price of agricultural produce. Some of this estate was sold after the rise in the rents, the sitting tenants having the first offer at 40 years' purchase. Some of them bought their farms, as they could not bear the thought of having to move from the place where they were born and bred and knew not how to earn their daily bread except by farming, and they saw that they would not get any compensation for their work and improvements on the farm. Some of them had in this way sunk all the little money which their fathers had saved, and have nothing to show for it, but they have to pay more for the money which they had to borrow in order to buy the farm than they used to pay in rent. Many small landlords in the district have raised their rents even more than Lord Ashburnham. The following bought their farms on the terms mentioned above:—J. Pritchard, Blaenau; Morgan Rees, Penrhiw; Owen Lewis, Penrhiw; Morgan Thomas, Blaencrynfe; D. Griffiths, Ty Uchaf; E. Griffiths, Henbont; Howell Jones, Llethr; E. Davies, Aberdunvant; Owen Price, Pantygwin. Four of them, however, were already freeholders by inheritance. I submit a table showing the increase in rents since 1844 in this district:—

See Evidence of next witness, 9,643.

Name of Farm.	Rent in or about 1844.	Rent in or about 1870.	Rent at present.	Remarks as to Number of Tenants, &c.
Nantcoch - -	Between 25*l.* and 30*l.*	40*l.*	34*l.*	Six tenants since 1844. Three in 20 years. Present tenant about to leave.
Gwydre - -	30*l.*	Raised twice between 1844 and 1894.	72*l.* 5*s.*	Same family.
Redwhirion - -	My grandfather was offered this at 2*l.* 10*s.*, "tra bo dwr yn rhedeg."	60*l.*	80*l.*	Eight tenants in the last 50 years.
Tylepengam - -	Under 50*l.*	60*l.*	(70*l.* or more.)	Four tenants. Three in last 20 years.
Gellygron - -	20*l.*	54*l.*	60*l.*	Same family.
Tylemawr - -	—	—	30*l.* 10*s.*	Four tenants. Three in last 20 years.
Pantycefn - -	—	10*l.*	12*l.*	Six tenants Three in last 20 years.
Tynewydd - -	About 8*l.*	—	17*l.*	16 acres near the mountain. Three tenants in my time—one a tailor, who paid the rent from his earnings.
Brynmelyn - -	Under 10*l.*	22*l.* 10*s.*	18*l.*	Four or five tenants.
Penmaen - -	—	—	38*l.*	Four or five tenants. Three in 20 years.
Gellymydog - -	Under 20*l.*	24*l.*	21*l.* (or more).	Three tenants in less than 20 years.

The rents have been raised generally, if not always, on improvements made by the tenants. Gellygron, for instance, was raised from 20*l.* to 60*l.* by Mr. Gwynne Holford, owing to the improvements made by the tenant in draining and reclaiming wild land, making hedges, &c.

INSECURITY OF TENURE.—The above list, showing the number of changes that have occurred during the last 20 years, proves the insecurity of tenure in this district. As long as rents are so high tenure cannot be secure, as farmers are not able to pay them. If farmers were certain that they would enjoy the fruits of their labour, there would be better farming.

TENANTS' CHILDREN.—Tenant farmers often keep their children to work at home. The children work harder than servants, as they feel for their parents. In some instances children work for very many years for nothing—and when they change their state, their parents cannot stock a farm for them. The children are then compelled to go away to the works or somewhere else to earn their living. I append a short list, which I could easily add to, if necessary :—

Name of Farm.	Number of Children at home.	Value of Services, if Paid for.	£	Yearly Rent. £
Nantllwyd - -	Two sons and two daughters -	Sons 25*l.* each - - / Daughters 14*l.* each - -	78	42
Llwynrhosser - -	Two sons and one daughter -	Two sons 25*l.* each - - / Daughter 14*l.* - -	64	46
Tylepengam - -	Two sons and one daughter -	One son 20*l.*, other 10*l.* - / Daughter 10*l.* - -	40	70 (or more).
Ty Uchaf* - -	One son - - - -	25*l.*		50
Tirpaum - -	Two sons - - - -	25*l.* each - - -	50	34
Pwllcaleb - -	Two sons and two daughters -	One son 25*l.* - - / „ 18*l.* - - / Daughters 14*l.* each -	71	40
Llwynin - -	Two daughters - - -	14*l.* each - - -	28	29
Pantagrafog - -	Two sons - - - -	One son 20*l.* - - / „ 10*l.* - -	30	50
Aberllechach -	Two sons - - - -	One son 20*l.* - - / „ 12*l.* - -	32	70
Gorsddu - -	One son (one son "earning" elsewhere to help his father).	One son - - -	25	30 10*s.*

Gelly-garn - -	One son and two daughters -	One son 20*l.* - - / Two daughters 18*l.* each -	56	60

* Ty Uchaf, it will be noted, has been twice mentioned as a farm bought by the tenant, and again as being held of a landlord. The tenant bought it, but afterwards sold to Mr. Peel. Danyrallt.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

As a rule though the labour on these farms pays little or nothing, the farmers are unable to do more than barely make two ends meet. There may be some exceptional cases where they are able to save a little, but those are the exceptions, not the rule.

The rent of Tylepengam has been advanced from 50*l.* to over 70*l.*, and it would be impossible to pay such a rent were it not that the children work for nothing at home.

Labour and Produce. — Labour is three times as dear, at least, now as it was 35 years ago. The price of store cattle, cows, and sheep has gone down by one-half during the last 25 years. Wool, also, has gone down to one-third its old price. I have seen mountain wool that used to fetch 1*s.* 6*d.* being sold for 6*d.* per lb. this year. There are few labourers in this district. I do not believe there is any remedy for the migration of labourers to the towns except the lowering of rents to a reasonable standard, so that farmers can afford to pay them at something like the same rate of wages as obtains in the works. Farm servants as a rule sleep in the house in this district.

Condition of Farmhouses, Food, and Social Habits.—The condition of farmhouses and out-houses has improved of late years, but there is still plenty of room for improvement. When the landlord builds or repairs, the tenant is expected to do all the haulage for nothing.

With regard to the dairies, the landlords do not seem to care in what condition they are. I know of many farms where the milk and butter are kept in the parlour, and of dairies where there is neither floor for the cheese nor bench for the milk except the "parth pridd" (that is, a bank of earth), or piece of board. For instance, the milk at Nantcoch (whose rent has been raised as above) is kept in the cart-house as there is no dairy, and at Gellymydog and Maespant the milk is kept in the parlour.

The food, especially the bread, is better than it used to be. Farmers very seldom touch butchers' meat, but generally live on bread and cheese, potatoes, and some salted meat. They sell nearly all their cattle, butter and eggs, and all the best things in order to pay the landlord. In fact, they would almost prefer to die of starvation than fail to pay the landlord. I am inclined to believe that the home-food of the labourer is better than that of the farmer. Those who have lately bought their farms live, as a rule, quite as poorly as the tenant farmers.

We have no reading-room in this district, and the means of recreation are few. I should state that there is a reading-room in the village belonging to the Church, which was given by Mrs. Howell Gwyn, but I do not think there is a public right to it ("hawl agored iddo.") Now and then we hold a concert or a literary meeting in the British School. Seldom do the children of farmers in this district get a fair or an excursion. They have to be at it early and late with their work, in order to help their parents to meet all their demands and get nothing, as a rule, for it except their food and clothes.

Railway and Local Rates.—Most of the lime is brought from the limekilns, but the railway rates press heavily on the price of coal and artificial manures, which are not used to the same extent as they would were the railway rates more reasonable.

The local rates are much higher than they were, but they have to be paid by the tenant, without any sympathy or help from the land lord.

Relations of Landlords and Tenants.—The game does not trouble us in this immediate district.

When timber is sold on a farm no compensation is ever paid to the tenant for the damage done by hauling the timber.

Difference of religion does interfere with the relations of landlord and tenant. I can recall one very unfair attack on a family in this district. A widow, named Margaret Davies, lived in a farm called Pencurreg, which belonged to Mr. Howell Gwyn, of Dyffryn. The family had always been Nonconformist for generations. About 21 years ago Mr. and Mrs. Howell Gwyn threatened to turn the widow out of her farm unless she went to church. This was done in my own hearing, Mrs. Gwyn being the more bitter of the two. This threat had a grievous effect on the widow till the day of her death. About two years previously the landlord had taken away about 16 acres of the best land on the farm and given it to the vicar. Others of the tenants who were Nonconformists were in a similar danger at the time, e.g., Roger Davies, Tyle, and Davies, Nantllwyd.

Reductions and Abatements.—Mr. Gwynne Holford, whose tenant I am, has this year made an abatement of 15 per cent., and has paid me for draining some wet land this year. The rents on the estate are very high; but in other respects he is a good landlord.

Lord Ashburnham has made an abatement of 15 per cent., and Mrs. Gwyn has given back some undefined amount.

I know of others who made no abatement at all, though they rented their farms exceedingly high. In some cases the rent has been ordered to be paid by Post-office orders, in order that the tenants should not be brought face to face with the landlord and crave for his mercy, e.g., this is the way in which the rent is paid by the tenants of Dr. Richards (Cardiff) and Miss Lewis (late of Cefngornoth).

I know of no case where the tenants were informed beforehand of the intention of the landlord to make an abatement, but I know of many who have borrowed money, or sold their cattle for a low price, in order to pay their rent in time.

I know how farmers within a radius of 10 to 20 miles live and suffer, and I cannot see how the evil is to be remedied except by getting fair rents, security of tenure, and compensation for improvements.

39,555. How big is your farm ?—The whole that I hold is about 250 acres.

39,556 For what district do you speak —? Llanddeusant. I know of several other parishes.

39,557. Are these the only rents which have been raised in that district ?—No.

39,558. They are the only ones you know ?—The rents of Mr. Howell Gwyn were raised 4 shillings in the pound about 40 years ago, or possibly less.

30,559. Do you think the condition of freeholders any better than that of farmers ?—I do not consider that those who have recently bought their farms are in a better position than the tenant farmers.

Professor Rhŷs.

39,560. How many servants do you keep ?—Four.

39,561. Four grown-up men ?—Two grown-up and two not, and I have two sons myself—six altogether.

39,562. Where do you accommodate your servants. Where do they sleep ?—In the house.

39,563. All your servants sleep in the house ?—Yes, and I keep a labourer as well.

39,564. Where does he live ?—He lives in his own house close by.

39,565. Is it a general custom for the farm servants in your neighbourhood to sleep in the farmer's house ?—I think it is more general in my parish, but I believe elsewhere it is different—they sleep outside the house.

39,566. Is that owing to the landlords in your parish having provided better buildings and more accommodation in the farmhouses ?—Not that so much, but the place where I live is so high, and if last winter they had been obliged to sleep outside, I believe they would have become frozen.

39,567. For the sake of warmth you accommodate them in that way ?—They have to shift together. There is not sufficient accommodation in our farmhouse for all.

39,568. How many bedrooms have you for the four men ?—As many rooms as I have in the loft are all obliged to be used as bedrooms.

39,569. How many are there ?—Four.

39,570. Then you have two boys of your own ?—Yes.

39,571. Have you any daughters ?—Little daughters.

39,572. Have you any servant maids ?—Yes, two.

39,573. Where do you find sleeping accommodation for them ?—They sleep with the little children in a room.

39,574. You have several bedrooms downstairs ?—No, not downstairs.

39,575. I want to know about this district, as I have not had the opportunity of asking a practical farmer yet, what the ordinary food of the farmer and his family and servants is. Let us take them in order. What is the breakfast ?—It is a custom in our parish to have tea for breakfast.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

39,576. What do they have with it ?—Bread and cheese, and bread and butter sometimes.

39,577. Then for dinner in the middle of the day ?—Bread, salt meat, and potatoes, and some broth.

39,578. Do you ever have fresh meat ?—Only when they kill a pig, or something of that kind.

39,579. Not regularly, once a week or so ?—No.

39,580. Do they have anything in the afternoon ?—Tea, and bread and cheese as a rule.

39,581. And supper ?—Bread and cheese sometimes and milk.

39,582. You seem to give them very substantial food on the whole. Is your mother alive ?—She is dead.

39,583. How long ago did she die ?—About four years ago.

39,584. Do you remember any incident with regard to her visiting one of the agents ?—The agent came to see her.

39,585. What happened, do you remember ?—She was going off to Pentre Llanddeusant, a small place about a mile from where she lived, to meet the landlord and his agent, with regard to a proposal of taking land away from the farm to give to the vicar. At this time a Welsh school was held close to the church, and there was some disagreement between the vicar and the Nonconformists that they should keep the Sunday school apart from the church. It was in connexion with this Sunday school first of all, and then giving the land to the vicar. Mr. Howell Gwyn threatened my mother (my father had died sometime before) that he would turn her away, unless she went to church. At that time, Mr. Glasse was the agent of Mr. Howell Gwyn, and my mother at that time wished that not so much of the land should be taken away, because it was a place sufficient to keep a horse and a cow, and speaking to the agent, she asked whether it was possible for not so much land to be taken away—it was 72 acres altogether.

39,586. What did he say ?—He said that he would do his best, but that she must give some acknowledgment.

39,587. Well, what happened ?—My mother gave him 10 sovereigns.

39,588. Is that what you call a cil-dwrn ?—Yes.

39,589. How long ago would that be ?—About 20 years.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,590. Are all these farms on the same estate, Nantcoch, Gwydre, &c. ?—No, they are not.

39,591. What has been the result of all those changes since 1844 ?—High rent and insecurity of tenure.

39,592. What amount of farming was carried on ?—Some of them were sold at that time.

39,593. Did they farm the land well, or otherwise ?—As a rule worse.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

39,594. Are not many farmers who bought their farms at 40 years' purchase worse off than the tenants?—I believe that they may be so.

39,595. You say with regard to Bedwhirion "my grandfather was offered this at 2*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*" Is that 2*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* an acre?—For the farm altogether.

39,596. Not per acre?—No.

39,597. You say that the rent was raised from 20*l.* to 60*l.* by Mr. Gwynne Holford, owing to the improvements made by the tenants. Were there many permanent improvements made by the tenants?—Yes, they cleaned many fields within my recollection, and built hedges. It was bad land.

39,598. Then you consider that tenants in this neighbourhood are not very secure in their tenancies?—No, they are not.

39,599. Then you give a table of the estimate of the expenses which a farmer would have to pay for the work done by his children. Can you also give us what really these children do cost him. What is the value of what they do really have?—I have said what they are worth, and I do not think they get anything else but their food and their clothes.

39,600. What is the cost or value of the food and clothes?—I consider that the price for their food and clothes is lower than the price which I put in the list as the value of their labour.

39,601. What does it cost to keep a son at home, upon an average from the 1st of January to the 31st of December?—I cannot say exactly, but it is more than I have put down as the estimate of the cost of labour.

39,602. I do not understand. What does the clothes he wears cost him?—Say about 6*l.* a year.

39,603. Do all the farmers' sons here have two suits of clothes in a year?—No, not half of them; but I am placing this on a high scale. They must have clothes to wear every day, and clothes to appear before other people.

39,604. Do they work longer hours than labourers as a rule?—About the same, where the children and farm servants work together.

39,605. I mean in farms where there are no servants employed?—They work early and late.

39,606. Can you tell us what papers are introduced into this reading-room which you have mentioned?—I do not think that any daily papers are introduced there, but there are a few books of an edifying nature.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,607. We have so many witnesses that I do not propose to ask you some of the questions I intended, but there is one question I must put, because I heard your evidence with some surprise. Was the case that you referred to in answering Professor Rhŷs the same case as that of Margaret Davies, of Pencarreg?—It was the same.

39,608. Do you speak to two interviews at which you say that Mr. and Mrs. Howell Gwyn threatened to turn away the tenant because of her religion?—It was the same occasion. She was my mother.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

39,609. So I gather from your answer to Professor Rhŷs, but I do not gather it from your evidence in chief. Where was this interview?—Pentre Llanddeusant.

39,610. Was that at your home. Was it in the road or in the house, or where, at Pentre Llanddeusant?—On the high road.

39,611. Can you recollect the words that were used by Mr. Gwyn or by Mrs. Gwyn?—Yes, I remember the words very well.

39,612. Who spoke? Mr. Gwyn or Mrs. Gwyn?—Mr. Jones, the vicar, and Mrs. Gwyn particularly.

39,613. And Mr. Gwyn was present?—Yes.

39,614. Will you tell me slowly the exact words according to your recollection?—They said the Sunday school was a spite school, and if they were not going to stop from going there, and go to the Church instead, they would have to go away within 12 months.

39,615. Was there anyone besides your mother present, and the three you have mentioned?—Yes, another brother of mine.

39,616. Were you present, too?—Yes, I was present, too.

39,617. What day in the week was this?—I cannot say.

39,618. Had there been any dispute of any kind between your mother and the vicar?—Not at all.

39,619. Do you wish us to understand that while you three were walking along the road you met the other party, and they suddenly said this?—We knew that they were coming there that day, and we were going there to meet them.

39,620. An interview had been arranged?—Yes.

39,621. For what purpose. What was the object of the meeting?—The original object was because we did not wish to lose so much of the land to the vicarage.

39,622. Of course the conversation did not begin with that?—There was a general conversation, but it led to that.

39,623. Was there a general quarrel?—No, there had been no quarrel. My mother knew no English, except as others were telling her what was going on.

39,624. You or your brother were telling her?—We, and Mr. Jones, the clergyman, as well.

39,625. Were hot words exchanged on both sides?—No high words, but it had a bad effect on my mother.

39,626. Were the sentences you have given about the spite school and so forth spoken quite calmly?—Mrs. Gwyn was very bitter.

39,627. Do you mean that Mrs. Gwyn lost her temper?—No, I do not think so, but I know that she was a High Church woman.

39,628. Then you wish us to understand that she said that quite calmly, and as though she intended to carry it out?—She said this bitterly.

I remember that well enough, but I do not know whether she intended to carry it out or not.

Lord Kenyon.

39,629. How old were you at the time?—About 23 years of age.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,630. You say this was about 21 years ago?—Yes.

39,631. Your mother went on living in the house until she died, did she not?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

39,632. Your sister lives there now?—Yes.

39,633. These are questions by Mr. Vincent: "What sort of man was this Mr. Glasse? Was he anything like the agents who are employed now?"—I do not know about that so much, but I believe that as a rule the agents are worse than the landlords.

39,634. You do not answer the question; "What sort of a man was Mr. Glasse"?—We did not consider that he was such a good man, making such a promise.

39,635. What class of man was he?—I believe he had risen from being a mason or carpenter, I am not quite sure.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

39,636. Another question by Mr. Vincent; "Does your evidence about the 10*l.* represent "what your mother told you. Is it in fact "hearsay"?—What I know myself.

39,637. "Is not the lending library of the "parish room of Llanddeusant open to all "parishioners on the same terms"?—I do not say anything else, but you cannot call it a reading-room — any reading-room is open always.

39,638. This is only open at certain times?—A day every month, I believe.

39,639. Another question by Mr. Vincent: "Are you not an annual subscriber to this reading-room"?—Yes.

39,640. "Whether Lord Ashburnham's rents "have been raised or not; are they higher "than those of his neighbours"?—Not very much higher, I think, but all rents are too high by half as things are at present.

39,641. "Have not Mrs. Gwyn's rents, as a "whole, been reduced 10 per cent. permanently "since 1882"?—Not generally. I have found out that some of them have been reduced.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,642. Do you agree with Mr. Bishop that the times now are not so bad as they have been?—I do not recollect worse times.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT SCOTT SEYMOUR called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 39,272 and 39,554.

39,643. Are you agent to the Earl of Ashburnham's Carmarthenshire estate?—Yes.

39,644. You wish to rebut the statement as to tenants being offered the farms at 40 years' purchase?—Not that they were offered them; they were offered the farms at 40 years' purchase, but what I wish to rebut is that they were actually sold to them at that price. There have been 13 farms sold, seven of which are sold to tenants at an average of 36·2 years' purchase, and six were sold to outside parties, who were perfectly independent in every way of Lord Ashburnham, at 36·72 years' purchase. I should like to state that the previous witness, Mr. John Davies, of Aberllechach, purchased one of these farms, he not being a tenant. He held already two other farms under Mr. Gwynne Holford, and another under Sir Arthur Stepney. I may say as well that he is an auctioneer and valuer. He bought the Llwyny piod farm, let at 50*l.*, for 1,800*l.* He offered that voluntarily; we did not offer the farm to him in any way. He made the offer through Mr. Jeffreys, of Brecon, direct to Lord Ashburnham's solicitor, and it was eventually sold to him for 1,800*l.*, being let at 50*l.* a year, which would be exactly 36 years' purchase.

Then the case of Ty uchaf farm was mentioned. That farm was sold to the tenant originally for 2,000*l.*, or 40 years' purchase.

The tenant put it to me that he had expended certain moneys in improvements. I asked him to give me a statement of what he had expended, and I asked him if 100*l.* would satisfy him for those improvements. He said it would. I thereupon advised Lord Ashburnham to let him have the 100*l.* allowed in the price of the farm. He thereupon sold the farm to Mr. Peel, of Danyrallt, for 2,100*l.*, Mr. Peel writing Lord Ashburnham guaranteeing that the tenant should not be disturbed in his holding, neither should the rent be raised—and I believe that is the case to this day.

I should like also to say that wherever tenants have given me conclusive proof that they have made improvements on their farms, I have, in selling them to the tenants, taken that into consideration; and, where they have been sold to others, in two cases I can mention (and they are the only two in which any actual claim has been made), I have made an allowance. The one is the case of Ty uchaf, which I have just spoken of, and the other is the case of Gellyonen, sold to Mr. Howell Gwyn. The tenant brought to my notice the fact that he had spent certain money. I asked him what he wanted, and he told me one year's rent, which was granted to him.

Then Mr. Davies has mentioned the fact that on Nantcoch the dairy is not as it should be.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I am not prepared to say it is, but I do say this, that the tenant has never complained to me that his dairy is bad, and I have questioned my sub-agent on the matter, and he says he has not complained to him. I do not say our buildings are all they should be, but I should like to say that in six years Lord Ashburnham spent on the Llanddeusant estate 37 per cent. of his rent in repairs.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Daniel Davies called and examined through an Interpeter.

Lord Kenyon.

39,645–6. You have been through this statement and you say it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read]:—

Evidence of Daniel Davies, Tenant Farmer, Llwynowen, Cilycwm.

The farmers generally complain that rents are much too high, but they are afraid to state how it lies between them and their landlords. Rents, however, have gone up since 1854, as the following table will show:—

Name of Farm.	Rent in 1854.	Rent in 1870.
Llwynowen	45	55 in 1875, 60 now
Cwmgerwn	24	30
Molwast	24	26
Blaendyffryn	26	32
Erwdomi	25	32 10*s.*
Grofft	25	30
Maesgadog	65	80
Cilmaren	30	35
Gilwen	60	75
Rhywrhwchucha	30	50

These farms belong to Colonel Jones, Glanrannell; J. Lloyd, Padstow Court; Campbell Davys; Jones, Blaenos; and Lewis Llettyfandde. Some landlords have granted abatements, but some tenants have been sold up through inability to pay their way, e.g., Rev. T. Phillips (tenant of Mr. Campbell Davys), Jno. Jones, Cwmdunant (tenant of Dr. Lewis); Edward Jones, Plasnewydd (tenant of Mr. Morgan, Palog); and William Bowen, Bwlch, tenant of Mr. J. Williams, Tyrpentre.

See 40,928.

In some places advances have been made on the tenant's improvements, e.g., at Tynywaun, Cayo. On the estate of Sir James Drummond, Rhydodyn, the tenant, Daniel Richards, drained, &c. to the extent of 150*l.* at least, the agent stating that he would have peace to enjoy the improvements. But before the improvements were well finished the agent and another man came and valued the farm and raised the rent by 12*l.*—6*l.* payable at once, the other 6*l.* in three years. Soon after the tenant died, and his family left the place, which was untenanted for some time, and was afterwards let at a lower rent. The tenant of Maestwynog, on the estate of Colonel Jones, Glanrannell, cleaned 45 acres of wild land at a cost of about 4*l.* an acre. The rent was raised from 60*l.* to 80*l.*, and then to 100*l.* The tenant left. It was then let to another at 80*l.*, but in 18 months he left: and the third obtained a reduction, and still remains there.

Rents are also raised in order to sell the land at a good price.

Land Hunger.—Is general. Many newly-married couples cannot get farms. I could name 25 farms within 4 miles of my home which had consolidated, owing to the buildings getting bad. There is no sort of union among farmers in this district.

Insecurity of Tenure.—Good farmers have been compelled to leave their farms, e.g., Evan Evans, Cwmfranfawr; Richards, Wernddu; Pritchard, Aberdunant; John Davies, Cwmrhaiadr (all on Campbell Davys' estate), owing to the rent being too high, or failing to agree with the landlord. Other farmers who have been compelled to leave have been Miss James, Nant twrch; Evans, Maestwynog. Leases are never given, agreements are common, but stringent; farmers do not care for them, and seldom have a copy. I have never heard of anyone receiving compensation for damage done by hauling timber, e.g., great damage was done to the roads at Llwynowen, but I have received no compensation.

Labour and Produce.—Servants get three and four times as much as they got 40 years ago. Farm labourers have increased from 1*s.* and 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* and 3*s.*, and few to be got here. The price of produce is much less. Wheat is less than half the price and quality; and barley and oats are nearly as low. Store cattle has gone down, and wool has reduced from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* in 1863 from 7*d.* to 10*d.* per lb. in 1893.

Labourers are much more scarce. I can name 32 cottages which have gone down in the last 40 years in this district. There would be more labourers if there were houses for them, and sufficient land to keep a cow.

Buildings. — Buildings are in a shocking state. Among others, I could name Bryn, Polly, Bedw, Blaenycwm, Nant twrch, Cwmfranganol, and Erwdoni are in a very bad condition, no partitions upstairs in some of them, and in all of them there are great deficiencies. The rents of these farms are from 40*l.* to 100*l.* a year. Where straw is used the tenant has to bear all the expenses of thatching.

Tenants and Landlords. — Landlords all Churchmen; farmers generally Nonconformists. I cannot say that the difference of religion creates any ill-feeling in this district, but I will mention the following instances on one estate where the tenants have left the Chapel for the Church on being given farms, and leave the Commissioners to draw their own conclusions. On the estate of Mr. D. Jones Lewis, Llwyncelyn, Llanwrda: Thomas, Jones, Hafod-y-gleddau (once an attendant at Crugybar Independent Chapel); William Thomas, Troedyrhiw (once member of the Waunifor Baptist Chapel); James Davies, Penybanc (once attendant at Crugybar); and John Williams, Blaenycwn (once member of Siloh Methodist Chapel.) All now go to Llanwrda Church, at least when Mr. Lewis is at home.

See 40,642–40,659.

The difference in politics estranges landlord and tenant also; and the landlord cares but little for the tenants as long as he gets the rent. The agents vary in their fitness for the post. The agents know Welsh, but are Churchmen and Conservatives. The landlords do not encourage their tenants to make new departures in farming or to educate their children. No tenant who wishes to be on good terms with his landlord will touch even the ground game.

Tenants' Children.—Many tenants' children are kept at home to work for nothing, e.g., at Pencilmaren (one son and two daughters, who gave labour to the value of 50*l.*); Polly (one son and two daughters, of the value of 50*l.*); Clynglas (one son and two daughters, of the value of 55*l.*); Cwmfranfawr (three sons and two daughters, of the value of 90*l.*); Berris (one son and one daughter, of the value of 40*l.*); and Penbanc Ucha (one son and one daughter of the value of 40*l.*). The rents of these farms vary from 40*l.* to 100*l.*, but the tenants save little or nothing.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Freeholders. — Some have bought their farms, partly with borrowed money, in order to be secure in their holdings, e.g., David Morgan, Bedwgwynion.

Abatements.—Some abatements since 1885 of 3*s.* in the pound.

Many borrow money to pay their rents.

Many have sold their cattle at too low a price in order to have money to pay the rent.

Some farms rented at more than their worth because they are near a mountain, over which they have right of common, e.g., Cwmerchan, 20 acres, old rent 16*l.*, raised to 24*l.* after building new houses. After the tenant had increased his stock on the mountain it was increased to 30*l.*, and afterwards to 34*l.*

Mr. Griffiths.

39,647. Are we to draw the conclusion that these people you mention now go to church to worship their landlords, and not to worship their God?—I leave it in the hands of the Commission to draw their own conclusions.

Lord Kenyon.

39,648. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "What is the date of the case, on Sir James "Drummond's estate, to which you referred?" —I cannot give the precise date, but it was about 14 to 15 years ago.

39,649. "What was the name of the farm?" —Tyn Waun.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Morgan called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

39,650. Has the statement of your evidence been read over to you, and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was then read:—]

Evidence of John Morgan, Tenant Farmer, Llwynpiod, Myddfai.

I was born and brought up on a small farm called Tynllwyn, near Llandovery. My mother and grandmother were also brought up there. My grandfather and grandmother had a lease on it for three lives at a rent of 16*l.* 16*s.* 0*d.*, which expired with my grandmother. After this the rent was raised to my father and mother to 31*l.* 10*s.* In two or three years it was again raised to 34*l.*; in another three years or so to 37*l.* In 14 years the rent was raised from 16*s.* 16*s.* 0*d.* to 40*l.* During those 14 years we received seven notices to quit, and at the last notice we had to quit.

39,651. Do you corroborate Mr. Davies, of Rhyblyd, as to Mr. Bree's taking of Llwynwormwood?—Yes, I do. See 39,272.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,652. Have you seen the printed copy of the evidence of Mr. Davies, of Rhyblyd?—No, I have not seen it.

39,653. What is your evidence about Mr. Bree?—A gentleman of the name of Bree came to Llwynwormwood. We were 12 tenants at the same time leasing our farms or places, and we had raised about 10*l.* on each of the farms. After that he came to us to farm, and he was worth 12,000*l.* He said he had left us with

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

3,000*l.* The news came to us that he had gone towards New Zealand, and he had only 50*l.* at the end of the journey. He spent his money through pulling down fences and walls.

39,654. What have his New Zealand adventures to do with land in this county?—We have nothing to say to him only that he left us. He became a bankrupt. He had rented these from Sir Erasmus Williams, our landlord, for 21 years; and Mr. Bree had the choice of giving up these farms at the end of every seven years for 21 years. A neighbour told him that it would be at the end of the first seven years. He remained there seven years within three months, and he had robbed the landlord of a quarter's rent, because he was to pay the rent every quarter.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Lewis Lewis called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

39,655. Have you been through this statement which is about to be read, and do you say that it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the Witness was read.—For the original document in Welsh see Appendix.

Evidence of Lewis Lewis, tenant farmer, Carnaugwynion, Gwynfe, Llangadock.

Personal.—Forty years ago my father, Edward Lewis, Brynpedol, Cwmaman, rented a farm of the name of Lan, Llangadock. It consisted of between 120 and 140 acres. Half of it is wet, high, and sterile, and the remainder is poor land with a northern aspect. The rent was 55*l.*, and the landlord promised a lease for 14 years. My father feared to take it, as the farm was strange to him, and the rent according to the neighbours too high. As we were a strong family, viz., my father and mother and six children of an age to work, we set to work to farm in earnest, and great and varied was the work we did. As the land had been long neglected, we cleared, drained, and cultivated the worst fields first. Besides the waste land (dyrus anial) which we cleared, we removed nearly 400 yards of old crooked hedges, and replaced them with nearly 300 yards of new and straighter hedges, and I believe that five times as many yards of ditches were made by us, while marl mixed with lime was spread over the fields. Every year we carried from 30 to 40 loads of lime over a road, two miles of which were so narrow, wet, and rough, that to travel over it was as bad as penal servitude. The other roads that led to it at that time were as bad, if not worse. We earned money to buy the lime by carrying coal from Brynaman to Ben-y-rhiw-wen. I do not believe that any one presumed to accuse my parents of prodigality, or any of us, their children, either, while we remained at the Lan. Homespun and Welsh flannel, rib, and moleskin were the ordinary dress in those days. The barley loaf was oftener seen on our board than the white loaf, and from the oats we made bread and "enllyn," that is, "sucan" and groats took the place of rice, and broth and milk were welcomed more than the eternal tea and coffee of to-day.

Not one of us was guilty of bending a knee to Bacchus, or of offering a burnt sacrifice with the pipe to satisfy an unnatural craving. My father was, I think, a teetotaler from the starting of the society, and I myself from a child, and the others of the family in practice, if not in name. After some years of cultivation, the fields and the hedges presented a new and fairer aspect, which induced my father to ask for the promised lease. But he did not get it though he asked for it again. In spite of this, my father believed the landlord's word that he was in no danger of being made to leave as long as he paid for the land. The work of the farm was carried on as before until within a few months of the receipt of "notice to quit," which was given at the end of eight years. The rumour about the notice, and its receipt, had a serious effect on my father, and he said to those who brought it that he had received another notice before that. He spoke the truth. His pure and guileless spirit fled to a land where there is no deceit, oppression, or injustice in its midst, within five weeks after removing from the Lan. The doctor (Dr. Thomas, of Llandovery) asserted that he died of a broken heart. He was sacrificed to a landlord's greed and to a law that would be a discredit to a pagan country to enforce. The reason for the notice was that a daughter of the owner had married and was in want of a farm. After all the cost and trouble for eight years by a family, strong, industrious, and thrifty, it was natural to expect a good deal of profit. We had plenty of plain, wholesome food, and warm, if rough clothes. But barely 8*l.* a year was received as interest on the whole of the capital, live and dead, that belonged to the farm. And we had to be content without a penny of wages throughout the years. It would, no doubt, have been just to be repaid for all the improvements from which we received but little benefit, and especially as we had to go away in almost half the proper time. Instead of hundreds of pounds, we had a paper containing hundreds of words warning us not to touch the manure heap, and threatening us if we did so, though not a shovelful of manure was in the yard when we went there. We had also to return with empty car from the yard because we failed to remove all our goods in time.

"Other men laboured, and ye are entered into "their labours."—John iv., 38.

When anyone wants land he ought first of all to ask the tenant if he is leaving. If he says he is, then he will have a free road and a free conscience to go to the landlord. So my father did 32 years ago, when he rented Carnaugwynion at the high figure of 50*l*., 10*l*. more than it was two or three years before. The rise caused the tenant to fail to pay his way. It is a farm of 100 acres, in the same district as the Lan, and the same characteristics belong to some extent, to them, but that this place was much more unproductive when we came to live here. By this time its aspect is far different, after spreading so much earth, manure, and marl over its surface, and having left the plough and harrow to rust. Some 25 years ago two or three acres of the most sheltered pasture land were planted without asking and without allowing a penny for it in the rent or aught else. In March 1871 a notice was given to press on me a lease for seven years, to raise the rent to 60*l*., and turn 10*l*. every year to open ditches, and I to close them at my own expense. We had a tough fight, and the end of it was that I had the land for 50*l*., the landlord to bear the whole expense of ditching, and I to pay 5 per cent. on the outlay. March 1892, I received a notice that one-third of the farm would be taken away from me, but I succeeded in retaining it once more. In September of the same year I had another notice to quit it altogether now, unless I gave the same for it after taking 13 acres away from it. After months of anxiety, not knowing were to go, about the value of half the land of which I was deprived was allowed to me, with nothing on account of the improvements I had made on it. It has been the custom for years now by considerate landlords to lower the rents rather than to raise them. I believe that the chief cause for this rise is the improvements I made on the land, together with the greed of unprincipled tenants for land, and the difference of opinion between my landlord and his agent and myself. When my master speaks to me about politics I do not conceal my opinion. I have as good a right to express it as he.

Reductions and Abatements.—About 10 years ago a reduction of 7*l*. in the rent was made. For four audits abatements were made in the years 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1892—a total in all of 3*s*. 6*d*. in the pound.

Repairs.—My landlord promised to do the repairs, and slate the roof of the house three years after renting it. Thirty years have gone by since then, and the work has not yet been done. It is as cold as a barn, and there is no ceiling except in one-third of it. During a snowstorm, the loft—the beds and all that is under the tiles—are covered with snow. I had to pay the artisans for roofing the dairy, besides hauling the materials, putting in a window, making a floor, and providing new benches. I set props under the roof of the barn, and made it and the stable's roof water-tight for years. I had to persuade him a great deal before I had a new roof, and carried all at my own cost. Twenty years ago I provided a new hay-shed at my own cost, paying for the materials and the construction. The same was the case with reference to roofing the carthouse.

Rents and Prices.—I believe that the farms in this district are commonly too dear by one-third at least, in seasons when the produce is scanty, and the trade is bad as has been the case for a long time. The price of cattle, sheep, and wool is often half what it was about 20 years ago, while horses are one-third less in price. The blacksmith, the carpenter, the saddler, the shoemaker, and the tailor have nearly doubled their price within the last 40 years. So also have the labourers and the servants.

Agreements and Leases.—There are but few leases here. The tenants are expected to pay more for their land before they can get one. The instability of trade, and the fear of a rise on their own improvements, cause tenants to be indifferent about getting a lease. The tenant of Brynchwyth has had a lease, and no one has farmed as well as he in this district since he has had it. My landlord Major C. Basset Lewis, late of Gwynfe House, has an agreement on his estate, which is too one-sided and stringent for the most part, and the tenants are bound to sign it though it is in in a language which not one in seven can understand.

Food and Social Habits.—The food is very different from what it was 40 years ago—more pleasing to the taste—I would hesitate to say that it is better. I believe that the oatmeal, the barley loaf, and the mixed loaf, the flummery (bwdran), the broth and milk, greatly excelled the eternal white loaf and the continual tea and coffee. Home produce is neglected in order to follow the dainty fashion of the town and works. The farmers of the highlands do not get fresh meat much oftener than when they kill a pig, and now and then at fairs and markets. I expect the labourer gets it oftener. There is as much difference between the dress of the landowner and his tenant as there is between a peacock's and a hedge-sparrow's. Eating, drinking, and pleasuring on sea and land is the chief object of a host of them, at the expense of oppressing their tenants and impoverishing their own country. The only holidays often of farmers and labourers in this district consist of going to fairs and markets as often as they have business there. The wake (gwylnos) and the bidding (taith) are nearly at an end, and the concert and the eisteddfod sometimes take their place. The masses in this district are Independents; my landlord is a Churchman, and a Conservative in politics. He speaks a little Welsh to his tenants, but he prefers English.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Game.—The game and the palace of the Gwynfe estate are let to any foreigner (estron) who will give most for them. The Ground Game Act is a dead letter on that account. I produce a notice which has been issued by Major Bassett Lewis.

CWMCLYDACH ESTATE.

Take Notice.

Any tenant killing game on his farm shall receive notice to quit.

Any tenant allowing poachers on his farm shall have his rent raised 2*s.* in every £.

Any tenant giving such information as shall lead to the conviction of a poacher shall receive 5*l.* reward.

(Signed) Charles Basset Lewis.

The Terrace, Aberystwith,
March 21, 1867.

The Pecuniary Condition of Farmers.—There are some farmers here who, with their children, earn more money by carting coal, sand, stones, and other things, and by working in different ways in order to make the two ends meet—and yet fail after all. Some there are who have of late bought their farms on this estate. The rent of one before it was sold was 32*l.*, the interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. is 20*l.* more. The tenant bought it lest he should be turned out. Many did the same, and almost my foot did slip into the same pit as they. No doubt many here borrow in order to pay the rent, but they do it as secretly as possible lest they might show their weakness. Cattle are often sold, contrary to the advice of the old proverb, "Not to sell a hen in the rain," in order to meet the demands of the landlord, and many another heavy and increasing burden that is laid on the hard shoulders of the industrious and long-suffering farmer.

Suggestions.—In face of all these facts, is it not full time to get juster land laws in our country, similar to those which Ireland received years ago? I believe we could raise double the amount of produce we at present get under the one-sided regime of the landlords. And is it not a stigma on Great Britain that the tithe is applied as it is, while it should, this long time, have been turned to lighten the burdens of the ratepayers?

39,655*a*. We will not ask you any questions as the time is getting on. We thank you for your eloquent statement. There are two questions by Mr. Vincent: "Who was your father's landlord"?—Thomas Morgan Jones, Bryndyfan, Llansadwrn.

39,656. "And your present landlord"?—Major C. Basset Lewis.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Morgan Davies called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

39,657. Have you been through the statement which is about to be read, and do you say that it is correct?—Yes, I do.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The following statement of the Witness was read:—

Evidence of Morgan Davies, Tenant Farmer, Gorllwyn Fawr, Myddfai.

Rents.

In the majority of the above farms there have been changes of tenancy, sometimes as many as three or four during the last 30 or 40 years.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Tenants' Children.—Many of the farmers of this parish could not pay their rent were it not that they had children working on their farms without wages, e.g., at Cwmenau a son and a daughter; Gorllwyn Fawr, a son and daughter; Pwll Calch, two sons and two daughters; Tyngarn, one son; Pentwyn, two sons and one daughter; and Llwyn Ifan Feddyg, one son and one daughter. In all these cases, the rent has been raised of late years, which could not have been possible for the tenants to pay were it not for their children's unpaid labour.

Game.—The tenants holding farms adjoining preserves complain that they lose many valuable dogs, which it is hard to value.

39,658. We are much obliged to you for your valuable table?—There is one thing I should like to say and that is this: the prices of things have gone down so much now that farmers are unable to face things as they are.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,659. Do you ever remember worse times than the present?—No, I do not; and I am 70 years of age now.

39,660. Then you do not agree with Mr. Bishop's statement?—No, I do not. I am on the Gwynne Holford Estate, and I should wish to explain that I am on the best of terms with my landlord.

Lord Kenyon.

39,661. I am sure you are?—But the thing I have against it is, that the rents are too high; the land does not give the same produce now as it used to do, and the cost is greater.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Phillip Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

39,662. Where do you live?—Gorsddu, Llanddensant.

39,663. You have a statement to make?—I have no written statement, but I wish to say something. I wish to say agriculture will never hold on as it is now; but I would prefer that the Commissioners should ask me any questions.

39,664. I will ask you Mr. Griffiths' question: have you ever known worse times?—No, I do not recollect them so low as they are now.

39,665. Can you suggest any remedy?—The land should be so let, that we should be able to pay for it from the produce which it gives in a way to compete with other countries.

39,666. Lower rents you mean?—Yes. It is impossible for us to go on now. I may say this: that I have a son working elsewhere, and he gave 20*l.* in order to help me to pay my landlord his rent, and so that I need not get into debt. I know of one farmer who gave up his farm two years ago, and has now become a servant near us.

39,667. Have you any remedies to suggest?—No. As a labourer he has saved 20*l.* a year, whereas, if he had been on the farm he would have lost 20*l.*

39,668. Mr. Vincent asks: "Were not prices "a little better at yesterday's fair"?—There was a little more demand, but not half enough to meet the present prices.

39,669. Were prices better at yesterday's fair than they have been?—They tell me that they were a little better.

39,670. Was not that fair all that Mr. Bishop referred to?—I do not know. I did not understand him. He spoke English. See 39,520.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Phillips called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

39,671. Have you been through the statement which is about to be read, and do you say that it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was then read.]

Evidence of Thomas Philips, merchant, The Stores Llangadock.

See 39,491. Personal.—In conjunction with Mr. Hopkins, of Cefngornoth, I have been requested by the tenant farmers of the parish of Llangadock to give evidence on their behalf before the Commission.

In what I have to say, I speak of facts which have come within my personal knowledge. I have held farms of various sizes in the district for 11 years. I was tenant of a farm of 300 acres. For seven years I have been a corn and seed merchant, my business bringing me into direct personal communication with most of the farmers of this and surrounding districts.

Rentals.—Speaking generally, I thoroughly agree with Mr. Hopkins, that the rentals of agricultural holdings in this district are much too high. This is especially true of the last 15 to 16 years, when the prices of farm produce have become so depressed as compared with the prosperous times of 20 to 25 years ago. While the prices of all kinds of produce have fallen from 35 to 40 per cent., there has been no corresponding reduction of rent. While there have been during this period numerous instances of rentals being permanently raised, the reductions have almost without exception taken the form of temporary abatements only. These abatements have not been general and have varied, not according to the justice of each case, but according to each individual landlord's (or agent's) sense of generosity. The most generous of these would not meet the farmer's actual need. A large and permanent reduction would alone do this.

CRITICAL CONDITION OF FARMERS.—I admit that some landlords have shown, especially within the past two or three years, practical sympathy with their tenants' hard case, by substantial abatements.

There are other landlords who have made only a nominal abatement, and some who have returned their tenants nothing. As a rule, my experience has been that the landlords who are slowest in making abatements, rent their farms dearest. From personal experience, and from facts placed within my knowledge by tenant farmers, I have no hesitation in saying that the agricultural depression, though varying to some extent in different localities, is generally and deeply felt throughout South Wales, and is marked and intense in the Vale of Towy. I am speaking from facts within my knowledge, when I say that a large and increasing number of farmers in the Vale of Towy are on the verge of ruin, and that unless some effective remedial measures are shortly applied, the results will be most disastrous to landlords and tenants alike.

INSECURITY OF TENURE.—Another important factor in the case, and one which accounts for the failure, or want of success, of many is the insecurity of tenure. Warned by their own or their neighbour's experience, farmers have become increasingly unwilling to sink that capital in their holdings, which is absolutely necessary to produce the best results. The consequence is, that the land, as well as the farmer, has become, in many instances, impoverished. When the farmer lives in constant dread of receiving notice to quit, with or without cause, he can hardly be be expected to do his best to make his farm permanently profitable.

NOTICE TO QUIT.—That this dread is well founded, farmers in this district have learnt too well by their past experience. I have taken the trouble to inquire into the number of notices actually served, and the changes of tenancy which have actually taken place in this locality during the past 25 years.

For two hamlets in the parish of Llangadock, I put in evidence the accompanying table, giving the names of the farms, the acreage of each, the number of notices served, and the number of tenants who have occupied each during that period.

From this table it will be seen that the number of holdings is 97, the number of notices I have traced is 145, while the probability is that a considerable number remain yet unaccounted for; the number of occupiers during that period is 184; in other words, taking the whole of these 97 holdings, each has had on an average two tenants in 25 years.

COMPENSATION.—With this large number of tenants who have left, or been obliged to leave their holdings, I do not know of a single case where such tenants have received compensation for improvements done by them. It must not be assumed that no improvements had been effected, or that no compensation was due to the out-going tenant.

I will give a case in point: Mr. T. Jones, late of Cwmsawdde, assures me that he left on the farm in unexhausted improvements, representing in hard cash at least 400*l.* He did not receive a penny. That his estimate of the value of the improvements is well founded would appear from the fact that an advance of nearly 100 per cent. was made in the rent. Mr. Jones writes me—

"Tyfry, Llanfrynach, Brecon,
"July 4, 1893.

"My reason for leaving Cwmsawdde "Farm was an advancement of 50 per "cent. in the rent on my own labour.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

"What I would consider fair compensa- "tion would be 400*l.* for unexhausted "improvements, but received none.

"The work I did during my tenancy at "Cwmsadde, and the treatment I received "at leaving, will be a mark in the annals "of farming history. My predecessor paid "120*l.* a year for Cwmsawdde, &c., during "the years 1850 to 1860. I took the "place in 1862 (if my memory serves me "well) at 175*l.* rent, tithes included, but "during my last years the rent was raised "to 240*l.* a year, tithes excluded, besides "my landlord took away the cottages from "me, and ten acres of the best land; this "was done without any reason whatever, "other than the improvements done on the "land, for I will defy any man to prove "that I did anything wrong.

"So that, in fact, the rent was more than "doubled in 12 years at my expense and "labour.

"T. JONES."

I give this as a typical case. Similar instances could be advanced all over the country.

REMEDIES SUGGESTED.—(1.) Permanent reduction in rent on assessment made by either

(a.) Land courts, or

(b.) An independent valuer,—not one selected by the landlord.

(2.) Full compensation for improvements.

(3.) Absolute security of tenure.

39,672. We have not time to ask you any questions to-night, but we will take your statement with us, and if any questions occur to us, perhaps you will come and submit yourself for further examination at Llansawel?—I will try to come.

39,673. We should like your table improved in this way, giving the estates on which these farms are, and the parishes. This does not include changes of tenancy in one family from father to son, and so on?—There are two estates there. It is not from father to son. One estate has been sold twice there.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN MYLES JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

39,674. This statement has been read over to you, and you say it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

Evidence of JOHN MYLES JONES, Saddler, "Town Hall, Llansawel.

PERSONAL.—The farm of Glantren Fach, in the parish of Llanybyther, some years ago belonged to the Penllergaer Estate. It is a farm of 175 acres. The tenant, when it belonged to Penllergaer, was one Thomas Williams, and the yearly rent 70*l.*, or 8*s.* an acre.

Two small holdings belonged to the farm, Pantycelyn and Lletty'rgof, together with four cottages and a smithy, but two of these cottages are ruins by this time. The land belonging to Pantycelyn was 22 acres in extent, for which Thomas Williams received 20*l* a year, or about 18*s.* an acre. To Lletty'rgof there belonged 24 acres, for which Thomas Williams received 15*l.* a year, or about 12*s.* 6*d.* per acre.

In Lletty'rgof I was bred. When my father took the place in 1851 the yearly rent was 14*l.*, together with the grazing of a meadow from August to April, for which my father paid Thomas Williams 20*s.* in addition. A few years after, this meadow was rented by Williams to another person for 4*l.* 10*s.* But Williams compelled my father to pay 15*l.* as usual for his holding, though he had thus been deprived of the meadow.

In the year 1867 Thomas Williams wanted a sow which my father had at the time, but as he refused either to pay for it or allow for it in the rent, my father refused. In consequence of this Williams said that he was sure my father would regret it. The following year, in March 1868, my father received a notice to quit from Thomas Williams, and, in the following September, Williams told my father that the rent henceforth would be 18*l.* My father felt that this was unjust, and determined to lay the matter before the landlord, before he would leave or pay the additional 3*l.* in the rent. In January 1870 my mother went every step to Penllergaer to see the landlord, Mr. Dillwyn Llewellyn. But as the landlord was not at home at the time my mother only saw the agent, Mr. W. J. Rees. Mr. Rees was very kind and told her to return home and feel safe, and that the rent of Lletty'rgof would be 15*l.* as before, and that he would write to Williams to that effect—and Mr. Rees fulfilled his promise.

Chairman—continued.

In 1879, as there was need of repairing the buildings, and especially the dwelling-house, I went on behalf of my mother to Swansea to see Mr. Rees to beg for repairs. But he refused to do any repairs or allow me to cut any timber for that purpose. So we were compelled to go to a great cost in improvements at our own expense.

In 1886 Glantrenfach was sold, together with the small holdings and cottages belonging to it. The whole was bought by Mr. Timothy Evans, 11, Courtland Terrace, Merthyr Tydvil. The result of the sale was a general advance in the rents, as follows:—Glantrenfach, 85*l.*; Pantycelyn, 22*l.* 10*s.*; Lletty'rgof, 17*l.* 10*s.*; but the latter is now 20*l.*, as the new owner has spent 150*l.* on repairs.

Williams rented the meadow, referred to above, to a neighbour—a widow—for 4*l.* 10*s.*, and by one of the conditions the widow was allowed to cut clods of peat from the meadow for her own use. One year she had employed a workman to cut 12 loads of peat for her, but while the peat was "harvesting," Thomas Williams took the 12 loads for his own use, without paying the widow any compensation. And as the meadow was useful to the widow, and she was afraid to lose it, she would not go to law to enforce her rights.

Chairman—continued.

Nominally, Thomas Williams paid 8*s.* per acre for his land, but after deducting what he received from the small holdings, he paid something like 5*s.*, without taking into consideration the rents of the cottages and smithy. The remaining 3*s.* he screwed out of his sub-tenants.

Consolidation of small Farms.—I know of about 50 small farms which have been added to other farms in the parishes of Llanybyther, Llansawel, Cayo, and Talley.

I know of some 121 cottagers' or labourers' houses in the above four parishes which have been allowed to fall into ruin during the last 30 or 40 years.

Condition of Farmers.—I have every chance to get to know how farmers live, through following my occupation and visiting the farmhouses to mend harness, &c. Where there are many children, the custom is to give the grazing of a sheep or two or more, according to their circumstances, to the elder children for working at home. Often the farmer will not have enough to pay me and others when our work is finished; sometimes he has not a penny. But if he has a portion with him, he will borrow from his children, or his servant, or his maid, and many and keen are the inquiries as to when he will pay them back. Generally the farmer has to give full details as to repayment. I know of many besides myself, who have helped their parents to pay their large rents, because of their affection for their old home. I know of many farmers who have had to borrow money in order to pay their rent every time for some years.

Suggestions.—(1.) A land court composed of a man nominated by the landlord, a man nominated by the tenant, and the rest by the Government. This court to decide on a fair rent.

(2.) Security of tenure.

(3.) Full compensation for all improvements when the tenant leaves.

(4.) If the farm is sold the sitting tenant ought to have the first offer of it at a fair price. If the farmer has not the money the Government should advance him the money at a reasonable interest, and that he should repay the loan with the interest yearly till he pays back the whole.

(5.) Total abolition of sub-letting.

(6.) The multiplication of small holdings.

(7.) The construction of light Government railways.

I put in a letter to prove that the rent was 85*l.* It is a letter from a friend.

39,675. That is to prove that the statement of the rent is correct?—Yes. "Hendre Einon, "April 16th, 1894.—My dear Friend, I am "sorry that I have been so long before answering your letter. I have done my best to send "it to you, and hope it will come into your "hands soon enough. With regard to your "question I have been making careful inquiries "about the rent of Glantrenfach; the rent is

Chairman—continued.

"85*l.* yearly; and they have received no abate-"ment. The rent of Pantycelyn is 22*l.* 10*s.*, "and he also has had no abatement. So, you "see, they deal hardly enough with them all." The other part of the letter refers to another matter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

39,676. You were not a tenant of mine, were you, you were a sub-tenant?—Yes.

39,677. Mr. Thomas Williams was the tenant?—Yes.

39,678. And the sub-tenant let to you at an improved rent?—Yes.

39,679. Are you aware that when that part of the Penllergaer estate was sold the first chance of purchase was given to the sitting tenant?—Yes, I know that.

39,680. At the reserve price?—I did not know that.

39,681. It was so as a matter of fact. Do you know whether Mr. Thomas Williams availed himself of that or not? I think, from the evidence (though I did not follow it quite) that he did not. Who bought the farm?—Timothy Evans.

39,682. Then the sitting tenant did not avail himself of his opportunities?—No; he was dead at the time.

39,683. You are now a saddler at Llansawel?—Yes.

39,684. Do any of your relations inhabit Lletty'rgof?—My mother lives there now.

39,685. What is the rent she pays now?—20*l.*, but she has not paid the increase as yet. It is 17*l.* 10*s.* now.

39,686. It was 15*l.*, now it is 17*l.* 10*s.*?—Yes.

39,687. Then you consider that your relations are worse off in consequence of the sale?—They are not so well off.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,688. You think that sub-letting is generally a bad thing?—Yes, I do.

39,689. And should be discouraged by landlords generally?—Quite so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,690 You say you know of 50 small farms that have been consolidated and 121 cottages which have been allowed to fall into ruin?—Yes, I produce the names.

39,691. I should like it to go on the notes that you have got particulars to support that general statement?—Those are the names of the 50 farms and the 121 cottages. (For these lists see Appendix.)

39,692. What has become of the labourers and the people who used to live in these cottages?—They have had to go to the works.

39,693. Have many new cottages been built in place of these old ones in the four parishes?—Not one instead of those.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

39,694. But new cottages have been built?—Not instead of those, but in some places they have.

39,695. Is there a difficulty in getting labourers for farms?—Yes, a great difficulty.

39,696. Have the labourers' wages gone up?—Yes; they are high enough, but not because of that.

39,697. Not because so many have gone off to the works?—I do not believe so.

39,698. Do you know of any cases in which a tenant has obtained compensation either under the Agricultural Holdings Act, or otherwise when he has left a farm?—No, I know of no case.

39,699. Do you hear any talk of the Agricultural Holdings Act, for instance?—Yes; it is worth nothing.

39,700. Why do you say it is worth nothing?—Because there is nothing decisive on either side.

39,701. I suppose that nearly all the people who live in these four parishes habitually talk Welsh?—Always.

39,702. Llanybyther, Llansawel, Cayo, and Talley?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

39,703. Have there been any cottages built in the place of these 121?—There are none built instead of those, but there have been some built.

39,704. There have been some new ones built which have taken the place of these to some extent though they have not been on the same sites?—None have been built instead of those.

39,705. Would you have bought your holding if you had had the offer?—Yes, if I had it at its value—at what it is worth.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,706. Will you kindly tell me what position Mr. Thomas Williams holds on this estate?—Only a farmer.

39,707. He was no agent or anything of that sort?—No.

39,708. He had some influence, I suppose, with the landlord?—No, I do not know that.

39,709. What class of cottages did they build in place of these 121 cottages that went into ruin?—In the villages they are built, not all over the country.

39,710. They have not built any agricultural cottages?—No.

39,711. You are in a position to know how the farmers stand. You say they borrow a good deal of money to pay their rent?—Yes, many of them.

39,712. How long has that been going on?—Did they always borrow money, or is it only of late years?—For many years now.

39,713. Is it more so now than it used to be years ago?—Yes, I believe it is.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,714. Had you anything to complain of against Mr. Rees, the agent, except that he refused to repair the dwelling-house and he buildings?—Nothing except that.

39,715. What was really the condition of the dwelling-house; just describe it?—It was coming down.

39,716. Coming down?—Yes.

39,717. Was rain coming into the rooms?—Yes, there were drops coming in; it was a straw-thatched house.

39,718. And the agent was acquainted with the condition of the house?—He had not seen it.

39,719. He had not seen it?—No; he did not come to see it and he never saw it.

39,720. Was it not customary for the agent to visit the farmhouses and the cottages on the estate?—I never saw him.

39,721. But is it a customary thing that agents do not visit the farmhouses and the cottages?—Well, that one did not come, whatever.

39,722. How far did he live from the dwelling-house?—The agent lived in Swansea and I lived in Llansawel, a distance of 60 miles.

39,723. Thomas Williams, you say, is dead?—Yes.

39,724. Did not this case of the widow here create a good deal of scandal in the neighbourhood?—Yes, a great deal.

39,725. And it was generally considered an unjust thing?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,726. May I ask, what kind of accommodation is there at these farmhouses? Do you lodge with the farmers or do you go to your own home to lodge when you are out working?—I sleep with them, often.

39,727. What kind of rooms do you generally sleep in?—Some are better than others.

39,728. Do you ever sleep in these rooms we hear of where both sexes sleep together, with no partition?—No.

39,729. You do not know of any such farmhouses?—No, I do not know of any.

Chairman.

39,730. You say nominally Thomas Williams paid 8*s.* per week for his land?—Yes.

39,731. By screwing 3*s.* out of his sub-tenants he paid something like 5*s.*?—Yes, as this will show (handing particulars and conditions of sale).

39,732. In addition to which Thomas Williams in 1867 tried to get a sow out of your father for nothing?—Yes.

39,733. And in consequence of his refusal he put his rent up from 15*l.* to 18*l.*?—Yes.

39,734. And he appealed to his landlord at Penllergaer?—Yes.

39,735. And he obtained redress?—Yes and he was allowed to remain as he was before.

39,736. The rent went down to 15*l.* as before?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

39,737. Do you consider sub-letting objectionable or not?—I am against it.

39,738. In your case the landlord interfered and helped you as sub-tenant?—Yes.

39,739. In circumstances where a tenant or sub-tenant could not be protected by his landlord do you think there should be a land court or a tribunal of some kind to which you could apply?—Yes, I believe there ought to be a land court.

Chairman—continued.

39,740. A question is handed in by Mr. Vincent:—"Supposing the sitting tenant were "entitled to the first offer at a fair price, ought "there not to be something to prevent him from "putting the freehold up to auction immediately "afterwards"?—No, I do not think there ought to be a law to prevent him from selling it, but to sell it at a fair price afterwards.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I have had a letter handed in which I have much pleasure in reading from Mr. J. E. Vincent, representing the Landlords' Association:—

"Landowners' Association of South Wales and Monmouthshire,
My Lord, April 19th, 1894.

I hope you will not think me presumptuous in saying that, owing to the absolute fairness and candour with which Mr. Llewelyn Williams conducts his work, I do not hesitate, as I might in some cases, to trust him absolutely as interpreter, and generally. It is, I venture to say, due to him that this should be said.

Your obedient servant,
J. E. Vincent."

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams.

I am much obliged, my lord

Mr. Thomas Davies called and examined.

Chairman.

39,741. You are a tenant farmer, of Tynycwm, Llansawel?—Yes.

39,742. How far is your residence from this place?—About a mile and a half or something like that. I will do my best to answer the questions in English. I would rather my printed statement should be read.

[The following statement of the witness was then read.]

Personal.—Tynycwm is a farm, near Edwinsford, belonging to Sir James Drummond. Rent, 174*l.* During the last two years a field of 16 acres was added, for which I paid 40*l.* a year extra. I have been deprived of this field at a month's notice, and I am of the firm opinion that this has been done because I intended to give evidence before the Commission. Many more tenant farmers would come forward to give evidence if they only dared, but they stand in terror of their landlords. This fact has been materially increased owing to a tenant of Sir James Drummond, named William Davies, of Gelly, having gone to Sir James to ask a favour, when he was told to go to me, as it was I who managed his estate now. My father some time ago went to Sir James on business, and the first thing Sir James asked him was whether he and I had been at the meeting of tenant farmers called to prepare for the Commission. When told that we had both been there, he said that I was getting a very important man now, and was turning against him. This shows, I think, whether landlords favour their tenants giving evidence or not.

See 40,565.

See 40,592.

39,742A. Is Sir James Drummond's agent in the room?

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Dudley Drummond: I am his agent, my Lord.

[Statement continued.]

In 1884, the landlord repaired the stable, built a cowshed for 21 cows, a shed for cattle, and pigsties. I did the whole of the haulage of everything connected with the above, and I am prepared to prove that the haulage cost me more than the buildings and repairs cost the landlord. I was refused liberty to carry stones from a quarry at the top of my farm because it was within the precincts of a rabbit preserve, and I consequently had to go more than five times the distance over a fearfully bad road. In addition to this I have—independently of the haulage—expended over 100*l.* in building and repairing, for which I have only been allowed 31*l.* odd. But the house is still in a most unsatisfactory state, only containing on the ground floor three small rooms in which the family do all work connected with the farm, and no room for the servants to spend their leisure time, and no sleeping accommodation worthy of civilization.

Insecurity of Tenure.

Edwinsford Estate.

Before the Ground Game Act came into force the tenants on Sir James Drummond's estate were allowed two months every year to kill the rabbits, which were over-running the place and eating up everything. But this was subject to the tenants obtaining a licence every year, for which they paid 5*s.*, and a clause was put in every licence that the tenant must go out with his workmen to kill the rabbits.

Chairman—continued.

(1.) Samuel Davies, of Penlan, nearly 70 years old, sent his workmen out alone, and for this reason he was served with a notice to quit, and he had to leave. The tenant kept five cottages which are on the farm, straw thatched, in complete repair for 15 years, and was not paid a penny piece as compensation. He was a splendid farmer, and improved the farm to a very large extent.

(2.) Bank Farm, Roderick Lloyd. — Was tenant of the above farm for from 15 to 20 years, —a splendid farmer with a large family, all working on the farm. Result was the farm was in a high state of cultivation. For the purpose of taking advantage of the two months referred to in the last instance, the tenant kept a ferret for the purpose of killing the rabbits. Having seen a rabbit go into a hole in his garden hedge he fetched his ferret and caught one rabbit. The gamekeeper saw him and he immediately received notice to quit, and he was turned out for catching one rabbit. He was not paid a farthing for compensation.

2,290. (3.) Wion Farm.—Landlord: Sir James Drummond. After the tenant had carried everything towards the new buildings the rent was raised to 12*l*., adding (as an excuse for the advance) a field to the farm. The field is valued at 6*l*. Thus the rent was really advanced 6*l*. on the tenant's work, who is over 80 years old. The tenant is the most hardworking and sober man that ever lived, and should his health fail he has not a penny to keep him.

(4.) Rhyglyn Farm.—Sir James Drummond. The present tenant applied for 13*l*. reduction, instead of which he got notice to quit.

(5.) Cilwenau Uchaf.—50*l*. rent, but when some new building was made the rent was raised to 55*l*., and yet all the haulage was done by the tenant, James Williams. The farm was quite in a common state, and all the banks or hedges were made by the tenant. Sir James Drummond bought the farm, and the rent is now 130*l*.; two fields added to it valued 10*l*.; also Cilwenau Isaf was bought by Sir James which was rented at 105*l*. at the time of sale; the present tenant was paying 105*l*. till the last two years, when he was allowed 15*l*. deduction, although Troed-y-rhiw (part of it) is rented at 15*l*., and also 23 acres of the best land is given to Bank Farm out of it, and yet Cilwenau Uchaf was 105*l*. till the last two years.

Pantglas Estate.

45,793. Esgergynddu.—This is a farm in the parish of Llanfynydd. The owner is Mr. Gerwyn Jones, Pantglas, and his agent is Mr. Watkins, the Bank, Llandovery. The old tenant of Esgergynddu was Mr. Stephen Griffiths, and his ancestors had held it for generations. Mr. Griffiths died July 19th, 1890, leaving an unmarried daughter and a grandson, 10 years of age, at the farm. Mr. Griffiths had arranged in his will that the daughter should remain at Esgergynddu, and had bound her to bring up his orphan grandchild. To her he had left the stock and crop of the farm, together with all his other goods. Mr. Griffiths having been unwell only a few days before his death, left the farm in excellent condition so that to lose the farm would mean the loss of scores of pounds to his daughter. In September 1890, two months after her father's death, Miss Griffiths received notice to quit. While under notice, she did her utmost with the landlord and his agent to keep on the farm. She had plenty of means at her disposal to carry on the farm as before, and she had in the meantime married a son of one of the other old tenants on the estate, who lived with his parents at Nantyffrwd in the same parish. Her brother-in-law, Mr. Samuel Thomas, Disgwylfa, Abergorlech, offered to become surety for them if it was feared they could not pay their way. But, in spite of every effort, the farm was refused her, and she was evicted twelve months after receiving the notice to quit, and the farm was given to another, who pays, I believe, 17*l*. a year more rent. A few days after the expiration of the notice, the trustees received a warning from Mr. George Williams, solicitor, Llandilo, on behalf of the landlord, ordering them to clear everything out from Esgergynddu at once, and if they did not do so, that he was under instructions to let the law run its course. In consequence of this notice, the trustees went to Llandovery to the agent, and told him that the daughter was leaving the place, but that she and her husband had no other place to go to but the road. The agent stated in reply that she should not be allowed to remain in the place on any account. In the face of this, the trustees asked the agent if he would allow some compensation for the unexhausted improvements left on the farm, but he said that he would not allow a penny for anything except for the manure.

On Esgergynddu there was a house and garden called Blaenddol, which was rented by Mr. Griffiths for a yearly rent of 2*l*. 5*s*. Some years before his death he had rented this house to a Mr. T. B. Evans, who had turned it into a shop. But, having married, and wishing to have a dwelling-house, Mr. Evans built another room as a shop, adjoining the old house. In something like two or three years after, Mr. Evans removed to Glamorganshire, and asked Mr. Griffiths for the sum of 15*l*. 12*s*. 6*d*. for the cost of building the shop and adding to the old house. Mr. Griffiths thereupon bought the shop at the price named above, which was paid to Mr. Evans by the trustees after Mr. Griffiths' death. After Mr. Evans' departure, Mr. Griffiths rented the house and shop for 5*l*., as against 2*l*. 5*s*. before. The trustees did their utmost to get the agent to grant some compensation for the shop, which had more than doubled the rent of Blaenddol, but he refused to give a single halfpenny. And there it remains to this day, the new tenant or the landlord receiving the profit for the improvement † Many acres were taken away from this farm, a great portion of which was a good sheep walk.

Chairman—continued.

See 42,298. There has been an increase in the rents in the neighbourhood of Llansawel on an average of 25 per cent. during the last 20 years.

	£	s.	d.
Servant man 40 years, say 20 years of age	8	0	0

Labourers.—Winter, 8*d.* a day and his food. Summer, 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* when cutting hay, &c. But now they are three times the amount.

TENANTS' CHILDREN.—At the following places, for example, the children of the tenants work at home for nothing ; four at Ynys Farm, worth 80*l.* a year; four at Penlan, worth 80*l.*, four at Acheth, worth 60*l.*; three at Island Farm, worth 45*l.*; four at Cilwenau Isaf, worth 60*l.* In none of these places do the tenants, I think, save money.

I submit the following evidence respecting glebe farms in the neighbouring parish of Talley. The rents of these farms have gone up about 40 per cent. in the last 50 years. To prove it I shall refer to the farm called Cefnblaidd, about 112 acres in extent, with a labourer's cottage and a right of common called Mynyddbach, 35 years ago was let at 55*l.*, but now, although the labourer's cottage has fallen into ruins, and the right of common grazed by the landlord himself, the rent is 75*l.* with rates and taxes increased threefold. Eighteen years ago, when the late Rev. David Rees came into the living, the valuer appointed by the ecclesiastical authorities valued the dilapidations on the estate from the former incumbent at 300*l.* (which was paid by the widow). The rent was then only 75*l.*, but the Rev. D. Rees having spent about 100*l.* in building a house, the tenant doing the haulage and labourer's work without payment, he increased the rent to 65*l.* and then to 75*l.*, and he pocketed the other 200*l.* The tenant after trying hard for a few years to pay this exorbitant rent was sold up a bankrupt, and he died a parish pauper, and his wife receives parish relief now. The incumbent (Rev. D. Rees) farmed this himself for a few years, and though he had no rent to pay and was in receipt of rents from the other farms, when he died he had not got enough money to pay his debts incurred by farming. The valuer again stepped in and valued the dilapidations at 250*l.*, but they have never been paid owing to the debts already named."

Chairman—continued.

39,743. How far is the parish of Talley from here ?—The nearest parish.

39,744. Is this reverend gentleman, Rev. D. Rees, in the room ?—No; he is dead.

39,745. Is any representative of the family living in the neighbourhood ?—No.

LAND HUNGER.—Land hunger is very strong in this district, and when a farm is vacant 10 or 12 applications will be made for it, knowing well that it is over-rented; but they think that once they get possession of the farm the landlord will take compassion on them and reduce the rent, but it is very seldom that that happens. On some estates abatements have been given ranging from 10 to 15 per cent. (but on certain conditions), but on the glebe land no abatements whatever have been given.

RELIGION AND LANGUAGE.—Difference of language has no effect upon the relation of landlord and tenant, but the clergy try to put the question of religion between them. As an instance, I can quote a paragraph written by a clergyman not far from here to the "Llan," of last year, respecting Nonconformists, that "They had the "word of God on their lips, but the works of the "Devil in their hearts."

RELATIONS OF TENANT AND LANDLORD.—Most of the landlords give no encouragement whatever to farmers to cultivate their farms well. Tenants feel that they must pay special attention to three things in order to obtain security of tenure :

1. Pay the rent.
2. Touch not the game.
3. Ask not for repairs.

Capable farmers are not half as respected by many landlords and agents as those who farm their lands in an indifferent manner, for this reason: the man who farms indifferently doesn't care what state of repair his buildings are in, and therefore never asks for repairs, thereby winning the smiles of both landlord and agent. To the hard-working and conscientious farmer, ruinous buildings besides, being a loss, are an annoyance ; but immediately he asks for repairs he is put down as a grumbler and never gets any of his requests granted, so that he has to pinch and repair himself, and then in too many cases he has to pay an increased rent on his improvements or leave.

Maesteile, Pencarreg.—Thomas Thomas, tenant of this farm, having a peat house which c 42,340. was nearly falling, cut an alder tree (pren gwernen) for the sole purpose of keeping this house up, which was the duty of the landlord. The value of the wood was 1*s.* at the very outside, but he had to pay 5*l.* to his landlord for cutting it.

Landlords' Farming.—The majority of landlords in Wales do not farm themselves, neither take any practical interest in their tenants' farming or encourage them. On some estate there are many acres of uncultivated land. (Instances can be given to prove the above statement.)

Conditions of Farm and other Houses.—The buildings on the glebe farms of Talley are very poor, one farm-house, called Pistyll, having only one sleeping-room upstairs, where both the sexes sleep, with no divisions between them, no ceilings overhead between them and the slate roof, and the wind and snow getting in through the crevices.

ee 42,367. On many farms in my district farm servants sleep in the out-houses, in the hay-loft or granary, or some other corner, no properly constructed place for them, and as an instance, I may say, that Mr. Simon Jones, of Plas, Talley, has told me that it has been his lot to see once a layer of snow an inch thick on the bed where two boy-servants slept all night.

The following places are in a disgraceful state of repair:—

Llundain Farm.—Landlord: The representatives of the late Mr. Davies, Troedybryn. Rent, 50*l.* The farm-house and outbuildings are straw thatched and very, very expensive to keep. There are no rooms in the loft, and both sexes are obliged to sleep without any partition between them.

Ffynongrech.—Forty years ago the rent was 42*l.* The tenant's father himself drained many acres; also the landlord drained many acres; but the carriage and breaking stones was done by the tenant. Over 200 loads were carried to one wet plot, and broken by the tenant; and more than that, the tenant had to pay 5 per cent. interest on all the landlord's outlay in draining.

Also three cottages at the bottom of the farm, the tenant receiving 7*l.* 10*s.* rent a year from the three. But the tenant received an order from the agent to pull them down, and he did so, carrying the stones away and putting them in one heap, and making the three gardens an addition to the adjoining field, and built a hedge along the roads, without receiving a penny for the labour, nor any allowance made for the loss of 7*l.* 10*s.*, except 6 acres of common land added to the acreage of the farm. The house is very common, thatched with straw, and there is from 20*l.* to 30*l.* every eight years in straw alone to keep it in proper repair.

Part of Ffynongrech was a common before it was banked or hedged by the tenant and put in three fields, and many other banks or hedges were made; also the road to the farmhouse. The wages of labourers, carpenters, and masons for erecting the cowhouse and carthouse were paid by the tenant; also thatching the barn.

When the Twelvemonths' Notice Act was passed, all the tenants had notice to quit, or sign to the six months' notice. Also the same when the Ground Game Act was passed.

Also, Mr. David Williams, Penlan Fawr, had notice for speaking the truth to the farm bailiff, who was a most cruel and tyrannical man to the tenants, and treated them as if they were his tools and slaves.

Llansawel Mill.—Low thatched house, leaking, no proper loft, no windows or ventilation, and no partition up in the sleeping place, and yet obliged to use it for sleeping for both sexes.

Witness.

May I ask you, my Lord, if a few of you Commissioners will call to see this Mill Farm, it is only a few yards from here.

Chairman.

39,746. Who is the landlord of the Mill Farm?—Sir James Drummond, but it is underlet. It is not the worst, but it is near enough for you to see it if you will please come over.

Tanlan.—I have received the following letter from Mr. D. Evans, Tanlan: 'I am sorry 'I did not send yesterday as promised, hoping 'it is not too late now. The house is in a very 'poor state, very near tumbling down, water 'flooding the kitchen floor when raining, leaks 'all over, also severely cold, cannot hardly live 'in cold and windy weather, ground as high as 'top of wall in back. Tenant is a working 'mason, his sons carrying on the farm. The 'rent is so high that he is obliged to pay pounds 'out of his wages every year to keep the farm 'going.'

Llwyncelyn, Llansawel.—Rent 14*l.*; two rooms both on the ground floor, no kind of a loft. The family of six are obliged to sleep in the same room.

House adjoining the above.—Seven in family, only two rooms in which the whole family have to live during the day and sleep at night. One measures 16 by 7, and the other is 7 feet square. These are only a few representative cases out of very many in the district.

Hard Living.—I know many honest, hard-working and sober families both labourers and small farmers who spend many months in the year without tasting any kind of meat. Fresh meat is of course absolutely out of the question, and for weeks and weeks in the year they do not taste a bit of butter, being obliged to save every ounce of butter in order to fill the cask, out of which they pay the rent. All their food consists of bread and skim cheese.

See 40,109, 40,126, 40,569.

GAME.—I had a field of 6 acres of wheat, manured as follows: 11*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.* worth of lime, having to haul it 15 miles. I carted 311 loads of earth. I applied 5*l* worth of nitrate of soda, having to haul this 9 miles. I sowed 18 bushels of wheat, and as a practical farmer I reasonably expected 180 bushels of wheat, with 6 tons of straw. I only received 30 bushels of wheat, and hardly a ton of very short weak straw. My loss is at least 50*l.* in respect of that one field, owing to the pheasants. This result is not to be wondered at, because within 400 yards of the field about 1,000 pheasants were reared."

Lord Kenyon.

39,747. What year was this?—Last year.

This is only a representative case. Rabbit farming is carried on extensively by some landlords in the district.

RENTS.

CASTELL FARM, LLANSAWEL. — Landlord: the present occupier. Was rented at 37*l.* 10*s.* per year by the present occupier; but when he came himself to live in the said farm he sent for Mr. J. M. Davies, Froodvale, to value it, and it is now rated at 26*l.* per year; difference, 11*l.* 10*s.*

YNYS FARM. — Landlord: Colonel Jones, Llandovery. Mr. David Lewis, Ynys, rent is now 124*l.* for 131 acres. He built with his own money (without being allowed anything) the barn, two stables—one to hold five horses and the other four horses—slated the dairy, built places for the calves, thatched the back of the cowhouse, built three sheds and roofed the outkitchen, and 8*l.* was added to his rent after all, and three acres of the land has been washed away by the river.

PANANGLEISION FARM. — Landlord: The representatives of the late Mr. Davies, Troedybryn. The tenant has received three notices to quit during the last six years, and the rent advanced 10*l.* The buildings are very bad. The house leaks, making it very uncomfortable.

ISLAND FARM. — Landlord: Colonel Jones. Agent: Mr. T. Jones, solicitor, Llandovery. The rent until 1868 was 90*l.*, rising 7*l.* that year; then in the year 1876 rising 5*l.* on a piece for which he had been paying 40*l.*, taking 15 acres away to put to two other farms; and the river has washed away 8 acres at least, which are now only gravel and furze, and therefore useless. The farmhouse and part of the outhouses are thatched with straw, and there is an expense of 7*l.* a year to keep them in repair. Another unbearable thing on this estate is that the owner lets his mansion to strangers, and in order to get a big rent he rears a lot of pheasants for the purpose of advertising good shooting, and also gives permission to the gentlemen taking the house to rear as many pheasants as they like. The last two gentlemen that took it reared from 1,000 to 1,500 every year, and the pheasants were doing the crops on the adjoining farms tremendous damage.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Referring to this Island Farm, typhoid fever broke out there in 1884 and 1885. The sanitary authority went up there, and they had a conversation with the landlord, and he was told to put down a pump there; it is not done yet. This farmer of Island has no means of getting water, only the brook that runs through the farmyard.

Garreg Farm.—Landlady: Mrs. Rees, Aberdare. Thirty years ago the rent was 35*l.* It was then raised to 37*l.* Having taken 45 acres away, they reduced to the original rent, 35*l.* for the last two years, and now last rent day they have raised it again to 37*l.*

Mr. Grove.

39,749. Is 45 acres there correct?—That is what the farmer, the tenant, told me. It seems to me the figures are wrong, but the tenant told me that.

Lord Kenyon.

39,750. Referring to the first part of your evidence, you say the tenants were allowed two months every year to kill the rabbits, and in one case a man put a ferret into a hole. Were they not allowed to keep ferrets?—Yes. They were not allowed at that time to keep ferrets. He bought a ferret for the purpose of catching rabbits in the two months that he was allowed.

39,751. I do not quite understand the difficulty if he was allowed to kill rabbits?—He was allowed only two months every year.

39,752. And this was not in those two months?—No; the two months were out a week before that.

39,753. Then with regard to the Wion farm, what was the nature of the work done there?—They built some new houses there.

39,754. What was the value, do you know at all?—No, indeed I do not know the value of the building, but there was a new building there.

39,755. What had been the rent before?—The rent of the farm.

39,756. Yes. You say the rent was raised to 12*l.*; or do you mean the rent was raised 12*l.*?—Yes, by adding this field to it.

39,757. What was the size of the field which made up the 6*l.* difference?—I have seen the field; it is something like 4 or 5 acres, a very common field.

39,758. Would 6*l.* represent a fair interest on the work done to the house?—I do not know about that.

39,759. Is it usual in this district for the tenants to do the haulage and the cartage?—Yes, they do it on the Edwinsford estate.

39,760. It is the usual custom?—Yes, as far as I know.

39,761. Is there any improvement in the buildings in the district? You have given cases of bad buildings; on the whole have they improved at all within the last 10 or 12 years?—Well, very slow.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

39,762. What per-centage do you think a landlord ought to spend of his rents?—Indeed, I do not know what he ought to spend.

39,763. You cannot give any rough per-centage?—No.

39,764. Of course he cannot repair the whole place at once?—No, that is right, but I think every man ought to get a comfortable place to live in.

39,765. Yes, and of course the buildings ought to be gone through in rotation as far as the landlord can do it. You would admit, I suppose, that it would be fair that he should spend a certain per-centage of his income on the buildings?—Oh, yes, very likely. I am of opinion he ought to build more, that is what I think. About the per-centage I do not know.

39,766. Of course a man cannot do more than he can afford?—No, that is right.

39,767. You say "When the Twelvemonths "Notice Act" (that means the Agricultural Holdings Act, I suppose) "was passed, all the "tenants had notice to quit, or sign to the six "months' notice." Did they object to that very much?—I do not think they objected to it then, they did not see the value of it very much, but that old custom was dropped soon.

39,768. You say "also the same when the 'Ground Game Act was passed." What do you mean by "the same" there?—They had a notice then at the first not to kill the rabbits—not to take advantage of it.

39,769. That was illegal, was it not?—Yes.

39,770. With regard to what you say about your field of wheat, do you think last year you could reasonably expect so large a crop as that?—Yes.

39,771. Notwithstanding the dry season?—Yes.

39,772. Had you experience of other fields of wheat?—Yes, I had, on my own farm.

39,773. And you got as good a crop as that last year?—Yes, I ought to get it.

39,774. You ought to get it in a reasonable year. The last year was a very dry year, and wheat crops were naturally short?—Yes; there were very good wheat crops about here although the others were worse. We have never had wheat yield better than last year in this part of the country.

39,775. And the straw?—Yes, and good long straw it was, as well. We never had a better crop of wheat.

39,776. You do not raise very much wheat, I suppose, in this country?—No; something like six acres a year, that is all.

39,777. The sanitary authority did not enforce their demand for this pump at the Island Farm?—No, I am sorry to say our boards, too, bend down before our landlords.

39,778. Perhaps the district councils will do something different?—I do not know. As a rule farmers are members of the board, and then they are afraid to say anything against them.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

39,779. Have tenants on the Edwinsford Estate applied for compensation in respect to game damage?—Yes.

39,780. Have they received any compensation?—I do not know. I know very well that Mr. Jones, Penlan (he is going to give evidence here), sent in a bill of 65*l.* and was only allowed 5*l.*

39,781. Was it his own valuation or was it valued by an independent person?—No, they did not trouble.

39,782. But was it his valuation?—Very likely it was; as far as I know it was.

39,783. Did you apply for compensation in your case?—I did.

39,784. Did you get anything?—No. I made out the figures myself.

39,785. Did you get anything?—No.

39,786. Did you get a refusal?—No. I have got the letters here. Do you want to see them?

39,787. Will you read what was said?—Yes, I sent the agent a letter on the 6th of March that I would be willing for him to find a man and for me to find another and if they could not agree I was willing for an umpire on both sides. The letter that came back from him was this:—

"Cawdor Estate Office, Ferryside,
"DEAR SIR, March 28, 1894.

"YOURS of 23rd inst. I am glad to hear you accede to my proposal of arbitration in the matter of your claim, and it only seems a pity that we cannot agree without such a course. Our next duty is to fix on an arbitrator whose decision shall be final in the matter, and for this purpose we must select somebody out of the district and who has a totally unprejudiced mind in the matter. It is not a question we could treat in the same way as the difference between an incoming and an outgoing tenant by appointing a valuer on each side. The fairest man I think we could get to decide the question would be Mr. James Thomas, of Haverfordwest, or possibly the clerk of the county council if you would prefer it. I shall be glad to know if you are agreeable to either of these as I cannot accept any but an unprejudiced man and one who has a knowledge of law.

"Yours truly,
"D. W. DRUMMOND.

"Mr. T. Davies,
"Tynycwm Farm,
"Llansawel,
"Llandilo."

That is all I had from him. Then I told him I would not take the terms.

39,788. What is Mr. Thomas?—I think he is a land agent.

39,789. Do you know anything of him?—No.

39,790. Have you any reason to object to him?—I have got this reason: I am not going to leave it to one man. I want to find one on my own side and for one to be found on the landlord's side. I think that is the best way to settle matters.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

39,791. Perhaps so if you could not agree upon one. Will you go on?—The next letter is this:—

"Cawdor Estate Office, Ferryside,
"DEAR SIR, April 2, 1894.

"YOURS of 31st ultimo. As you have no objection to either of the gentlemen I mentioned shall I write to one or other of them and ask to name a day to hear our respective evidence? I think you seem to have misunderstood my last letter in which I said I thought it would be no good to have two men, but to select one whose decision shall be final. I daresay I shall have an opportunity of talking the matter over again with you shortly, and if there is a possibility of not having recourse to arbitration it will be more satisfactory for both parties.

"Yours truly,
"D. W. DRUMMOND.
"p.p. R. T.

"Mr. T. Davies,
"Tynycwm Farm,
"Llansawel,
"Llandilo."

The last letter I had from him is this:—

"Cawdor Estate Office, Ferryside,
"DEAR SIR, April 7, 1894.

"YOURS of 2nd inst. On my return home last night I found the above awaiting me. I think I explained pretty clearly in my letter of the 23rd ultimo the most desirable way of settling the matter which I thought you acceded to in your letter of the 31st ultimo. Now, however, on reconsideration you seemed to have altered your mind. I think it is utterly useless to have two men to attempt to decide the matter, for unless they are quite unprejudiced they are sure to disagree. I am afraid you are determined not to agree to any proposal I can make, although, as I mentioned before, I am quite prepared to meet you on any reasonable terms. If you cannot accept a single unprejudiced judge in the matter there is no other course open for me to suggest.

"Yours truly,
"D. W. DRUMMOND.

"Mr. T. Davies,
"Tynycwm Farm,
"Llansawel,
"Llandilo."

39,792. I do not see why you should not accept a perfectly unprejudiced person?—Yes, but I am not going to give it all into their hands.

39,793. But could you not make some inquiries and see if this person would act properly?—Yes, but if I will sign for that to go on of course anything they affix to it I must be content with—I must be pleased with what they give me.

39,794. But if you are satisfied in your own mind that this person, whoever he be, is a perfectly competent and unprejudiced person, I do not see why you should not agree to it?—But do you not think that a land agent or a clerk to the council is hardly the man? I want an experienced farmer to go into it.

39,795. As to the value of the wheat crop?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,796. You are the Chairman of the Llansawel School Board, are you not?—I am.

39,797. I see you commence your evidence by reference to a conversation which you had with Sir James Drummond. Do you think that the tenant farmers in this neighbourhood have felt afraid of coming to give evidence before the Commissioners?—I know they do; they are afraid.

39,798. To what do you attribute that? Do you attribute it to any actual statements made by landlords or anything done by them, or do you think that it comes from the feeling of insecurity which the tenant farmer has according to our existing arrangements and law?—We had a meeting here at Llansawel and one at Talley. Something like 70 tenants were here at Llansawel and something like 50 to 60 at Talley. There were four men appointed at each of them to represent the tenant farmers before the Commissioners. Those were public meetings last winter at Talley and Llansawel. These men were appointed and after all they turned round; they were afraid to come; they were willing to come before they heard what the reception William Davies of Gelly had with Sir James Drummond; then the rumour went round the country and they were afraid to come.

39,799. Is that the William Davies referred to in your paper?—Yes.

39,800. Your proof is so carefully detailed that I do not propose to go over it again, but I should just like to ask you one or two questions. With regard to the case you mention in which you saw a layer of snow an inch thick on a bed where two boy servants slept all night, you do not give the name of the farm?—No, the man who sent me that part of the evidence is in court here to-day if you like to call him; he is Mr. Simon Jones. He has been sleeping under the snow himself.

39,801. You said you saw a layer of snow yourself?—Yes, but it was he who saw it; it was a little misprint. He was sending the evidence to me.

39,802. Then it was Mr. Simon Jones who saw it?—Yes.

39,803. Where was that?—Plas Farm, Talley.

39,804. With regard to the Maesteile, Pencarreg case, the case where Thomas Thomas cut an alder tree you say he had to pay 5*l.* to his landlord for cutting it. Was he summoned for malicious injury?—No.

39,805. How did it come about that he had to pay 5*l.*?—I do not know whether the money went into the landlord's pocket or not, but it was put down to the tenant that the landlord demanded it. It was the farm bailiff of Sir James Drummond at that time, he happened to see the man cutting this and Mr. Thomas told me himself that he had to pay the 5*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

39,806. To the agent?—No, to the farm bailiff.

39,807. Do you think that kind of thing is common? Do you think that bailiffs and other persons who are employed on the estate under the agent or under the landlord take advantage of their position?—They are rather inquisitive.

39,808. Rather inquisitive?—Yes.

39,809. But do you think they, under an express threat or under an implied threat, it does not much matter, often receive money from the tenant?—I do not know as far as the present case goes, but I know this farm bailiff I am referring to had many.

39,810. The point you are making is, I suppose, that this 5*l.* never found its way to the landlord or the agent; it was really paid to the farm bailiff, who said nothing about it?—Yes, the farm bailiff was John Jones of Banc-y-celwydd. "Jack Banccelwydd" they used to call him. He is a pauper now and a mole catcher in the parish of Talley.

Lord Kenyon.

39,811. He has relief in addition to mole catching?—Yes, my Lord.

Professor Rhŷs.

39,118. Mole catching is not a flourishing occupation?—No, I do not think it is.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,813. With regard to the tables that you have been good enough to put in, what parishes are the farms with which you deal in those tables? You begin with the farm Ynysan and end with Gellygoedog?—These are in the parish of Cayo and Talley and one in the parish of Llansawel too.

39,814–5. Which is the one in Llansawel?—My own farm.

39,816. Tynycwm?—Yes.

39,817. And the other farms of which you have given here the rentals from the rate books, which parishes are they in?—Ynysan is in Cayo, Gwinionlethri is in Talley; Ty Howel is in Talley; Penlan Fawr is in Talley; Trewern is in Talley; Ffyongrech and Ffosgotta are in Talley; Blaenig, Tynycwm, and Gellygoedog are in Talley.

39,818. Then the other tables, the ones you got from the rate books, which parish or parishes are they in?—All in the first collection are in Llansawel.

39,819. Those are the ones that belonged to the Edwinsford estate?—Yes.

39,820. What are the others?—Bancwm, Llansawel; Sunny Hill, Llansawel; Penbont, Llansawel; Crachdir, Llansawel; Graes, Llansawel; Esgair, Llansawel; Bryndafydd, Isaf, and Bryndafydd Uchaf, Llansawel.

39,821. All Llansawel?—Yes.

39,822. You have said nothing about the remedies for the existing state of things. Take for instance, the question of compensation for improvements, what do you think in reference to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—Oh, it is no use in this part of the country.

39,823. Why? Because of the machinery or because of its provisions?—It is too much trouble for the Welsh farmers in this district to go into it at all.

39,824. But take the case you have got now—of course that has nothing to do with the substantial provisions of the Act, but it has some bearing upon the machinery of the Act. Your view is that each party ought to appoint his valuer, and the valuers appoint an umpire?—Yes, that is my idea.

39,825. But is that not open to the objection that it is more expensive than getting one man?—No, I do not think it is.

39,826. That is our experience in Gloucestershire—that the Agricultural Holdings Act is very expensive because you first have to get a valuer on each side, and then an umpire, and then there is an appeal to the county court?—Yes, but it will be a great deal less trouble. Then people will very likely get their rights and they will be satisfied to pay a landlord a bit for having what is right.

39,827. It is the more usual method no doubt; but would you like, for instance, this, that either party might appeal to the county court to name a valuer?—Indeed I cannot tell you, I should like it like this—for the landlord to appoint a man and the tenant to appoint a man, and if they could not agree for the Government to interfere and put a man in.

39,828. Let me put it in this way: suppose the Government in some way made out a list of paid valuers, or appointed a paid valuer for a whole county or two for a county, depending on the size of the county, who might, for a settled fee, be called in by a landlord or tenant in reference to any dispute, would that meet your views?—Yes.

39,829. I mean the Government man would be a man who, according to my idea, would be taking no other kind of work; he would not be employed habitually by the landlord or habitually by the tenant?—No, I understand that.

39,830. He would be a kind of judge?—Yes.

39,831. Do you think that system would be satisfactory?—I think it would be very satisfactory in case of dispute.

39,832. I mean the sort of dispute you have got now—the question whether any and, if any, what compensation is due to you for damage by pheasants?—Yes.

39,833. Do you think there would be difficulty in getting a supply of competent men for that work—for agricultural disputes?—No, I do not think there would be any difficulty now; it would be less difficult to get them now than it was 20 years ago.

39,834. Is there any custom of the country as to payment for improvements when a tenant leaves?—Yes; if a tenant leaves his farm the incoming tenant will have the pleasure to pay for the improvements he makes sometimes; sometimes he is obliged to be driven away without any.

39,835. Are the takings usually Michaelmas takings?—Yes.

39,836. In the cases you have given have tenant farmers been sufficiently alive to their rights, do you think? Have they made proper application for compensation for what they want?—Yes, many.

39,837. How do you account for the fact that the Agricultural Holdings Act, for instance, is practically a dead letter?—It is here, because not half of us understand it.

39,838. Would it be any good if the Acts of Parliament were printed in Welsh and easily obtainable?—There is no mistake; it would be a good thing.

39,839. It would?—Yes, very good.

39,840. Passing to the broader remedies, what remedies have you to suggest for the existing state of things. I do not think you have told us this. In your view is the depression among the tenant farmers greater now than it has been at any time during your recollection?—Yes.

39,841. There is more difficulty in getting the rent together now than ever before in your memory?—Yes, and unless things alter we cannot keep on but a very short time.

39,842. Now, what practical remedy do you suggest?—A very good thing would be to get security of tenure. I have no hesitation in saying that there are farmers in this room to-day, and in this locality, and if they will get security of tenure their farms would pay, in some instances, 15 per cent. on laying money out, but they will never do it now according to the proper system, they will not lay out a shilling.

39,843. You think that security of tenure, even without a reduction of rent, would result in great improvement?—It would result in great benefit, there is no mistake, but I do not think they will take it as things go now without lowering the rent after all; because, in the estate where we are, if I am right, on valuing the estate in 1864 and 1878, it was exactly like watching the farmer to do up his farm, and then making him pay for it.

39,844. Have no abatements been made as a general thing during the last few years?—Abatements were made from 10 to 15 per cent. and in some instances a permanent reduction was made here.

39,845. But last year, for instance?—Yes, we had 10 per cent.

39,846. Ten per cent. on practically all the estates?—Some were giving more, I think.

39,847. Was that an adequate, a sufficient abatement?—Oh, dear me, no; not half enough. I can speak as for myself.

39,848. And you think, as I understand it, that notwithstanding this practice of making abatements, unless some legislation takes place the existing race of tenant farmers must all practically become bankrupt?—They are bound to do so. They have no other way to get at it only to get bankrupt, unless things alter.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

39,849. You think that security of tenure would effect a great improvement in their favour?—It will effect a great improvement on the farming.

39,850. How do you propose to give them security of tenure? Would they take leases?—They will not take leases according to the rents they are charged now.

39,851. Apart from leases for fairly long terms of years, what other suggestion have you to make for obtaining fixity of tenure?—I do not know, unless it be to value them properly by both sides.

39,852. But you see the fixity of tenure depends on the question whether the tenant has a right to remain on the farm for a certain time till he can get the value of the improvements and of his work back?—Yes, and be compensated if anything takes place then, and he has to leave.

39,853. But if he gets compensation he does not want security of tenure, does he?—Oh, dear me, yes; it will be a more agreeable thing to get security of tenure. A man will feel safe that he will not be turned away unless a man has sufficient reason for turning a tenant away.

39,854. Have you seen a copy of the Land Tenure Bill that was brought into the House of Commons?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,855. Would you kindly give us the conditions on which you hold this field of 16 acres for which you paid 40*l.*?—I rented a field from the landlord for 40*l.*, and then I kept it on for another year. It has been with me two years.

39,856. Have you any agreement?—No agreement at all. I have got a letter; all the notice I had is this from the agent:—

"Estate Office, Edwinsford, Llandilo, 1st December 1893.

"Cae'rhenfaes.

"DEAR SIR,

"SIR JAMES wishes to take the above into his own hands on the termination of your tenancy on 31st instant, and to place a new iron fencing between this and Caebowlin (that is another field I got from him). I write at once, therefore, to say I shall not be able to relet the above to you for the ensuing year.

"Yours truly,
"D. W. DRUMMOND."

Very likely that was given to me this time for an excuse to put up an iron fence, but I have never seen it put up there yet.

39,857. Were you expected when you took this field to give it up whenever they required it?—Well, it was like this, that if they called for it back they might do so. I asked the agent, we had a walk together one day on the field, and I told him I hoped I would be continuing with the field for a few years, as I had met with two very bad years with it, and he said he did not think it proper to take fields away after they were once let to a man. I prayed of the agent to give me a field for one more year, as I had scarcity of fodder, and the stock was selling so bad, I should be very glad to have the field for one year further, and I would be prepared to give it back then; but it was no use, I did not get it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

39,858. What were your reasons for thinking that because you gave evidence before the Commission you had to give it up?—Oh, I had some talk about the country about it and I knew a month before I had this notice that I was going to have it.

39,859. Then this common talk turns out to be true occasionally?—Yes, it went out first through what they call a farm bailiff or gardener who used to be there.

39,860. What ground had Sir James for saying that it was you who managed his estate now?—Only because I took some part in calling meetings here and I happened to say a few words in both of them; nothing else.

39,861. Not in regard to the estate, I suppose?—Nothing at all, only for what we want as a remedy for these bad times. And I can add to that—I do not wish to say all of it—that he happened to see me once when I was treating for a little gig with a man. I did not refuse the gig at all.

39,862. What is this about a gig?—A man gave me a little gig once to drive; I did not refuse; of course I had it for nothing. I happened to be driving one day in this and Sir James Drummond saw my father a few days after and told him he gave me too much money to start living at Tynycwm and I had two traps going about. My father told him that he had no money to give me, but that I had been rather lucky in marrying.

39,863. Then with regard to your being refused to take some stones for the building; surely the landlord would not refuse you to get some stones from the nearest place to you?—You can see it from here through the window if you will get up. There is the warren—there is a wall round it—you can see it from that window out there now—it is a warren to preserve rabbits in it.

39,864. Still you would not want to go into the rabbit warren?—It is like this: there is a splendid quarry there and it is within 50 yards to the top of my farm. The only reason I asked Sir James was because I had such a bad road and such a distance to take it from the old quarry and I asked him to be allowed to take a cart in and to throw out the stones over the wall into the cart and cart to the top of my farm and I would close the gate after me night and morning to keep in the rabbits.

Lord Kenyon.

39,865. Did he say he was afraid of your letting out the rabbits?—No, he did not say a word only that they had the warren for the sake of preserving the rabbits.

39,866. You do not know what the reason was?—No, I do not know.

Mr. Griffiths.

39,867. Do you consider it a dangerous business on this estate to ask for a reduction of rent?—

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Well, once you do that you will go against the landlord; he will put you down as a grumbler at once, or the agent will. He told me himself at Carmarthen——

39,868. Surely there must be a very great gulf between them if they cannot reason a matter of this sort?—Yes, but you will not get a chance to reason much with him. I may add here that I asked the agent at Carmarthen last November to put up a place for my farm servants to sleep in—that it was in a very bad state. He told me that I was grumbling always at something and I told him in addition to that that if the sanitary authority came to know of it he would have to do it. He said I had better write to them and then he would do it. That is the answer I had.

39,869. But is it not the fact that farmers are generally considered everywhere grumbling?—Well, it is put down in this part and I will say more, they do not grumble without sufficient grounds, too. They have cause for grumbling here.

39,870. On what estate is this farm called Pistyll?—It belongs to the glebe land.

39,871. Then you spoke of some farmhouses with very poor accommodation for sleeping, you do not agree with the last witness; you know of some bad accommodation?—It is very bad here. This Pistyll farm is not fit for a man to sleep in the loft; in fact there are no ceilings or anything on it, and no partition at all; and there is one close here, not a mile off, Acheth; you will have it in the evidence of John Davies.

39,872. It is mentioned that if one wishes to be secure in his tenancy he must not touch the game, do you include rabbits?—No.

39,873. You are allowed to kill rabbits?—Yes, now.

39,874. You were not before?—No; now it is free.

39,875. We heard yesterday of an unwritten law according to which the tenants were not allowed to catch the rabbits?—It is so in many cases, but we are all right here; we can kill the rabbits, but the case is this—when we are living close by the covers they do such tremendous damage coming out in the night, and we cannot go in there after them.

39,876. In your case, with regard to damage done by the game, do you consider that the valuers could now value that damage as well as at the time when the damage was being done; it is a long way back now?—Yes.

39,877. Do you think they could yet value it as well as they could?—No, I do not think they can now.

39,878. What is your object in having two men to value? Is it for them to discuss the rights and wrongs of the question?—Yes, properly.

39,879. One might not see the same as the other one?—No. They are talking about unprejudiced men; now I am telling the truth; I will never allow it unless I get a voice in putting a man in myself, because I know very well the price will be put down beforehand, and I will be obliged to take what they offer me.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

39,880. Would you say something similar with regard to the rent charged for farms. Would you go just in the same manner?—Yes, it would be a very good thing, there is no mistake.

39,881. You think a tenant really should have a voice in settling that?—Yes, he ought to get it, not for him to be rackrented.

39,882. Have you any sanitary inspectors?—Yes, I know them.

39,883. Do not they often visit the neighbourhood?—No, not very often, I think.

39,884. They are not quickened up to it?—Not to do their duty.

39,885. Do they receive their pay?—Yes, I think they do, they are having their payment.

39,886. Who is the occupier of that Castell farm?—The man who lives in it now himself, John Evans. He has been living in another farm, and he bought this farm, and he has been renting out this farm to another man for 37*l.* 10*s.*

39,887. He is the owner now?—He is the owner now, and as soon as he came to live there himself he sent for Mr. Davies, of Frood Vale, to value the farm. Mr. Davies valued it at 26*l.* That shows you the tenant gets the worst of it always.

39,888. Was not the valuation brought before the Assessment Committee?—Yes, they did not say a word against him.

39,889. The tenants of this neighbourhood object to game farming, do they?—Yes.

39,890. They do not like the landlord to let out the game?—No.

39,891. Do you think if they had their own tenants as game keepers every one would look after his own farm, and provide game for them to shoot, and they would find enough game?—I can prove as much as this, and the ex-agent and the present agent will say so themselves—there are more hares now after the Ground Game Act was passed on the Edwinsford Estate than there was when the keepers were there.

39,892. Then there are no keepers now?—Yes, there are, but they do not care as a rule for the hares.

39,893. You do not think the tenants as a rule object to their landlords going over their farms to shoot at any time?—Nothing at all; they do not object at all, but they do not want the pheasants to eat up their crops.

39,894. I should like to know from you what remedies you would suggest?—I can see no remedy at all, only a land court. There are many mentions about light railways and this and that about branding the foreign meat and so on, and there is no doubt it would be a very good thing, and it is a thing that we ought to have; but after all unless we get some law to protect the tenants and prevent the landlords from raising the rents the landlords will be the first to make an advantage of these light railways and they will take the advantage by etting the farms too high on account of it.

39,895. That is your chief and only remedy, is it?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,896. You have not made yourself offensive in any way to your landlord?—No, we used to be on the best of terms till this.

39,897. You have still no hostile feeling against your landlord?—Nothing at all. I should like, but I cannot get a chance, to get a talk with him, to talk things over. As far as that goes we have been—well, on the best of terms—been on this school board together, and many things, and I used to see him very often two or three times a week, because I am living close by him.

39,898. But you think you made yourself a bit obnoxious because you made yourself rather active in collecting evidence for the Commission?—Yes, I know I have.

39,899. Was any reason assigned when a notice to quit was given to you with respect to this field?—No, only putting that iron fence between the two fields. That is the reason in the letter; I handed in the letter.

39,900. Was this case that you refer to still on Sir James Drummond's estate—the case that took place in the year 1884 where the landlord repaired the stable and built a cowhouse and shed and so on?—Yes, he built those things for myself; it was on my farm.

39,901. It seems to me to be a very big sum for haulage, is it not?—Yes, but you have no idea the distance that we have to carry the things.

39,902. What distance have you to carry them?—I was carrying all the stones: I could not make more than three, and I had a hard job to make three journeys in a day. Then I had the paving stones, the gravel, and the lime from the kiln 15 miles away and I had the haulage of the timber lower down than Talley, about two miles off. I was obliged to carry this to Edwinsford to be cut and there is a lot of waste in it. I have been days and days there. We were not able to go to the station and have them ready cut there but had to carry them rough from the covers here. I have smashed two carts into pieces by it and I nearly lost one horse through pulling the trees down from a very dangerous cover near Talley: the horse never came right after the accident.

39,903. Of course that would alter the circumstances. Now as to insecurity of tenure you say, "Samuel Davies of Penlan, nearly 70 "years old, sent his workmen out alone, and for "this reason he was served with a notice to quit, "and he had to leave. The tenant kept five "cottages which are on the farm straw thatched "in complete repair for 15 years." Do tenants feel it a burden to have to thatch their houses and the cottages?—Oh, very much.

39,904. I suppose you do not consider wheat a profitable branch of farming?—No, but as far as this year goes the straw was worth a lot of money.

39,905. And practically you were obliged to grow a great deal more wheat than you otherwise would do in consequence of having to keep the farmhouse and the cottages repaired with thatch?—Yes, those that have got the straw-thatched houses are obliged to do it.

39,906. And you think it is high time that these cottages should be slated?—Yes; I know, for instance, that my father since he has been there the last 50 years that house has cost him hundreds of pounds.

39,907. I know myself what this thatching is. What was the date of this Bank farm, Roderick Lloyd, case?—About 17 or 18 years ago.

39,908. It was before the Ground Game Act?—Yes.

39,909. Do you think there was any reasonable objection against continuing Miss Griffiths as tenant of this farm of Esgergynddu?—No, there was nothing. It was on the part of the agent against her. It seems to me as soon as Mr. Griffiths died this man who is living there now went up to the agent in less than two hours after Mr. Griffiths died and secured the farm. I do not know whether it can be proved or not, but it is the general talk of the country—very likely you cannot put that in as evidence—that some cil-dwrn business was going on there.

39,910. Is that a usual thing in this part?—Well, it takes place very often there, but we have got some very strict agents and they will not have it at all.

39,911. We have been told repeatedly that on large and well-managed estates like Lord Cawdor's, consideration is always given to widows or daughters or the nearest relatives of deceased tenants. Is that the case on Sir James Drummond's estate?—Oh, yes. I have never seen him making any difference between a widow. He is always very kind so far as that goes to the widows. I have never seen anything of that kind here as far as my recollection goes. I am rather young.

39,912. Then it seems rather strange with regard to Miss Griffiths?—She is on Mr. Gerwyn Jones's estate; not Sir James Drummond's.

39,913. Is Mr. Gerwyn Jones a large land owner?—Yes, I think he is, very.

39,914. With respect to this Rhyglyn farm. A notice to quit was given to the tenant because he asked for 13*l.* reduction?—Yes.

39,915. Do you think the notice was given because he asked for such a large amount or because he asked at all?—After I had sent this statement in as evidence I have found this out. It is the fact that Morgan, the present tenant, told me that he had the notice to quit because of this, and since this has been put in print I have heard it is for other reasons. I do not know; you will have the explanation very likely from the agent, but it is the fact that the man had the notice.

39,916. With regard to Cilwenau Uchaf, what was the date of the repairs?—My father-in-law used to live there, and the repairs were very likely 30 or 40 years ago.

39,917. When did Sir James Drummond buy the place?—Indeed, I cannot tell you; something like 14 or 15 years ago very likely.

39,918. Fourteen or 15 years ago?—Yes, I am not quite sure, but something like that, I know.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

39,919. It seems to me, according to your evidence here, that he doubled the rent at one stroke?—He has. I have got the receipt here showing what my father-in-law used to pay (handing receipt). That is when the estate was with David Pugh, Manoravon.

39,920. It is here 32*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*?—Yes, for the half year. You can see in my evidence that there has been a little addition of two fields.

39,921. Now as to the tenants' children, you say, "At the following places, for example, the "children of the tenants work at home for "nothing: four at Ynys farm worth 80*l.* a year." Can you tell me what is the rent of Ynys farm; I want to know what proportion the labour bears to the rent?—The rent of Ynys farm is 124*l.*

39,922. What is the acreage?—131 acres.

39,923. Are there any labourers employed on the farm beside these four children?—Some in the harvest time.

39,924. Do you think the labour bill could be put down at 100*l.* altogether; that is taking everything into account?—No; we will put it that very likely he is paying out in wages then something like 10*l.* to 15*l.* all the year round like, besides the work of his own children.

39,925. Then you say at Penlan, worth 80*l.*, there are four children working?—Yes.

39,926. What is the rent of Penlan?—182*l.*

39,927. What number of labourers are employed on that farm besides the four children?—Oh, he is giving out jobs, flushing and banking and things like that and he has a workman who lives most of his time there.

39,928. I suppose at most of these places it would be mixed farming?—Yes.

39,929. I see your proportion in labour is very similar to what it would be in Montgomeryshire; something like half to three quarters of the rent. That is just what it should be, I think, on a mixed farm. Now, you say that the servants sleep in the granary; what is kept in the granary, corn?—Corn.

39,930. Can the servant men be trusted to sleep in the granary? I should not like to trust my servants to sleep in the granary; they would take the corn for the horses?—They are obliged to trust them there in many places. As a rule, in many places here, they are obliged to take up their corn to the dwelling.

39,931. To the house?—Yes, in scores of places here.

39,932. Is that generally a means of bringing rats into the house?—I should think so. I know of a landlord here, the landlord of the "Black Lion" hotel; he must keep the corn there; he must bring it down from the farm; there is no place to keep it there.

39,933. You do not know any places where they have had to keep it in the parlour, as we have heard elsewhere?—No, they keep butter and this and that in the parlour sometimes here.

39,934. Was this case of Maesteile, Pencarreg on Sir James Drummond's estate?—I think it belongs to Sir James Drummond now. It belonged then to Colonel Davey, Sir John Ferguson Davey now, I think.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

39,935. Did it belong to him at that time?—Yes.

39,936. Was it considered that the tenant of this farm was very hardly dealt with?—It was.

39,937. What was the size of the tree?—It was not a big one at all; it was a very small one.

39,938. Was it as big as that pillar there (pointing)?—I do not know; I never saw it. The old man spoke to me many times about it, and told me he did not consider it more than one shilling in value. I do not know whether the money went to the landlord or the agent, but it is a fact that Thomas had to pay it to the farm bailiff.

39,939. You say that David Williams, Penlan Fawr, had notice for speaking the truth to the farm bailiff?—Yes.

39,940. Whose farm bailiff?—The farm bailiff that I mentioned who charged that 5*l.* He was a most cruel man, he was a notorious character round the place here.

39,941. Would you say who was his master?—Sir James Drummond.

39,942. Is he still in his employment?—No.

39,943. You do not know why he was dismissed?—I do not know why; I suppose there were some complaints against him, he was too cruel, or something, and one thing and another; but I can add this to it: it was a great boon for the farmers to get rid of him.

39,944. Did Sir James know that he was unpopular with the tenants?—Yes, he came to know when he began to come home a bit and talk and mix up with his tenants.

39,945. Was he away then?—Yes, at school; a young man.

Lord Kenyon.

39,946. He was a soldier, was he not?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,947. Did the agent know that this man was unpopular?—I do not know whether he knew it or not.

39,948. Is the Ground Game Act in operation on Sir James Drummond's estate?—Yes.

39,949. Do tenants generally avail themselves of it?—Yes.

39,950. There is no fear?—No fear as far as the Ground Game Act goes.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,951. You have had a great many questions asked you, and I will ask you only just one or two, please. Would you turn to the figures you have given of the rateable value of these parishes in 1864 and 1893? Am I correct in saying that in 1864 the rateable value was 3,521*l.* and in in 1893 4,710*l.*, and that the increase is 1,189*l.*?—1,189*l.*

39,952. That makes the increase in the rateable value about 34 per cent.?—Yes.

39,953. Now as to the table just below giving the gross rental on certain farms in 1864 and 1893: those figures have been taken by you from the rate-book?—Yes, all this account is in that down to the Panangleision farm. I had it from the assistant overseer.

39,954. That shows in the total an increase of about 35 per cent., which is very nearly the same?—Yes.

39,955. Have you identified these ten farms? Have you seen that the gross rental in 1893 is really the actual rental at this moment?—No, I have not noticed that, but it may be.

39,956. I do not know whether you will be able to answer this question, because it is 30 years ago?—I cannot go into figures very much.

39,957. I remember 30 years ago the Union Assessment Act, and I should like to have asked you if you could tell me whether the gross rental as put down on the rate book at that time is at near the actual rental at that time?—It might have been.

39,958. You see the point. At that time the Union Assessment Act was intended to make the assessment of the parishes in each union fair as between one and another, but the weak point of it was this, that it did not make the assessment as between one union and another necessarily fair, because the whole of one union might be put down at lower than the actual rental and another one right up to the actual rental?—Well, indeed, I am not prepared to answer that question.

39,959. Then let me put it in another way. In your belief do you think that the actual rent roll of the landlords in this parish has increased during the last 30 years between 1864 and 1893 by 34 per cent.?—No; I do really believe that they have increased something like 25 per cent.

39,960. So that these figures do not represent what you believe to be the actual increase in the rental?—Yes, on this estate—on the Edwinsford Estate. This takes in the parish where there are many farms besides those belonging to Sir James.

39,961. But taking the parish, if we are to take it for granted that the gross rental in the rate book at these two periods represents the actual rental at these two periods, we must also believe that the rent roll of the landlords has gone up 34 per cent. in these years.

39,962. But do you believe it?—Yes, I believe in many instances very likely the rent is not properly put down in the book. It may be higher; because I know some farms in the parish of Llansawel here where we have sent to the landlord to give us the right item of rent or asked the tenant to produce a receipt for the rent and we have never had it yet.

39,963. In what year?—We had it last year or two years ago; we had a talk in nearly every vestry for it and we cannot get it from them. I know it is the fact that some farms are rented out higher than they are allowed in the rate book.

39,964. That is at the present time?—Yes.

39,965. The worst of it is that though one is very anxious to get at a correct statement of figures these two columns in the rate books as between 1864 and 1893 may be very delusive. They may give us a very exaggerated increase because we do not know that the Assessment Committee of 1864 went as near the actual rental as you do now?—I should like to hear that in Welsh. (The question was interpreted.) The figures which I have had in connexion with the rent are correct as far as they have reached me.

39,966. I have no doubt at all of that, but the point is whether what is put in the rate book in 1864 was the gross rent, the actual rent at that time in 1864?—I do not know about that. It is put down as they are rated.

39,967. I quite understand that. I will put it in another way. Before you had ascertained these figures, taking the general feeling of the farmers in this neighbourhood, were they under the impression that their rents were anything like 34 per cent. more than they were 30 years ago—that there had been that rise during that period?—Since 1864?

39,968. Since 1864?—Oh, yes, that must be right.

39,969. But were they under that impression? Was it not a surprise to them to find that the rental had been increasing 34 per cent in that period?—I do not think they have gone into it at all so far as how much per cent. it has gone up.

39,970. If these figures are true they are very remarkable, because the population in 1861, which is very near 1864, in this parish, was over 1,000 and the population in 1891 was only 898. It seems to be a very remarkable point which I should like to have cleared up if any one can do it, whether we can really understand that notwithstanding a reduction of population we have had an increase of gross actual rental of 34 per cent. during that period?—Will you kindly allow Mr. Long Price to state it to you.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,971. Is it the fact that in the rate book the persons who make up the rate book in the gross rental enter the amount which they understand the tenant paid to the landlord?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

That is now; but 30 years ago it would not be so.

Professor Rhŷs.

But he says it is now entered below what it is.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

They put the gross rental and the ordinary rental in the rate book.

Witness.

Let me explain. According as the rate goes—I do not think they rate according to the rent—they allow something like 2*s.* 6*d.* in the £. They do rate the farmer within 2*s.* 6*d.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

39,972. That is it, from 2*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.*?—2*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* That is the custom here. I can see your point now.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

39,973. I may be wrong, but as I understand these returns are made up for the Local Government Board. In the column headed "Gross rental" the persons making up the book have to put the actual rent as well as they can understand it?—Yes, but I am not paying rates according to what I am rented.

39,974. No, you are paying on the nett because there are allowances; they vary a little, but there are some allowances everywhere, of course.

Mr. Seebohm.

39,975. Would it be possible to find someone here who was on the Assessment Committee in 1864? Is there anybody in the room who could tell us what they did at that time?—No, I do not know of anyone here.

Mr. Grove

39,976. I will just ask you two questions. You have been speaking under the head of "Personal," and you say that Sir James told your father that you were turning against him?—Yes.

39,977. What do we understand by that?—Because I was going against him on this Land Commission business.

39,978. But because you attend a meeting it does not follow that you are going against the landlord?—No, but that was the expression he made to my father.

39,979. Of course you cannot say the exact words because you were not present?—No, I was not, and my father could not understand English, and Sir James was trying to put it into Welsh as well as he could.

39,980. Do you think your father misunderstood him in any way?—Well, he used to understand Sir James pretty fair anyhow.

39,981. The only other question is with reference to your paragraph headed "Land hunger." You say, "On some estates abatements have been "given ranging from 10 to 15 per cent., but on "certain conditions." On what conditions?—The conditions are these: When we get the notice of the rent we are told that unless we pay up the amount on the day we will not be allowed anything.

39,982. So that you have to take the full amount?—We have to take the full amount. I know there are men in this room now—there is one of the largest farmers on the Edwinsford estate—he went with 17*l.* short, and he was obliged to find it the following morning or he would have no reduction.

39,983. Then it means this, that in many cases a farmer would have to sell his stock at a low price on purpose to get the full money ready, and then when he went to the rent audit all the money would not be wanted?—Yes, when we get the circular of the rent it is made out what is the abatement and what amount of money we want to take.

39,984. I understood from you that you had to take all the rent; what do you mean by that—less the abatement?—Yes.

39,985. Less the abatement?—Yes, suppose we are short of what they want after taking the abatement, it is put down in red ink at the bottom.

39,986. What notice of abatement is given; a month or two months, or what?—Oh, a very short notice.

39,987. How do you mean very short?—About a week or a fortnight sometimes.

39,988. It would be a convenience to have it a month or six weeks before, would it not?—Yes, very.

39,989. So that you would know what rent you had to get ready?—Yes.

39,990. You say on certain conditions. There is no condition of this sort, that a certain amount of artificial manure is to be put in the land?—Nothing at all of that, only to pay in full.

Professor Rhŷs.

39,991. You said your father could not explain in English to Sir James?—He could not talk English to him.

39,992. Then he could not explain that matter to him?—Yes, Sir James can talk Welsh very well.

39,993. Oh, he can?—Oh, dear me, yes.

39,994. Then where was the difficulty, would not Sir James understand it also?—Yes.

39,995. Where is the difficulty, I do not quite understand it?—My father talks Welsh to him always.

39,996. But where was the difficulty? I understood you to say that he could not explain this matter to Sir James?—No, I did not say so.

39,997. Then I misunderstood you. What about your accommodation for servants. Is it still in an unsatisfactory state?—Yes, indeed.

39,998. The agent told you to send to the sanitary authority?—He ordered me to do it.

39,999. Did you do so?—No, I did not.

40,000. Has anybody representing that authority been to see you?—No.

40,001. And nothing has been done?—No.

40,002. What is it like?—Well, they are sleeping above the horses with nothing between them, only slates and I am obliged to put some old sacks and straw to keep the rain out because the slates are very old slates and there are many holes there. They have no place to sit down or read or anything. It is a most uncomfortable place. I am sorry to say I was obliged to lay these conditions before my farm servants last year. In fact, I could not ask them to come there without first telling them what sort of place I had for them to sleep in.

40,003. Is it the rule that farm servants now require to know what sort of accommodation

they have before they are engaged?—It is not a rule, but——

40,004. They inquire?—Yes, they are rather particular now to handle, mind you.

40,005. Even if they do not inquire of you they would know from the neighbourhood all round what sort of accommodation there would be?—It may be this, unless I would tell them beforehand of the place I had for them to sleep, when their boxes came there some of them would return in a minute.

40,006. But short of that do not they generally know by rumour throughout the neighbourhood what sort of places there are?—No, as a rule, they do not.

40,007. Then you get them from a distance?—Yes.

40,008. They do not go about much at night and that sort of thing?—The servants?

40,009. Yes?—Yes, they go a little bit and they must go somewhere from my house because I only have a kitchen there. If a friend of mine comes to see me I have only a small parlour, but I am sorry to say I cannot live in it the smoke is everywhere but in the chimney; it makes me very uncomfortable—if I want to read or write I must do it in the kitchen along with the farm servants—mixed with them.

40,010. Then you have maid servants who are pursuing their occupation in the kitchen; they have something to do in the kitchen?—Yes.

40,011. The men servants would be in the way then?—Yes.

40,012. You cannot separate them?—Well, we try to manage as well as we can.

40,013. Where do they go when they are not there?—They go to the village.

40,014. Where—to a reading room?—A reading room! No; to a public-house, or to the saddler's shop, or to the blacksmith's.

40,015. You do not consider that state of things satisfactory?—No, indeed I do not.

40,016. Do you know at all what is the state of this part of the country in point of morality. How does it compare with others in the statistics?—Well, it is very good, I think.

40,017. Very good?—Yes, in some ways. There are some very good men here.

40,018. Oh, I never doubted that. That is an utterly different question. What are the statistics of illegitimacy in the published accounts from this part of the county?—Oh, there are a few cases here.

40,019. But are the statistics rather heavy against this part of the county?—Oh, no, not very heavy. I think it has been worse than it is now.

40,020. There is improvement in the accommodation, then?—Not in the accommodation. I think it is something else.

40,021. An improvement in the morality?—Yes.

40,022. To what do you ascribe that, to the religious teaching or the schools, or what?—To religious teaching.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

40,023. The ministers and the deacons set their faces against immorality, do they not?—Yes.

40,024. And you think that tells in the long run?—Yes, that is the main thing here now.

40,025. Do you think it would be still better if you had proper accommodation for the farm servants?—Oh, a lot; it would keep them at home. I think that we ought to get an out-kitchen for them, so that they might have a fire and books, and they might read and write, and spend their leisure hours there.

40,026. Do they take a delight in reading?—Yes, I had a farm servant who left me last year. He had been with me nine years, and he was reading the Bible once a year every year right through.

40,027. Right through?—Yes.

40,028. The Chronicles and all?—Yes.

40,029. What about the cottages in your part of the country?—They are in a very bad condition.

40,030. Have you enough of them?—Well, I do not know about that, because there are not many workmen about here.

40,031. Are there as many workmen as you ought to have?—No, I should like to keep more if I could afford to do it.

40,032. It does not pay?—We cannot find money to pay them, and through that the farming is getting worse and worse every year.

40,033. Then it is no use my asking you whether the accommodation is adequate for them in the way of cottages, as you cannot pay them. What becomes of the surplus population; where do they go?—They go into Glamorganshire as a rule.

40,034. To the iron works?—To the town, yes.

40,035. You spoke rather depreciatingly of light railways just now, but I suppose you consider light railways would be a boon, would they not?—Yes. If you understand me, it is a thing that we ought to have; but what I mean is this, suppose we got light railways—what I mean is, that the landlords will be the first to take an advantage of them.

40,036. But does not that apply to every advantage that you can have? Does not that tend to make the farm more lettable and so on?—There is no mistake.

40,037. Do you think you could prevent that in any way in any condition of things?—We cannot prevent it unless we get a land court and fix a fair rent.

40,038. Do you think you could fix that for ever then? You would not be able to fix the rent for ever, would you?—Not for ever, of course.

40,039. You would have to submit to some kind of revision every now and then, would you not?—Yes, very likely.

40,040. But is that a reason for objecting to light railways, think you?—I do not object to it at all.

40,041. I am very glad to hear that. Where would you have light railways, for instance, in this part of the country?—From where do you mean?

40,042. Yes?—It would be a great boon for this country to get it from Llandilo to Lampeter.

40,043. Through here?—Yes.

40,044. Is that practicable?—The line has been drawn out once to take a railway there. The map was put up anyhow.

40,045. Why was that not carried out or taken up?—I do not know. I was told there was some mistake on the other side, the Manchester and Milford line, that it would spoil the other side going through Cardiganshire. The Bill passed through Parliament, but the contractor failed.

40,046. It was not the impracticability of constructing the line?—Oh, no, they commenced to make the line it seems to me.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,047. May I ask one further question with regard to the interesting gentleman that you quoted as reading his Bible through once a year. I hope there are many people who do that and make a practice of it. Where did he get his opportunities for doing so?—He would do it sometimes in the house.

40,048. In your house?—In my house, and he was taking the Bible up with him to his bed then.

40,049. Was that to the place above the stables?—Yes.

40,050. So it was sufficiently comfortable for him to read there?—No, he was reading in bed.

40,051. Well, I suppose he was comfortable in bed?—He was in bed in the place he had there.

40,052. What kind of light did he get to read by?—Candle.

43,053. Then it was sometimes in his bedroom, which you say was not a good one?—Yes, and he was reading a great deal on Sundays.

40,054. And I suppose he would do it in some place where he had the greatest comfort?—Yes.

40,055. Where were those places usually, in your parlour?—No, he was allowed to go there if he liked because he was——

40,056. But, as a matter of fact, where did he usually go?—He was reading in the kitchen in the winter, and he could go to the parlour of course.

40,057. He could take the most comfortable?—Yes.

40,058. Do you give the same facilities to your other servants?—As far as reading goes?

40,059. Yes?—Yes, they have their leisure hours and can go and read whenever they like. Some of them do not read and others do read.

40,060. It was quite incidentally that I came to ask you those questions. Now there are one or two questions on your general evidence. You said thatch was a burden on the tenant?—Yes, it is.

40,061. What is the custom of the country; who pays for the thatching?—My father had paid for the thatching at the place where I was brought up till the last instance, I think. He had the straw and the man was paid by Sir James last time, I think it was in the agreement that Sir James is to do it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

40,062. Is the custom of this district that the landlord pays for the thatching?—Yes, in some instances.

40,063. Then in what way is that a burden upon the tenant?—Because the landlord does not do it.

40,064. Does the landlord also pay for the slating where the roofs are slated?—Oh, yes, as a rule where there are buildings.

40,065. And he also pays for the thatching?—Only the last time, last year.

40,066. Previously to that your father had to do the thatching?—Yes, since he has been there, for the last 40 or 50 years.

40,067. Now the landlord slates?—No, he does not slate now.

40,068. But now the landlord thatches?—Yes, he did it last year if I remember right.

40,069. Do you say the tenant had to pay for the thatching?—Yes.

40,070. Was not that allowed for in the rent—in adjusting the rent—in fixing how much the rent was to be, was it not taken into consideration?—No, if I am right, it is in the agreement that the landlord was going to do it, it was not fixed in the rent.

40,071. You think it was in the agreement that the landlord should do the thatching, but as a matter of fact the tenant did it?—Yes.

40,072. I now understand your contention that the thatch was a burden; I did not understand it before. Is any system of adjusting the rent, whether by a land court or by freedom of contract between landlord and tenant?—I think it ought to be by land court.

40,073. Well, if it was done by a land court, I suppose the land court would take into consideration what the conditions of the letting were?—Certainly.

Lord Kenyon.

40,074. Is the only reason you do not use your parlour because it smokes?—Yes, I cannot stop in it.

40,075. You use it, then, in the summer, I suppose?—Oh, yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,076. Do you put in a copy of your agreement?—I think you have one there—not between me and my landlord.

40,077. Between your father and the landlord?—No, between another one. I have applied many times to my agent for the agreement, but I have not got it yet. He gave me a chance to go to the office and see it if I liked.

40,078. Are there any freeholders in this district?—A few.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

40,079. Do you think they are better off than the tenant farmers?—I do not know. In some instances they are just like tenant farmers; some are bad off and some are not.

40,080. Freeholders, I take it, have security of tenure?—Oh, yes.

40,081. And yet they are not much better off than the tenant farmers?—Some of them. Some of them have bought their farms too dear just for the sake of trying to get a place of their own to live in.

40,082. If they had security of tenure, have the farmers got capital enough to lay out on the farm to get the 15 per cent. you mention?—No, they have not.

40,083. They would have to borrow it from Government or some other source?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

40,084. Do you hold now under an agreement?—Yes; I have signed an agreement, but I have not seen it.

40,085. You saw it when you signed it?—Yes, but I could not understand it thoroughly through.

40,086. Have you no copy of it?—No, I did not get a copy.

40,087. It is not usual to give copies?—Some have it and some do not.

40,088. Did you ask for a copy?—I did. If I am right I signed two.

40,089. Did you ask for a copy more than once?—No; I asked the clerk of the agent to give me a copy, and the only thing was I had the pleasure of paying 10*s.* to sign my name on the two.

40,090. Does it not seem unreasonable that you should sign an agreement and not have a copy of it?—Well, I think it ought to be a usual thing anyhow.

Chairman.

Is the Rev. J. H. Lloyd in the room.

Rev. J. H. Lloyd. Yes.

Chairman.

You are a clergyman of the Church of England and you live at Talley Vicarage?

Rev. J. H. Lloyd. Yes.

Chairman.

And you hand in this letter.

Rev. J. H. Lloyd. Yes.

Chairman.

How long have you been vicar of the parish?

Rev. J. H. Lloyd. Since 1889.

Chairman.

40,091. (To witness.) These are questions by the Rev. J. H. Lloyd, vicar of Talley:—"Is the "witness aware that with regard to the expen- "diture on Cefnblaidd the sum raised by the "late vicar for repairing the farm was spent "under the supervision of the diocesan sur- "veyor and that he could not pocket a penny of "the sum given for dilapidations, as per letter "put in?"—No, I do not know, but I hand the evidence in, and the man who sent me the evidence will explain to you if you like He is in Court.

Chairman—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

40,092. Your statement was that he pocketed the other 200*l.* Does the letter explain that matter?—If I am right the late vicar did it, too.

40,093. He pocketed the other 200*l.*?—Yes, if I have heard right.

Chairman.

40,094. The late vicar or the present one?—The late one.

40,095. The late vicar pocketed 200*l.*?—Yes, according to what I have heard.

40,096. But the present vicar made no money out of it whatever?—No, not he.

40,097. I think that is satisfactory; if the reverend gentleman wishes to say anything he can come into the chair afterwards. The second question is this: "Is he aware that Cefnblaidd "farm was valued as recently as 1889 by one "of the most competent valuers in the country "—Mr. D. Long Price?" Are you aware of that?—No, I was not aware of that.

40,098. "And is he aware that the rent paid "is that which is fixed by him?"—No.

49,099. "And that with regard to all the "glebe farms of the benefice of Talley, for both "arrangements of buildings and repairs the "diocesan surveyor is responsible?"—No, I am not. I only state the exact state of repairs.

40,100. You state that, but you know nothing of any arrangements?—No.

40,101. Now these are questions by Mr. J. E Vincent: "Assuming that Sir James Drummond "used the words you impute to him, why do you "say the words were anything more than a "mere statement?"—I do not quite understand that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is really, "What makes you think that "they amount to a threat?"

Chairman.

May I put it in that way?

Mr. Vincent. Certainly, my Lord.

Chairman.

40,102. What makes you think that they amount to a threat?—I made it out by the farmers; many of them told me that they were afraid to go because they were named in these meetings to go, and then they turned round after they had heard the rumour about in the country that Sir James had made these remarks about me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,103. "As it was I who managed his estate now." Those were his words?—Yes.

Chairman.

40,104. You say, "This fear has been materially increased owing to a tenant of Sir James Drummond named William Davies, of Gelly, having gone to Sir James to ask a favour when he was told to go to me as it was I who managed his estate now." Then this is another question by Mr. Vincent: "Was not Sir James joking with you?"—I have not had the pleasure to see him after I had been in the meeting at all. I have not seen him or talked to him at all on any occasion.

40,105. Do you consider this a joke at all?—No, I do not.

Lord Kenyon.

40,106. It was your father who was talking to him, not you, was it not?—Yes, he used the term that I was managing his estate to William Davies, of Gelly, and then the other statement that I was getting rather important now he made to my father.

Chairman.

40,107. Then I understand you did not consider this in any way a joke?—No, I did not.

40,108. There are some other questions by Mr. Vincent: "Is the man who heard those words present?"—I went down to his place and asked him if he would prove it. He said, "Yes, with the greatest pleasure." I do not know whether he is here or not. He told me he was going to take some beasts away to-day. I saw him on Monday, but if you want to hear him yourself I will bring him to Carmarthen.

See 39,746, 40,569. 40,109. "Are these letters from yourself" (handing a number of letters to witness)?—Yes, referring to this conversation between me and Mr. Dudley Drummond as to damage done by game. All of them are in my handwriting.

Chairman.

Do you wish these to be read?

Mr. Vincent. I put them in.

Chairman.

Then they had better be read.

Witness.

I beg at the beginning you will excuse my language—excuse my English, I mean; I am not a proper English scholar.

Chairman.

Oh, yes. These are the letters:—

"Tynycwm, Llansawel, Llandilo,
"February 26th, 1894.

"DEAR SIR, "Caerhenfaes.

"I SHOULD like to know by Friday's post if I am allowed to keep the field on or not. I have told you the reasons before, and I think they are sufficient weight for me to keep in till next December. Then I will be ready to give it up. Please be punctual enough to answer by Friday.

"I am,
"Yours truly,
"T. DAVIES."

40,110. Who is that letter to?—That is to Mr. Dudley Drummond, the present agent of Sir James Drummond.

40,111. Then:—

"Tynycwm, Llansawel, Llandilo,

"DEAR SIR, "March 3rd, 1894.

"As you know, I told you before that the pheasants has damaged my crop of wheat. You promised to look into the matter, but not hearing from you I enclose you a bill for the damage, which is very reasonable. Please let me know if you intend to allow it or not.

"I am,
"Yours very truly,
"T. DAVIES.

"Dudley W. Drummond, Esq."

Then the bill enclosed is:—

"March 3rd, 1894.

"£50 0 0

"Sir James H. W. Drummond, Bart., Edwinsford,
"to T. Davies, Tynycwm.

"For loss of crop of wheat six acres, in consequence of damage done by pheasants.

"£50 0 0."

The next letter is:—

"Tynycwm, Llansawel, Llandilo,
"March 8th, 1894.

"I WANT you to understand me plainly that I do not want any unpleasantness to take place between us, but I will have my rights. Your stating in your letter about sufficient proofs that the loss was made by game. What you mean by sufficient proof? I got four men that will swear seeing from 60 to 70 pheasants on the field day after day. I can prove before any judge that it was made entirely by pheasants, by your statement in your letter that you can prove that the damage was not made by pheasants, then it is useless for us to argue the case, and I can see plainly that we must fight it out before better men than ourselves. You are stating about your personal survey of the field on the 4th of August, and that was not more than ½ an acre as being then what a mistake you made. I can bring dozen people to prove that not nearly ¼ of a crop was on the best part of the field. I know how many field mows was on it, and how many bushels of wheat I have thrashed of it, and what quantity of straw I had, and what a loss it is to be without the straw itself this year. I can't make out the figures in the same light as you do about the quantity the field ought to yield, you mention about the slopes of the Warren he is the best I got on the farm. I have carefully made out the manual and team labour, cost of lime, seed, and nitre of soda, rent, rates, &c., and what I have received off the field and what I ought to receive, which I think is very reasonable. I am willing for you to find a man, I will find the other, and if them two could not agree for them to find the third, and for yourself and me to be willing as to what amount they will arrive at. Please drop me a line to say whether you agree on these terms or not; if not, that I may take further steps in the matter.

"I am,

"Yours truly,

"T. Davies.

"To D. W. Drummond, Esq."

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,112. What was the claim? The claim was 50*l.* for 6 acres, was it not?—Yes.

Chairman.

40,112A. Then the next is:—

"Tynycwm, Llansawel, Llandilo,

Dear Sir, March 23rd, 1894.

"I was away last Thursday or would have called at your office, I am glad that you are willing that the dispute referring damage done by pheasants to my wheat crop should be settled by arbitrators, please mention what day you will fix for the men to meet that they will hear the proofs I got that the damage was done by pheasants. I got my man ready. You mention in your letter that the damage was done by rabbits, but you are mistaken, all the rabbits nearly were destroyed the winter previous to your survey of the field, the crop was damaged by the pheasants when the wheat was budding out, and I told Sir James of it then, and his keeper has been sending them away from the field many mornings. Hope to hear from you soon about the fixing of the day.

"I am,

"Yours truly,

T. Davies."

The beginning of the correspondence is February 26th, and the last letter is 31st March.

Chairman.

40,113. What is the present state of the negotiations with regard to this 50*l.*? Was the sum paid?—No.

40,114. Was any of it paid?—No.

Chairman—continued.

40,115. Has it been refused?—This is the last letter I had from him referring to the case.

40,116. I only wanted to know whether the negotiations were still going on?—Yes, I had a letter from him on the 7th April.

40,117. Up to the present moment nothing has been done, and the question is not settled?—Not settled.

40,118. Did the valuers go over the ground?—No, I had my men ready.

Lord Kenyon.

40,119. How many rabbits did you kill on that field or adjacent to that field?—I am killing and keeping the rabbits down, although they are flowing in sometimes from Sir James' covers.

40,120. Do you know how many you have killed. Could not you say at all?—Do you mean in that field?

40,121. Yes?—No, because there are holes all round, and they keep coming in.

40,122. But can you say how many you have killed since the corn has come up—since the spring?—No, I cannot; very likely we have killed all over the farm 100 rabbits.

40,123. Are there any wood pigeons in the district?—Yes.

40,124. Have you seen them on the farm at all?—Oh, yes, I have seen them sometimes there.

40,125. They do a lot of damage, do they not?—Yes, they do. You can see the damage by the pheasants when the wheat was budding out; we saved it till then and then they spoilt it at once.

Chairman.

40,126. There are some other letters that had better be read in order to get them on the minutes:—

"Cawdor Estate Office, Ferryside,

Dear Sir, 5th March 1894.

"Your letter of the 3rd instant is to hand this morning enclosing claim for 50*l.* for alleged damage done by game. When you reduce your claim to reasonable proportions and submit me satisfactory proof (for which I have asked you more than once) that you suffered damage from pheasants at all, which as far as I can prove at present is not the case, then I will gladly give the matter my most careful attention and grant you the fullest compensation you deserve. From my personal survey of the field on the 4th August last, there certainly was not more than half an acre where the crop could be described as even being thin, but assuming for your purpose that there was no crop on this portion at all, it would according to your figures represent a loss to you of 50*l.*, that is to say, that you make a nett profit of 100*l.* an acre from growing wheat, and from a six acre field that you clear in an exceptionally bad year the amount of over four years rent of your whole farm. It is interesting to see, that while on the finest wheat lands in England this crop can barely be made to pay the cost of production, that on the slopes of the Warren you can make so satisfactory a profit out of it.

"Yours truly,
"D. W. DRUMMOND.

"Mr. Thos. Davis,
"Tynycwm,
"Llansawel,
"Llandilo."

Then there is another:—

"Cawdor Estate Office, Ferryside,
"DEAR SIR, 12th March 1894.

"YOURS of 8th instant. There is no cause for any unpleasantness in the matter that I am aware of. What I mean by sufficient proof is, that before I can pay any sum of estate money which I hold in trust in discharge of such a claim as you are making, I must have clear and conclusive proof that such loss was caused by excess of winged game on the land, and an account showing the estimated destruction of the crop: and further, proof that the damage was not occasioned by rabbits, which on the occasion of my inspection, were swarming in the fields. You must see that this is only reasonable. As, however, you seem to think there is no prospect of arranging the matter between ourselves, I am quite prepared to submit the whole question without prejudice to arbitration and to accept our liability in the matter if it can be sustained.

"Your letter of the 10th inst.: I asked you call at my Edwinsford office when you can see your agreement at any time, but you did not do so. I presume you were handed a counterpart copy in the usual way when you took the farm? I will instruct my clerk to show you the agreement whenever you like to call and probably I shall be at the office myself on Thursday morning next.

"Yours truly,
"D. W. DRUMMOND.

"Mr. T. Davies,
"Tynycwm Farm,
"Llansawel."

Have you ever been given a copy of the agreement?—No.

40,127. Is it a custom on this estate?—Some tenants do anyhow. There is one there now with you.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,128. Did you call as suggested in that last letter?—No, I was away on Thursday, and I would acknowledge it in one of the letters I sent to him when I was away.

Chairman.

40,129. These are questions by Mr. Vincent: "What was the date of this affair of the warren?" That was about taking the stones from the quarry?—What year was it?

Chairman—continued.

40,130. Yes, what is the date?—1884 was the year.

40,131. "Who was the agent who said you grumbled"?—The present agent, Mr. Dudley Drummond.

40,132. "As a fact did not the present agent "tell you you might have the agreement from the office whenever you liked"?—That is in the letter that is put in. I do not think that need be asked.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,133. May I ask a question arising out of your answer to me? This is the agreement that you said had been put in?—Yes, I think so.

40,134. Is yours the same?—I do not know.

40,135. This is printed?—Yes, very likely it is the same.

40,136. You answered, I think, to me, that the thatch would be on the landlord?—Yes, that is what my father told me over and over again.

40,137. The terms here are that the tenant shall and will put and keep in substantial repair the house and buildings, and so on?—Yes, that is right, as far as the agreement goes, but although the agreement is signed it is a dead letter between them; neither of the parties looks into it at all. It is more a taking by word of mouth than by agreement.

40,138. Do you know if Sir James Drummond made any announcement that the tenants were at perfect liberty to come and give evidence?—No, I never heard it because I knew he was dead against it. The agent was for the tenants to come, but Sir James was not. He was against it very much. I had a talk with Mr. Dudley Drummond and he told me he would be very glad if all his tenants came on.

Lord Kenyon.

40,139. Who said that?—Mr. Dudley Drummond, the agent, but Sir James was against it.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,140. How many times do you consider a farmer must make his rent to get two ends to meet?—He ought to make it three times.

40,141. Do you think three times will do at the present rate of wages?—No, I do not think it will do.

40,142. Rather more?—Rather more, yes, I am paying this year 110*l.* on my own farm in wages.

40,143. I should like to confirm what you have said with regard to the morality of the district. I will read this extract from the Report made by Mr. Lleufer Thomas to the Royal Commission on Labour. "It is this custom of night courting "which is at the very root of all the charges of "immorality which are so frequently brought "against the Welsh people, who, however, in spite "of this ugly custom compare not unfavourably "with the inhabitants of other parts of the "kingdom. It is, for instance, a prevailing idea "that the number of illegitimate children born

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

" in the rural districts of Wales, is above the " average for similar districts in England, but " statistics do not support this view. I have " already pointed out that for the Narberth " Union the proportion of illegitimate children " born is 1·1 in every 1,000 persons living, as " compared with 1·3 for England and Wales." That confirms what you said that notwithstanding the bad accommodation the morals are better ?—Thank you.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. JOHN JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

40,144. I believe you are a tenant upon the Drummond estate, the same estate as the last witness ?—Yes.

40,145. Has this statement been read to you, is it your evidence, and is it correct ?—Yes. I shall be able to understand it in English, if I am allowed to answer the questions in Welsh.

40,146. We will try and give you every possible facility ?—Thank you, my Lord.

40,147. What is your address ?—Penlan, Llansawel.

40,148. How far is that from here ?—About half a mile. It is in sight.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

EVIDENCE OF JOHN JONES,

Tenant Farmer, Penlan, Llansawel.

PERSONAL.—I took Penlan, a farm belonging to Sir James Drummond, in the year 1877, and got notice in the following March, and they took away 16 acres of land—the best I had for a sheep walk—and no allowance was made in the rent. My taking of the said farm was on condition that I was to have everything in repair, and, out of the 100 acres I had of wet land, I was to have a field every year to be drained. I only got two small plots done in the course of 17 years. The out-kitchen was built there. The carriage of material for the foundation (which amounted to 300 loads), and the materials for the building, were carried from a distance by me. The cow-house, stable, and chaff-room were rebuilt, and the barn repaired. All the haulage in every case was done by me free of cost. The rent is very high, and my children work at home. All the money goes to meet the rent, and nothing is left to pay the children for their service. The farm is improved by reason of my having children to work hard on the farm. The game makes tremendous damage. Before I can sow a field, I am obliged to put wire netting all round it, and parts of it are eaten up after all. The cost of wire netting now in hand is 10*l.* In 1887 considerable damage was done to 9 acres of wheat, the seed of which I did not receive after all the labour to put it up for crops, and 3 acres of oats all in the same field. I sent in my claim for 60*l.*, which was very reasonable, for loss of crops on 12 acres of land. I only received 5*l.*, and I am troubled every year with the game through being close to the covers. It is impossible to keep down the rabbits, because the farm adjoins the landlord's covers. I could not live here and meet the rent if it was not that I am paying money out of profit I make out of my own farm, and being blessed with sober and striving children. I was bred and born on the estate, and my daughter married last year, who was 30 years old. I went to my landlord, wishing him to give me one of the two farms which were free at the time; but instead of encouraging me by giving me the farm, he let them to strangers. The fences of the covers are in a rotten condition. I cannot keep the animals on the farm. No allowance is made for the carriage of timber.

Allowance made in 1888, 10*l.* per cent.
Allowance made in 1887, 10*l.* per cent on half year.
Allowance made in 1886, 10*l.* per cent. on half year.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,149. No allowance has been made since ?—Yes, we have had some since.

40,150. The 10 per cent. continues, then ?—It has not continued every year since 1886, but it is so now.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,151. Was the land that was taken from Penlan to form a sheep-walk added to another farm ?—No, to make a warren for the landlord. See 42,264.

40,152 For the purposes of a rabbit warren, but you say in your statement for the purposes of a sheep walk ?—It was the best sheep walk I had taken away, for making a warren.

40,153. It is not very plain as it appears in your statement: "They took away 16 acres of " land, the best I had for a sheep walk" ?—I mean it is the best 16 acres that I had as a sheep walk, and that it was taken away and made into a warren.

40,154. I understand: and no allowance was made for it. Did you apply to your landlord to have the remainder of the farm drained during the 17 years ?—Yes, many times.

40,155. What was the answer you got ?—The last agent said yes, if I consented to pay 5 per cent.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,156. Whereas you hold that you were paying a rent to cover the drainage of a field every year. Is that so?—I had two plots drained but the condition was that I should have a field every year drained.

40,157. So that really your landlord was breaking his contract with you?—Yes, his agreement by word of mouth.

40,158. There was no written agreement with respect to the drainage?—No, verbal.

40,159. Does this still go on: are you obliged to place a wire around every field of corn that you sow still?—No, not every field, but only those fields that are near the covers.

40,160. Are you troubled by hares and rabbits?—Yes, and birds. They can be seen there now, if you would only come up.

40,161. Who valued the damage at 60*l.*?—I myself.

40,162. Did the landlord send anybody to value the damage before paying the 5*l.*?—No.

40,163. You say, "I could not live here and meet the rent if it was not that I am paying "money out of profit that I make out of my "own farm." Have you a bit of property of your own?—Some excuse for a farm—some apology of a thing.

40,164. What is the size of it?—Nearly 40 acres.

40,165. And the rent of that farm goes to pay for the one that you occupy?—Yes, so much as can be.

40,166. How long has this been going on?—It has been tight on me from the beginning, but it has been worse of late years.

40,167. Is the condition of the farmers generally in your district such that unless people have private sources they must be getting poorer?—I cannot say about that, but I know is so with myself.

40,168. Have you as full stock as usual?—Yes, I have too much.

40,169. What is the reason that you keep too much—is it that you cannot sell them?—It is not I who keep them. My landlord keeps game there.

40,170. Does not Sir James Drummond, as a rule, let his farms to the nearest relative of the tenants; for instance, would he not give some sort of consideration to the children of a tenant of another farm, if he is letting a farm?—It was a custom with him to do so, before this rumour about the Land Commission came.

40,171. Do you think he has altered his character since the Commission was appointed?—Yes, to a certain extent, at all events, towards me, in some degree.

40,172. Has he altered in his conduct towards his tenants generally?—I cannot say. I do not know except for myself.

40,173. Have you taken any prominent part in collecting evidence, and so on?—No, but I have been several times at the meetings.

40,174. Do you think that Sir James Drummond knows that you attend the meetings?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,175. What did he say to you?—He told me, "That is the treatment you as tenants deal "out to me."

40,176. He did not threaten you in any way?—Oh, no.

40,177. Did he in any way allow you to think that he, Sir James Drummond, would prefer your not coming to give evidence before the Land Commission?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,178. You took the farm in 1877?—Yes.

40,179. Was it in March 1877?—No, in September.

40,180. Then was it within six months that you got the notice to quit, or give up the 16 acres of land?—Yes, they were going to value the place.

40,181. If you took it in September 1877 is it not very curious that a re-valuation should take place within six months?—The whole estate was being valued; Sir James was attaining his majority.

40,182. Then the conditions as to draining, and so on, were the new conditions of taking the farm in 1878?—They were in both; they were in the agreement when I went there.

40,183. There was nothing but a verbal agreement probably?—Yes, verbal.

40,184. Did you apply to have done what you thought you ought to have done?—Yes, many times.

40,185. And was the answer that there was a dispute about what the conditions were?—They did not know what the first agent did.

40,186. So that it was a misunderstanding, owing to a verbal agreement?—Yes, that is our custom; we did not get it on a written agreement, but by word of mouth.

40,187. It was not the non-performance of a contract, but the misunderstanding of what the contract was, I take it?—No, they knew what the first agent had promised.

40,188. Did they know it from your statement?—I do not believe that the first agent did not say so, or did not tell them so.

40,189. You think that they knew it, but you were not told that they knew it?—Yes, that is so.

Mr. Grove.

40,190. Those conditions were the usual conditions on the estate, were they not?—Yes.

40,191. When you had 5*l.* for damage by game and claimed 60*l.*, were you satisfied with 5*l.*?—No, indeed.

40,192. What made you accept 5*l.* then?—I preferred accepting 5*l.* than going to fight with my landlord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,193. Are you still in the same place?—Yes.

40,194. What is the acreage of it?—I cannot say for certain, but it is between 200 and 250 acres.

40,195. What is the rent?—182*l*.

40,196. It is a bigger place than I thought. Is it at the same rent now as when you took it? No, there is a reduction of 1*l*.

40,197. And has 16 acres gone from the place since the first year in which you took it?—Yes; the best land for the sheep.

40,198. Did you sign any agreement when you went in?—Yes.

40,199. Have you a copy of that agreement?—Yes, I have it, but I have not got it with me now.

40,200. Would that agreement quote the full acreage, or the acreage after the 16 acres had been taken away?—The 16 acres is in the agreement, and has not been taken out of it, and 10 acres of woodland is in it still.

40,201. Who paid for the wire netting that you used on the farm?—Myself.

40,202. Has the landlord given you any?—I had about two bundles, about 100 yards.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,203. I understood in answer to my question that the agreement was a verbal one on your entering the farm?—Verbal when actually taken, the agreement came afterwards.

40,204. Then I would ask, are these conditions about the draining of the field contained in the written agreement?—We have to carry everything towards the houses when they are being built, which is not in the agreement.

40,205. Yes, but with regard to these questions about the field every year to be drained; if that was not in the written agreement, what evidence have you that it was acceded to? It was merely talked about, but why should it not have been put in the written agreement?—They did drain part of two fields.

40,206. Yes, but that was not an answer to my question; my question was, if there was a stipulation that a field every year was to be drained, why was it not inserted in the agreement?—I cannot say; it may have been my fault or it may have been the agent's fault, but it has not been done. There are many things in the agreement I do not understand at all if I cannot get it in Welsh.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,207. You say "I cannot keep the animals on the farm." Why is that?—Because the fencing is bad about the covers.

40,208. They break over into the covers?—Yes, I am very close to the cover.

40,209. And it is a source of annoyance?—And cost to tenants every year.

40,210. That is a landlord's duty to fence the covers of course?—Yes, but he has not been doing it for years.

40,211. Has his attention been called to the state of the fences?—Yes, many times.

40,212. What was the reply you got?—He says he will do it next year, and next year, every year.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,213. What is the inconvenience that the tenant would suffer by the cattle breaking over into the cover?—Because they go to other fields and it puts us to the inconvenience of going after them.

40,214. You say, "No allowance is made for "the carriage of timber." Has there been any timber felled on your farm?—Yes.

40,215. Has any damage been done?—Yes.

40,216. Did you get any allowance for it?—No; I did not get the tops; I had to pay for them. I had to pay 32*s*. and mend the gaps after them.

40,217. Does every tenant have to do that?—I cannot say.

40,218. Do you know of any cases where any compensation has been paid for damage done by timber?—No, I do not know. There is a reservation in the agreement.

40,219. Is there no provision in the agreement with regard to compensation for damage?—They have not caused a tremendous loss on my land as they have on others hitherto, but still they have made a loss to some extent.

Chairman.

40,220. Questions by Mr. Vincent: "Do you "let your own farm or keep it in hand"?—In my own hands, but a man lives in the house and looks after my cattle, and keeps three or four cows.

40,221. "Are the buildings on your own farm "in good conditition"?—Well, they are about as fair as all these landlords have them.

40,222. "Was not your agreement in fact "written, and not verbal"?—Yes, the agreement with the agent was in writing, but I have not seen my landlord.

40,223. "Was not the promise verbal, and "simply to drain, but not to drain every year"?—No, the promise was to drain a field every year. There was so much need of draining. I had from 100 to 150 acres of wet land.

40,224. "Is not your holding the one which "includes the mill spoken of this morning"?—Yes, my Lord.

Chairman.

You have visited this place, Sir John?

Sir John Llewelyn.

Yes, and some of the other Commissioners too. Mr. Brynmor Jones has been there.

Chairman.

In what condition did you find it?

Sir John Llewelyn.

I should say very bad. There are very few indeed so bad that I have seen.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,225. It is possible there may be a misunderstanding, whether the mill really belonged to Sir James Drummond, or whether it belongs to the tenant?—To Sir James Drummond. I do not quite understand the question.

Sir John Llewelyn.

That is a question with regard to the terms of the agreement that he signed, as to whether the repairs were upon the tenant or upon the landlord. That question would be properly answered by the agreement itself?

Chairman.

Yes, I think so. Have you the agreement?

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,226. That is a point which would be clearly expressed in the agreement?—No, I have not got the agreement.

40,227. Upon whom are the repairs; upon the landlord or upon the tenant?—The agreement has been handed in.

Chairman.

40,228. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Did not the agent in letting you the farm "tell you that he would not re-build the "mill or the cottage adjoining it"?—No. The agent is by me here, but I had to keep them in repair—and better repair than I had them, and I built a pigstye there myself, and I only had zinc for it.

40,229. "Is not that cottage and mill sub-let "by you"?—Yes, my Lord.

40,230. "Do you not pay for the cottage, mill, and 6 acres 22*l.* 11*s.*"?—No, I take them altogether. They are part of the 182*l.* It used to be let before I had it at 65*l.*, but I let it at 40*l.*, and it is the same rent since I have been there.

Chairman—continued.

40,231. I should like that to be clearly understood. Do you take the mill as part of the whole tenancy?—Yes.

40,232. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Do you charge 40*l.* for this mill, cottage, and 6 "acres?"—Yes, but it was 65*l.* before.

40,233. It was 65*l.* before, and you charge 40*l.* now?—Yes, 65*l.* before I had it, and 40*l.* now. I do not say it was 65*l.* immediately before I had it.

40,234. "Has not Sir James Drummond assisted you to get a son of yours into a bank"?—Yes, but he had to pass his examination himself.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,235. I will put this agreement into your hand and ask you whether that is your agreement? (handing agreement to witness).—It is something very like it.

40,236. You will see somebody's signature at the end—"John Jones." I only want to know whether it is yours?—Yes, it is.

40,237. Would you point out to us the fields, the 16 acres, which you say are still in this agreement, although they are not in your hands—the 16 acre farm?—The warren is No. 78, and there are three acres of woodland in one place, and two in another place; there are altogether 10 acres of woodland shown there.

40,238. Are the 16 acres that are spoken of in your evidence there?—That is No. 98.

40,239. Sixteen acres, 2 roods, and 27 perches of that has been taken from the farm?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,240. According to your agreement you have to keep in good, substantial, and tenantable repair all houses, buildings, gates, and so on. Do you consider that that includes the mill?—Yes, if I had them in repair, but the materials were to be supplied by the landlord.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Dudley Williams Drummond called and examined.

Chairman.

40,241. You are agent for the Cawdor, Edwinsford, and Derllys estates, Carmarthenshire; Inspector under the Land Improvement Acts of the Board of Agriculture; have studied agriculture from youth; have had special education at an Agricultural College, and subsequently in a large estate office; and have studied applied mathematics for the same object at the University. I understand the Edwinsford and Derllys, and partially the Cawdor estates, consist of properties scattered in 39 parishes. What is the acreage?—The Edwinsford estate, 10,700 acres; the Derllys estate, 3,300 acres; and the Cawdor estate, 50,000 acres.

Chairman—continued.

40,242. As regards manors, have you anything to say?—The Cawdor estate is situated in some 20 different manors of various extents. I have a list of them, but I do not know whether it is necessary to put them in. The majority of Lord Cawdor's manors were granted by a charter of Charles the 1st in 1630. Court leets are, in some cases, held annually; in others every two or three years; and in many none are held. Steward and deputy-steward, howards and jurymen are the usual officers of the manor.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,243. We call them haywards?—They are called "howards" generally in our minutes. I do not know whether it would interest any of the members of the Commission, but I have some presentments of over 200 years ago here. (The witness handed in presentments.) They refer to some matters that were given in evidence yesterday about mortuary fines and fines on marriage and things of that kind.

Chairman.

40,244. Has any land been enclosed recently?—There has been none in this district since Pencarreg Mountain in 1850.

40,245. Has there been any on the Cawdor estate?—Llangeler Mountain in 1873.

40,246. As regards sheep runs, have you anything to say?—There is a large extent of hill lands in the Llandilo and Llandovery districts under sheep which is unadaptable for any other purpose. Occupiers of adjacent farms have pasture rights without stint.

40,247. When is your date of entry?—Michaelmas.

40,248. And the tenancies are yearly tenancies?—From year to year.

40,249. Have you had many changes on these estates?—I have observed no difference in proportion of changes of tenancy now to formerly. In most cases the tenancies have continued in the same family for generations. Changes are occasionally inevitable by reason of deaths of the sole representatives or by tenants seeking larger and better farms. Even bankrupts are usually retained and allowed to let out their grazing lands (which they do at an enormous profit) till they are above water again.

40,250. Do you give compensation when necessary?—Yes, invariably. Does your question with regard to compensation refer to damage to timber cutting and that sort of thing, or at the termination of the tenancy?

40,251. You give compensation whenever you think it is necessary; I think that is sufficient?—Yes.

40,252. Have you an agreement which you can hand in?—I think you have already had the agreement of the estates.

40,253. Is that agreement universal on the three estates you manage?—On the Cawdor estate I have not any agreement at all. On the Edwinsford and Derllys estate those are the only agreements that are existing. Personally, I have not granted any agreements since I have had the management of the estates.

40,254. What is the average rent on the two great estates; can you give us that?—There are one or two matters before that, my Lord; I do not know whether I might go into them.

Chairman—continued.

40,255. I will just pass those by, if you please; we have had a great deal of the same sort of evidence, and it is no use going through it over and over again. Have you anything to say about the average rent of land?—It is difficult to say what the average rents of land in the district are, as the soils, subsoils, and situations in this county are so varied. I have let lands from 2*s.* to 20*s.* per acre. The average farm rents on the Edwinsford estate are about 11*s.* per acre, and I give instances of typical upland and lowland farms, namely, Bronffin, an upland farm in the parish of Caio, of 431 acres, let at a rent of 130*l.*, which is an average of 6*s.* per acre; Tynycwm, a lowland farm of 159 acres, let at a rent of 136*l.*, which is an average of 17*s.* 3*d.* per acre; Llewelau mawr, an upland farm of 434 acres, let at a rent of 70*l.*, the average rent per acre being 3*s.* 2*d.*; and Glanravonddu ganol, a lowland farm of 246 acres, let at a rent of 232*l.*, the average per acre being 18*s.* 9*d.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,256. Is there much difference in the application for those farms as they become vacant? Which are the most popular?—Well, they have not been vacant in my time with the exception of Llewelau mawr, which is rather a popular farm, although it is an upland farm. Most of the tenants who have been there in the past have made a good deal of money there. The last tenant was there some 10 or 12 years, and he purchased a farm in this parish which he gave 1,100*l.* for.

40,257. Can you say which of the two classes of farms are most profitable to sitting tenants. On which class of farms are they doing best?—It is rather difficult to answer that.

40,258. Do you let the farms by tender?—I have never let a farm by tender, and have often refused offers which I considered in excess of the value of the land. I would say such a system would be prejudicial to the interests of both parties, and I would never let a farm on such terms.

40,259. What do you say with regard to revaluations, if any?—It is usually the custom for estates to be revalued on a fresh succession. The Cawdor estates were valued in 1862. The Edwinsford on succession in the same year, and subsequently on succession in 1878 the result being a slight increase; the present rental being on the same tenements only about 100*l.* in excess of the 1862 valuation of the Edwinsford estate.

40,260. Can you tell us anything about the abatements. Have you any permanent reductions on the property?—Since 1890 I have made a few permanent reductions on the Edwinsford estate amounting to something like 45*l.* to 50*l.*

Chairman.

40,261. Is that on the whole estate?—Yes, on various holdings since 1890.

40,262. Is that with reference to one estate only?—That is with reference to the Edwins-

Chairman—continued.

ford estate. Occasionally reductions of the same nature are made on the Cawdor estate. With reference to the remittances, I think my brother Sir James, was the first landlord in this county who gave an abatement at all. That was at the Michaelmas rent 1879, off which he gave 10 per cent. Michaelmas 1885 was the next, and I will read a table of reductions given, which are as follows:—

	Edwinsford.	Derllys.	Cawdor.
Michaelmas, 1885	15 per cent.	20 per cent.	—
Lady Day, 1886	10 „	10 „	15 per cent.
Michaelmas, 1886	10 „	10 „	15 „

Michaelmas, 1887	10 „	15 per cent.	15 „
Lady Day, 1888	10 „	10 „	15 „
Michaelmas, 1888	10 „	10 „	15 „
„ 1891	—	—	Tithe allowed.
Lady Day, 1892	10 per cent.	Tithe allowed.	„
Michaelmas, 1892	10 „	10 per cent.	„
Lady Day, 1893	15 „	15 „	10 per cent. and tithes.
Michaelmas, 1893	10 „	10 „	„

40,264. Do you think the preferential claim beneficial to tenants or not?—I think it gives the tenants the advantage of several months credit for their rents (which otherwise would be demanded when due or security demanded by the tenant before entering), and also freedom from other restrictions and arrangements which landlords otherwise would be obliged to enter into for their own protection.

Chairman—continued.

40,265. Who pays the tithe and the income tax?—Tithe and income tax are paid by the owner.

40,266. The land tax, chief rent, and the rates are paid by whom?—By the occupier.

40,267. I suppose the rates have gone up?—Yes, very considerably.

40,268. And they are paid by the occupier?—Yes.

40,269. Will you give us the size of the farms, if you please?—Generally speaking, in this district they are from 50 to 200 acres. It is a very difficult question to answer. They are of every acreage.

40,270. There is no consolidation?—There are not many cases of consolidation and when carried out they have been made on the grounds of the unsuitability of the existing buildings to modern requirements and greater adaptability by the adjoining farmer for managing the land.

40,271. Do you permit sub-letting to any great extent?—Sub-letting by the tenants has been and is being carried out to a considerable and dangerous extent, cottages let with farms being converted into small holdings and being sub-let by the tenants at from 40 to 60 per cent. increased rent over and above what the landlord is receiving. The occupiers are frequently in addition bound to work for the tenant when required in the summer and are not employed in winter and great injustice and rackrenting is the result. I believe if this estate was in the hands of the tenant farmers the rental would be half as much again as it is, and yet the occupiers would live as well as they do now and possibly complain less. This is proved by the figures at which land is sub-let. Those figures I would like to hand in.

40,272. You had better put them in, I think.

The witness handed in the following table:—

PARTICULARS of COTTAGES and LAND, part of PENLAN farm, sub-let by tenant.

These are sub-lettings on the farm of Penlan. Llansawel Mill, which is let by the landlord at 24*s.* an acre, is sub-let by the tenant at 83*s.* 6*d.*

Mr. Grove.

40,273. What portion of that, may I ask, is sub-let?—That was Llansawel Mill and land.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,274. Is that calculated on the whole?—That is taken from the valuation on which the rent of the farm is assessed.

40,275. So that you calculated it upon the acreage of the whole farm in one instance?—No, the individual fields.

40,276. Field by field?—Yes; there is a field-to-field valuation on the estate, and I have every identical field with the Ordnance Survey acreage and the numbers. Garnwen, on the same farm, is sub let, and the rent received by the landlord is 21*s.* 3*d.* an acre, and it is sub-let at 32*s.* 6*d.* Llwyncelin, on the same farm, rent per acre received by the landlord 18*s.* 6*d.*, and the amount at which it is sub-let is 31*s.* per acre. Then Garnwen, and Llwyncelin, and the smith's forge are sub-let, and the amount at which they were let by the landlord was 5*l.* 10*s.*, the amount at which they are sub-let by the tenant being 7*l.* 10*s.* Altogether the tenant of Penlan sub-lets to the amount of 77*l.* 15*s.* out of his annual rent, which is 182*l.*

40,277. I only want to get this point cleared up as we go along. Where you take the amount received by the landlord, is that the whole acreage divided by the rent?—No.

40,278. They are selected pieces?—They are selected pieces.

40,279. Are they the same acreage exactly—the piece that you are speaking of is let by the landlord and that is afterwards sub-let?—Yes, they are identically the same pieces. In our valuation each field has a separate valuation. I have selected the fields sub-let out of the Ordnance map, and I have taken these at the same figure as let to tenant as shown in valuation.

40,280. Then that is fair. Otherwise it would not be fair?—That is so. Then there is the same sort of thing going on in the parish of Talley. I am taking three instances from the three parishes in which the estate is situated. On the farm of Glanyrafonddu-ganol, Troedyrhiwgeingen is let by the landlord at 20*s.* per acre, or rather, I should say, that the annual rent at which the landlord lets to the tenant is 11*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, and the amount at which it is sub-let is 21*l.* Then Penrheolwen, the amount at which it is rented by the landlord is 9*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*, and the amount at which it is sub-let is 19*l.* Then Cwmdu Inn and land is rented by the landlord at 6*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, and it is sub-let by the tenant at 9*l.* 15*s.* The Half-way House, part of Y Ddolfelen, is let by the landlord at 1*l.* 16*s.*, and sub-let by the tenant at 4*l.* 5*s.* The total amount at which these are let by the landlord is 29*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.*, and they are sub-let by the tenant at 54*l.* The average per acre at which the landlord rents it is 18*s.*, and the amount at which it is sub-let is 33*s.* 4*d.* per acre. There are other particulars as to the parish of Caio; I do not know whether I might put them in; they are very short. This is as to the farm of Groes-fawr. The amount at which Groes-fawr and Groes-fach are let by the landlord is 7*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, and the amount at which they are sub-let by the tenant is 15*l.*, that is to say, they are rented by the landlord at 16*s.* 10*d.* per acre and sub-let by the tenant at 34*s.* 8*d.* I may say, my Lord, that I have had a great many complaints from the sub-tenants on these matters, and I think it is extraordinary that they can live at the rents that they are paying while the tenants complain so much when they are only paying us perhaps half of what they are charging to their sub-tenants. 40,281. Which can stand the depression best, the large or the small owners. Do you think that the large occupiers feel the depression most. We have had evidence given to us both ways with regard to that?—The large occupier would feel the depression the worst, being a larger employer of labour and capital.

40,282. What do you think of the cultivation in this part of the world?—Generally speaking the state of cultivation is very poor (there being of course notable exceptions among the better class of tenantry). The arable land is seldom half sufficiently manured or cultivated and left very foul and a great deal of productive power wasted. The nature of farming pursued is mixed, and more especially dairying and the raising of young stock for the English feeding lands. No proper rotation of cropping is carried out.

40,283. I suppose there is a good deal of arable land laid down to grass?—Yes, there has been a good deal of arable land laid down to grass.

40,284. At whose expense has that been done?—At the tenant's expense in nearly every instance.

40,285. The landlord doing nothing?—The landlord doing nothing, as a rule.

40,286. What improvements do you do for the tenants?—The landlord's improvements are buildings and repairs of every kind, supplying gates and posts, supplying pipes and stones for drainage, supplying (in certain cases) lime or artificial manure to needy tenants, supplying sometimes whole or part of thatching and straw which is supposed to be the duty of the tenant. All the above are free of charge.

40,287. What do the tenants do, the haulage?—The tenants supply haulage of building material and do drainage labour.

40,288. Have you any instances of contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No; only out of the Act of 1875; not out of the Act of 1883; that Act is binding in every detail.

40,289. What is the custom of the country?—As regards outgoing tenants?

40,290. Yes?—Allowances to outgoing tenants in respect of growing crops is that growing crops are almost invariably sold by auction by the out-going tenant. If not are taken over by the incomer at valuation. Tillages and seeds are taken over by valuation. Manure is taken over by valuation, and the farm produce sold by auction.

40,291. Then with regard to the game. Is there much damage complained of in this neighbourhood upon your estates?—With regard to game preserving, rabbits and hares are not preserved except on the Home Farm and a warren enclosed by an 8′ wall. Other game is for the most part preserved, but not to a great extent, except in the neighbourhood of Home Farm covers, and in some districts on the estate not at all and it is given to the tenants free.

40,292. I suppose you complain of the railway rates?—Railway rates affect the carriage and disposal of agricultural produce adversely. We should at least be put on equal terms with the foreign producer, I think. I have certain particulars of railway rates. I do not know whether it is necessary to mention them.

40,293. No, it is hardly necessary. Mr. Grove will make a note of that point?—I calculated what the price of carriage of various produce to London was.

40,294. Do you consider the tenant farmers are a hard-working lot of people?—Yes, I do.

40,295. Do their wives work hard and their children also?—Yes.

40,296. And their children's labour helps to pay the rent?—Yes.

40,297. Then I do not think I need ask you about labourers' lodgings and their wages. We have heard all about that, and that the accommodation is not satisfactory. When did the depression begin in this part of the world?—Early in 1885, and it was continued till 1888. It commenced again in 1891, and has since continued. The principal causes of the depression in my opinion are bad seasons, severe foreign competition in grain and stock, increase of rates and wages, and appreciation of gold.

40,298. Have you any remedies which you wish to suggest?—I would suggest that more attention should be paid to the breeding of stock and improved cultivation, especially as regards making and retaining the constituents of manure and general tillage Universal free trade or fair trade. Labelling of foreign meat and produce as such. Reduction of railway rates. Equalisation of local rates over real and personal property. Assessment of income tax on nett profits. Land tax collected locally to be credited to local rates. Compulsory registration of title at reasonable fees. Cheaper system of transfer of land. Light railways for conveyance of manures, produce, &c.

40,299. Then as regards the relations between the landlords and tenants, what do you consider with regard to them?—I can only say, my Lord, that hitherto the relations have been very friendly indeed. I must say that to-day I am somewhat surprised at the character of the evidence that has come before the Commission. I can only say that I am rather surprised that in the parish in which I was born there should be so many complaints of the Edwinsford Estate. I do not think that is the general impression in other parts of the county with regard to it.

40,300. I daresay there are two or three statements which have been made which you would like to rebut?—Yes, I should. I can only say that if I am responsible for the state of affairs that has been described this morning, I do not know how ever I can have been appointed to the posts I now hold.

40,301. There are some specific statements which, no doubt, you would like to speak to later. Then what have you to state about repairs and improvements?—So far as I can calculate, during my management of the Edwinsford estates, which dates from 1890, fully 10 per cent. of the gross rental has been expended in building, draining, allowances of lime to needy tenants, in addition to some 70*l.* to 80*l.* worth of gates and posts supplied to the tenants every year, on none of which has any interest been charged. On the Derllys Estate the amount has been equal to about 7½ per cent. of the gross rental. On the Cawdor estates this amount is as much as 18 per cent. on the gross rental.

40,302. I must trouble you with a question or two. I want to ask you with regard to this mill. I understood you to say that you let the mill and cottage to Mr. John Jones for 22*l.* 11*s.*?—That is so.

40,303. Is that in this agreement?—I believe it is, my Lord.

40,304. Will you just see if that is in the agreement?—I do not know whether it is separately specified here.

40,305. Is it in the agreement or is it not?—Yes, it is, my Lord.

40,306. Is the rent of it stated as 22*l.* 11*s.*?—No, the mill is put separately there. I think I can explain: I took my figures from the valuation on which the rent is fixed, which I can hand in.

40,307. But I understand from this that the numbers marked on the map from 50 to 106 are put in at the gross total of 287 acres, 1 rood, 30 perches?—Yes.

40,308. Where are the particulars of what this is let at. I think they are given altogether—"at a yearly rent of 183*l.*"?—Quite so; but this total of that letting is derived from the field-to-field valuation.

40,309. Which you produce?—Yes, which I produce, and taking out the fields, let with the mill, from the valuation the rent amounts to 22*l.* odd, whatever it is, 22*l.* 11*s.*, I think it is.

40,310. For the mill cottage and 6 acres?—Quite so.

40,311. What condition was that mill and cottage in at the time?—I am afraid I cannot answer that, because I was not there then. I fancy it was very poor; Mr. Long-Price declined to build it, and will be able to explain that later on.

40,312. Under the agreement you would expect the tenant to keep the mill and cottage, which were in a very poor condition, in substantial and tenantable repair, and you expect him to keep in substantial and tenantable repair all houses and buildings. Of course, that includes the mill?—Yes, but it is not done, and all repairs are done by us.

40,313. Then you let him the mill in a miserable condition, and expect him to hand it back in substantial repair to you?—No, I will not say that. I think I would sooner leave that question alone, because the agent who was here at the time can better explain it, because I did not let the farm.

40,314. Is the agent in the room who did let farm?—Yes, he will be giving evidence directly.

40,315. Then I want to ask you about the complaint as to rack-renting of small holdings by tenant farmers. Is there a great desire amongst the people in this neighbourhood for small holdings?—I do not think there is; I have not had application for small holdings.

Chairman—continued.

Small holdings are very much run after when they become vacant; but I have had no special application for small holdings upon any parts of the estate.

40,316. You have had no direct application for them?—No, not for small holdings.

40,317. Have the landlords done anything to meet the demand for small holdings?—I do not think they have. I do not think there is any demand for small holdings.

40,318. I thought you told us just now that there was?—No, my Lord, I think I said there was not. I have had no application for small holdings.

40,319. You have had no application for small holdings, but at the same time you know that the tenants let small holdings to people in the district?—Yes, I know that.

40,320. You complain of it as an evil, and you are aware that these small holdings are let at double and treble the rent that is paid by the tenant farmers?—Yes.

40,321. Have the landlords been aware of this?—Not till lately. I was not aware till lately, when I came to look into figures.

40,322. Have you thought it your duty to lay it before Lord Cawdor?—I was going to say that I do not know that they exist on the Cawdor Estate, but I am afraid they do now I come to think of it. I have not mentioned that subject to Lord Cawdor yet.

40,323. Have you thought it your duty to lay it before your brother?—I really do not know whether I have laid it before my brother or not. I have not to my recollection. I might have done so.

40,324. But you consider it is a great and crying evil in this part of the world?—I do.

40,325. It is an evil that men should have to go to other persons who rent land, and who rent it at what you consider an unfair rent?—Yes.

40,326. When you say that complaints have been made to you by the sub-tenants, have you been able to adjust matters satisfactorily?—I cannot say I have, because in the majority of these cases the cottages on these farms are originally let for the use of the labourer on the farm, and unless there is some clause in the agreement by which labourers on the farms are obliged to occupy those cottages at fixed rates, which is done in agreements on large estates in England, I do not see very well how the evil can be prevented.

40,327. When you tell us that on the Cawdor estate there are no agreements at all, do you consider that works well?—I think it has worked remarkably well. I am rather in favour of agreements myself, but I think it seems to have worked very well.

40,328. I suppose the rent is an old standing arrangement?—Quite so.

40,329. That goes on without the necessity for its being put in writing?—Yes.

40,330. Have you taken any steps to prevent sub-letting yourself?—No, I cannot say that I have, for the reason which I explained just now, that the cottages are on the farms really for the benefit of the labourers on the farms.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Grove.

40,331. Do you give a copy of the agreement to the tenants?—I should do so if I granted agreements, but I never have granted an agreement to my knowledge.

40,332. But complaints were made this morning that promises of copies had been made and that they have not been given?—I think Mr. Long-Price would answer you that question better than myself. I understand that at the time that agreements were signed the tenants never cared to take away a copy of an agreement, and they have been lying at the office ever since. Whenever a tenant has applied to me I have asked him to come to the office, and I have said that he can get the counterpart if he has not got it.

40,333. But do you not think it would be a reasonable thing if a tenant entered into a written agreement that he should have a copy given to him before he leaves the office free of cost?—I do; free of cost.

40,334. I think in one case a tenant said this morning that he had to pay 10*s.*?—No, he has never paid me 10*s.* nor anyone else.

40,335. Well, it might be to a solicitor?—It might be.

40,336. Still it is rather objectionable to make a charge?—Well, a charge is sometimes made for the ad valorem stamp. I think it is only fair to charge that if there is a stamp required.

40,337. Yes. I suppose the sub-lettings that you have mentioned to us are all accommodation land?—No, not accommodation land.

40,338. Of course, in some cases the rents are rather high?—They are part of the existing farms. They are accommodation land from the under-tenant's point of view possibly.

40,339. But there has been some reason why they were lifted up above the average ordinary lands round about, because they are of more service, I suppose?—I really cannot answer that question I am afraid.

40,340. Take the case now of the land attached to the mill here. You give us that instance, do you not, as being a sub-letting of —am I right in saying—84*s.* an acre—83*s.* 6*d.*, I think?—Yes.

40,341. It comes to something like that?—Yes.

40,342. That would be regarded as accommodation land, would it not, as distinct from ordinary farm land?—I should not specify it as accommodation land myself, because it is quite different to one's ordinary ideas of accommodation land, which is let field by field to some butcher, or somebody of that kind in the neighbourhood of towns.

40,343. Yes, but you give us the average lettings on your own land at, say, 18*s.* 9*d.*; that is the lowest figure you have given us the average?—On our own estate the average rents are about 11*s.* In fact, if you take the farms, and take out the mills and cottages and things of very small acreage, the actual farms—say above 20 acres—would not come to more than 10*s.* an acre.

40,344. Well, suppose we take it at that. Can you explain why anyone is willing to give 84*s.* an acre for a piece, when the average rent of land is about 10*s.* an acre?—I cannot explain that.

40,345. Is it not because it is in the nature of accommodation land?—Partly so; you might call any farm accommodation land in those circumstances.

40,346. Quite right—in some particular piece. There has been some question of damage by Game. I think you were in the room this morning?—Yes, I was.

40,347. And you know that a claim was put in by Mr. John Jones of 60*l.* for damage?—I heard so, but it was never made to me. It was before my time.

40,348. It did not come before you personally?—No, it was before my time. There is only one claim for damage done by game that has come before me, with the exception of one which Mr. Davies, of Tynycwm, has alluded to. That claim was allowed to the satisfaction of the tenant.

40,349. Yes, it was?—That is the only claim I have had, with the exception of the one alluded to by Mr. Davies.

40,350. Then you say that the tenant in that other case was satisfied with the settlement of the game question?—Yes.

40,351. Does the game, or does it not, cause any unpleasant relations between landlord and tenant?—I should say, generally, certainly not. I think it is likely to in the neighbourhood of home covers where a considerable amount of game is reared, but otherwise I think it rather tends to create friendly feeling between landlord and tenant. That is my experience, because the tenants are glad to see you going over the land. I grant there is damage done by game in the neighbourhood of the home covers, and I do not see how it can be avoided. I am only too glad personally, to listen to any reasonable claim of that kind.

40,352. I suppose if you thought that the claim was reasonable, you would be prepared to settle it?—Most certainly.

40,353. But, of course, the difficulty is to arrive at a kind of thing that will satisfy both parties?—Yes.

40,354. You stated that in some cases the tenants have the game?—Yes, in many cases.

40,355. What is the effect; does it tend to destroy the game?—The effect generally is that they sub-let the game, rent it out.

40,356. They try to make a little out of it?—Yes.

40,357. Because of the bad times, I suppose?—I do not know why; I think it would go on if the times were good just as much.

40,358. We will put it down to that. Do you construct manure tanks at all for any of the tenants?—No, not at all in this county that I am aware of. I think they should be made.

40,359. With regard to dairies, do you consider that dairies are convenient and sanitary?—Many of the more modern built ones are very good in every respect. There are a great many on the older farms that are very, very far from good.

40,360. We have heard great complaints as to the making of butter not being what it ought to be?—Yes, it is one of the great worries of estate agents—repairs generally; it is my greatest worry.

40,361. Have there been any schools of the county council for dairy teaching round about this part of the country?—Yes.

40,362. Do you think the effect of them has been good?—Yes, I think it has.

40,363. Did you take a personal interest in them?—Yes, I did personally. I am rather a moveable person, and I could not attend to them in one particular district, but I attended them in the various districts.

40,364. Do you know any person who uses a separator?—I know of many on the Cawdor estate. I think there is one on this estate.

40,365. The only matter I want to touch upon now is railway rates. Could you turn to that memorandum of yours about railway rates and tell us exactly what you have to say on the subject. I do not mean with regard to preferential rates for foreign produce. Are the instances you propose to give with reference to foreign produce?—I had a few figures here showing the rates per ton at which the farm produce goes to London, say.

40,366. I should be glad if you could give us just one or two of those typical cases?—For instance, grain from here to London is charged at 21*s.* per ton.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,367. Has it been increased—I cannot tell you. Those are the existing rates that I got from the railway station. Grain from America to London can be shipped at 2¼*d.* or 2½*d.* a bushel, which would be equal to about 6*s.* or 7*s.* per ton

Mr. Grove.

40,368. Yes, those are preferential rates. But do you think that the rate of 21*s.* from here to London is too dear?—Yes, I do.

40,369. You know it is based upon the tonnage of so many tons in a truck, and the mileage, those are the conditions?—Yes, I am aware of that. The rates of butter, cheese, and vegetables are all very high in my opinion. I think butter is 51*s.* per ton so far as I can gather.

40,370. Where from?—From this neighbourhood to London, from this county, we might say, to London. Cheese is about 42*s.* a ton, and vegetables 33*s.* 9*d.* Milk is 1½*d.* qer gallon.

40,371. You think in all cases they are excessive?—I think they are in all cases excessive.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,372. Are you quoting London and North-Western or Great Western?—Great Western.

40,373. There is competition?—There would be competition in Carmarthen and Llandilo. Generally throughout Carmarthenshire there is competition.

Mr. Grove.

40,374. Have you got the Board of Trade book, which you can get for a shilling?—No, I have not.

40,375. That gives you all the information on the subject?—Yes, I should like to have it.

40,376. Generally speaking, do you consider that the local railway rates—when I say "local" I mean with regard to our own country and leaving out the question of preferential rates for foreign produce—are prejudicial to agriculture?—I think they are.

40,377. Do you think that the local farmers keep away from the railway and do more with their horses on purpose to try and save money?—Yes, I think they do. I think there would be greater opportunities for manure being used and produce going away if the rates were considerably lower. I think it would be beneficial to tenants. I have no doubt about it personally in my own mind.

40,378. Would you go so far as to say that in some cases a farmer would keep a horse or two horses extra on purpose to convey produce. The railway does not touch him perhaps close enough in this district for that?—No, I am sorry to say it does not.

40,379. That does apply in some parts. I have only one more question to ask you: you say that court leets are held?—Yes.

40,380. What is the legal notice for a court leet?—There is a warrant issued by the steward and it is fixed up in different public buildings in the manor, and the deputy steward comes round and summons the different jurymen to attend at each different place.

40,381. What notice would there be for that?—About a month.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,382. You were kind enough to put in these presentments. I suppose you put them in with reference to the statement which we had yesterday which I think was with regard to the fines on alienations and deaths and marriages which are complained of. Is that so?—I put them in as a matter of interest, perhaps with regard to yourself personally; I knew you were interested on the subject.

40,383. I see that the old ones which belong to the time of James the 1st seem to refer to the old Commott of Cidweli?—Yes.

40,384. Would that include the estates which you have under your management?—Yes, Lord Cawdor's estate.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

40,385. I find mentioned there a fine of 10*s.* on alienation and 10*s.* on the marriage of a daughter of freeholders?—Yes.

40,386. You have had the records of these estates under your eyes. Could you tell us at all whether during the last 30 years there has been anything like an increase in the rentals of the estate of 34 per cent.?—No, I should say nothing approaching it.

40,387. Could you at all give us the actual per-centage of increase?—I think Mr. Long Price is going to hand in a statement from the year 1830.

40,388. Then I will leave that. There is only one other point I should like to mention, do you know whether any of the unions in your district have adopted the Act which provides for the inspection of dairies?—I do not think they have. I do not think there is a dairy inspector in any of the unions in this county that I am aware of.

40,389. Do you remember what the Act was. My recollection was that it had something to do with infectious diseases, and that power was given for inspection of dairies in cases where milk was sold?—I am afraid I cannot assist you on that point.

40,390. Do you think it would be a good thing that such a matter as that should be adopted?—I think anything that is likely to improve the management of the dairies would be an improvement. I think that would improve them—if the inspectors did their work properly; but my experience of local inspectors in the unions is that they do not do their work at all, or they have such an enormous district to attend to that it is impossible for any one man to do it.

40,391. I suppose as in other agricultural districts the fact is that farmers are upon the Board of Guardians and the Rural Sanitary Authority chiefly?—Yes, they are on the Board of Guardians and the Rural Sanitary Authority; they appoint the officers of the Rural Sanitary Authority.

40,392. And they being the body who would carry out these Acts there would not be much chance of their willingly adopting an Act which would give themselves much trouble, would they? No, that is the case. My experience of boards of guardians, which I sit upon regularly, is that very little work is done at all.

Mr. Grove.

40,393. You were kind enough to say that you had a list of manors which you would put in?—Yes.

40,394. We do not want you to read it, but could you hand in a list to be published?—Yes.

40,395. As a matter of history it will be very useful for us to have it?—Certainly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,396. You say you have had a special education at an Agricultural College. Was that at Cirencester?—Downton.

40,397. Are you a practical farmer?—No; I wish I were. I have no time for farming, otherwise I would be.

40,398. You would not know what to ask for a beast if you took it to market?—No; perhaps I should not exactly, unless I had been in the habit of going lately to the market to observe how the prices were ruling.

40,399. Do you think there would be an advantage to an agent if he held a little land?—I think it would be if he had time to attend to it, but the agents have plenty to do to attend to their estates now without that.

40,400. But it would be a qualification in an agent, would it not?—Yes; quite so. I think it would, but I think if he has had an agricultural education before, and if he takes an interest in it that that is a sufficient guarantee of his powers.

40,401. Is sheep farming carried on extensively in this neighbourhood?—Not in this particular neighbourhood; in the hill districts it is.

40,402. Do you think that it is good in the interests of sheep farming that grazing should be without stint?—I should say not, not if it is carried to any great extent, but I have never seen any ill effect caused by grazing without stint. It is nominally without stint, but actually the ground is not half grazed really because it is only grazed just in the neighbourhood of the brinking farms in my experience.

49,403. You know of no cases of over stocking?—No, I do not know of any. There may be some in the Black Mountain district. I have never seen any ill effects from it.

40,404. Yet it is possible that this might be abused?—Yes, it is quite possible that it might be abused.

40,405. You think that the number should be limited?—I think when the common is limited or the ground is limited that the sheep should be limited.

40,406. You are referring to hills?—Yes. I had in my mind the Black Mountains, which go for miles and miles the other side of Llandilo.

40,407. Are the boundaries of these mountains well defined now—the portions which are common?—There are no boundaries otherwise than the enclosures of the actual farms.

40,408. Are they the cause of any quarrels amongst the farmers?—Yes, there are occasional quarrels. I have not known cases here.

40,409. You have nothing to suggest, I suppose, to meet a case of that kind?—No, I do not think there is any particular suggestion that I could make on that account because I do not think quarrels are any more frequent over sheep than anything else.

40,410. But you want to reduce the number of quarrels upon everything?—Quite so. Unless we had a board to arrange quarrels generally I do not know that we could have a special one for sheep.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,411. You say that bankrupts are usually retained and allowed to let out their grazing lands as an assistance. Do you frequently have bankrupts on a lease?—No, not many. There have been one or two in my day, but they are from causes other than agricultural depression. The last was a tenant on the Derllys estate below Carmarthen who became bankrupt.

40,412. Is it owing to farming with insufficient capital or to incompetence?—In that case it was owing to his having gone utterly to the bad and having taken to drink, and being convicted several times in the Carmarthen Police Court. That was the cause of that. I kept him on specially on account of his wife and children.

40,413. But you would not keep him on to conclude his year of tenancy?—I would not keep him on personally a day if I could help it, and he has misused the favours I have given him very much since.

40,414. But you did not keep him on to complete it?—Yes, I kept him on continually. At the time he went bankrupt his brothers came forward, and I allowed a special arrangement, which I very much disapprove of, that a certain amount of the grazing land should be let out. They let out about 35 or 40 acres of grazing land, which was rented at 14*l.* for the season.

40,415. You did that out of consideration for his family?—Yes, for the wife and family.

40,416. You heard, probably, what Mr. John Jones said, namely, that he has never had any allowance for carriage of timber, and you say in your evidence that compensation is paid in case of damage done by timber?—Yes.

40,417. Could you supply the Commission with the number of instances in which compensation has been paid, because we get nothing definite all the time? The tenants say that there is no compensation paid, and the landlords or their agents say that there is something paid. We want to have something definite?—Quite so. There has been no timber hauled during my management of the Edwinsford Estate, and therefore there has been no compensation ever paid. With regard to the Cawdor Estate I would be very glad to submit a list of the amounts of compensation that have been paid. I have paid a great deal of compensation in the neighbourhood of Newcastle Emlyn, not for timber hauling but for railway damage and severance.

40,418. We would like it more particularly with respect to timber cutting?—I am afraid I have not brought particulars with me to-day. I would be very glad to furnish them.

40,419. Thank you, if you would kindly send them in. Do you charge the tenant for a copy of the agreement?—No, I have never made a charge because I have not got an agreement. I should not make a charge if I did.

40,420. When an agreement is supplied to a tenant do you make a charge?—I say I have never made an agreement with a tenant, but if I did so I should not charge him. I have not considered the question, but if I did charge it would be only for the value of the stamp.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,421. You say that tenants with insufficient capital are often accepted?—Yes, that is so.

40,422. Why do you accept tenants with insufficient capital?—Because there is no tenant in the whole of this neighbourhood who has got any capital at all, hardly when originally starting. Most of the tenants as a rule on these small Welsh farms have their capital supplied by their fathers and mothers when they start farming. There are very few of them with any amount of capital at starting.

40,423. Then we are to take that as evidence that really farmers are doing badly?—They are undoubtedly.

40,424. And have been for years?—Yes, they have been during this agricultural depression certainly.

40,425. What is the extent of your authority in the adjustment of rents on these estates that you are connected with?—My authority is unlimited in that respect.

40,426. And also as to the amount of the abatements?—I advise and discuss the amount of abatements with the landlord.

40,427. Do you consider, according to the rents which are in existence on the different estates that you are connected with, that some are treated more liberally than others?—Some are treated more liberally by the fact of some having cheaper farms and others dearer, and it is always likely to be so unless farms are revalued every 10 or 12 years, because it entirely depends upon the individuality of the tenant as to what the value of the farm is, in my opinion.

40,428. Does it not occur sometimes that the man in the cheapest farm gets the most liberal abatement?—He gets the same abatement as the other. It is more liberal in his case if he has a cheap farm.

40,429. You say tithes and income tax are paid by the owner, but the tithe is recovered by the landlord from the tenant?—Yes, quite so, unless in case of allowance being made, and allowance has been made in some cases.

40,430. They have been allowed instead of abatement?—Quite so.

40,431. You think that the tenants are rather incapable, as I gather from your reply?—No, I do not think I said that.

40,432. You say that cultivation is very poor?—Yes, I think the cultivation is very poor.

40,433. Is it from incompetence or want of capital?—I do not think it is from incompetence. I think they could do it if they liked to do it.

40,434. Are they lazy?—I think they are sometimes. They have not sufficient capital; they have not got sufficient labour on the farms to cultivate them properly. I said before, in my evidence-in-chief, that I did not think tenant farmers were lazy, and I thought they worked hard and their wives also. See 42,98

40,435. What inference do you draw from the fact that tenant farmers have not sufficient labour on the farm?—In what particular way do you mean?

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,436. That insufficient labour is employed on the farm?—My inference is that cultivation suffers in consequence.

40,437. Does it not strike you that really the tenant cannot employ sufficient labour because the results are not quick enough; they want to get quick returns, and it would take some time for the labour that is employed on a farm to work itself out in order to get the return?—Yes, if they had more labour they would get a quicker return.

40,438. It could not come at once. You see they save the labour bill in order to pay the rent?—Yes, and the return is larger every year the more thoroughly the farm is cultivated.

40,439. But in course of years you would bring up the returns, but they have to keep down expenses in order to meet the present payments?—Quite so. But then their profits are proportionately less all the time as well. Although they have less expenditure they have less produce.

40,440. I think you told Lord Carrington that no assistance was given by the landlord to lay down permanent grass?—That is so, as a rule. I have never had an application, and I have never given any assistance with that object. In fact, during the time I have been agent not so much land has been laid down. It had been laid down previous to that.

40,441. You know, of course, that it is a costly process?—I do if it is properly carried out.

40,442. We found that in Monmouthshire one of the landlords who appeared before us not only supplied the seeds but he returned a part of the rent on the land that was laid down in permanent grass?—We should be very glad to do the same if it were possible, I am sure.

40,443. Do you think the Agricultural Holdings Act is satisfactory?—I think the theory of it is satisfactory. I think the difficulty lies in the application of its provisions and the expenses of its procedure.

40,444. The procedure is cumbersome?—Yes, I think it is.

40,445. Are there any amendments which you can suggest in the schedules?—I think all the schedules cover most of the improvements pretty nearly. I think they might be profitably extended.

40,446. Extended?—Yes, extended, I think, and made more generally applicable to different classes of farming.

40,447. Do you know that under the third schedule there was no provision made for compensation for corn that is grown on the farm and consumed on the farm?—I believe that is so.

40,448. You think it ought to be extended to include that?—No, I do not think it ought; I think the produce that is made on the farm ought to belong to the farm.

40,449. You say the tenant has liberty to sell the corn if he chooses. It is not the same as hay or straw?—Yes, he has liberty to sell grain.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,450. Do you not think that if he consumes it on the farm he should be compensated for it?—If he did not consume the corn, and if he sold it, he would have to buy something else to consume on the farm.

40,451. But I do not think the manurial value would be equal to the price that he made by selling it, that is, at the price that corn sells for now?—It depends on what class of food he bought.

40,452. That is your opinion?—Yes, that is my opinion. I think he might buy certain feeding stuffs of far greater value than that of corn.

40,453. Have you had any applications under the first schedule of the Act?—I have never had an application under the Agricultural Holdings Act at all.

40,454. So that practically it is inoperative?—Quite so.

40,455. What is the custom with respect to sheep upon a change of tenancy. You probably heard the evidence yesterday at Llandovery?—Do you mean hill sheep?

49,456. Yes, hill sheep?—They are taken over upon a valuation by the incoming tenant.

40,457. What is the price that is paid, as a rule—how much over the market value of the sheep?—About 1*s.* 6*d.* up to 2*s.* 6*d.*, or something of that sort.

40,458. The witness told us at Llandovery that it was about 6*s.* a head?—I should say from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* 6*d.*

40,459. I thought 6*s.* was rather a high price?—Yes, I should say it was.

40,460. Do you think it is a good plan for the tenant farmer to let the cottages on the farm?—I think it is a good plan to let the cottages which are let with the farm; that is the object for which they are rented by the farmer.

40,461. Who does the repairs for the farmers?—In cases of thatching it devolves upon the tenants, but otherwise the landlords keep up all the buildings generally upon the estate, the cottages as well.

40,462. Do you not think it is a great burthen on a tenant farmer now to keep up thatched cottages?—Yes, I think it is.

40,463. It is high time to do away with that?—Yes, I think it is; I think it is high time to do away with thatch altogether. It takes a great deal from the land, but then all those things must be gradual. With regard to this question of repairs nobody deplores the bad state of some of the farms on this estate more than I do, but it is absolutely impossible for any man living to put them right all at once.

40,464. It seems to me that you have been rather backward in coming forward with regard to this question in Carmarthenshire. There is a great deal of thatch to be seen here?—Yes, there is, but you must remember the holdings are very small, and the cost of the buildings is very great. If you put a fair rate of interest on the value of the buildings on this estate, I estimate it at 4,500*l.*, which is three-quarters of the rental.

Mr. Grove.

40,465. When you say a fair rate of interest, may we ask what you mean—4 per cent. or 4½?—5 per cent. In fact, 6 per cent. is the usual rate of interest on buildings in towns.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,466. Would you object to thatch, except because of the high price of straw?—I object to thatch on the principle that it robs the land of what ought to go back to it. I should like to see every thatched roof in the country done away with, and I hope it will be in the course of time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,467. Do you consider your brother's estate to be in a fair condition, so far as buildings are concerned?—Yes, I should say fair; I think it is certainly fair. There are a great many excellent buildings, and a great many bad ones, but I call it generally in fair order. I think you will find it will compare favourably with many, and it is equal to the average.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,468. I suppose you are doing some repairs every year all over the estate?—Yes, every year. We are spending some 20 per cent. of our rental every year.

40,469. There are two answers which you gave which I thought were not consistent. Is it your opinion that the tenants work hard?—It is my opinion that they work very hard.

40,470. I thought it was misunderstood, but what you consider is that they want more labour upon the land?—Yes, I think they want more labour upon the land.

40,471. Is the reason that they do not apply that because they cannot afford it?—Partly that and partly the scarcity of labour, and the high price of it. I should like to see a great deal more labourers on the land here.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,472. I will ask you one question with regard to this Rhyglin Farm. Do you know it?—Yes.

40,473. Mr. Thomas Davies told us that when the tenant applied for a reduction he got a notice to quit. Do you know anything about that?—I never had any application for a reduction that I am aware of. I do not remember it at all. A notice was served in this case solely on account of his getting into arrears with his rent, and ruining an excellent farm which he entered in first-rate heart. That was told him at the time. My brother advised giving it as a protest upon the way in which the farm was being run out and badly managed. The drains were all choked up and the fences were coming down, and it was really in a disgraceful state.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,474. How long had he been on the place?—I cannot say exactly, but it is something like five or six years.

40,475. What was the rent he paid?—93*l.*

40,476. What is it let at now?—That is the rent it is let at now.

40,477. What is the rent that the former tenant paid?—I think it was the same. He has not quitted the farm. The notice has been withdrawn.

40,478. The notice has been withdrawn?—The notice has been withdrawn.

40,479. You did not give him that notice in order to frighten other tenants from making application for a reduction?—No. He never had made an application for a reduction, as I have just said, that I am aware of. I do not remember it. I have told you my reason, and that was the sole reason.

40,480. Do you know anything about this case where the alder tree was cut to prop the house?—No, I do not know anything about it at all. I never heard of it until to-day. I know the farmer and the farm very well. The farmer is an excellent fellow, and a very contented and industrious man. I never heard of such a thing in my life; it may be true, or it may not; it happened many years ago if it has happened, I believe, but I know nothing about it, nor have I ever heard of such a case even.

Mr. Grove.

40,481. I suppose when there is depression, the hedges and ditches would be about the first thing to be neglected on a farm?—I think that is so, certainly.

Chairman.

40,482. The following questions are put in by Mr. Thomas Rees, of Glanyrafonddu-ganol: "Do "you know the number of fields belonging to "Penrheolwen?"—Yes.

40,483. "And do you know the acreage?"—Yes, I do.

40,484. "Have you personally visited these fields?"—Some of them, I have.

40,485. "Have these sub-tenants been com-"plaining to you often?"—No, not often.

40,486. "How many years is it since these "cottages have been let out as accommodation "land to labourers?"—I cannot say. I do not know.

40,487. "Do you know who built the house "and out-houses at Penrhiwgeingen?"—I think it should be Troedrhywgeingen. I do not know.

40,488. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Thomas Davies: "What reason do you "assign for refusing a farm to the daughter of "Mr. John Jones, Penlan?"—My brother thought it inadvisable to give the farm for certain reasons which I do not know that it would be necessary for me to specify here to-day. I can hand them up, but I would rather not state the reason. I should be glad to hand it up in writing to the Commissioners.

40,489. "Is it a fact that you have told the "tenant of Dolaugleision not to give the children "any compensation, as in another 12 months he "would get in without paying anything?"—No, it is a falsehood altogether.

40,490. "What is the reason that you gave "Mr. John Morgan, Rhyglyn, notice to quit?' —I have just explained that.

40,491. Yes, that has been explained. "Are "you aware that it was stated to Mr. John "Jones, Penlan, when he took the farm, that he "was to receive so much from the five cottages "and to keep them properly thatched?"—No, I was not aware of that.

40,492. "Are you aware that the occupiers of "cottages sub-let by some of your tenants, "receive kindnesses in the way of carrying their "coal, hay, &c., from those tenants?"—Possibly they do occasionally; they do not enjoy the benefit of the reductions that the tenants get, I know, as a rule.

40,493. "Can you name half-a-dozen farms on "the Edwinsford Estate that have buildings "which meet the requirements of the day?"—Yes, I could; several dozens.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,494. That is to say, for instance, suitable for dairy purposes?—Quite so. Well, it depends upon what class of dairy purposes. For the dairying that is done in the district I could name more than half-a-dozen.

40,495. Places that will keep milk without turning sour?—Quite so.

Chairman.

40,496. Mr. Thomas Davies continued. "Is "it not a fact that the rent of the mill let to "Mr. John Jones is based not upon the value "of the land, but on the profits of the mill?"—The mill is fixed at one rent and the land is fixed at an agricultural value. They are separately apportioned.

Chairman—continued.

40,497. "Further, are you aware that repairs "to the extent of 9*l.* have been done on the "mill of which only one half has been allowed?" —No, I was not aware of that. I know I allowed something at the last rent audit, or the one before—some bill that was brought in in respect of repairs there. I forget the amount.

40,498. "In what way did you give your "personal support to the County Dairy Schools?" —By my attendance.

40,499. Mr. Thomas Davies continued: "You "are aware that I have a cream separator." Are you aware that he has a cream separator?—I believe so.

40,500. "Is it a fact that you refused me a "block of oak to place the separator on for steady "working?"—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,501. Did he ever apply?—He never applied to me.

Chairman.

40,502. Mr. Thomas Davies continued: "Are "you aware that I spent 32*l.* in artificial manure as the result of Professor Parry's lecture with a view to more efficient farming"?—No.

40,503. The following questions are handed in by Mr. J. E. Vincent: "Have the farmers in "this district any reason to be afraid to come "forward?"—No, certainly not.

40,504. "Do you personally believe that they "are afraid?"—No, I do not.

40,505. "Is it not the fact that we have considered the question whether landowners should give their permission to tenants to come forward?"—Yes.

40,506. "And that we decided we should be "misconstrued if we did give permission?"—Yes. I was at one time thinking of issuing a notice here, and I discussed the matter with Mr. Vincent. He said no: that my action would probably be misconstrued if I did.

40,507. "Have you not made a calculation "with regard to this rent of Tanlan which you "wish to show to the Commission?"—Yes. (The witness handed in the following statement:)

Farm and Parish.	Acreage.	Rent as per 1862 Valuation.	Equal to Rent per Acre.	Rent in 1894.	Rent per Acre.	Expenditure on New Homestead in 1878.	Interest thereon at 5 per cent.	Interest equal to per Acre.	Nett Decrease per Acre in 1894 over 1862 Valuation.	Remarks.
	A. R. P.	£ s. d.	s. d.	£ s. d.	s. d.	£	£ s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Tanlan and Bertwn (St. Ishmael's, Carmarthen).	263 2 37	395 0 0	30 10	445 0 0	33 9	3,000	150 0 0	11 6	7 9	Original buildings valued in 1862 have been converted into cottages, and are maintained together with the new ones by the landlord.

Chairman—continued.

40,508. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Is the number "of heavily mortgaged freeholds great in your "district?"—I do not know.

40,509. "Do you think that the desire for "security of tenure accounts for the fact, in "some degree, that farmers are willing to pay "too much for their holdings?" That is in the case of freehold tenures?—I do not follow that question.

40,510. "Do you think that the desire for "security of tenure"—the desire to obtain a home—"accounts for the fact, in some degree, "that farmers are willing to pay too much for "their holdings"—freeholds?—Yes, I think that is so in some degree.

40,511. "Since quit rents, fines on admittance, "and heriots are seldom, if ever, demanded, do "you think it would make a great difference if "these old-fashioned payments were abolished?" —No, I do not think it would.

40,512. "Do you think that a tenant from year "to year feels that he is so secure as a leaseholder "or a freeholder?"—I think on most of our estates it is so certainly. Undoubtedly it is on the Cawdor Estate, and I have had every reason to believe it was so on the Edwinsford Estate too.

40,513. "And that he is as ready to make the "best of his holding, by spending money and "labour in improving it?"—I should say so. I do not believe there would be that much difference if there was fixity of tenure by law, or that there would be much improvement in the condition of agriculture itself. One does not gather that from the state of small freeholds at any rate.

40,514. "In your evidence you have said that "bankrupts are usually retained, and that "tenants with insufficient capital are often "accepted. Do you think that the state of the "law, which makes the landlord first creditor "on a bankrupt's estate, tends to make land-"lords at all careless as to the financial position "of their tenants?"—No, I do not think it does so. We have a very small preferential claim now under our bankruptcy laws.

40,515. "If the penalising clauses in the "agreement are never enforced, what is the "good of retaining them?"—In case of a bad tenant leaving a farm, I think there ought to be penalising clauses, but I think the ones we heard of yesterday at Llandovery were excessive. I think there ought to be a penalty of 10*l.* an acre for pasture land that is cut up; in fact, I know of a case in Dorsetshire where a farmer cut up grass land and laid it down to potatoes, and made about 6*l.* an acre after paying the 10*l.* penalty.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,516. But that man would be governed by the custom of the country wherever there is a custom, would he not?—He would be governed by the agreement wherever there is an agreement.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

40,517. But in case there is no agreement?—There is no custom. They are only prevented by an injunction.

40,518. You have no difficulty of that kind on Lord Cawdor's estate, where there is no agreement?—No, I do not have any difficulty.

Chairman.

40,519. Mr. Llewelyn Williams continued: "Who appoints the valuer who fixes the rent "per acre on the estate"?—The landlord.

40,520. "You say that rents are higher in "proportion on smaller farms than on larger. "Is this to some extent caused by the fact that "less capital being needed to stock them, there "are more farmers who are ready to take "them?"—No, the fact is on account of larger expenditure on the part of the landlord in buildings on a small area.

40,521. "You say that a slight increase was "the result of the valuation in 1879. Was "not the general prosperity on the wane in "1879, and was it not necessary to make "abatements of 10 per cent. and 20 per cent. "in the next year?"—In 1879 abatements were made.

40,522. "Does not this seem to show that the "valuation of 1878 was unfair to the tenants?" —No, I do not think so.

40,523. "Who was the valuer, and by whom was he appointed?"—Mr. Long Price; and he was appointed by the landlord.

40,524. "Is not the land tax a landlord's tax?"—Yes, in the first instance it is a landlord's tax.

40,525. "And is it not unfair to ask the "tenant to pay it in advance?"—Not more so than ordinary rates, I think.

40,526. "You say that tenants sub-let at an "enhanced price. Do you not think that in "some cases tenants are compelled to do this, "because their rents are exorbitant, and they "have to get others to help them to pay them?" —No, I do not think that.

40,527. "You say that large occupiers suffer "most from the depression. Is not this because "they have to pay for labour, while the smaller "farmers do all the labour themselves, and with "the help of their children?"—No, I think I gave my reason, because there was more capital employed partially in labour.

40,528. "Are the rents paid to a great extent by selling butter?"—To a great extent, in certain times of the year.

40,529. "Do the landlords do everything that "can be expected of them, to help to encourage "their tenants by building good dairies?"—I think in so far as they can. There is a great difficulty in these small holdings, and no one has any idea of the amount of building that is required

Mr. Seebohm.

40,530. Could you give us the number of holdings on your three estates?—I am afraid I could not give the number on the three. I should think they would come into some thousands.

40,531. Can you give me the number on one of them?—I could on the Edwinsford estate, the number of holdings is 156.

Chairman.

40,532. These questions are also by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "You say compensation "is obtainable by understanding. In case of "dispute, do you think the tenant is suffi- "ciently protected?"—Well, he can protect himself in case of dispute.

40,533. "You say the depression only com- "menced in 1885. How, then, was it necessary "to grant abatements in 1879 on the Edwins- "ford estate?"—That was another depression which I did not go far enough back for.

40,534. "You say that claims for damage by "game are very rare. Is this rarity caused, "firstly, by the fact that they are thought to "be distasteful to the game owner." Do you agree with that?—No, I do not think that is so.

40,535. "And secondly, by the fact that "tenants who have claimed 60*l.* have only "received 5*l.*?"—No, I do not think it is.

40,536. "And that others have been unable "to agree with the landlord as to the amount "of compensation?"—No, I do not think that is so. I am very much in sympathy with regard to damage done by game, and am always ready to listen to anything that is fair.

40,537. "You say that yearly tenants are "better off than men who have purchased their "holdings." Did you say that?—Yes, I think I did.

40,538. "Is not that due to the fact that "farmers have been so anxious to be secure in "their holdings that they have bought them at "too high a price with borrowed money?"—In some cases, but in some cases they have got it at a very fair price indeed, I know.

40,539. "You say that children's labour assists "in paying rent on some farms. Does not that "prove that the rent on those farms is too "high?"—Not necessarily.

40,540. "You say gardens of cottages are not "cultivated." Is that so?—Not well cultivated. They are set down in potatoes; they have not much interest in horticulture at all.

40,541. "Is not that due to the fact that "labourers have to work such long hours that "they are too tired on their return home to do "some gardening?"—That may be so, but I think it is from lack of interest in horticulture that is general through Wales, so far as my experience goes.

40,542–3. "Did you say at a public meeting "some time ago that you know many farmers "so situated that if they sold all, they would "not have enough to clear their debts?"—No, I never said that at any public meeting, or anywhere else.

Chairman—continued.

40,544. "How do you make up the rents of "the two Groes upon Ynysau Farm?"—I make them up individually. There is one cottage and garden in one instance, and there is a cottage and garden and a few acres of land in the other.

40,545. "Who lets the Castell and Glanrhyd, "small holdings in Cayo parish?"—The landlord.

40,546. "How much is the rent of Castell and "Glanrhyd—how much per acre, and how "does it compare with the rent of the Groes?" —Castell is 9 acres 3 roods and 14 perches, and the annual rent is 16*l.* Glanrhyd is in extent 7 acres 0 roods, 8 perches and the annual rent is 12*l.*

40,547. "Do you know that there is no pig- "sty or carthouse on the farm of Cilwr, Talley?" —I thought there was a pigstye. I will not be quite sure.

40,548. "How long did the tenant stay there?"—At Cilwr.

40,549. Yes?—He has been there since I remember—his family.

40,550. "Do you know that the same man, "when taken ill at Cwmglawganol, was obliged "to lie in a room in which there was no fire- "place?"—I was not aware of it, and do not believe it.

40,551. "Do you know that the rents on the "Cayo portion of the Edwinsford estate have "been advanced over 20 per cent. during the "last 30 or 40 years?"—No.

Mr. Grove.

40,552. You wish to mention the evidence of Mr. Thomas Davies?—Yes, I wanted to refer to that.

40,553. You are going to explain it?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,554. I will just ask a question before you go to that. You say that the land tax is a landlord's tax, but it is paid by the tenant?—It is a landlord's tax, but it is paid by the tenant. You might say that all taxes are landlords' taxes. Really they are first charges on the land.

40,555. If really the burthens are on the landlord's shoulders, would there be any objection to place them directly on the shoulders that bear them?—No, I think there might be a case of abatement made in that respect. It is a smallish item.

40,556. Owing to the increase in the rating on taking the farm?—An increase in the rating?

40,557. Yes, in the rates?—I do not understand your question.

40,558. We will say that a tenant has taken a farm 20 years ago?—Yes.

40,559. He has taken it subject to the payment of the rates upon it?—Quite so.

40,560. Since 1870 the position of things has changed?—I think I follow you now. Yes, the rates have increased, and you think it would be fair for the land tax to be given in relief of that?

40,561. Yes, they increase and fall on their shoulders?—Yes, I think that might be reasonable.

40,562. You think it is reasonable?—Exactly.

40,563. You have pleaded the inability of the landlord to carry out these repairs that have been suggested?—I have pleaded the inability to do so at once.

40,564. Has Sir James Drummond in any way reduced his establishment in order to try to meet cases of this kind?—I do not know; in point of fact his establishment is rather increased because he has married and has got a family now, so that I do not think I can say that his establishment has decreased.

Chairman.

40,565. Is there anything more you wish to state?—I should like to refer to Mr. Thomas Davies' evidence, of Tynycwm. He made some untruthful allegations against Sir James. With reference to the field that was taken away from him, I would like to explain that this field is a part of the home farm which was occupied by the tenant of a farm named Pantiauau in this parish. He left the field at Michaelmas, 1891, Sir James intending to retain it himself at that time. Davies, however, came daily to Sir James and myself to ask for it, but it was constantly refused. He was so persistent, however, that Sir James finally gave in, and allowed him to take it for one year certain at a rent of 40*l.* At Christmas, however, he begged to keep the field on, and though Sir James wished to keep it, he finally again gave in, and allowed him to retain it for one more year, i.e., to Christmas 1893, when Sir James took it in hand, solely and entirely on account of the very large extra amount of stock in Edwinsford home farm. There is no other reason whatever, and it is unfair to suggest any other reason.

See 39,742.

40,566. You quite repudiate, on behalf of your brother, that it was taken away on account of his suggesting giving evidence before the Commission?—Yes, I do most emphatically repudiate it. Then with regard to Sir James' alleged conversation with Davies and his father, I do not know whether it is necessary to get Sir James down from Scotland purposely to go into these questions, or whether you think it of sufficient importance. Personally I was not present, and I do not know what was said between the two parties, but I know he would be very glad to give an explanation of it if he said so.

Then going into the matter of the alleged fear of the tenants to come forward and give evidence, I think from what you have heard today that that can hardly be substantiated. However, I would like to give you the following statement on the matter:—Neither Sir James nor I have in any kind of way induced tenants to keep from giving evidence. On the contrary, at the two last rent audit dinners at Talley, at Caio, I expressed in most clear language on behalf of my brother and myself our wishes that as many of the tenants as possibly could would attend to give evidence. More we could not do, or I should have done it. Then with regard to the agreement, Mr. Davies alleged that he is unable to get a counterpart of his agreement. I was not aware at the time when he applied for it that he had not got it in the usual course when he took the farm, which he did before my day. However, I wrote to him, as my letters will prove (they have been handed in), to say that my clerk had instructions to give him a copy whenever he called, and I believe he did not call, and he did not therefore get it.

Chairman—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,567. He told us, in answer to a question, that he had signed two copies?—Yes, one I believe, the agreement, and the other the counterpart.

40,568. Are they both in your possession?—I am not really sure whether they are or not. There are a lot of agreements in the office, and I cannot remember them without referring.

Mr. Grove.

40,569. Why should the counterpart be retained at the office?—There is no reason, I do not know why. I presume the tenant at the time did not want to take it. I would be only too glad to get rid of them, because I do not want to keep any more papers than I can help.

Then I have made an explanation about the game, that I had only once had a claim for damage by game on the Edwinsford Estate, which I allowed to the satisfaction of the tenant. The only second claim I had was the one that Mr. Davies and I are at loggerheads at the present time about. I think my letters will prove that I am perfectly prepared to accept any one who is unprejudiced in the matter, but in cases of this kind I have never heard of any other tribunal than that which I suggested. Had the claim been within double of the value of the damage I was quite prepared to meet it, but in my opinion it is 10 times the value.

See 39,746, 40,109.

You, gentlemen, have been invited to inspect a mill in this village, a disgraceful hovel, I am ready regretfully to allow. Might I ask you to inspect the situation of the field in which the wheat was grown. The first notice of this damage was given me on the 1st August last. The damage by pheasants, if such damage was caused by pheasants at all, I presume, was done at seed time the previous October. I should like to ask why was no notice given me sooner. On the 4th August I inspected the field carefully. Adjoining the warren wall for some 10 yards down the crop was thin and the soil still thinner. It is within three inches of the rock. A more unsuitable soil for a deep-rooted plant like wheat I cannot conceive. On two hedges of the field the rabbits were very numerous, and running about through the corn at the time of my visit. Under 600 pheasants were reared, not 1,000 as stated; and the claim is higher than the whole feed bill for the season for the same pheasants. The field is six acres. Under favourable circumstances this would not yield more than 20 bushels an acre and 20 cwt. of straw.

I may say I had a conversation with Professor Parry coming down in the train the other day, and he considered my estimate of the produce of grain and straw per acre in this country was very high. If you put 4*l.* an acre for the value of the grain, and 50*s.* for the value of the straw, it would not come to more than 6*l.* 10*s.* an acre, or about 37*l.* if there was no crop on the field at all.

With regard to the repairs at Tynycwm, you heard the valuation of the haulage, which is a very high figure, and I think perhaps, gentlemen, this will give you an idea of the amount of money laid out by the landlord here. It is one of the best and most convenient holdings on the estate, in my opinion.

Then a complaint was made as regards the rent of a farm called Cilwennau Uchaf, in this parish, the extent of the farm being 499 acres, 3 roods, and 39 perches (or 1 perch under 500 acres), and the rent 130*l.*, or 5*s.* 2*d.* an acre. I cannot give more information than this, but Mr. Long Price can explain further. I think the above figures would explain the alleged high rent of the farm.

Then there is mention made of a notice at Penlanfawr, I never heard of this. There are several other items which I could not get down quick enough to reply to.

Chairman.

40,570. There is one question which has been handed in by Mr. Thomas Davies: "Is it not a "fact that I sent word to Sir James Drummond "when the damage was actually being done?" That refers to the game?—Quite so. I never heard of it. The first I heard of it was on the 1st of August.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,571. Was that while the crop was standing?—The crop was standing on the 1st of August; it was just about ripe then.

Chairman.

40,572. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Is it not a fact "that a business man, when making a claim, "invariably asks for more than he is willing to "receive?"—I think that is the case from my experience of Mr. Thomas Davies.

40,573. "As Mr. Davies and you cannot agree "as to the amount of compensation, do not you "think it would be only fair and reasonable to "leave the compensation to be assessed by two

Chairman—continued.

"arbitrators?"—My only reason for not agreeing to that is, that as I explained to him he would appoint a prejudiced man of his own opinions, and I should probably have to appoint a man of the same sort on my side, and the matter will never get any further. I am quite prepared to take any unprejudiced man that he or I like to name, or that can be arranged, but I will not have a person to settle it from the immediate neighbourhood here; it is not fair to me.

40,574. You will not agree to the compensation being assessed by two arbitrators, one for you and another for the tenant?—I am prepared to accept that, but I do not think it would be of any use; in fact, I do not see, considering the time when the claim was made, how it is practicable to value it now. As I said, there were a lot of rabbits in the field, and it is impossible to estimate what damage was due to rabbits, what was due to pheasants, and what was due to crows and pigeons. I am quite prepared, and I am only too glad, to give full compensation for every damage done by game; I have every sympathy with damage done to the tenants by game. I would like just to refer to a letter with regard to the field that Mr. Davies has been mentioning. I think I have explained it pretty fully, but I might read this. This was a pasture field which was let at 40*l.* a year, and which he complained of being taken away from him, and he rather intimated that it was due to his coming forward to give evidence. I think I have explained the whole matter already, but I would like to read this letter just to show that there was no ill-feeling from our point of view at all:—

"To Mr. Thomas Davies, Tynycwm,
"Llansawel.

"Dear Sir, "28th December 1893.

"Referring to my letter to you of the 1st instant, a copy of which I enclose, I beg to say that if there is still any bite of grass on Caerhenfaes that you wish to feed off I shall be glad to let you stock it for another fortnight, that is, up to the 14th proximo, free of any additional charge. Please let me know if you would like to do so.

"Yours truly,
"D. W. Drummond."

40,575. That is written by yourself?—Yes.

40,576. Have you anything more to say?—I did wish to say a few words about the Cawdor Estate. There were some allegations made, which I do not think were very important, at Llanelly on Monday by Mr. Richard William Stephens, Coedybrain, Llandefeilog, that the custom on Lord Cawdor's Estate is for the landlord to do the repairs. Mr. Stephens made some rather serious allegations in the personal portion of his evidence, but I rather think they were corrected in cross examination. The point that I wish to deny is that the custom on Lord Cawdor's Estate is for the landlord to do repairs, and for the tenant to be compelled to pay interest. That is not the case. With respect to interest charged on buildings upon the Cawdor Estate I have to state that no such charge is ever made on any outlay of this kind other than (but only occasionally) additional buildings for special purposes asked for over and above those necessary to and originally let with the farm.

See 36,675.

Chairman—continued.

See 36,811.

The man Stephens lives some miles from the estate proper and there are only some three scattered farms within a radius of four or five miles of his district. The principal farm here is one on which a very large expenditure has been laid out, and from the figures which I beg to submit herewith it will be shown that a large additional rent being added to the farm, it has practically been reduced at the rate of 7*s.* 9*d.* per annum from the rent of 30 years ago, as far as regards the landlord's interest in it.

The second farm in this witness's district is one on which I have had an application to erect a range of boxes and stalls for hunters, of which the tenant makes a particular hobby and sells to English fox hunters at fancy prices. I replied that as there was already more than a sufficient supply of excellent buildings for the requirements of the farm, I could not erect loose boxes for him in view of the heavy annual outlay in necessary repairs on other parts of the estate that were being carried on. I further pointed out that in the event of his demise or quitting the farm a new tenant probably would not have a fancy for hunters, and the buildings would then be an unnecessary and expensive item to keep up. Finally, however, at his urgent request I consented to expend some 40*l.* at an interest of 5 per cent. I would not have alluded to these cases had not the witness Stephens invited me to do so. With respect to the game, though nominally reserved to the landlord on these farms, neither he nor his representatives have ever enjoyed the sporting over them, and they are entirely in the hands of the tenants. Then there was alleged to have been a refusal of a burial ground at Brynamman.

See 36,995, 37,048.

40,577. Yes, I remember that?—I saw Mr. Mousley yesterday, at Llandovery; he attended there with the intention of giving evidence, but the Court was so busy all day that he was unable to do so, and he begged me to state that he had no recollection of ever having had an application of that kind at Brynamman in this particular spot.

Mr. Grove.

40,578. It was with respect to the statement made in the evidence of the Rev. W. D. Thomas?—Yes, that was it. It was stated to be Mr. Rosser at first. I think Mr. Rosser was originally the agent of the Stepney estate, but I think Mr. W. D. Thomas must have been making some error.

40,579. Mr. Mousley gave him a written refusal, did he not?—He said it was Mr. Rosser. Then he said it was Mr. Mousley.

Mr. Grove—continued.

40,580. My note is this, that the reason he refused was because it did not join the present land.

Chairman.

40,581. I believe that is right. I have it down in this way: "The Rev. W. D. Thomas "says an application for burial ground of two "or three acres was made to Lord Cawdor's "agent" (I do not know what year that was in) "and was refused because it was not "adjoining the present burial ground, and "also because they did not think it would "suit." Then it came out in evidence, so far as I remember, that they had to buy two acres of land at 60*l.* an acre in consequence, though this land asked for was common land, and would have cost the chapel not so much?—Mr. Mousley instructed me to say that he had no recollection of the matter at all, and that it was not the case. If there is any doubt upon the matter, I should be very glad to make an explanation at a future sitting, and if the Commissioners should consider these sort of questions as regards burial grounds, &c. relevant to the inquiry, I shall be glad to submit a list of grants to Nonconformist bodies for chapels, burial grounds, schools, and residences made by Lord Cawdor during the last 20 or 30 years.

See 37,060–2.

40,582. We should like to have that. Perhaps you would put that in?—I said I would be very glad to do so, but I have not it with me now.

40,583. Would you put that in, and we will have it upon your evidence, or we will print it in the appendix?—Yes.

40,584. We shall be very glad to have that indeed?—Then at one of the sittings at Pembroke, Mr. Brynmor Jones asked Mr. Mousley, Lord Cawdor's agent, a question with reference to the expenditure on the estate. Mr. Mousley stated the expenditure on the estate, and Mr. Brynmor Jones wanted to know the rental. Mr. Mousley did not think at the time that he was in a position to state it, but Lord Cawdor has requested me to do so. I expected Mr. Mousley would have been called upon yesterday to state this. However, he was unable to do so, and I am very glad to be able to state what it is. His agricultural rental other than minerals (that is for farms, cottages, leaseholds of mills—every class of property other than mineral property) is 22,000*l.* a year, and the expenditure during the last 30 years has been 120,000*l.* in repairs.

See 28,736–28,747.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,585. But that includes household property, does it not?—The expenditure?

40,586. The income?—Yes, the income will include house property as well.

40,587. Is there a good deal of house property?—There is a good deal of house property, too. That would rather increase the annual rate of interest that Lord Cawdor expends of his income, you see. There is a considerable amount of property in the neighbourhood of Llandebie, and the neighbourhood of the works.

Chairman.

40,588. It is 50,000 acres. The income is 22,000*l.* a year?—Yes, and the expenditure during the last 30 years has been 120,000*l.*

40,589. That is 4,000*l.* a year?—Yes; then with reference to the evidence given by James Rees, farmer and cattle dealer, Talgarth, Llandovery, he submitted on the last page of his evidence that there was a list of farms on Lord Cawdor's estate that had been raised. The first eight farms are the property of Lord Cawdor, and they have been raised, I believe, to that extent, but that rise of rents was explained by Mr. Mousley, I think, in his evidence. He said that the estate had increased by some 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.* on the last valuation in 1862. See 28,659.

39,458, 467–8.

40,590. Then you corroborate that?—I corroborate the first part. The second part does not refer to Lord Cawdor's estate at all. There are two lists of farms submitted in James Rees' evidence. The first list only belong to Lord Cawdor.

40,591. The long list—the second list—does not belong to the Cawdor estate at all, and was not stated by the witness to belong to Lord Cawdor?—It does not belong to the Cawdor estate and has nothing to do with it.

Mr. William Davies called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

40,592. You live at Gelly?—Yes.

40,593. How far is that from here?—Four miles.

40,594. What do you wish to say?—Nothing particular, only that I went to ask Sir James a favour about getting some poles.

39,742.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,595. Larch poles?—Yes.

Chairman

40,596. What did he say?—That I had better go to ask for them from "Tynycwm" or from Simon Jones, the Plas.

40,597. Tynycwm being Mr. Davies' farm?—Yes.

40,598–99. The meaning of that was that you had better go and ask Mr Thomas Davies?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

40,600. What did you say to that?—"I will never succeed there at all," I said.

40,601. Was there any answer to that?—Yes, he said that he was unwilling—dissatisfied—because we had held a committee instead of going up to him first.

40,602. Did Sir James Drummond say that in a joking manner?—I cannot say about that, but I had the poles from him, at all events.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,603. Did Sir James tell you that Thomas Davies now managed his estate?—Oh, no, nothing at all; that was someone else here.

Chairman.

40,604. That is all you have to say?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM MORGAN called and examined.

Chairman.

40,605. You are Mr. William Morgan, a tenant farmer living at Rhydlydan, Pumpsaint?—Yes.

40,606. And you are appointed to give evidence by the farmers of Cayo?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was then read:]

Chairman—continued.

These show an increase of over 40 per cent. during the last 30 years.

RELATIONS OF LANDLORDS AND TENANTS.—The landlords are Conservatives and Churchmen; the tenants are Liberals and Nonconformists. Preference is not given to Conservatives and Churchmen by landlords, as there are very few such among farmers.

(1.) The following were expelled from their farms in 1869 by their landlord, Mr. John Battersby Harford, of Falcondale, Lampeter, for voting against his wishes:—David Walters, Maestroiddyn; David Davies, Garthlwyd; David Davies, Bryn and Rhosgoch; David Williams, Felinfach; and the tenant of Henffordd. No compensation whatever was paid to any of them for any improvements they had made. These men were supposed to be leading Liberals, and were replaced by Conservatives from the neighbourhood of Lampeter, most of whom, however, have by this time retreated.

(2.) I know of only one where a Churchman was preferred to a Nonconformist as tenant. The farm of Llwynfallen belongs to the parish church of Llanycrwys. When John Davies, the old tenant, died, his daughter and her husband applied for the farm. John Davies, his daughter, and his son-in-law, were known to be devout members and supporters of the cause at an Independent chapel called Carmel. But the farm was given to a Churchman, then living in a farm called Llofft-y-Cyff, or Crofft-y-Cyff, in the parish of Llanycrwys, belonging to the parish church of Talley. The new tenant of Llwynfallen was a perfect stranger to the locality of Carmel, and also somewhat of a newcomer to the parish of Llanycrwys, from the parish of Llanddewibrefi, in the county of Cardigan. This was in 1885.

(3.) A fruitful source of discord is the reliance which landlords place in sub-agents, who do their dirty work. The following instances will illustrate the relations of landlords and tenants, and the part played by the sub-agents.

The Brunant Estate—(a.) James Price, Pen-y-banc, wanted some wood to make a hay-loft in an outhouse. He was starting to see his landlord one day when he met a certain David Lloyd, Henllan, who was a favourite at Brunant. James Price told him where he intended going, and his object. "Nonsense," said David Lloyd, "what necessity is there going to Brunant for a trifle like that? Hew down those that suit you"; and so he did. On the morrow David Lloyd himself went to Brunant with the tale. James Price received notice to quit, and has had to pay an advance of 10*l.* ever since.

It should be noted that the David Lloyd referred to above was not an agent or sub-agent but was simply a tale-bearer, who informed Mr. George Lloyd, Brunant, of any wrongs or fancied wrongs done by his tenants. William Davies, of Pencwm, acted as David Lloyd's jackal and told tales to him. As far as it is known, neither had any distinct office or position in the management of the estate. These characters are perfectly well known in this part of the county. It is not known either what remuneration, if any, they receive. The instances given above are given as throwing light on the social condition of the country.

40,607. Is James Price in court?—I think so.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. Mr. David Price, the son of James Price, is in court.

(To Mr. David Price.) Did you hear this read out and are you prepared to substantiate it?

Mr. David Price. The thing happened before I recollect; but I have heard my father and mother say often that it did happen in that way.

Chairman.

40,608. (To the witness.) Your next instance is about David Davies, of Brynmagog Uchaf. Is David Davies here?—No; I told him to come, but he has not come.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,609. May I ask whether you are able to speak to these facts of your own knowledge?—Through others telling me. I am aware from inquiries from them. The tenant told me himself, but he is not here.

Chairman.

I think we can only take those that are here. You object, Mr. Vincent, to the case of David Davies?

Mr. Vincent. Yes, my Lord. I object to that because he is not here. In the other case I do not object.

Chairman.

40,610. The next instance is about William Davies, of Cefnllwynhir. Is he here?—He is dead.

40,611. Is there anybody here representing Mr. William Davies, of Cefnllwynhir?—No relation of his is here. There are some here who heard the story.

40,612. Is there any person here who will come forward and vouch that this is accurate and true?—I cannot make anybody who is dead come forward.

40,613. But can you produce anybody who knows anything about it?—It is rather an old story. William Davies, of Cefnllwynhir, was after that 27 years in Australia. He returned three or four years ago, and he is now dead.

Chairman.

Then I think we must omit that.

(4.) An enormous amount of friction is caused by the game. The gamekeepers naturally try to rear a good lot of pheasants, and these in time fly to the farmers' corn. Whatever damage may be done the keepers will deny, and for this there is therefore no consolation or compensation. Farmers are compelled to buy wire netting to protect their own cornfields mostly at their own expense, leaving the grazing fields to chance. Shooting cats and dogs has been common. It is rumoured that keepers get 1*s.* for every cat or dog's tail.

(The rumour is given merely as a rumour which is widely believed by the tenantry.)

A few instances will show what irritation has been produced by game preserving, &c.

(a.) A dog belonging to T. Davies, Tynllwyn, was shot by John Edwards, head keeper of Dolaucothi, on the road near Brunant, and was paid for by the family of Dolaucothi. This was in 1866. Edwards was never punished, and is still head keeper.

(b.) Another dog was shot in Bwllfa Wood by a keeper named Henry Hurlse, in the employ of a gentleman living at Glanrannell Park, and was ordered to be paid for by the magistrates.

(c.) Two farmers, William Williams, Pantmawr, and Morgan Jones, Hafod, were prosecuted for poaching at the instance and on the information of a keeper then in the employ of Mr. J. M. Davies, of Froodvale. Williams brought three independent witnesses—a smith and two farmers—that he was elsewhere at the time he was alleged to have been poaching, and was acquitted. Jones, however, though he produced the evidence of members of his household to prove his innocence, was found guilty on the testimony of the keeper and fined about 8*l.* in all.

(d.) Evan Davies, Blaen-y-Waun, was fined 5*l.* for poaching in 1864, and being unable to pay it, was trying to earn his fine by acting as a keeper, &c. catching other poachers. One day, seeing a hare on the Blaen-y-Waun farm, he went to the farmhouse of Blaen rhysglog and asked the tenant, William Williams, to accompany him and shoot the hare. Williams went, but failed to shoot the hare. He was then prosecuted for poaching on the Brunant Estate on Evan Davies' information, and was fined about 3*l.* by the magistrates at Cayo.

Nor are these solitary instances.

(e.) Penlan Farm, near Llansawel, once belonged to Mr. Harford, of Falcondale. The farm adjoins the Edwinsford Forest. The tenant, Ben Thomas, seeing more than sufficient game on the land, called in some friends with greyhounds to kill some of the hares. One day the head keeper of Edwinsford came to him and tried to stop him, but he took no notice. Finally the farm was sold to Edwinsford and the tenant was expelled therefrom in 1866, broken in circumstances and broken in heart, and died two years afterwards. The farm was worth 160*l.* annually.

(f.) Tenants have to beat the coverts when the landlords come to shoot.

See Evidence of next Witness.

40,614. Is it the custom now for the tenants to beat the covers?—Yes; it is in the agreements now.

40,615. But it is never carried out, I take it?—Yes, it is carried out too.

40,616. Against the will of the tenants?—Well, I do not know whether against the will of tenants; against the wishes of some of them, decidedly.

40,617. The last witness said beating is not expected, but that tenants are most eager to do it, that is what was handed in. Do you agree to that?—No, scarcely, I cannot agree to that, because I can produce agreements binding them to do so to-day if you wish to have them.

40,618. You do not think that they are very eager to do so?—We cannot draw a distinctive line. Some are more fond to go than others.

40,619. But they consider that they are obliged to go?—Of course, why not when it is in the agreement?

Hauling timber is another cause of complaint against the landlords. Landlords sell groves of timber for hundreds of pounds, and do great damage to the farmers' fields both by hauling the timber and by stacking the bark, but no compensation is ever paid by the landlord. The parish and county roads are often much damaged also, and the rates increased, but the landlord has to pay no compensation whatever. The tenant is also expected to haul the bark from the rick on his farm to the tanyard, be it far or near, and even the gate money did not use to be paid by the landlord. A grove on my farm was felled, and the haulage of branches, timber, and bark, was never paid for, nor any compensation for damage done. On the estate of Col. Methuen, of Clifton some trees are being annually felled, and no compensation is ever paid for the damage done to the land by the haulage of trees and bark.

Chairman—continued.

Insecurity of Tenure and no Compensation.—I have already given instance where tenants have been evicted or received notice to quit on account of their political opinions, or through some trivial cause. The letter which I produce from Mr. John Thomas, late of Cil-y-blaidd, will serve as an instance of how a tenant may be and is defrauded of the capital he has laid out in improving his farm. Mr. Thomas lived in the parish of Pencarreg, and was a tenant on the estate of Castell Pigyn, now owned by Mr. Meredith Lloyd Price.

[The following was then produced by witness:]

Hinton Manor,
Pembridge, Herefordshire,
25th November 1893.

Dear Sir,

"Your letter of the 17th inst. to hand. I made a claim of 500*l.* or near thereabouts (as it is a good few years ago I forget a good deal about the troublesome affair) for new buildings, built solely at my own expense, and general improvement of the farm, which was in a very bad state of cultivation when I took it, and they brought out a counter-claim for about the same amount to meet me, charging me for wear and tear (which they called dilapidation) of building a good part of such that cost them nothing for erecting, and neglectful state of the farm, as they called it, but which was in a high state of cultivation and clean, as many can testify. And the short of it is, that although I won the trial, I gained but very little owing to the heavy expense of the trial, which was to be tried by judge and jury at the Carmarthenshire Assizes, held then at Swansea, but was referred to arbitration, and was finally settled by such at Llanbyther. The most cruel part of all was to keep me in total darkness as to his (the landlady's nephew then acting as her representative) intentions, he simply saying that he giving me notice only meant that they wanted a small rise of rent, because that I had had the farm for many years at a reasonable rent. And when I went to see the landlady, whom I was forbidden to see, saying for an excuse that she was forbidden to see anybody by her medical attendant, then her nephew told me that the farm was let, and that a lease of 60 years was also granted upon it at the same rent as I paid annually for the last 35 or 36 years of my tenancy, so he said that he could do nothing afterwards. I went to the new tenant and offered him 500*l.* for his lease for Cilyb'aidd, to which he replied no, he would not sell it for 1,000*l.*, knowing well that he had had a good taking, consequently I was thrown overboard homeless, and very much grieved and cast down.

"Such is the outlines of my case, hoping it is not too late for your meeting, and that it will be of help to secure greater security and better treatment to my fellow-countrymen.

"With best regards,

"Yours respectfully,

"John Thomas."

Sometimes the incoming tenant has to satisfy the outgoing tenant's claim. The late Mr. Harford, of Falcondale, refused compensation to the administrators of the late Ben Lewis, Cwmcelynen, until he received a lawyer's letter demanding it.

Thomas Thomas, Dyryslwyn, tenant to Mr. Harford, agreed with the agent to leave behind a portion of farmyard manure and other things which were valued at 8*l.*, but not a penny was ever paid. This was in 1880, but since that time landlord, agent, and tenant have died."

Consolidation of Farms.—Few instances of this are in the neighbourhood. Maesyddintir was added to three other farms (see table given above), and Penarth Isaf added to Penarth Ganol. Refusals to repair labourers' cottages on farms are not unfrequent, and land has been appropriated, without notice, for breeding game, e.g., Maestroyddynfach, belonging to Col. Methuen, of Clifton.

There is no demand for leases, because the high rent, bad trade, and stringent covenants, make it difficult for a tenant to be released in times of distress. Some clauses in agreements (produced) are also stringent—copies of agreements are charged for. The executors of the late David Williams, Abernant Fawr, on the Edwinsford estate, were charged 15*s.* for a copy of an agreement, which was never produced. In another case the tenant was charged 10*s.* for a copy of an agreement, but a copy was supplied him. Margaret Thomas, Glantroyddyn, a tenant of Col Methuen, was charged 5*s.* for a copy of an agreement, but it was never supplied.

see 40,635.

On the Dolaucothi estate, a clause in the agreements provides that the tenants should act as gamekeepers.

On one or two estates coal and fowls are claimed.

40,620. Is that so still?—Now, up to the present time.

Chairman—continued.

Repairs.—In some agreements a clause is inserted that the tenant has to pay "Fire Insurance" on his master's buildings.

It is hard to get landlords to do any repairs. On one estate repairs are made in part by the tenant, in part by landlord. On others the tenant is expected to contract for repairs. He has to pay the men at once (a hard thing in these times), and be repaid by instalments. For example, Benjamin Williams, of Glanrannell Isaf, on the estate of Major Jones, Glanrannell Park, had to carry out repairs to the extent of 90*l.*, which sum was repaid in nine instalments. I have experienced the same thing twice. Rhydlydan has been in my family for very many generations, and is on the Henllys Estate. The present owner is Catherine Kennedy Erskine, Dun House, Montrose. I have twice repaired the buildings, and on both occasions was repaid in two instalments, and did not make any profit on the contract.

Commons.—A great deal of this district is contiguous to an extensive common, and the farmers of the district are compelled to pay higher rents on that account, as there are larger sheep walks near at hand. In this way landlords get all the benefit of common land. This practice has been detrimental to sheep farming, as the minor herd will be elbowed out by the major herd, and consequent ill-feeling between owners and furious quarrels between shepherds will ensue.

A common belonging to the village of Cayo was enclosed by the late Judge Johnes, of Dolaucothi, but under what authority and whether bought or not, I cannot say.

Remedies suggested.—(1.) General reduction of rents to counterbalance the general advance. Rents to be "fair" with some means of determining what a "fair" rent is, viz., by a land court or by compulsory arbitration.

(2.) Fixture of tenure.

(3.) Tenant to be compensated for all improvements whereby the farm is increased in value, the amount of such compensation to be assessed by arbitration, the landlord to have no option to refuse.

(4.) Rates to be levied on income, not on labour.

Mr. Grove.

40,621. When was the common at Cayo enclosed?—It was before the Education Act came into force.

40,621*a*. You mean the Commons Inclosure Act?

The witness withdrew.

General Sir JAMES HILLS-JOHNES, V.C., G.C.B., called and examined.

Chairman.

40,622. What statement do you wish to make, Sir James?—I merely want to make a denial to the statement made by the last witness to the effect that there is a clause in the agreement that the tenants should act as gamekeepers. It is not the fact at all, and it never has been. They are not asked to be gamekeepers, nor are they asked to beat unless they come of their own free will. Some of the tenants who live a long way off come and beat of their own free will; they all like to beat, and if they come and have a day's enjoyment they do so for their own pleasure, and we are always glad to see them, but as to enforcing their coming that is not the case.

See 40,614–9.

40,623. There is no clause in the agreement to that effect?—No, certainly not. I will send a copy of the agreement to you if you like to have it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,624. One question, Sir James. Is the tenant supposed to allow his name to be used in cases of prosecution for trespass for game?—No, we only prosecute on our own account.

40,625. Of course it does occur in some agreements?—We keep the game in our own hands, and therefore the tenant would not come forward, but we would ourselves prosecute. I do not think I have prosecuted at all. I have had one or two summonses taken out, and I have disposed of the case myself, not summarily, but I mean to say I have had the person up, and after talking to him have settled the matter without taking it up to court at all. I have treated the men in that way, and I think it has had a very wholesome effect upon the farmers. I do not wish to quarrel with them about game, and if they happen to trespass in pursuit of game it is much better, I think, that a landlord should settle the matter with them amicably rather than bring them into court, and I have always done so.

40,626. There is nothing in any of your agreements compelling the tenants to come to beat?—Certainly not.

Mr. Grove.

40,627. Do you preserve much game?—I preserve about 600 pheasants.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,629. Did you not generally make new agreements with the tenants after the passing of the Ground Game Act?—Yes, the tenants who were on the old system of duties continued on that system. We have got tenants who have been 200 odd years on the estate, and in those old agreements there was a certain clause upon which they gave duties, that is to say, as I have mentioned, chickens, fowls, and that sort of thing. When the new agreements were entered into and signed, that clause was put into the agreement, and is continued. Of late years in the case of the few changes that have taken place those duties have been knocked out and not included. They still exist in the case of the older tenants.

40,630. You did not ask the tenant which he would prefer; to pay these duties, or have it included in the rent?—Yes, we did. We have not asked the old tenants, because we never thought it was necesssary, as they have gone on, but if anyone does object I fancy they do know that they can object to it. In fact one or two, who have been in arrears have been told that they could settle them in any way. It is an old custom.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

40,631. What is it you wish to state?—I was not in Court when Mr. William Morgan's evidence was given, but I have hurriedly looked over the print of his evidence.

40,632. Is this what you wish to refer to: "Two farmers, William Williams, Pantmawr, "and Morgan Jones, Hafod, were prosecuted "for poaching at the instance and on the "information of a keeper then in the employ "of Mr. J. M. Davies, of Froodvale"?—No; that is true.

Chairman—continued.

40,633. I understand, then, that it is with regard to the question of the agreement and the payment of 5*s.*?—The matter of the poaching is a reflection on the Bench that convicted them, rather than upon me.

Chairman—continued.

40,634. But you do not wish to speak upon that?—No, certainly not, my Lord. It is quite true.

40,635. What do you wish to refer to then?—The witness in his evidence said: "The executors " of the late David Williams, Abernant Fawr, " on the Edwinsford Estate were charged 15*s.* " for a copy of an agreement which was never " produced." I have nothing to do with the Edwinsford Estate. There was no charge ever made for an agreement by me, but it has been the practice ever since I can remember for the tenant to pay for the stamp on the agreement. He pays nothing for the agreement itself, and the amount that is charged is the cost of the stamping only. I have no doubt the tenant of Glantroyddin was supplied with a copy of her agreement like every other tenant. I always give the tenant a copy.

Mr. Grove.

40,636. The stamp duty on an agreement would not be 15*s.*, would it?—I am not prepared to say what David Williams' stamp was.

40,637. No; the point is this, that the stamp cannot be 15*s.*, but the solicitor has charged something for his trouble in sending it to be stamped?—I do not refer to the 15*s.*; that does not affect me; I only refer to the 5*s.* which he says was charged for a copy of an agreement to Margaret Thomas, Glantroyddyn, which he says was never supplied. I am not aware of any provision on the Dolaucothi Estate agreement which compels the tenant to act as gamekeeper.

Mr. Richard Jones.

40,638. Are you agent of Colonel Methuen?—I am. I have nothing else to remark upon except that the figures which are in the schedule given here are incorrect; for instance, No. 25, Coedygof, the rent is 50*l.*, not 60*l.*

40,639. Yes, but the rent was 60*l.* 40 acres had been taken from it to plant, you will see?—That is quite possible. The whole homestead has been rebuilt. I may state with reference to the first paragraph that David Walters, Maestroyddyn (a large farm on Colonel Methuen's estate), sold the crops off his farm for two years running. It is said that he got no compensation on leaving.

Mr. Grove.

40,640. I suppose you thought he deserved none, then?—The estate was not in my charge then. I know the farm.

Chairman.

40,641. There is a question put by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Did any of the others get " the compensation that you are aware of"?—The estate was not in my charge at the time. I only know this from its happening to be in my neighbourhood. The estate has been in my charge seven years.

40,642. Then that is a question you cannot answer?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Morgan re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

40,643. The following question is handed in by Mr. Vincent: "On the second page of your " evidence you give an instance on the Brunant " Estate, that of 'James Price, Pen-y-banc.' " Can you state the date of that case"?—No, I cannot give the date.

40,644. We cannot take the cases referring to Mr. Davies as he has not come before us. That is quite understood?—Yes.

40,645. Then another question by Mr. Vincent.: "You say you can produce agreement " showing an obligation to beat covers"?—Yes, I can, my Lord.

40,646. Can you do so now?—I can now, so far as the words go.

40,647. Will you produce them?—Yes. (The witness handed in agreements.)

40,648. Is that agreement in force at the present time?—Yes, both of them.

40,649. It is an agreement dated the 10th of October 1889?—Here is another agreement, so that you can see who is right and who is wrong. (Witness handed in another agreement.)

Chairman—continued.

40,650. I am afraid I do not see what you refer to, Mr. Morgan?—I beg your pardon, I can show it at the end there, I think.

40,651. There is all about the hares and and rabbits and game at the beginning?—May I see the other one then.

Chairman.

Mr. J. Morgan Davies has signed that agreement, and perhaps he can tell us. Mr. William Morgan states that there is an obligation upon the tenants to beat game, but I cannot find it in the agreement.

Mr. J. Morgan Davies. I have never had such an agreement in my life.

Sir John Lleuelyn.

That agreement has been signed by you. We cannot find any such clause in it.

Mr. Morgan Davies. That is my signature, and that is my agreement.

Chairman.

There is nothing of the kind in it.

Mr. Morgan Davies. No, I never heard of such a thing, and I was never more surprised in my life than to hear it.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. My Lord, I should like before the Commission adjourns, to put in one agreement which is an old agreement of the Dolaucothi Estate. It is dated the 20th of June 1872, between John Johnes, Esq., Dolaucothi, and the tenant. There is one clause in it binding him "not to shoot or "destroy any of the game, fish, rabbits, or water-"fowl, on any of the said lands or in the river, "or suffer others to do so without leave from "the landlord, his heirs, or assigns, but to "preserve the same for the use of the landlord,"

Chairman—continued.

That is the agreement which Mr. William Morgan was alluding to when he made the statement which he has made. (Agreement handed in.)

Chairman.

Yes, I think that that is an old agreement.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. I only wish to put it in in order to show that Mr. Morgan had some ground for saying what he did.

Chairman.

Quite so. There is no obligation to beat. That is what was misleading.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. That is so, my Lord.

Adjourned to St. Clear's.

FORTY-NINTH DAY.

Second Court.

Town Hall, Llansawel, Carmarthenshire, Thursday, 19th April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CHARLES PRYTHERCH LEWIS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

30,645. 40,652. You wish to give some rebutting evidence?—Yes, my Lord.

40,653. Where do you live?—Llandingat, Llandovery.

40,654. Are you an agent or a landlord?—I am a brother of David Jones Lewis, the owner of the Gilfach and Llwyncelyn estates.

40,655. Whose evidence do you wish to rebut?—I believe a man named Daniel Davies, who gave evidence yesterday. I happened not to be in that court at the time, so that it was only told me afterwards. I think the purport of his evidence was this, that my brother brought pressure to bear and compelled his old Nonconformist and chapel tenants to go to church.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,656. That is my friend Mr. D. Jones Lewis of the South Wales circuit?—Yes, that is my brother.

Lord Kenyon.

40,657. It was the evidence of Mr. Daniel Davies, who said this: "On the estate of Mr. "D. Jones Lewis, Llwyncelyn, Llanwrda, Thomas "Jones, Hafod-y-Gleddau (once an attendant "at Crugybar Independent Chapel) William "Thomas, Troedyrhiw (once member of the "Waunifor Baptist Chapel), James Davies, "Penybanc (once attendant at Crugybar), and "John Williams, Blaenycwm (once member of "Siloh Methodist Chapel), all now go to "Llanwrda Church, at least when Mr. Lewis is "at home"?—All I have to say is that I know the estate and the tenants as well as my brother does, and I am intimately connected with every tenant on the estate, and I know that my brother never brought any such influence to bear on his tenants; they can go wherever they like.

40,658. Do you happen to know whether these gentlemen mentioned, go to church or to chapel?—I believe they do, but I do not know that they are regular attendants at either church or chapel. All I have to say is that he does not bring pressure to bear upon them to compel them to go to church.

40,659. You maintain that wherever they go it is from their own choosing and inclination?—Yes, certainly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. TIMOTHY PUGH called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

40,660. This statement which is about to be read has been examined by you, and you say it is correct?—Yes, I do.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

Evidence of TIMOTHY PUGH, Tenant Farmer and Merchant, Penlan, Pumpsaint.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

PERSONAL.—I have been selected among others at a public meeting to give evidence before the Land Commission on behalf of the farmers of the parish of Cynwil Cayo.

OCCUPATION.—Farms are held, as a rule, from year to year in this district, Michaelmas being the end of the year. There are some leases, but they are few. The farmers do not wish for them, as the land is too dear, and also because the terms of the leases are too stringent. I produce copy of an agreement on Dolaucothi Estate. The changes in the tenancy of farms are more frequent now than they were, owing to the fact that land is too dear. Farms are from 30 to 300 acres in extent.

ASSESSMENT OF RENTS.—The amount of the rent is generally determined by valuation, the valuer being invariably appointed by the landlord. Farms are let in the lump, and not at so much per acre. At other times the rent is agreed upon privately by the landlord and the applicant. There have been instances, however, where farms have been let by tender, e.g., Penarth and other farms on the Dolaucothi Estate, about 20 years ago.

WHY RENTS HAVE BEEN RAISED.—Rents are so high that many good tenants have been compelled to give up their farms, e.g., William Williams, Blaenrhysgog; John Williams, Beideiau; Lewis Davies, Pantadam; David Edwards, Brynteg. Some of them had failed to pay their way. Sometimes the rent has been raised after the property has been sold, e.g., Llwyndiriaid, Werndywyll, and Tynyrheol. At other times, the rent has been raised because there are so many applicants for a vacant farm. There is a land hunger in this district; and when a farm falls vacant, the applicants offer more for it than it is worth. For instance, when Tynycwm was vacant, there were four applicants for it, and five for Llwyndiriaid. It often happens, also, that rents are raised on improvements made by the tenants, as, for example, Aberbranddu, Blaenrhysgog, Maesymoy, Cefnllwynhir, Bwlch-y-gwynt, and Garth. At Cefnllwynhir, on the Brunant Estate, the tenant made hedges and ditches, planted wood, cleaned and reclaimed wild land, and limed. His improvements mounted to the value of 150*l.* At Garth the tenant made similar improvements to the value of about 100*l.* The tenant of Blaenrhysgog, on the Henllys Estate, reclaimed wild land, and fenced off the land from the common, and did other improvements to the value of 120*l.*

Mr. D. Davies, Tynycoed Court, has supplied me with the following instance:—In the year 1865 his parents went to live at Gelligaer, in the parish of Cellan. The house was built on the mountain, after dividing the common between the landlords of the parish. When they went to the place it was only a piece of wild mountain, uncultivated and unfenced. There was no garden made; even the houses were unfinished. They had to clear away the rubbish and to floor them. It was made up into fields by them, and was well cultivated. The land in some parts was very stony, the stones were all cleared, the wet land was drained, and a good road made from end to end of the farm. The estimated cost of the improvements made were from 80*l.* to 100*l.* The rent was 15*l.*, and the landlord,

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. David Davies, now of Trebanau Cellan, gave them a lease for 13 years, but it was only a verbal agreement. But in 1877, when the little farm was in a good condition, the landlord served them with a notice to quit, or to raise the rent from 15*l.* to 24*l.* They paid the 9*l.* advance for one year; then, as the rent was too high, they left the place, having not received a penny of compensation for the improvements made on it. Soon afterwards the landlord had to reduce the rent to the incoming tenant.

The advances in the rents will be seen from the appended tables, the figures in which are all (with the exception of Blaenrhysgog and Tyllwyd) taken from the rate-book of the parish of Cayo.

CONSOLIDATION OF FARMS.—There are many instances in this district of the consolidation of farms. The object was to save the repairs, and also to live with less labour. The consequence has been that land has gone out of cultivation. Upland farms have been, as a rule, thus consolidated. The population has gone down on this account. Aberbranddu and Pantysaeson, for example, have been joined of late years; many besides some years ago, such as Frongoch, Penrhiw, and Refel Fach; Brynteg and Maes-yr-haidd; and about one-third of the farms on the Cwmcothi. As an instance of land having gone out of cultivation, I may instance Gellifelen opposite the palace of Dolaucothi. The houses have gone down since the land has been given to the Ynysau. Where once grew the white trefoils and the golden grain, there is now naught but ferns and moss, furze and briars.

Small Farms.—There are some instances of sub-letting of small farms. In these circumstances the rent is much higher. As a rule, small farms are better cultivated than bigger farms.

Common Land.—When a farm is let which has a right of common, such right is taken into consideration when the rent is fixed, e.g., the rent of Esgerddar, landlord J. Jones, Aberdare, is 12*l.* or more on account of common right (rent 50*l.*); of Pontwyn, on the Dolaucothi estate, 15*l.*; Tanlan, on the Brunant estate, 10*l.* (rent 45*l.*); Blaenau, belonging to Lloyd Harris, 10*l.*; Bwlchau, landlord Philipps, 3*l.* 10*s.* (rent 16*l.*); and Blaen Cwmpedol, 4*l.* (rent 19*l.*); so that only the landowners derive any benefit from the right of common.

Very little is known about the common land in the parish. Enclosures have been made from time to time, but by what authority is not known.

A wood called the Allt Goch was enclosed about 50 years ago by the owners of Dolaucothi and Edwinsford. Before that time, the poor and others were allowed to go there to cut wood, but notice was given in Cwrtycadno, by the authority of the two gentlemen named, that no one should in future go to cut wood in the Allt Goch. The popular impression is that there was no lawful authority for doing this.

Several houses which had been built on Cayo Mountain, together with the land that was joined to them, were sold by the Crown to the squatters.

Game.—There are numerous complaints about game, and it is a cause of much bad feeling between landlord and tenant. The tenant does not dare to kill any kind of game, because he is afraid of his landlord. The tenant is expected to beat the coverts when the landlord shoots over the farm, and he may perhaps get a rabbit for his trouble, if a good bag has been made on the farm; otherwise, he will get nothing as a rule.

Great damage is often done by game to the tenant's crop, and seldom, if ever, is there any compensation paid. About four years ago damage to the extent of 20*l.* was done by the game to the crops of Cefn Coed Mawr, on the Dolaucothi estate. The tenant was given 5*l.* as compensation, the damage being valued by the landlord. Every year the damage by game amounts to from 5*l.* to 10*l.*, but the tenant gets no compensation.

Similarly, 5*l.* yearly damage is done to the crops at Blaenmeddyg and Abermangod on the same estate, without compensation.

Whenever the harvest happens to be somewhat late, very great damage is done to the crops at Llandre, on the Dolaucothi estate, but no compensation has ever been paid.

Buildings and Repairs.—Buildings, though far from being what they should, are somewhat better than they were. In some farms the landlord does all the repairs. On the Brunant estate, the tenant and landlord do them jointly, e.g., Troedyrhiw, Gellifawr, Hafod, and Bronfelin. The sub-tenant is expected to do all the repairs. As a rule, however, the tenant is supposed to build the walls and the landlord makes the roof. I know of many instances (see above) where tenants, after going to great expense, have had either to leave or pay an advanced rent. The consequence is that tenants are afraid to invest their money, if they have any, in their land for they are afraid their rent would be raised, and they would have no legal remedy against the landlord.

In many places the buildings are exceptionally bad, very often without ceiling or partition upstairs. There is often more snow on the beds than outside, and the out-buildings are also in a dangerous state. When the roof happens to be of straw, the tenant is expected to supply the straw and to pay for thatching.

The landlords have done nothing in the way of building sheds for fowls, or otherwise helping the tenant to find new ways to obtain the money to pay the rent.

The dairies in very many places are in a perfectly unfit condition, but I would not like to name them, lest it might have a prejudicial effect on the sale of their produce.

Agreements and Customs.—There are many penal clauses in the agreements, many of which are very stringent.

No compensation is ever allowed to the tenant for any damage done to the land by the haulage of timber which has been sold by the landlord, e.g., at Erwlwyd. The landlord pays no compensation, also, for damage done to the roads by extra haulage entailed by the sale of the timber.

There are often other demands on the tenant besides paying rent, such as hauling coal, gravel, and timber.

The landlord pays the income tax, while the tenant pays the tithes, land tax, chief rent, and other local rates.

Abatements and Reductions. — Of late, abatements of 2*s.* in the £ have been made on the rent audit day, if the rent is paid in full. No notice of such abatement is given, and the poorest tenants who live on the dearest farms have sometimes to suffer through failing to get any abatement.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Some reductions have been made in the rent. As a rule, no re-valuation takes place in these circumstances.

Local and Railway Rates.—Local rates have gone up very much, but the landlords have made no acknowledgment of this, but have on the contrary raised the rents.

The railway rates are heavy, and on that account the lime becomes very dear. We get our lime oftenest from the station. Artificial manures are also in great demand.

Coal (which is got from the station, very seldom from the pit's mouth) is in common use, though peat is still burned on the hillsides.

Labour.—Wages have risen during the last 50 years; 4*d.* and 6*d.* was the labourer's hire in those days in winter time and 1*s.* harvest time, while it is now 1*s.* 6*d.* and 2*s.* and 2*s.* 6*d.* harvest time. Other labour has gone up proportionately.

In spite of this, labourers have gone away, because farmers have not been able to pay for labour. The land is therefore worse cultivated, the crops are much lighter than they once were, and there is a great deal of waste land that could be reclaimed.

Food and Social Condition.—The food is, generally speaking, better than it was, but many of the small farmers live meanly still in order to make the two ends meet. Tea at 1*s.* per lb., and that without sugar; the bread is made of the wheat grown on the farm ("bara clatsh"); cheese made of skim milk; no butter except bread and butter on the day when the butter is made, are generally seen for breakfast. For dinner, broth with turnips or potatoes, if there has been a good crop, if not, plain broth ("cawl dwr") with an occasional onion, and now and then a little bacon in it. Tea, something similar to breakfast. For supper the broth is warmed which was left after dinner. Small farmers have the worst table. If many of them received of the crumbs that fall from their landlord's table, they would be very thankful.

The husband and wife and children work hard from morning to night, and on plain and even wretched fare. Yet on account of the high rents and bad trade, they cannot provide anything for old age. Nothing therefore awaits them but poverty. They fare like slaves, while their landlords live on the fat of the land.

"Yn dwyn ei geiniog dan gwynaw
Rhoi angen un rhwng y naw,— Edrych yn y drych hwn dro
Ŷr galon graig i wylo."

Professor Rhŷs.

That is taken from one of the best of our modern Welsh poets, and it describes the labourer bringing home his hard earnings and dividing the necessities of one between nine; and he says that once to look in this mirror would make even a heart of stone weep.

How High Rents are paid.—Farmers could never pay the high rents if it had not been that their children, who earn elsewhere, send their savings home to help their parents, e.g., Melin Rhos, Esgereithri, and Tynycoed. Instances are also very common where children work as servants at home without receiving servants' wages. The following table could easily be made much longer:—

Name of Farm.	Number and Value of Sons at Home.	Number and Value of Daughters at Home.	Rent.	Profit made on the Farm.
	£	£	£ s.
Abermangoed	2,30	1,10	44 10	None.
Tyllwyd	1,15	1, 8	36 0	None.
Tanlan	1,15	2,16	45 0	None.
Erwlwyd	1,15	2,16	44 0	None.
Esgereithen	1,15	—	24 0	None.
Tyncoed	—	2,25	—	—
Hendre	1,20	1,15	—	—
Troedrhiw	2,40	1,10	—	—
Garth	2,40	2,20	—	—

Often rent is paid with borrowed money. Not a year passes without my lending money to someone or other to pay rent, and tenants often sell their animals at too low a price in order to be able to pay their rents in full.

Relations of Tenants and Landlords.—Some landlords live here, others are non-resident. Almost without exception they are all Churchmen and Conservatives, while the tenants are Liberals and Nonconformists. The agents have not, as a rule, had any practical training to fit them for the work. Lawyers and bankers form the majority of them, and the consequence is that particular inconvenience is felt because the agents are unfit and unable to judge the value of land and the improvements that are made on it.

Suggestions.—It is necessary to have a land court to assess the rent. The farmer should be made secure in his holding, and should have full compensation for all his unexhausted improvements when he leaves his farm. If this were done, the land would be better cultivated, the soil would be more productive, and the condition of the agricultural population would be far more desirable.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,661. Your proof is so detailed and particular that I do not think it leaves much for me to ask you about. We are much obliged to you for it, but let me ask you this: How many tenants were at the public meeting who selected you to give evidence?—About 80 to 100.

40,662. From which parish did they come?—Cynwil Cayo.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

40,663. With regard to the case you mention on the first page of your proof, the instance supplied by Mr. D. Davies, of Tynycoed Court as to Gelligaer, you say the rent was 15*l.*, and the landlord gave them a lease for 13 years, but it was only a verbal agreement. Do you mean by that that he promised that they should have a lease for 13 years?—Yes.

40,664. Did they get the lease?—No, it was only verbal, you know; there was no written lease given.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,665. What covenant do you consider stringent in that agreement?—There was one clause as to draining. When the landlord drains there is a clause pledging the tenant to pay interest on the money expended; there is no limit to the time; the rent may be raised continually.

40,666. No period of exhaustion?—Yes, no period of exhaustion.

40,667. Then you consider that the rent should not be at all times fixed by the landlord's valuer?—There ought to be two valuers, one on both sides, I should say, before they could have a fair valuation.

40,668. Suppose they cannot agree?—Then get an umpire.

40,669. Then you speak with regard to farms being let by tender. What is the reason of that?—Land is so scarce in the country, and they are offering more for a farm than they can give, the consequence is they cannot pay, and the land is not properly cultivated. There is land hunger; there is not sufficient land for the population, so many farms have been consolidated.

40,670. Are they looking forward to have the rent reduced when they offer such a price?—I cannot say about that.

40,671. What class of applicants are generally coming for these farms; are they fresh men, or already in possession of farms?—Men who have not been in possession of a farm before, and who offer a high rent in order that they might have a farm.

40,672. Is it not the case that many find their own places too dear, and think another place is better?—That is also often the case.

40,673. Do you find that the rent is very often reduced to an incoming tenant, when the old tenant is turning out, because the rent is too high?—That has been so.

40,674. Are all these farms on the same estate that you have mentioned in the first part of your evidence?—No.

40,675. On different estates?—Yes.

40,676. You say some of the land has been out of cultivation?—Yes.

40,677. "Where once grew the white trefoil "and the golden grain there is now nought but "ferns and moss, furze and briars." Has there much land gone out of cultivation in that way?—Yes, a good deal.

40,678. For what reason?—There are various reasons. One reason is that there is no security of tenure for the tenant. Some have farmed well, and in consequence their rents have been raised.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

40,679. It would surely pay the tenant to see clover growing rather than fern?—The farms are consolidated, and there are not sufficient labourers on the farm to cultivate it.

40,680. Then you consider that farmers are not now able to employ the labour on the land they formerly did?—Yes, they are not able to make enough on the farms so as to be able to be in a position to pay labourers.

40,681. Then with regard to this wood. Was the wood at one time common?—Yes.

40,682. What kind of game does all this damage as a rule?—Pheasants.

40,683. Have you the right to kill the ground game?—No, they do not allow us to kill any.

40,684. But the law allows you?—Yes, but we dare not go with the law.

40,685. Why?—We are afraid of our landlord.

40,686. Do you think the landlord will deal with you contrary to the law?—He can give us notice to quit and send us away.

40,687. Is it possible he would do that when the law allows you to kill rabbits?—It is not necessary for him to give his reasons why he evicts us.

40,688. Who is the landlord?—Mr. Lloyd, of the Brunant estate.

40,689. Do you ever claim compensation for any damage done by the game?—Those who are suffering damage on the estate of Sir James Hills Johnes have made complaints to him.

40,690. Did he hear the complaints and give them redress?—He gave Mr. Davies, of Cefncoedmawr, 5*l.* once.

40,691. Do you consider that sufficient?—He said that he had had a loss of 20*l.* It was on the wheat field.

40,692. Who is it that values the damage done by the game as a rule?—There has only been that 5*l.* paid, and Sir James Hills Johnes valued that himself.

40,693. Are there many tame pheasants there?—Yes, very many.

40,694. Do they supply these pheasants with plenty of food?—Not in the morning, because they have gone right over the fields before they can get their food.

40,695. They do not feed them early enough?—No, and not enough for the pheasants that are there, because they spoil the crops.

40,696. Then you pay the land tax, do you not?—Yes.

40,697. Are you aware that that is a landlord's tax, and not a tenant's?—No, I was not aware.

40,698. Then with regard to the sons and daughters brought up on the farm. What value in respect of clothing and pocket money do the sons have in the course of a year. You put down two sons at 30*l.* a year?—Some get more than others.

40,699. Take it generally; what do you suppose?—Does he have more than one suit of clothes a year?—He gets one suit of clothes, and working clothes as well.

40,700. How much do you value that at?—It might amount to 7*l.* more or less.

40,701. Suppose you kept grown-up men servants instead, how much would their wages be?—25*l.* to 30*l.*

40,702–3. According to your reckoning there is something like 18*l.* difference between the value of what he has and what he ought to have?—Yes.

40,704. What becomes of that 18*l.*?—The whole goes to the landlord.

40,705. I suppose it is just the same case with the daughters?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

40,706. Have you plenty of cottages in your part of the country?—No, there are no labourers to be had, and no work for them.

40,707. Then you cannot say there are too few cottages?—No, those who have been yonder have failed to live, and they have gone off to Glamorganshire.

40,708. What drove them away—lack of work?—Yes, lack of work, and failing to get payment for their services.

40,709. Have you any farm servants?—Yes.

40,710. What sort of accommodation have you for them, where do they spend their evenings, and where do they sleep?—In the house. The young men in the neighbourhood go to the blacksmith's shop.

40,711. You have no room for them in the dwelling-house?—No.

40,712. There is no room for them in the kitchen?—No.

40,713. You do not welcome them there?—There are some good houses, and in some there is only one fire-place, consequently the men servants go to the blacksmith's shop and so on, and the family sit round the fire, and there is no room for the servants.

40,714. They go to the blacksmith's shop?—Yes.

40,715. Where there is a chance of a good fire?—Yes.

40,716. Do they not go to worse places than the blacksmith's shop?—In the higher part of the neighbourhood, that for which I speak, there is no other place for them to go to.

40,717. What do you think these men would do if they had a place to sit down in the evening. Would they read, do you think?—Many of them.

40,718. You say all the houses are not like that. Some have proper accommodation?—Yes. There are some very good houses, but some farmers are only able to keep one fire going in the house.

40,719. Where do the farm servants sleep?—In the tallat (Welsh, towlod).

40,720. Are those pretty comfortable?—No, they are not very comfortable.

40,721. We heard this morning of one man who used to read in bed in one of them?—Then I should say that it was a somewhat comfortable place.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

40,722. Is that not a little dangerous with regard to setting the place on fire?—Yes, it was dangerous.

40,723. Who insures? Is there any insurance on the farm? Do you insure the farm buildings?—No, they do not.

40,724. Do you ever have fires as a matter of fact?—Yes, some have caught fire yonder.

40,725. You have described the food in your statement?—Yes.

40,726. The fare is very hard which you describe, is it not?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,727. Do you find the hedges and the ditches kept up now as well as they were formerly?—No, not anything like.

40,728. Then it is not for the scarcity of work that the men go away. Which is the scarcer, the work or the money?—The work and pay.

40,729. You said that the hedges and ditches were neglected?—Yes.

40,730. Why not put them to build up the hedges and open the ditches?—Because the farmers have not enough money to pay them.

Lord Kenyon.

40,731. Have you got the instances where the farms have been let by tender on the Dolaucothi estate?—They are down here.

40,732. Are there many of them?—Penarth is one, and I believe Cefn Coed.

40,733. Were they advertised in the papers?—They were advertised on placards on the walls.

40,734. Were they let to the highest bidder?—Yes.

40,735. What was the size of them?—I cannot say.

40,736. Is the one on the Penarth estate still let to the same tenant?—No, not now. The tenant has left.

40,737. Does the present tenant pay a less rent than the old tenant?—Yes.

40,738. How many do that on the Dolaucothi estate?—That was on the Dolaucothi estate—Penarth is a farm on the Dolaucothi estate.

40,739. Do you know what number of pheasants were reared at Dolaucothi—tame birds?—Many scores. I believe there were some hundreds.

40,740. Have they ever applied for compensation, with the exception of the one case you give?—Yes, several of them stated that the game were doing a great deal of damage, but Sir James says that they do not.

40,741. Perhaps they cannot prove it to Sir James's satisfaction. Is that it?—Oh, yes, they can easily enough.

40,742. I should have thought Sir James would have met them?—They do not like to press him.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

40,743. There is a good feeling existing between Sir James and his tenants, is there not?—Yes.

40,744. A very friendly feeling?—Yes.

40,745. Is Llandre near the house?—No, there is one farm between it and Dolaucothi.

40,746. It is near the wood where the pheasants are reared?—Yes, they rear the pheasants at home, and then they take them in lots here and there, and distribute them.

40,747. Do they raise much corn at Llandre?—Yes.

40,748. How much?—I cannot say how much.

40,749. There are some questions by Mr. Stephen: "When were the improvements at "Cefn Llwyn Hir made"?—From the year 1860 to 1870.

40,750. "When were the improvements at "Blaen Rhysgog made"?—About the same time.

40,751. "Are you certain that none of the "improvements at Davies' farm at Cellan were "made by the landlord"?—No, no improvements were made by the landlord.

40,752. "Was not the price of stock as high "in 1877 as it has ever been"?—Prices were very good in 1877. I cannot remember exactly.

40,753. "Was it not a condition of the lease "of the farm that the tenant should do the "repairs which he did, or some of them"?—What place?

40,754. The farm at Cellan. Was it not in his lease that he had to do the repairs?—Yes, some of them.

40,755. "How do you know what proportion "of the rent is demanded on account of rights of "common"?—It is on the receipt for rent in the case of Blaenau. I asked them how much they considered they received from the mountain, and they considered their holdings were too high even then.

40,756. It is the tenant's estimate, I take it?—Yes.

40,757. "Can you give any instance of interest "being charged on the cost of draining"?—Oh, yes; Gilfach.

40,758. Any other?—I cannot remember now.

40,759. "Are you aware that there are two "kitchens in every farmhouse on the Dolau-"cothi estate"?—No, I do not know that, and there is not either.

40,760. "When were the improvements at "Maesymoy made"?—I do not recollect the dates.

40,761. "How do you get at the rents which "you allege are paid for the common rights." I think you said you got them from the tenants themselves?—It is only on the Blaenau receipt, but I got the rest from the tenants.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Morgan Davies re-called and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

40,762. Have you heard the evidence of Mr. Timothy Pugh?—Yes.

40,763. Have you anything you wish to say in rebutting that evidence?—Mr. Timothy Pugh says, "It often happens, also, that rents are raised "on improvements made by the tenants, as, for "example, Aberbranddu, Blaenrhysgog, Maesy-"moy, Cefnllwynhir, Bwlch-y-gwynt, and Garth." My interest is in Maesymoy. I am quite sure that no rents have been raised on improvements in Maesymoy. I can certify that for 20 years during which the property has been in my charge. A very large outlay had been made there by the landlord some years previous to that, but I am not aware of any improvements made by the tenant; he was a very good farmer and his rent has not been raised within a reasonable time. It remains now as it was for 20 years, and how much before that I am not prepared to say. As to the consolidation of farms, Brynteg and Maes-yr-haidd, that is true so far as I know. New buildings were erected on Brynteg, the old buildings having gone down completely, and Maes-yr-haidd was added to it many years ago. I cannot give you the date. As to Gellifelen on the Dolaucothi estate, there have been no buildings upon it within my recollection.

40,764. It is only a small place?—Yes Gellifelen is a bit of hillside amongst some woods.

As to the statement that the rents fixed on rights of common are what he states, as a matter of fact there is no separate rent fixed on the rights of common. The rights of common appurtenant to farms are considered in estimating the rent, but there is no separate rent placed upon them. He says: "A wood called the Allt "Goch was enclosed about 50 years ago by the "owners of Dolaucothi and Edwinsford. Be-"fore that time the poor and others were "allowed to go there to cut wood, but notice "was given in Cwrtycadno, by the authority of "the two gentlemen named, that no one should "in future go to cut wood," and so on. I have simply to state that the wood he names is on a Crown manor. I am agent for the Crown, and that wood is under my charge. That is as much common now as it ever was; it is not enclosed at all. It is waste of the manor depastured in common by the cattle and sheep of the commoners.

As to the damage on Cefn Coed Mawr by the rabbits, I understand there was some damage there. I believe Sir James Hills Johnes and the tenant settled it very satisfactorily to both parties. I am not aware of damage on Blaenmeddyg and Abermangod. There are no covers on Blaenmeddyg. On Llandre there is a cover where pheasants are kept. The rent of that farm was reduced two or three years ago 10*l.*

As to the haulage of timber, there was a large wood sold last year on the Dolaucothi Estate, the two tenants affected were the tenants of Cefn Coed Mawr and Llandre, and both were compensated, the purchasers of the timber declined to do so at first; they were bound down by agreement, and were compelled to do it. I saw that it was paid.

Abatements which are made out of the rents are made to the tenants, whether they pay on the rent day or whether they pay by instalments afterwards. When they complete the payment of the rent, the abatement is always made.

40,765. Can you say what amount of game is reared at Dolaucothi?—I should think about 500 pheasants.

40,766. On the whole estate?—Yes, on the whole estate.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,767. Do you know the farm of Esgerddar?—I have nothing to do with it. I know it. It is at the upper end of the valley.

40,768. What would it be worth without any common right?—I do not know the acreage so cannot give you an opinion offhand. I know the farm. It abuts on the common. The common rights would be very material to it.

40,769. You are not able to make a calculation and tell us what proportion of the rent of a farm with the right of common, the right of common would represent?—It would depend very much upon what part of the common it was, whether there was very great pressure from the outside upon it.

40,770. I suppose with regard to the commons up in this part of Wales, as in the other parts, the common is as a rule without stint?—Without stint.

40,771. And I suppose by custom the sheep on a particular farm are limited to a particular portion of the waste?—Invariably so.

40,772. What do you think is the origin of that. Do you find any trace of agreement between themselves, or setting out of boundaries—yrhosfas, as they are called?—I think the boundaries of sheepwalks were settled by the tenants themselves for their mutual convenience. In the Llanddewibrefi inclosure, of 16,000 acres, in which I acted as valuer, the common was, with the exception of a small portion near the village, entirely divided into sheepwalks and claimed as private property. In the actions which followed, viz., the Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Griffiths, and the Same v. Johnes, it was, however, decided that the whole of the common was waste of the manor, this mode of using the common not being inconsistent with the rights of commoners in the exercise of their rights of common.

40,773. A similar question arose in a case before the House of Lords, in which the question was the title to certain waste land, and the question arose as to what improvement used to be attributed to this so-called exclusive possession, whether it was evidence of ownership or was simply to be referred to this custom of splitting up the waste of the manor in this way. Now what do you think from your experience as a land agent? Do you think any such bargains have been come to?—No. The state of the commons at the present time is simply this—all who are not brinkers are out of it altogether. All through these parishes we sent our sheep and cattle and ponies up to the mountain, but it became less and less worth while to send them up there; the brinkers took advantage of their position, and by means of their dogs they drove us away—so that as a matter of fact the brinkers hold the commons.

40,774. Do you think, as a matter of fact, each of the different parts have been allocated to the different farms for centuries?—No, I should not go so far as that, but in Llanddewibrefi there was strong evidence of it.

40,775. Do they put any boundary stone or any mark?—No, it is well known to the sheep and to the shepherds.

40,776. I was in a case in the county of Glamorgan where one of the agents said that the sheep knew the boundary perfectly well, and that, perhaps, one would go up to a stone and then smell it and walk back again, knowing that he was not to go out of the boundary?—Sheep bred on the mountains know the boundaries of their "runs" perfectly.

40,777. Those are very often flocks of sheep which have been on the farm for some time, and have been handed down with the possession?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,778. Is there not such a thing as walking the parts in possession?—I do not think the boundaries of sheep walks are walked, but the boundaries of manors and parishes are often walked. I have had a great deal to do with the enclosure of waste land, perhaps more than any other valuer in Wales. I always enclose a common with great regret. I think it is a pity to shut up with wire fences fine open pieces of land. I am certain it does not pay. Using poor land in small quantities does not pay; the cost of looking after it is too great. I have always been strongly in favour of the regulation of commons in accordance with the provisions of an Act of 1876 "for the regulation and improvement of commons."

40,779. I gather from what you say that you think that this division of the commons into these rhosfas is very detrimental to the interests of the cottagers, and so on?—As a matter of fact, the cottagers are not affected at all, except in some cases near villages. Taking the waste lands generally they are at an elevation of 1,000 feet, and upwards. The cottagers are not interested; they are too far away. With respect to a cottage near a common, the cottager would naturally send his cow up, but it would not pay the labouring population to cultivate it.

40,780. You admitted the man mentioned by Mr. Pugh in the first instance was a good farmer?—Maesymoy?

40,781. The first case he mentions?—Yes, Maesymoy. He is dead, but his widow is there at the same rent. He was a very good farmer; he has been there for very many years.

40,782. If he is really a good farmer he improved his land?—Yes.

40,783. It is natural for him to think that the rent has been advanced, owing to that?—The rent has not been advanced since I have had to do with the estate, that is for 20 years.

40,784. I think Mr. Pugh corrected himself. He said he had had the information as to the proportion of the rent for the common, and the farm, from what he had heard?—Yes. His evidence is not of value in consequence. Perhaps I may be permitted to make one more remark. A good deal has been said about the accommodation in farm houses, and it is a very proper subject. I wish to state that so far as the Dolaucothi estate is concerned, I do not believe there is an estate in the county of Carmarthen where the buildings are so good, or where the accommodation is so good. The majority of the farm buildings have two large kitchens and a parlour on the ground floor. They were built, most of them, on the plans of the late Mrs. Johnes—an expensive plan, but a plan which gives a great deal of space. Perhaps, I may say further, that in a great many of the farms they all live in the back kitchen, the other kitchen and parlour being hardly ever occupied, so that the accommodation is at their command, though they do not avail themselves of it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

40,785. How is it the custom of allowing them to take the wood from the timber has been discontinued?—They take it. Anyone in the parish who likes to go and cut wood in Alltgoch on Caio Common does it.

40,786. I think they do not?—It is not worth their while. The valley in which it is situate is one mass of oak scrub. There is any quantity of it. We sell what we can, but it is not worth anything—it is not worth carrying away.

40,787. What was the authority for the notice given at Cwrtycadno by the authority of the two gentlemen named, that no one should in future go to cut wood in the Allt Goch?—I do not know; I have been in charge of the Crown lands for nearly 40 years. This place is in my parish, and the Dolaucothi estate has been in my charge for nearly 20 years; and if anyone trespassed on the Crown lands it would be my duty to report him.

40,788. There is no authority for that notice, whatever it may be?—No.

Professor Rhys.

40,789. Can you offer any explanation, what it refers to?—There is some oak scrub on the side of the mountain where anyone can go and get wood.

40,790. What is the meaning of locating the notice at Cwrtycadno?—Cwrtycadno is a little village.

Lord Kenyon.

40,791. Has Sir James Drummond any wood adjacent to this?—No; Sir James Drummond's property does not go up that valley at all. Sir James Drummond's predecessors in title had some farms up there, but they have been sold some years ago.

40,792. With regard to the two kitchens, do you find that farmers can afford to keep a couple of fires going?—In this part of the country especially, there is any quantity of wood to be got.

40,793. You are speaking with regard to the accommodation in the farm houses?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. TIMOTHY PUGH recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

40,794. You wish to make a further statement?—Yes; I do.

40,795. What is it?—In connexion with Allt Goch and with regard to what Mr. Davies said here I should like to ask, is it not true that Dolaucothi has sold that place to William Williams, Pen-y-bont?

40,796. He cannot sell a Crown manor. It is not his to sell?—They have sold that Allt.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

40,797. Are you referring to the same place?—I refer to Allt Goch, a little above Cwrtycadno, bordering on Penrhiw and Frongoch, in the parish of Cayo.

Mr. John Morgan Davies. It is another place, then, my Lord.

Witness.

I have nothing further to say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN DAVIES re-called and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

40,798. You wish to make a further statement?—Yes. I simply state that there are not such rights existing for the last 50 years to my knowledge. It has been private property; it is not near the waste, nor is there any pretence for stating that any one had a right.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,799. He does not put it as a legal claim. The question is whether or not people were in the habit of doing it. It is put as a hardship?—I think they have more wood on Cwtycadno now than they know what to do with. There is any quantity rotting there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

40,800. This is what he says in his statement: "A wood called the Allt Goch was "enclosed about 50 years ago by the owners of "Dolaucothi and Edwinsford. Before that time "the poor and others were allowed to go there "to cut wood, but notice was given in Cwrty-"cadno, by the authority of the two gentlemen "named, that no one should in future go to "cut wood in the Allt Goch"?—I never heard of it. I am not aware of any such notice.

40,801. You state it is private property?—Yes. If it is not the Alltgoch on the Caio Common it is private property.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon

40,802. This statement has been read to you, and you state that it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement was then read:]

Evidence of THOMAS WILLIAMS, tenant farmer, Ffynonlas, Cayo.

PERSONAL. I am a tenant of Sir James Drummond, Baronet, of Edwinsford, and was born and bred on this farm. Personally I have no cause of complaint against my landlord, whom I have always found kind and pleasant. I have been selected with several others at a public meeting to give evidence for part of the parish of Cayo

The acreage of the parish is 22,212; the gross rental is 10,374*l.*; rateable value, 9,525*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* Twenty years ago the gross rental was 9,596*l.*; 30 years ago, 8,466*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*; 40 years ago, 7,709*l.* 1*s.* The rateable value 20 years ago was 8,667*l.*; 30 years ago, 8,466*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*; 40 years ago, 7,709*l.* 1*s.*

The parish contains upland farms and mountain farms, which form the major part, but the portion which I was entrusted with contains the best land in the parish, viz.:—

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Eleven farms belonging to Sir James Drummond (Ffynonlas, Ynysau, Pwll-y-baw, Goleugoed-uchaf, Goleugoed-ganol, Goleugoed-isaf, Tynywaun, Cilgawad, Bronfin, Garth, and Garreg); three farms to Mrs. Morgans, Albert Mount, Cayo (Maescadog, Cilmaen, and Grofft; four farms to Sir James Hills-Johnes, K.C.B., Dolaucothi (Penlan-wen, Ynysau-uchaf, Garnoithe, and Glanrannell); and two farms to Colonel A. P. Jones, Glanrannell Park (Cwmbachstel and Cwmgerwn). See 42,280.

RENTS.—The rents of these farms have gone up over 20 per cent. during the last 40 years, as the following table will show:—

	1853.	1893.	Increase.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
11 Edwinsford farms	686 6 0	837 0 0	150 14 0
4 Dolaucothi farms	247 5 0	288 0 0	40 15 0
3 Albert Mount farms	118 0 0	148 10 0	30 10 0
2 Glanrannell farms	85 0 0	106 10 0	21 10 0
Total	1,136 11 0	1,380 0 0	243 9 0

The advance on the Edwinsford estate was made in consequence of a valuation which was made about the year 1862, and another about 1878. In the other cases the advance was made on a change of tenancy or after a sale of the property.

LABOUR.—During the last 30 or 40 years the price of labour has gone up enormously.

40,803. You are on the same farm that your father had?—Yes.

40,804. You are giving now the wages that you would have to pay for a chief servant man?—Yes.

40,805. Whom you do pay, in fact?—Myself.

40,806. You put yourself down as the chief servant man?—Yes.

40,807. You have to dispense with a chief servant?—Yes.

I submit the following figures, which I have extracted from my father's account books (produced), showing the difference in the servants' wages in 1844 and now:—

—	1844.	1893.	Increase.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Chief servant man	5 5 0	25 0 0 (myself)	19 15 0
Second servant man	5 2 6	16 5 0	11 2 6
Chief servant girl	3 0 0	14 0 0 (wife)	11 0 0
Second servant girl	1 0 0	12 0 0	11 0 0
	14 7 6	67 5 0	52 17 6

I submit the following figures, which show the difference in the price of labour on another farm in the district, named Maes llanwrthwl:—

—	1851.	1893.	Increase.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Chief servant man	7 10 0	22 0 0	14 10 0
Second servant man	5 10 0	12 10 0	7 0 0
Chief servant girl	3 7 6	12 10 0	9 2 6
Second servant girl	3 0 0	9 10 0	6 10 0
Third servant girl	- - -	4 10 0	4 10 0
	19 7 6	61 0 0	41 12 6

The consequence of the increase in the rent and in the price of labour is that the farmers have to do away with labour as much as they can, and land will eventually go out of cultivation, so that the landlord will have to suffer in the long run.

WHY RENTS ARE HIGH AND HOW TENANTS PAY THEM.—With reference to one of the farms mentioned above, Cwmgerwn Uchaf, which is on the estate of Colonel Jones, Glanrannell, I wish to submit these letters (produced), from the son and daughter of the late tenant. It will appear from these letters that the tenant had done all the haulage for the new buildings, as well as paid for a portion of the materials, on the understanding that there would not be a rise in the rent. But the rent was raised from 20*l.* to 30*l.*, so that it was impossible for him to pay for it, and the consequence was that he had to appeal to the children for help.

[Translations of letters produced by Mr. T. Williams, Ffynonlas Cayo.]

"Tyrbach Farm, Pentregethin,
"Swansea, January 14, 1894.

"DEAR SIR,

"THE rent of Cwmgerwn about 25 years ago was 20*l.* The houses were built by my father, the landlord paying the mason, paying for the lime, and giving the wood; my father hauling the materials, paying the carpenter, and paying for the slates. The rent was raised, as nearly as I can remember, about 20 years ago.

"I gave him help many times to pay the rent. I heard my father say that my sister had lent him money, but he did not say how much.

"WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

"Cilgawad, Cayo, Llanwrda,
"February 9, 1894.

"DEAR SIR,

'IN answer to your letter of the 29th ult., I wish to inform you that I gave 30*l.* of my savings from my wages to pay for Cwmgerwn I gave them in different sums as he had need of them. My father said that I would get them back after his day. I know also that my brother helped him many times.

"As for the building, I cannot speak of them, as they were done before I can recollect.

"Yours truly,
"MARGARET WILLIAMS."

I know of farmers who had several children working at home on the farm with no wages except food, clothes, and a little pocket money, but who can with difficulty make the two ends meet, though nothing is put by against the time when the children will marry and want to settle down in the world. For instance, two children work at home at Pencilmaren without wages—a grown up son and a daughter. The rent used to be 35*l.*, and is now 44*l.*, but the tenant could never pay it were it not that his children save him servants' wages.

Others again have children in service who help their parents to pay the rent as in the case of Cwmgerwn-Uchaf.

I know of others who have farms of their own, and who give the rents they receive for them to pay the landlord; for instance, Mr. Evan Davies Maes llanwrthwl gives 30*l.* from his own place to his landlord; the late Mr. James James, Ynysau, gave all that he received for his little farm; and Mr. Timothy Davies, Ynysau, gives a part, though he cannot say how much.

I am very doubtful whether landlords know the real situation in which their tenants are placed, as there are so many applications for farms when they become vacant. This, perhaps, causes them to think the land is not too dear. The fact is that the majority of those who apply for vacant farms consider the farms they hold themselves too dear, and believe every one is better than their own. People have also come to feel that it is respectable to be a farmer. Servants who have been earning good wages, and who have put by money, and others who have made money by working in lead and coal mines, are very eager for farms. To this class belong the tenants of Goleugoed Uchaf and Isaf, and Cwmbachstel, who were farm servants, and the tenant of Felin Fach, who was a miner.

Others, again, who have been living in small farms want larger ones, and the son of the farmer is anxious to carry on the occupation to which he was brought up. (By "small farms" I mean the places of labourers who have enough land to keep two or three cows.)

I believe that these are the reasons why there are so many applications for farms; it is not because farming pays. I believe that the landlords of the parish of Cayo do not know the hardships which their tenants suffer, else they would have reduced the rents, as they are kind and generous gentlemen towards every worthy cause in the parish. We have had temporary abatements of 10 to 15 per cent. during the last few years. It is my opinion that landlords do not come into close enough contact with their tenants, so as to know at first hand the condition they are in, but they have to depend on others for their information.

Between the taxes, tithes, wages, and rents, which must all be got from the produce of the farm, which, on the other hand, is so low (with one or two exceptions), it can be confidently said that land is from 30 to 35 per cent. too high, and unless some speedy relief is obtained, we farmers will have to sell the little we have and become labourers.

Suggestions.—As a remedy, I believe that we must have a land court or some board of the representatives of the two parties, as nearly every other class, e.g., masters and men have, except the landlords and tenants, then the two sides could put forward their demands with the strong confidence that justice would be administered.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,808. Can you give us the rent of this farm where you have given the table with reference to the labour?—100*l.*

40,809. There is 52*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* more paid for that farm for labour now than in 1874?—Yes.

40,810. On the same scale there is 41*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* What is the rent of that farm?—115*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,811. May I take it your farm is a representative farm; is it like most of the other farms in the district?—Yes, it is, very much.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

40,812. Then I should like to know the particulars, if you do not mind giving us them, in reference to your own farm, as it seems to be a typical one. First of all, what is its acreage?—112 acres.

40,813. How much arable and how much pasture?—It is all arable, really, if it had fair play.

40,814. How much do you plough?—In its turn; most of it has been turned.

40,815. How long do you leave it, then?—Four or five or six years idle.

40,816. How many acres of wheat had you last year?—3½ acres. We are not a large family. We have no children, and we only raise enough wheat for ourselves.

40,817. How much barley, if any?—A little.

40,418. Oats?—About 10 acres. Two acres of barley and oats mixed, which we call "siprys."

40,819. Now roots?—An acre of roots and an acre of potatoes.

40,820. How many cattle have you got?—11 cows, and two horses, and 10 or 11 cattle.

40,821. How many sheep?—14 Shropshire downs.

40,822. How much land did you mow for hay last year?—We had a good deal of land, but little hay.

40,823. How much did you mow—how many acres?—Nearly 15.

40,824. May I take it that the changes, going from one place to another in the rotation, is what you do with your farm pretty well every year?—Yes.

40,825. How many labourers do you employ?—One servant and myself.

40,826. Does he live in the house?—Yes.

40,827. What wages do you pay him?—16*l.* It is on the table, and the table is for 1893.

40,828. Then you have a servant-girl besides your wife?—Yes.

40,829. And pay her 12*l.*?—Yes.

40,830. Do you have to get extra labour at harvest time?—Yes.

40,831. About how many men extra do you get?—As many as we can get sometimes.

40,832. What do you pay them a day at harvest time?—2*s.* and their food generally.

40,833. I suppose the food that you and your wife take, and the servants have, is much what has been described to us by the other witnesses?—Yes, very much so, very similar.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,834. You are of opinion that really our landlords do not know exactly the position we are in as farmers at the present day?—Yes, I believe that firmly.

40,835. You are also of opinion that if they did know they would sympathise more with us than they do?—I believe so, just as I mentioned in my statement they are generous gentlemen, gentlemen full of generosity towards all good causes in the parish.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

40,836. What in your opinion is the cause of this gulf between the landlord and the tenant?—I cannot say really quite.

40,837. Are you of opinion that they ought to come into closer connexion with one another and talk more freely to one another?—Yes, they ought; and, more than that, they ought to come and see their tenants to see what they are doing yearly with their farms.

40,838. Would it not be a good thing if the landlord's children who come into possession of estates, all had to go to a training college to learn farming, so that they might understand matters if they came to see?—Yes, undoubtedly.

40,839. If they did that they would understand the matter better?—Many of them do not understand.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,840. I forgot to ask you, Mr. Williams, how many pigs you have got?—Four.

40,841. Poultry?—I cannot say—about 50.

40,842. Have you any turkeys and geese?—Yes, I have geese occasionally.

Lord Kenyon.

40,843. I have been looking at your account books, and have been much interested, Mr. Williams. I see from one item here that your father made cheese. In 1851 he sold 1,800 lbs.?—I beg your pardon, that book is not my father's. It was the tenant of Maes llanwrthwl.

40,844. Do they make any cheese in the district now?—Oh, yes, they do.

40,845. It did not fetch a very high price in those days?—They do not get much for it now either.

40,846. The 1,800 lbs. fetched 15*l.*, about 17*s.* a cwt.?—Less than 1*l.* a cwt.

40,847. You get more than that now, I hope, do you not?—Yes, a little.

40,848. At least they do in my district, and I hope they do here?—It is in accordance with the quality.

40,849. Many of the other prices mean much about the same. I see barley about 4*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* 3*d.* a bushel. There is a large amount of beef at 3*d.* a pound—perhaps that may have been bull beef—and butter about 9*d.* There are some questions to be asked of you from Mr. Stephen, "Have you any information as to the "money spent on buildings on the Edwinsford "estate between 1853 and 1894"?—No, I have not.

48,850. "Are you aware that 3,000*l.* has been "lately spent by the landlord on one farm on the "Edwinsford estate?"—No, I do not know that.

40,851. "What is the present rent of Cwm-"gerwn Uchaf?"—30*l.*

40,852. Is it held on a lease?—Oh, no.

40,853. "What is your authority for the rents "you have mentioned as existing in 1853?"—The rate book.

40,854. "Should you be surprised to learn that the amount spent in permanent repairs on the farms you have mentioned belonging to the Dolaucothi Estate within the period named amounts to 1,540*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.*?"—I do not know.

40,855. You are asked would you be surprised to learn it?—They have splendid buildings there. They may have spent that amount.

40,856. Did they always keep their account books in English in those days?—Yes, in English as it is there.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

40,857. Have you examined this statement, and do you say that it is correct?—Yes.

[The statement of the witness was then read as follows:]

Evidence of David Jones, now of "George Inn," Llansawel; late tenant farmer, of Esgair, Llansawel.

Personal.—I live at present in the "George Inn," Llansawel, but I farmed Esgair from 1849 to 1881. The owner of the farm was Mrs. E. Morris, Garn, Aberbythych, from whom I rented the farm.

I took the farm on March 31, 1849, and the taking and rent rested on an agreement for a lease for 31 years at a rent of 65*l.* a year, with an allowance of 150*l.* for the buildings, which were all in a bad state of repair, especially the dwelling-house. In the first year I suffered much hardship and loss owing to the bad buildings. In the summer of 1850 the dwelling-house was rebuilt, and later on I had something of a barn of 40 feet and cowhouse. But in after years I was compelled to add a lot to them at my own cost, or be without them. All of it cost me much in money and much labour in horses to haul and workmen. But I never had a penny of the 150*l.* allowance which was promised me.

In signing the agreement, it was an understood thing between us that a proper lease was to be drawn up by Mr. Lewis Morris, solicitor, Carmarthen, and handed to me, but I never had it

A few months after going to live at Esgair, I received a notice from Francis and Lucy Tuder—the first mortgagees of the estate, I afterwards understood—demanding me to pay the rent to them. The estate was in Chancery, and once the Chancery distressed on me for rent. Ultimately, Mr. Charles Bankes Davies Llwyndu, bought the farm. Then a law suit occurred between him and Mr. James Thomas, solicitor, Llandilo, and somehow or other I had to pay 50*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* as my share of the costs in the action, which Mr. Davies lost.

In no long time, Mr. Davies began to molest me to pay more rent. He asked for 90*l.* He annoyed me from 1861 to 1869, then Mrs. Davies to 1879, with notices to quit almost every year, though he had bought the land knowing my lease lasted till 1879. In 1879, on the expiration of my lease, the landlord demanded a rent of 85*l.*, but he at last accepted 75*l.* A year after I left, and one of my sons is the present tenant.

PRICE OF LABOUR.—In 1849 the wages of the chief servant man was about 9*l.* and 6*l.* to the second servant man, and now from 20*l.* to 24*l.* to the chief servant man; the chief servant girl then got 3*l.* 10*s.*, now 15*l.*

All other labour was something like. 1*s.* a day was the price of the labourer (and often not that), and the same was the carpenter's.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

IMPROVEMENTS.—In addition to the buildings at Esgair, I made many other improvements, made hedges and enclosure, drained the land, &c., and I never received a penny compensation.

I brought up a numerous family, and they and I worked hard for years on the farm, but I never paid any of them one penny as wages for their work.

If Welsh farmers do not receive better support and fair play, and get the land for what it will pay, it would be better for them to take to some other occupation.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,858. You were unlucky in taking a farm under a landlord who got into difficulties. That is the real secret, is it not?—I had no help for that.

40,859. Could he help it, do you think?—The estate had got into debt, and had been thrown into Chancery a little after I took it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID EDWARDS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

40,860. Have you examined this statement, and do you say that it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was then read:]

Evidence of DAVID EDWARDS, Groes Cayo.

I am a former tenant of Llwyn-di-nawed, in the parish of Cilycwm. In the year 1859 the agent of Lord Cawdor (the landlord) paid me a visit and drew my attention to the state of the outbuildings, and said that unless I repaired the outbuildings I would have to leave. I erected a barn entirely at my own cost and trouble, with the exception that the landlord gave the slates and timber.

I had to haul the stones and timber, and to send for the slates with my own cart and horses to Aberayron—a distance of over 32 miles, and I paid in wages to masons and carpenters over 20*l.* Lord Cawdor's agent's name who drew my attention to the buildings was Mr. Williams, Moreb.

After the barn had been built I heard that the farm was to be sold, so I inquired of Mr. Mousley, the agent, if it was true that the farm was to be sold. The agent said it was not true. I then asked if ever the farm was to be sold as I had spent so much on it would he give me the first chance to buy it. The agent said yes.

This request was repeated on another occasion, and the like promise of the first chance to buy was given.

I told the agent that I had a friend who would help me to pay for it.

On the 25th of March 1867 I got six months' notice to quit. I went to the agent (Mr. Mousley) and asked why I got his notice. The reply was because "you owe of the last rent 3*l.* 10*s.*" I paid the 3*l.* 10*s.* and asked if I might have the farm as hitherto. The agent replied that I would never have to leave as long as I could pay the rent.

Six weeks before the expiration of the above notice to quit (September 29th) the under-agent of Lord Cawdor came to me and said that the farm had been sold to Mr. Campbell Davys, and if I wanted to keep on the farm I was to ask Mr. Campbell Davys for it. I went to Mr. Campbell Davys and asked if I might have the farm, and the reply was "No, you disturb "the game, and I wanted a National school in "the village and you opposed me, you must "leave the farm." I had only six weeks to look out for another farm or dispose of stock and produce.

When paying the last rent to Lord Cawdor's agent I pleaded I should be compensated for the barn for which I had paid in wages alone over 20*l.*, besides haulage, &c. I was allowed only 3*l.* 10*s.* I had the use of the barn only for seven years.

There are two cottages on the farm built by a poor man—a mason by trade. One built in 1836 (permission given by Lord Cawdor) entirely at the expense of the mason with the exception of the timber (given by Lord Cawdor) —the other cottage (adjoining the first), built about 10 years later. 5*s.* a year ground rent was paid Lord Cawdor. These cottages were sold with the farm, and there was no compensation given to the builder.

40,861. Did he have the farm valued by any independent valuer?—No, no one valued it.

40,862. Had you bills to show?—Yes, I showed the bills which I paid to the workmen.

40,863. How long was it after you built the barn before the farm was sold?—Seven years.

40,864. Were you in arrears with rent when it was sold?—No, I did not owe him a halfpenny.

Professor Rhŷs.

40,865. I understand that owing to the assurance of Lord Cawdor's agent, you did not expect to have to go out, although you had notice?—No, I did not.

40,866. As a result you had only six weeks to dispose of everything?—I had only six weeks.

40,867. What was thought in the neighbourhood of the case?—They blamed him exceedingly.

40,868. Blamed who?—Mr. Mousley, because he had deceived me. Mr. Mousley was the agent—they had been changed.

40,869. Had you this promise in writing at all?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,870. How long had you been tenant of this place?—I had been brought up on the estate.

40,871. Was your father there before you?—My mother was there, not my father.

40,872. Anyone before her?—Yes, my grandfather.

40,873. You cannot go back any further, I suppose?—No, I cannot.

40,874. Who was this Williams you said was agent?—Mr. Williams, Moreb, was the agent of Lord Cawdor's estate at the first.

40,875. Where did he live?—At Llandilo.

40,876. Of whom did you ask consent to have the refusal of the farm?—Mr. Mousley promised me the first refusal, supposing it was sold. Mr. Mousley was the agent then.

40,877. When you paid your rent, did you keep this amount of 3*l.* 10*s.* back on any particular account?—One rent was due when we were paying the other on Lord Cawdor's estate—a full year was given us.

40,878. What was the whole rent?—18*l.* at first, and then raised 2*l.* 7*s.* when Mr. Mousley became agent.

40,879. It is said you had disturbed game. Were you a poacher at any time?—No, I was not a poacher, but I coursed them off the land if they caused any loss to me and my corn.

40,880. Did you keep a greyhound?—No, only two sheep dogs.

40,881. Was Mr. Campbell Davys' land adjoining you all round?—Yes.

40,882. I suppose Mr. Campbell Davys made an application for this bit of land because it was in the middle of his preserves?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

40,883. Otherwise it is not likely that they would have allowed you to turn out?—I do not know how things were between them. Mr. Mousley sold every farm in the neighbourhood of Cilycwm to Mr. Campbell Davys, without mentioning a word about it to the tenants that they had been sold.

40,884. Did some of the tenants suffer as you did?—Yes, they all suffered.

40,885. Did they claim any compensation?—No, I have not heard that they received any compensation, beyond that they grumbled that they had loss.

40,886. How much did you claim for your loss?—From 30*l.* to 35*l.* I claimed for everything.

40,887. Did you claim that sum from the agent or send him a bill?—I showed all the bills which I had incurred in building the barn to him, and he did not give me anything but 3*l.* 10*s.* for the whole lot.

40,888. Did you ever apply by letter to Lord Cawdor himself?—Yes, for clover seeds, but for nothing else.

Lord Kenyon.

40,889. Had you any particular lease or agreement which compelled you to repair?—No, none of the tenants had any.

40,890. Was there no verbal agreement with you whatever to repair?—No, nothing beyond that he said to me that the buildings were getting into a bad state, and that I would have to build a part of them, or else go away.

40,891. Is it the custom on that part of Lord Cawdor's estate for the tenants to do their own buildings, having been given slates and timber?—Yes, I have another case in point.

40,892. Do you wish to give it?—Yes. I came from there 27 years ago to live at Cwmgerwn, and I was there for 8 years. I received three notices to quit during those 8 years.

40,893. Who was the landowner?—Lady Drummond was then the landowner, and Mr. Long Price was the agent, I was an under-tenant then. I went from there down to Rhos-cwmluog to a place called Maes-y-pant. I was there four years. Evan Davies, who had been at Cwmgerwn before me, was an under-tenant then for 13 years, and he received 11 notices during that time. He was there 12 years after I left, and then he received three notices during the second 12 years he was there.

40,894. What was the reason of the notices? Was there any reason given?—It was a dispute about the labour.

40,895. The case of the sub-tenant?—Yes, the tenant who succeeded Evan Davies again had received notice to quit. They received 18 notices in the course of 35 years.

Lord Kenyon.

40,896. We quite understand sub-letting is a very bad principle, but we cannot go into the life of every farmer.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Henry Lewis called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

40,897. Have you examined this statement, and do you say that it is correct?—Yes, I do.

[The statement of the witness was then read as follows:]

Evidence of Henry Lewis, tenant farmer, Llety-wen, Talley.

Personal.—I shall give evidence respecting a farm called Tyrcelyn, on the estate of Mr. Herbert Peel, of Taliaris Park. This is a farm of about 100 acres of very poor land, and let at 65*l.*, or 12*s.* per acre. About three acres of this was planted with trees, without any reduction in the rent or compensation given for the loss of it. There were nine acres of woodland already on the farm, and the tenant had to mend the fences, though when taking the farm it was arranged that the landlord should mend all the plantation fences. No agreement was given to the tenant (my father), but he was offered a draft copy on the payment of 1*l.*

The buildings on this farm were very poor, straw-thatched houses, living houses and out-buildings, the tenant to find the straw, &c., and pay the thatchers; 36*l.* to 40*l.* worth of straw would not be enough to thatch all these buildings. In the living house the loft or upstairs was only one room, in which men and women had to sleep without any partition between them, with only one small window of about a square foot in size to give light, and so is the adjoining farmhouse called Cefnhendre. When my father wanted to get repairs done to the house he managed to get the landlord to see it, but he would not go upstairs for fear of tumbling down, but the tenant had to risk his life and family on this tumbled-down affair, and he never had the repairs done, only a small piece of flooring about three square yards, enough to turn and clean half-a-dozen chee-es on. When my father entered this farm, the former tenant had failed to pay for it, and my father would doubtless have done the same, had he not got three strong sons and two daughters to work for him without payment, and go out alternately on service to earn wages to help him to pay the rent. I was one of these, and paid the whole of my wages to him.

Security of Tenure Wanted.—Tenants do not feel secure in their holdings, as if they happen to think, or do contrary to their landlords, they get notice to quit at once. As an instance of this I can name John Davies, Gwaunforfydd, Cwmdu and Rees Williams, King's Head, Cwmdu, who voted in a Parish Vestry on some parochial affair against their landlady, Mrs. Morgan, late of Capel-hir, and they were obliged to quit the premises.

Tyranny of Agents or Stewards.—A farmer went to his landlord and complained that his farm was too dear, and after years of complaining and arguing, he managed to get his landlord to reduce the rent by 5*l.* per annum, but then the steward went to the farmer and told him that he had helped him to get the reduction in the rent, and that the farmer had to give him a yearling heifer (which he had fancied) for his trouble, and so he had it. But in a year a change of landlords took place, and the 5*l.* was replaced in the rent notice and had to be paid, so the tenant had to lose the heifer and pay the 5*l.*, but the farmer having a little pluck sent two persons for the heifer, but the steward refused it, and it is in his possession now. I can give the names if necessary.

40,898. Have you something to add to your general statement?—No, nothing, except if you wish to ask me any questions.

40,899. When were the three acres taken without compensation?—About 30 years ago.

40,900. That was before the present Mr. Peel came into possession?—Yes.

40,901. Are you on friendly terms with the present Mr. Peel?—Oh, yes.

40,902. Mr. Peel does what he can in the way of building, does he not, or, at least, he told us so the other day?—I think that things are better now than they have been, but my father had not much in the way of building when he was there.

40,903. The present Mr. Peel does what he can on his estate, does he not?—I cannot say so much about that now, because I left the estate 14 years ago.

Professor Rhŷs.

40,904. Have these gifts to the agents been pretty common within your memory?—Not the chief agents like Mr. Price, but the under agent.

40,905. You mean some of the subordinate officials?—Yes.

40,906. Is that going on now? Is there ever any rumour that that scurce of thing goes on now in your neighbourhood?—This occurred the autumn of last year.

Lord Kenyon.

40,907. There was no question of a heriot or anything of that sort, was there?—Oh, no. He took advantage of the tenant.

40,908. Do you mind saying who the steward is. You need not give the name unless you like?—I am willing to give the name of the agent and I do not care whether I give the name publicly or privately

Mr. Griffiths.

40,909. By all means, let us have it?—Benjamin Evans, Byrgwm.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

40,910. And the landlord?—Mrs. Morgan, late of Capel-hir. She now lives at Brighton.

40,911. But the place still belongs to her?—Yes.

40,912. What is the name of the farmer?—David Morgan.

40,913. You said some of the farm is planted with trees?—Yes.

40,914. And no allowance made to the tenant?—No.

40,915. Who paid the rates on this land?—My father paid the rates according to the rateable value, that is, in accordance with the rent.

40,916. The rate was not lowered?—No.

40,917. Then it is a fact, is it not, that in this farm there was no accommodation for servants to sleep without the two sexes being in the same bedroom?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

40,918. I have some questions put in by Mr. Stephen: "When were John Davies, of Cwmdu, " and Rees Williams, of the King's Head, " evicted"?—From five to six years ago. I am not quite sure.

40,919. "Did the farmer complain of the " steward's conduct after the change of land- " lord"?—No.

40,920. There are some questions by Mr. John Thomas, of Troedyrhiw: "How far is the parish " road from Tyrcelyn and Cefn Hendre? It " is a mile or more, is it not"?—About a mile.

40,921. "Who keeps the road in repair"?—The tenants say it is left without being repaired.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,922. Why do not they insist on the parish repairing?—I cannot say. It may be that the rates are too high to pay, for things as they are.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,923. Is the road a parish road; is it a highway?—No; a road kept by farmers.

Lord Kenyon.

40,924. The question is put again: Is the road in the parish of Llandilo leading to those farms a high road, and do the tenants keep it in repair? That is the question as it now stands?—No, it is not for a mile.

40,925. This is another question by Mr. John Thomas: "Is it not true that Mr. William " Thomas, Cefn Hendre, was two winters with- " out houses after an accident by fire, which " burnt the stable and barn and cowhouse"?—Yes, and my father was just the same when our cowhouse fell in, and he lost two cows, one in each winter, in consequence of not having suitable cowhouses to keep the cows.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Long Price called in and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

40,926. Where do you live?—At Talley House, in the parish of Talley, in this county.

40,927. You were agent to Sir James Drummond?—Yes, up to the close of 1889.

40,928. Is it with regard to Sir James Drummond's estate you wish to give evidence?—I have been asked to give evidence with regard to Sir James Drummond's estate, but before I do so I would ask leave to refer to some evidence that was given at Llandovery yesterday. It was evidence given by a person of the name of Daniel Davies with regard to a farm called Tynywaun, Cayo.

See 39,645–6.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,929. He said "in some places advances have been made on the tenants' improvements." Is that what you refer to?—That is the paragraph. I have only a pencil note taken at the time, and I have it in this way: "At Tynywaun, Cayo, " the tenant Daniel Richards drained, &c. to the " extent of 150*l.* at least, the agent stating that " he would have peace to enjoy the improve- " ments."

Lord Kenyon.

40,930. Was the tenant Daniel Richards?—Yes. My note goes on: "But before the im- " provements were well finished the agent and " another man came and valued the farm and " raised the rent by 12*l.*, 6*l.* payable at once, " and the other 6*l.* in three years. Soon after " the tenant died, and his family left the place " which was untenanted for some time, and was " afterwards let at a lower rent." What I wish to say is this. The statement is altogether unwarranted, and the facts are as follows: In the year 1874 the tenant of Tynywaun was Eleanor Richards, a widow. Her husband had died shortly before then, and her son, Daniel Richards, lived with her in the farm. He asked me to assist him in completing some draining which he had already begun, and which he said he wished to carry on as circumstances would permit if I would pay for the pipes. I agreed to do this, and on the 18th May 1874 I paid him 3*l.* for pipes. On the 27th November 1877 I paid him another sum of 9*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* also for draining pipes. On the 8th May 1879 I further paid him 5*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* for draining pipes, and on 24th July 1882 I further allowed 4*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.*, being cutting

32½ perches of drains at 1*s.* 9*d.*—2*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*—and amount paid for drain pipes, 1*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.*, making a total of 22*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* In addition to this draining Daniel Richards had also made a few drains in respect of which he asked for no assistance. These had been filled up with rab. When I valued the estate in 1878 my valuation showed an increase of 17*l.* in the rent, bringing it up to 79*l.* I had an interview with Daniel Richards, and I expressed my readiness to make a reduction which would fairly recoup him for his outlay, and his rent was fixed at 72*l.* instead of 79*l.*, being an average price of 8*s.* 3*d.* per acre, and he was perfectly satisfied with the arrangement. In 1882 he died somewhat suddenly, and his mother who was then an aged woman expressed her desire to give up the farm. Mr. Evan Williams, auctioneer, was then acting as her adviser, and it was through him that this desire was signified to me. I expressed my readiness to do everything possible to assist the widow, and agreed to take up the farm at the following Michaelmas without any notice to quit. Mr. Williams sold the effects at Michaelmas and offered to pay me the rent, but I said that he need not pay it until the usual time when the Michaelmas rents were paid, in the following January. I took over the manure and fixtures at Mr. Williams' valuation, and I never heard of any claim being made in respect of drainage or anything else until I was informed of the evidence given by Mr. Daniel Davies in the second court at Llandovery yesterday. Mr. Williams is present and can if necessary corroborate me in this statement. The farm was let at the following Lady Day to the present tenant at the same rent, namely, 72*l.*, but that rent has since been reduced to 65*l.* The rent was paid by Mr. Richard's son-in-law, I think, who also interested himself on the poor old woman's behalf; and I took over the manure and fixtures at Mr. Williams's valuation. I never heard of any claim being made by her or by Mr. Williams on her behalf, or by her two sons-in-law, or indeed at all of any arrangement or anything until I heard of the evidence given at Llandovery. Mr. Williams is here to-day, and he can confirm that statement if you wish. It is true that the farm remained unlet for a short time on account of the tenant giving it up without notice. No one contemplated it was to be a vacant farm, and I allowed the widow to remain there for several weeks after the current year without asking for any payment of rent after Michaelmas. It was let immediately; but the occupancy did not begin until the 25th of March following. It was let, at the same rent, 72*l.*, but it has since been reduced to 65*l.*"

40,931. How long was it at that rent of 72*l.*—after the man's death, I mean?—About two years, my Lord.

40,932. And then it was reduced?—Yes.

40,933. What was the date of the reduction?—I think the date of the reduction was about 1886 or 1887. I am speaking from memory.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

40,934. When the times were getting worse?—Yes; the times were very bad and it was a poor farm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,935. I think you said that this statement of Mr. Daniel Davies was wholly unwarranted?—I think so.

40,936. Do you think the account you have given justifies your saying that his account was wholly unwarranted?—I do.

40,937. Just let us see. Do you deny that the amounts that were paid for the pipes and in respect of which you paid him the sum you have mentioned, with the value of the draining which was done by Daniel Richards came to about 150*l.*?—I say you are assuming that the drainage to the amount of 150*l.* was done.

40,938. I ask you?—As a matter of fact, the entire value of the drainage, if it had been paid for at full draining price, would not have been 50*l.*, much less 150*l.*

40,939. How much was it?—I only heard of this last night, late. I cannot tell you exactly, but I know every field on the farm. It was part of three fields; it was draining done irregularly, and some part of it as I have said was done in a very crude way.

40,940. This is 20 years ago?—It is.

40,941. Did you or anyone on your behalf state that he would have peace to enjoy the improvements?—I have no recollection of such a conversation. As a matter of fact he would have had, and he would have been there now if he had lived.

40,942. Very likely you did say it?—At that time the position of a tenant on the Edwinsford Estate was so well assured that no one doubted for a moment that he would remain there.

40,943. How many years afterwards was it that you came to value the farm?—In 1878.

40,944. What had been the rent in 1878?—55*l.*

40,945. What Mr. Davies says is that the rent was raised by 12*l.*?—So it was at that time.

40,946. His statement is not wholly unwarranted then?—It is wholly unwarranted, inasmuch as it leads to the inference that he had done a large amount of draining at his own expense, whereas it was partly at the expense of his landlord.

40,947. In the re-valuation upon which you raised the rent by 12*l.* you took into account the drainage?—If you please, I allowed 7*l.* a year back out of my valuation.

40,948. That only brings it down to 72*l.*?—Yes, that only brings it down to 72*l.*, but in allowing 7*l.* a year, if you add the 7*l.* a year during the time that he lived to the amount paid by me, it is more than the actual cost of the drainage.

40,949. What made you go and re-value the farm?—I valued the whole estate at the time Sir James Drummond became of age.

Lord Kenyon.

40,950. How many acres was this draining? Could you say roughly?—It is difficult to say, because I do not think either of the fields was wholly drained, only some portions. I should say perhaps the whole drainage would not have been more than about six to seven acres.

40,951. And some of that I understand was stone drains?—Some was very roughly done, merely filled up with "rab."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Really the difference between you comes to this, that he estimates the value put into the drainage at a very much higher figure than what you do. Of course I have not the slightest reason to doubt what you say, because you are speaking from figures and he is speaking from hearsay evidence.

Lord Kenyon.

40,952. If it is a matter of six acres only I think it would be impossible to amount to 150*l.* from what I know of drainage?—First-class drainage can be done from 8*l.* to 9*l.* an acre, as any of you gentlemen well know.

40,953. The statement made by the witness was that Daniel Richard drained, &c.?—He did.

40,954. You have dealt with draining only. It is quite possible that Daniel Richards did a good deal besides the draining to improve the farm?—He did not. I know exactly what he did do. I knew the man personally from his boyhood.

40,955. If there was no improvement how do you justify the increase of the rents?—Because the old original rents were extremely low, and had been so for many years, and the value of land produce had gone up enormously.

40,956. That was just before the bad year?—That was immediately before the bad year; the worst year we ever had.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,957. There was one question which I asked of Mr. Dudley Drummond, and he said it would be answered by you, and I am anxious to have a clear understanding of that question—the estimate of the rise in rents during the last 30 years which is got taking the gross rental of the two periods?—I can give you the evidence on that point shortly.

40,958. We want to know whether it is true or not that rents have risen something like 34 per cent. as that evidence shows?—Subsequent to 1861 considerable outlying portions of the Edwinsford estate were sold and other lands of large extent from time to time bought. The rents of these purchased estates were fixed by valuation at the time of their acquisition—these valuations being made by outside valuers, not by myself—and practically remain unchanged, or if changed, I believe, the change has always been in reduction. I have gone carefully through the estate documents and I have compared the present rentals of the original portion—the main portion—of the estates with those fixed in 1830-1. The figures show, as the ultimate result of the two last valuations, an increase in the rentals of about, as near as I can make out, 17¼ per cent. I should tell you shortly now that the old rents of the Edwinsford estate were fixed originally in 1830, when the late Sir James Hamlyn Williams succeeded to the estate upon the death of his father. They remained as fixed then until 1863. There was a valuation in 1863 after Sir James Williams' death. It remained then to 1878, when Lady Drummond died, and there was another valuation on her son the present Sir James Drummond attaining his majority. The result of the two modern valuations as compared with the old rents has been an increase of 17¼ per cent.

40,959. Would that be from 1863 to 1893?—No, from 1830 to the present time.

40,960. From 1863 it would be still less?—Yes, the figures given in another place were misleading, because a few of the most highly-rented farms had been selected and put together to produce a certain result, whereas I have taken the whole of the old farms on the estate in which there is no change of area and circumstances, in fact the figures that I have taken all through, represent three-fourths of the entire estate, and I shall be very happy to hand them in.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,961. That does not show that the calculation as to those particular farms is incorrect?—If we had time to compare them, I could show it to demonstration, because I have those figures here.

40,962. For those particular farms?—Those particular farms, but they have omitted the other figures that I have got.

40,963. Quite so?—Those figures have been apparently made in proof of a certain contention.

Lord Kenyon.

40,964. Are those particular farms correct?—I never saw them until to-day.

Mr. Seebohm.

40,965. Those figures given this morning were, I take it, from the assessment return?—They were no doubt correct.

40,966. There is no sort of collusion about it. It is simply to get at a fact for one single thing—the assessed value of this parish—and that there was a rise between the gross rental in 1864 to 1893 of 34 per cent.?—No doubt it may have been so.

40,967. The question is whether that is a good guide?—It is not a safe guide, qua this estate, because the figures I give are absolutely correct. They are taken from the authenticated estate accounts, and they represent the actual increase on that portion of the estate; but the very great increase in the rents of the purchased estates would no doubt increase the result as regards the parish returns, because several of these farms which have been quoted to you as being raised very heavily were bought for enormous prices when they were let at very low rents, and in many instances the rents were doubled.

40,968. Have you reason to believe that the gross rental in the assessment of 1864 fully represented the rental at that time?—I should be disposed to think so. I do not think for a moment that the figures would be tampered with.

40,969. But in the estimation of the value they took the actual rental?—I have no doubt they did.

40,970. You do not contest the principle of the figures as applied to the particular farms which are mentioned?—I do not. I have not time to examine them, but I have no doubt they are right.

Lord Kenyon.

40,971. You say from one case we cannot learn the whole?—Yes.

40,972. It is not a case of ex uno disce omnes?—Quite so. I say as regards the Edwinsford estate the nearest practical result I can arrive at after great trouble is that the increase from 1830 to the present time is about 17¼ per cent.

40,973. On that estate?—Yes, on that estate.

40,974. You say, on the statement you have handed in, 12½?—I was going to correct that. These which I hold in my hand are the correct figures.

40,975. We are sorry not to be able to take your evidence to-day, Mr. Price, but if you will communicate with the Secretary we shall be glad to take your evidence at some other time if you could make it convenient to attend?—I will endeavour to do so.

Examination continued at Carmarthen, 42,247.

Adjourned.

FIFTIETH DAY.

Magistrates' Room, St. Clear's, Carmarthenshire, 20th April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord Kenyon.
Sir John Talbot Dillwyn Llewelyn, Bart.
Mr. David Brynmor Jones, Q.C., M.P.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.
Mr. Edwin Grove.
Mr. Richard Jones.
Mr. Frederic Seebohm, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. Cecil E. Owen, Assistant Secretary

Rev. R. Morgan called and examined.

Chairman.

40,976. You are an Independent Minister, residing at St. Clear's?—Yes.

I tender evidence from the County Council Division of St. Clear's, Carmarthenshire, comprising the parishes of St. Clear's, Llanginning, Mydrim, and Llanfihangel Abercowyn, consisting of 16,924 acres, with a population of 2,836. The principal proprietors of the land are Sir C. G. Phillips, Bart., Picton Castle; Mrs. Powell, of Pencoed; The Ecclesiastical Commissioners; Mr. Hughes, Tregib; Mr. J. Beynon, Trewern; Sir Marteine Lloyd, Bart., Bronwydd; Messrs. Buckley, Llanelly; R. R. Carver, Wenallt; Beynon, London, &c.

Ownership.—The principal landowners are absentees, as a rule; they are different in politics, religion, and language to the tenants: the agents employed by them to manage their estates have had, as a rule, no special training for the supervision of land—generally they are lawyers, or younger sons of landed proprietors. This causes much inconvenience to tenants; such agents are not able to appreciate duly the difficulties which hamper the tenants in relation to the best mode of cultivating the land so as to make it profitable to meet existing circumstances.

Occupation.—The usual date of entry in this district is September 29th, and farms are generally let from year to year. For the last 15 years there has been no demand for leases, because the value of produce is cheaper, and has had the tendency to become cheaper year by year, and the price of labour has increased greatly, so the farmers have no heart to bind themselves down to agreements that are likely to become too burdensome to fulfil. The condition of leaseholders who had leases 50 years ago, and above is much better, but their farming, as a whole, is not superior to the yearly tenants. Not many changes have taken place here, more than may be expected from death and the like natural causes.

Chairman—continued.

Hardships.—This district has not been free from cases of hardships.

No. 1.—Llwynpiod, 102 acres, in the parish of St. Clear's, on the Penycoed estate. It was taken by Mr. David Thomas about the year 1856, at 179*l.*, including all rates and taxes; but in the year 1871, when the Education Department demanded that a school board should be formed for the parish; Mr. Timothy Powell, the then landlord, raised the rents of Llwynpiod, New House, and Railway Tavern, the adjoining farms, by 5*l.* each, from September 1871, on account of the anticipated school board rate. The first school board rate, however, was called October 17, 1873, so there were two items of 5*l.* each from the three above-named farms paid by the tenants to the landlord for school board rates, when the landlord had paid nothing to the overseers. Then the first two calls made by the school board in October 1873–4, and October 1874–5, were at the rate of from 1*l.* from each farm, being a net gain to the landlord of 12*l.* a year—24*l.* for the two years. Then the school board rate from 1876 to 1893 is between 8*d.* and 9*d.* a £, being a clear gain to the landlord of over 2*l.* a year from each of the three farms, making a total net gain from 1871 to 1893 of 180*l.* The landlord has done nothing to encourage the board school, but rather discountenanced it. See 40,982.

No. 2.—Then in relation to the above-named farm, Llwynpiod, the said David Thomas retired in favour of his son, John Thomas, in the year 1882, and the rent was raised by 20*l.*—25*l.* on the original taking by the father. No reason, See 40,988.

Chairman—continued.

whatever, was given for the additional impost, ultimately, three years ago, the rent became too burdensome, and so the son went off to Glamorganshire.

See 40,996, 41,215. No. 3.—DOLAUMAWR, a small farm, in the parish of St. Clear's. The tenant, Mr. David Thomas, was sold up by the landlord, Mr. John Williams, Cwm Mydrim, for rent. The said tenant was a remarkably industrious and sober man. Several tenants have left since, and the farm is vacant now.

No. 4.—PARKGLAS.—Owner Mrs. Saer, Pembroke, acreage 32; the rent of it was 32*l.* 33 years ago, and was held by William Good. Then on William Good giving it up, about 1860, it was taken by John Davies at 65*l.* He held it for 15 years at the amount specified. Then a change took place in the nature of the holding, and the landlord took a field of 6 acres, and attached it to another holding at a rent of 20*l.* without allowing any compensation whatever to the said John Davies for the loss of the field, which was reckoned as the best plot on the farm. Nor has any allowance been given to the present tenant, Edward Thomas, for the loss of the field. The rent is still 65*l.*

See 41,190. No. 5.—CLUNCAR, in the parish of Llanginning, owner Mr. Thomas Howell, Llanfynydd. Small farm of 28 acres. The tenant, David Perkins, took it in 1884 as a yearly tenant. He limed all the farm; he set up new gates and posts, erected new sheds, mostly at his own expense, and worked hard on the farm for five years, and had greatly improved it. Then, at the end of five years, he had notice to quit, and was obliged to leave, because he voted for a guardian, at the election of guardians, against the will of the owner, without any compensation whatever, and what was due to him from the owner, according to the agreement for the farmyard manure, was not allowed him before he was threatened with a law suit.

See 41,006, 41,216. No. 6.—TREVENTY, 461 acres. Owners, Ecclesiastical Commissioners. Tenants, Messrs. W. and T. Evans. They erected pig-styes and open sheds in 1873 at the request of the landlord, who promised to defray the expenses, but before the allowance was made the estate was sold to the Commissioners, who repudiated the liability to pay, and they refused to allow anything by way of remuneration.

Treventy, Foxhole, and Pantdwfn were held by Mr. Walters, 42 years ago, at a rent of 8*s.* per acre. Now the property, comprising 1,400 acres, is rented by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners at 33*s.* per acre, an increase of over 300 per cent.

The above enumerated hardships are typical of what is common in the district.

No. 7.—Compensation is very seldom given to the tenants for damages done in timber cutting. As a rule, no notice of compensation is given in resuming any plot of land for building or planting, or for damages done for quarry operations.

Chairman—continued.

AGREEMENTS AND LEASES. — The usual conditions of tenancy may be seen from copies of agreements herewith produced. The clauses thereof are considered oppressive in the extreme, the general effects of them are discouraging tothe farmer. The penalizing clauses are common and heavy, but they are not often enforced for the simple reason that they are not transgressed. The general effect of these clauses is, that they have an immediate tendency to leave on the minds of the tenants a sense of inferiority, and to foster within them a servile spirit, utterly unfavourable to develop a manly character. The agreements are generally paid for exorbitantly by the tenants, and explained to them by trusted friends.

The amount of rent varies considerably, from 15*s.* to 35*s.* an acre. It is generally fixed at a gross sum. And as seen from above, it is far from uniform. The rent of the smaller tenantry is, as a rule, higher than on larger farms. No services are rendered, as a rule, by tenants in respect of their farms. Some landlords advertise farms they have to let, but they are not always given to the highest bidder, but advantage is taken of the highest bid given, to entice the desirable candidate in the eyes of the owner, to come up to it, and thereby secure the dear prize. Arbitration is never resorted to as a means of settling or re-adjusting rent. The rents in many places have risen 100 per cent. during the last 50 years. Temporary abatements have been rare. The rents are raised or reduced, as a rule, not on a re-valuation or fluctuation of prices, but in a perfectly arbitrary way. The payment of the rent after it has become due is in two or three months according to custom. The effects of preferential claims for rent cause the tenants to neglect the claims of tradesmen, workmen, &c., and it greatly interferes with their general family comforts. It is felt that this preferential claim for rent is unjust in principle. The landlord has his land to fall back upon in the case of tenant's failure, whereas other creditors lose their all by his failure.

RATES.—The local rates have increased within the last 20 years over 50 per cent., and all are paid by the tenants. The Grove, Llanginning, for example, in 1878, paid 8½*d.* in the pound in rates, now it pays 1*s.* 6*d.* in the pound.

SIZE OF FARMS.—The average size of farms is from 100 to 140 acres. Holdings have not been in any important degree consolidated. The general effects of consolidation are not considered favourable to increase of production, and labour is thereby curtailed. The object in view, where consolidation has taken place, was to avoid building. Population and inhabited houses have very materially decreased. Subletting has not taken place on a large scale, but where it has been practised it is with the general result of raising the rents. Subletting has been resorted to by farmers sometimes, when hard up to pay the rates and taxes, &c. Small holdings are farmed better than large ones, because more labour is applied to them. The small holders are better to hold out under hard times of trade depression, and, according to the size of their holdings, they are as able to provide for their families as larger farmers are.

Cultivation.—There is a great scarcity of labourers on account of there being no cottages on the farms, and the farms, &c., are therefore greatly neglected. The land is capable of producing much more if more labour, skill, and capital were applied to it. But as things are now, such as high rents, high taxes and wages, with uncertainty of tenure, the low value of land produce, and the possibility of rents being raised on the farmers, own efforts and improvements, all these combine as deterrents to good farming. Arable land has been laid down in pasture invariably at the expense of the tenant; he could not stand his ground at all were it not for these changes, such as root crops, &c.

See 41,219.

The landlords as a whole make no improvements, they are all made by the tenants, and in some cases rents are raised on the improvements made. No compensation is ever given on improvements carried conjointly by landlord and tenant. There are no customs here interfering with the working of the Agricultural Holdings Act, but several landlords have contracted themselves out of it. As a rule, farmers do not apply for their landlord's written consent for specific improvements, because the rents are already too high for tenants to afford to lay out money on improvments, and the farms on this account have of late been getting worse in their condition. Next to nothing is allowed to out-going tenants for permanent improvements, and instances can be adduced where tenants have failed to have sufficient compensation for them, and not in any case can instances be adduced where compensation has been given for general improvements.

Agricultural Education. — Some of the farmers' sons and even daughters are attending night schools in the winter to study agricultural subjects, and this year a number of farmers' daughters have availed themselves of the dairy school under the Agricultural Department of the University College of Wales, which it is believed, will be productive of good. Facilities for disposal of produce are very costly, railway rates being excessively high.

Co-operation and Combination.—Practically nothing is done in this way, with one exception—the butter factory at St. Clear's—and that is not taken up with eagerness at all. Benefit and life assurance societies are not taken to, to the degree their usefulness demands.

The General Condition of the Farming Population.

1. Proprietor Farmers.—There are not many peasant proprietors in the district. There are not many tenant farmers that have bought either their own or other holdings for their occupation. The general inducement to buy their holdings is distrust in their being left in their holdings in case any change should take place either in the mind or the circumstances of the landlord. Fear is an underlying element in the inducements to buy holdings. The purchase money, as a rule, is excessive. In many cases the interest is more than the rent. The usual interest is 4 per cent. In most cases, under these circumstances, the freeholder is worse off than when he was a tenant farmer.

Chairman—continued.

2. Tenant Farmers.—Tenant farmers and their wives take part in the manual labour of their farms. The farmers take part in the out door work, and the wives in all the indoor work, such as milking, cheese and butter making, and the general household work. Farmhouses are more workshops than homes. The children often work at home, and are not in receipt of wages. They are supplied with food and clothes as the family funds will permit. Then when the children marry, in most cases, their parents are not able to give to each of them what they were entitled to according to the value of their wages as workers on the farm. It is a common thing here that the farmers' children are obliged to rise early to do farm work before school hours, and to work at home after school hours, and are obliged to be at home often from school to do farm work, whereas the workmen's children are free to attend school, and thereby are better qualified to fight the battle of life than the farmers children. There are instances of children sending, from their wages in the works and elsewhere, money to help their parents to pay the rent. In many cases present rents could not be maintained if wages were paid in respect of their children's labour.

3. Labourers.—The proportion of the hired labourers depends on the number of children in the family that are able to do farm work. Generally speaking, it may safely be said that one-third of the work is carried on by hired labour. The hired unmarried labourers are lodged on the premises, and the married ones are settled in cottages. The rule is, that the labourers live on the employer's finding. The wages of hired females average 12*l.* per annum, and the wages of hired males sleeping on the premises, from 15 to 21 years of age, average 17*l.* per annum, and their keep 12*l.* each per annum. The cash wages of married labourers are 9*s.* per week, and their keep, then, with other perquisites, such as rent of cottages and garden, the carting of coal, land for potatoe setting, would amount to 15*s.* 3*d.* per week. Wages have risen during the last 50 years by 400 per cent.

The following is extracted from the Grove Llanginning) account book :—

Hannah Thomas	-	3*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.* in 1847.
Mary Tucker	-	3*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.* „ 1841.
Mary Tucker	-	3*l.* 3*s.* 0*d.* „ 1842.

Chairman—continued.

The above, at the present day, would get from 12*l.* to 15*l.*

Labourers received 8*d.* a day at harvest time in 1847. Now they get 2*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* a day.

The labourers, both male and female, are mixed at meals, and in the evenings the males sleep in the out-houses, and the females sleep in in the farmhouses. It cannot be said that cottage accommodation is improved at all. It is simply wretched as a rule, nearly as bad as it was 50 years ago. The sanitary arrangements are far from modern requirements in towns and villages. One of the results of this is that labourers leave the country for more desirable houses and associations. The most enterprising young men and women leave as soon as they see that they are able to better themselves.

4. General.—Estate owners live in superior houses of the best description, from every point of view—as to architecture, modern sanitary appliances, and beauty of surroundings—in ease and luxury. Large proprietor farmers live in plain homely houses, with accommodation commensurate with their wants. With regard to small proprietors and tenant farmers, it cannot be said that farmhouse accommodation is good in proportion to the rents paid and the number of persons required on the farms. The accommodation is cramped, confined, and unsatisfactory, and the outhouses are insufficient, inconvenient, and in many cases they are dangerous to the lives of the stock, and a disgrace to the owners. Diet is greatly improved, but not in any way luxurious. The opportunities for self-improvement are not numerous. Some evening classes are held in the board schools for science teaching. Some farmers' children and others avail themselves of them. As a whole, it may be safely said that the general comforts of the labourers are much better than they were years ago. The introduction of machinery has lessened their hours of labour, their tables have been improved by importation of cheap food from other countries. But their comforts have not, by any means, kept pace with the advantage enjoyed in the mining districts and towns. So there has been a great migration of farmers' sons to America, and the labourers to the local works and towns during the last 40 years, so that each census for this period shows a great diminution in the number of the rural population.

Workmen's cottages are permitted to fall down, and a new workman's cottage is a very rare thing, and the few rare ones are invariably built by the workmen themselves on leasehold plots of from 40 to 70 years' duration, at the exorbitant ground rents of 6*l.* to 10*l.* an acre, for very inferior land, and the cottages are to be delivered, at the expiration of the leases, in substantial repair to the landlord.

The present trade depression commenced about 1875. The prices of cattle have come down 50 per cent. The causes of the depression are exorbitant rents, the importation of land produce and cattle from America and the Colonies, with bad seasons at home. I cannot see any remedy to this state of things but that the rents must come down radically, and be adjusted by land courts, with free cultivation, compensation for all improvements made, abolition of the game laws, the branding of all foreign produce, much better farmhouses, and more labourers' cottages on the farms.

GENERAL RELATIONS OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.

It cannot be said but that it is upon the whole friendly, but decidedly it is not such as to develop a frank noble character in the tenant. The conditions of his existence as a tenant farmer are most unfavourable. The knowledge which the tenant carries within him at all times, that he is dependent on the will of the landlord for the holding of his farm, and liable at any time to be turned out, or to have put upon him some vexatious conditions in relation to game or trespass, or at election times to have his liberty as an elector interfered with—to live always in such an atmosphere has a tendency to create a feeling of dread and depression, and to foster a servility which undermines his manhood and manliness to an alarming degree.

The landlord should be made to contribute towards the local rates in proportion to the requirements of the locality where his land is situated.

This report was adopted by a meeting of representative tenant farmers and others, as being a fair representation of the state of things in the district, to be presented to the Land Commission in Wales and Monmouthshire. The meeting was held at the St. Clear's Board School, July 13th, 1893, Mr. Thomas Evans, Treventy, ex-county councillor, in the chair.

The Commissioners conferred.

Chairman.

40,977. With reference to the different cases of hardship you have mentioned in your evidence the Commissioners think that under ordinary circumstances such evidence should be given first hand. That is to say, the cases should be brought forward by the persons themselves. However, we understand that you, sir, are deputed as the spokesman, and were elected as such at the meeting held on July 13th at St. Clear's Board School?—Yes, that is so.

40,978. Are the gentlemen referred to in the room?—I believe they are every one.

40,979. And they are prepared if necessary to come forward to substantiate the statements you have made?—Yes.

40,980. An objection has been raised to this evidence being taken second-hand. Of course it must be quite understood that if there were any statements made by the representatives of the landlords, and they were objected to as being second-hand, it would be necessary, for the landlords to come forward exactly in the same way as the tenant farmers and substantiate the statements made?—The first three grievances can be substantiated by Mr. David Thomas, the tenant of one of those farms.

40,981. Is Mr. David Thomas in the room?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Thomas (of Nant y Grove) called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

40,982. You have heard the evidence given by the reverend gentlemen with regard to your own case?—Yes.

See 40,976. Hardship," Nos. and 2.

40,983. Is it absolutely correct and true?—I cannot prove all of it to be correct, because the statement about what the landlord paid and what he gained I cannot prove, as that is a statement taken from the parish rate books, but that the landlord advanced 5*l.* in my rent against the rate is quite correct.

40,984. The only thing you are not responsible for is the gain of the landlord as calculated from the rate book?—Yes, because I was not a ratepayer, so that I did not interfere in the matter.

40,985. Otherwise it is accurate and true?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

40,986. Do you know why the rent was advanced 5*l.*, was it for any specific purpose?—For the school rate.

40,987. You were informed that that was the reason?—Yes. The landlord came over to me and said—"the Act is passed to have a school "rate, and I am not going to pay it. I think "there were plenty of rates before"—so he said "you can do as you like." He came over on the 24th of March and said if I was not willing to pay it I should have notice the next day—so that I agreed to pay—the landlord was the master.

Chairman.

40,988. We are much obliged to you for coming forward. Then the second case is stated thus: "The said David Thomas retired in favour "of his son, John Thomas, in the year 1882, "and the rent was raised by 20*l.*" ?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

40,989. That is also true then?—Yes.

40,990. Your son found that the rent was too severe, and he went off to Glamorganshire to try to do better?—Yes.

40,991. Where do you reside now?—Just outside the village here, Nant y Grove.

40,992. You have left the old farm?—Yes, I have been living nine years since than at Ostry outside St. Clear's.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

40,993. Was it a prosperous time in 1882? I mean was there any justification for raising the rent 20*l.*?—That was an exceptional year. I do not think in the memory of man there was a better year. I sold some fat lambs here on the 1st of October for 10½*d.* per lb., my son sold them the next year for much less, and in two years he sold the same number of lambs, that is 20, and his lambs were 5 lbs. each heavier than mine, and he sold for 19*l.* less than he did the year before. I give them credit, if times held out, the place would not be too dear.

40,994. Has the rent remained at that sum ever since?—I suppose it has.

Mr. Griffiths.

40,995. What had you for your lambs last year?—I have not had any lambs this last 12 or 13 years, but they were less last year again, and much less too. The lambs I sold at that time for 2*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* were sold last year for 25*s.* or 27*s.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Thomas called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

See 40,976 Hardship," No. 3.

40,996. Have you heard the reverend gentleman's statement with reference to the case of the farm Dolaumawr?—Yes.

40,997. Is it true and accurate?—Yes, quite correct.

Chairman—continued.

40,998. What are you?—I am now a labourer, living near Capel Sion, but I was then a tenant farmer.

Re-examined, 41,215.

The witness withdrew.

The Rev. R. MORGAN recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

40,999. Now with regard to the case of Mr. William Good?—He is dead, my Lord.

41,000. Is there any representative of the family in the room?—No

41,001. Is Mr. John Davies in the room?—He is dead, but he has a son-in-law here who has been his successor in this farm. It is possible he is here.

Chairman.

Mr. Vincent, you do not object to a witness saying anything which comes within his own knowledge.

Mr. Vincent. I object to the witness giving second-hand evidence, which cannot be within his own knowledge, conversations and that sort of thing.

Chairman.

Is there any objection to the case of Mr. William Good. We wish to do everything as straightforwardly as possible in the interests of both the landlords and tenants, and that there should be no favour or affection on either side. We are prepared to go to any amount of trouble to get at the truth.

Mr. Vincent. Allow me to show my objection to this case. I do not see, at present, how the witness can know whether compensation was or was not paid to John Davies; except on John Davies telling him, and that would not be evidence.

Chairman.

Will you, Mr. Llewelyn Williams, take it for what it is worth, although it is challenged?

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. Yes, my Lord.

Chairman.

Take the next case, that numbered 5.

Mr. Vincent. The whole of that case would be within the knowledge of David Perkins, and not within the knowledge of the witness at first sight. The ordinary rule would be that they must produce the best possible evidence if they can, or give a reason for not doing so.

Chairman.

41,001*a*. Is Mr. David Perkins in the room?—He will be here presently. He has been about the room, and he is prepared to answer.

41,002. That the information he gave you is accurate?—Yes, he will be here presently.

Chairman.

I am authorised by my brother Commissioners to say that we are perfectly satisfied with this evidence. We are perfectly satisfied that the reverend gentleman was deputed to give this evidence, and that it was given accurately to him by those whose names appear on this paper.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I see no objection to receiving from this gentleman everything that comes within his own knowledge. If he can speak of his own knowledge to the rent being so much for one year and so much for another, there is not the slightest objection to receiving the evidence. I go further and say if he has been deputed to say so by anyone else, that person being dead, he having told him so, that is also receivable.

Chairman.

The Commissioners are perfectly unanimous on that point.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I think we followed the right course with regard to Mr. David Thomas. He was here in the room, and he corroborated what was stated.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,003. What are we to understand by "an absentee landlord," which you mentioned under the head of "ownership"?—The landlords who do not live in the neighbourhood.

41,004. In the county?—In the circuit which I described. I may say there is a gentleman here wishing to come forward in support of the Treventy case, I referred to; he is Mr. Thomas Evans, County Councillor, Treventy. He was the chairman of our meeting.

41,005. He corroborates that case?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Evans (formerly of Treventy) called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

41,006. Is the statement of the Treventy case, as given by the reverend gentleman, accurate?—There are other things I should like to say, because some things occurred afterwards.

See 40,976. ("Hardship," No. 6.)

41,007. If you wish to come forward and give evidence you will please do so afterwards, because that would be distinct evidence. So far as it goes it is accurate?—Yes, so far as it goes it is accurate; but a good many things happened after the 16th of July in connexion with that between me and the landlords.

Chairman—continued.

41,008. You vouch for the case as it stands?—Yes.

Re-examined, 41,216.

The witness withdrew.

The Rev. R. Morgan re-called and further examined.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,009. You say that there has been no demand for leases of late. People are afraid to take them, I suppose?—Yes, exactly.

41,010. Why do not tenants generally take them?—They are afraid because of the tendency of the goods to come down and the rates to go up, and they are afraid to bind themselves to leases.

41,011. Then as to the first case of hardship you mentioned. Did the landlord take to paying the school rate himself?—Yes.

41,012. Why should he interfere with the tenants. They are the ratepayers?—He was paid all rates previously. Then, in anticipation of a school board for St. Clear's, he raised 5*l.* on each of the three farms to indemnify himself.

41,013. He has benefited thereby?—About 180*l.* in the meantime, from 1871 to 1893.

41,014. Have the tenants made any objection to the landlord?—They were afraid.

41,015. Afraid to mention it?—Yes.

41,016. Is it a fact that many tenants are afraid to come forward and give evidence?—Yes, a great number. I never thought there was such terror in the country as I find in connexion with gathering the information for the making up of my statement.

41,017. Do you suppose that the landlords of the district would really interfere?—I cannot say that; but why should they be afraid though? From where does the fear arise? It has a cause somewhere.

41,018. Why should they depute you to come forward. Why should not the tenant farmers come forward themselves?—I do not know; I cannot say. I am not afraid.

41,019. Then in regard to the tenant of Dolaumawr, whom you say was sold up. He was a very industrious man, and several tenants came into the same farm, you say. Did they pay the same rent?—David Thomas says he does not know what was paid.

41,020. Then you state the farm is vacant now. For what reason?—Too high, I suppose; I believe that is the reason.

41,021. Does the landlord take it into his own hand and farm it?—I suppose the landlord farms it. I believe he does.

41,022. Have there been no applications made for that farm?—I could not answer that, but a gentleman here in the room can; he is an old tenant.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

41,023. Is it a usual thing when a plot is taken away from the farm that the landlord does not make any allowance for it?—It was said so at the meeting which my evidence represents.

41,024. As to John Davies, can he prove the case of Parkglas?—It was said so at the meeting, and by the present tenant, Edward Thomas.

41,025. You state that the tenant farmers as a rule are not allowed to be independent in the way of voting in parish vestries?—This case of Cluncar is one in point, and other cases could be produced, but the person will be here presently to verify the statement.

41,026. Then with regard to the Treventy farm, there is a great increase of rent?—Yes, a great increase of rent.

41,027. Can you account for it in any way?—No, I cannot, but the gentleman deputed to speak for Treventy is here now.

41,028. I think you slightly altered your statement here with regard to the damage done in timber cutting?—Yes, it has been modified.

41,029. Who is this damage paid to?—I could not say.

41,030. Is it paid to the landlord or the occupier?—I could not say.

41,031. How do you explain this: "The general effect of these clauses is that they have an immediate tendency to leave on the mind of the tenants a sense of inferiority, and to foster within them a servile spirit, utterly unfavourable to developing a manly character?" Is that in your opinion the general effect of the penalising clauses?—There is a servile spirit pervading the farmers in relation to the landlords. "I am afraid; I am afraid."

41,032. These penalising clauses are never carried out?—No, because they are never transgressed from fear.

41,033. They are too severe?—Yes, too severe.

41,034. Did the farmers you represent think that it was necessary to resort to arbitration with regard to re-adjusting the rent. Were they not satisfied?—They were not satisfied at all, they are going in for a land court unanimously.

41,035. You not only speak for yourself, but you are connected partly with the Grove Farm, and the account you have given of that is correct?—Yes, I have seen the papers.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

41,036. You say, "small holdings are farmed "better than large ones, because more labour is "applied to them"; why is it?—Small holdings are generally farmed by the family themselves, but as large holders they are obliged to have labour, and they are obliged to curtail that on account of extra expenses.

41,037. Do you think the small holders are paid as much as the labourers generally for their services?—That was not the feeling of the meeting which my evidence represents.

41,038. Under the head of "cultivation" you say the tenant "could not stand his ground at "all were it not for these changes, such as root "crops, &c." How do you explain that?—I should like to leave out those words, "root-crops."

41,039. Then the landlords have not paid anything for the permanent pasture?—No.

41,040. Do you know of any instances where after the tenant has laid down land into pasture the landlord will not permit him to plough up the land?—Oh, yes, cases will come before you to-day to prove that in the other district.

41,041. You say landlords as a rule make no improvements?—That was the sense of the meeting.

41,042. You think the tenants have not sufficient buildings?—No, and some of the farm-houses about here are disgraceful, and even dangerous for man to live in.

41,043. Can you mention any instance where tenants have made permanent improvements, and have never been paid for them?—No, I cannot, but that is the general sense of the neighbourhood. David Perkins will come forward as a witness with regard to that.

See 41,190.

41,044. The same thing would apply to the cases where they have not sufficient compensation?—Yes; my statement is typical of the whole of the county council district.

41,045. Then with regard to agricultural education, there has been a good deal done you say. Has that been from the Aberystwith University?—Yes, there have been lectures here on butter-making.

41,046. Were they well attended?— 12 or 14 attended last year. I am told there were over 20 attended the lectures at school.

41,047. I suppose we shall have evidence with regard to the butter factory here. With regard to those tenants who have purchased their farms, as a rule, did they have the money to purchase their farms?—No. They raised the money. I know the farmers in this district and the surrounding districts that are paying much more to-day as freeholders than they did as tenants.

41,048. Did they complain of the expenses of the conveyance?—I cannot say.

41,049. That the expense was greater than what they expected, and that they could not get any abatements?—No.

41,050. In some places we have had suggestions that the Government should lend money at a low rate of interest?—That would be very acceptable in this district, and they would go in for it with one accord.

41,051. Do you consider that the farmer, with his wife and children, is always toiling?—They are always toiling, and their houses—I emphasise this sentence—the houses about here are more like workshops than homes.

41,052. They work longer hours, as a rule, than the labourers do?—Longer hours a great deal.

41,053. Then as to the children who work on the farms, what do you consider the value of their labour. They work, I suppose, quite as hard as the labourers do?—Quite so, and do labourers' work on most farms.

41,054. What do they get for their work as a rule?—Food and clothing, and something which the parents give them when they are married.

41,055. How much would it amount to, do you think. Say a grown-up young man on a farm is worth 30*l.* a year, how much of the 30*l.* does he get from his father?—It depends on the rent of the farm. I know of parties who have left with very little indeed.

41,056. I say, how much does a farmer's son get in payment for his work on the farm in the year?—Nothing until he goes away.

41,057. What do you consider his clothing worth?—Well, say 6*l.* a year, and pocket-money.

41,058. How much would the pocket-money amount to?—Not much, a mere trifle, a little in his pocket, to go to a fair now and then.

41,059. Then there is a good margin between the value of his labour, and what he gets?—Oh, yes.

41,060. I suppose he puts all that money in the bank?—No, I question that.

41,061. Where does it go?—Do you mean the difference between what he has in clothes and what his father keeps?

41,062. Yes?—It is part of the stock of the family to give to him when he marries.

41,063. Is it, as a rule, put by to provide for marriage?—I do not know that.

41,064. Does he always get it when he is married?—I question that very much.

41,065. I see according to your statement from the farm accounts that the advance in wages is very high indeed?—I put down 400 per cent., and it can be verified from the books.

41,066. You say there are some opportunities given to the young people for self-improvement in the neighbourhood. We find some hundreds very deficient in that respect?—Very deficient.

41,067. You have reading-rooms in the villages?—Yes, we have two reading-rooms in St. Clear's. We have had a schoolroom reading-room for 10 years.

41,068. Do they attend it pretty well?—Yes, pretty well on the whole, not as well as I could expect, though.

41,069. The importation of cheap food in this neighbourhood has been a benefit to some of the farmers?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

41,070. It is not a corn-growing country?—No, it is not a corn-growing country.

41,071. You say some farmers have migrated. Can you instance any that have migrated from this part of the country?—Yes, I could, six or eight within the time I have been here, and many more during the last 20 years.

41,072. On the whole the population is decreasing?—Every census, the census is less and less for the last 40 years.

41,073. Do many of the workmen build cottages?—Not many, but the cottages that are built are built by tenants. There is only one on the Treventy estate of 1,400 acres, and that has been built by the tenant.

41,074. You consider there are not sufficient agricultural cottages?—Not sufficient by many, that was the unanimous feeling of the meeting.

41,075. You think if the cottages were a little better they would be inclined to stop?—Yes, that was the general feeling, that there is no accommodation for them.

41,076. Do you know of any cottagers who keep a cow or two?—I do not remember now.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,077. Who are these landlords who advertise their farms to let; can you name them?—I cannot recall at present, but I know it has been done for certain.

41,078. Recently?—Recently.

41,079. It is rather an unusual thing to do?—Yes, unusual.

41,080. What is the character of these landlords who advertise their farms to let; are they the best landlords, or the poor?—Not the best.

41,081. They are landlords, as a rule, who let to the highest bidder?—Not to the highest bidder, but the highest bid given is taken advantage of to raise a desirable candidate up to the mark.

41,082. The highest bid from the most desirable tenant?—Yes.

41,083. I see you are in favour of some change in the method of fixing or adjusting rent; I suppose you consider that really rent is not fixed now on any well-defined basis?—Quite arbitrary.

41,084. You think it is more equitable that rent should be fixed for a certain period, and not by striking an average of a large number of years?—Well, any mode but the present. The upper hand is always now in the hands of the landowner; and the tenant, as a rule, is afraid to claim his own rights, and to say what he wants in relation to his farm.

41,085. What you contend is this, that really the tenant is not on equal terms to contract with his landlord for the rent of the place because of the keen competition. Is that so?—That is one thing.

41,086. You say that local rates have increased very much during the last 20 years or so?—Yes. The instances I brought show this; it has increased over 100 per cent.

41,087. On whom has the increase fallen?—On the tenant, and all are paid by the tenant.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued

41,088. Who really bears the burden of the local rates?—The tenants.

41,089. Are not the rates taken into consideration when a tenant takes a farm?—Very seldom. I can give you a case now. A gentleman in the room rented a farm here 15 years ago. He rented it then according to the then rates, but by this time the rates have advanced, and the rent is the same.

41,090. He took the rates into consideration when he was making the proposal for the rent?—Yes, in this case of Pencoed, Mr. Powell, the landlord, when he rented the farm was paying all rates; he took care in anticipation of the school board being formed to replenish his own pocket, even from the tenants, and has gained on that account from that day to now.

41,091. You contend this, that the increase should be really paid by the landlords?—Exactly.

41,092. Do you find some tenants are more popular than others with the landlord and the agent?—That is very natural.

41,093. Who is generally the most popular man with the agent or the landlord?—It is possibly the flatterer.

41,094. Are there any flatterers in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

41,095. Do you find that tenant farmers in your neighbourhood are ready to abandon the old methods and adopt new methods of farming?—Well I must say that their prejudices cling very much to old habits.

41,096. Too much so?—Too much so.

41,097. Can you suggest anything to remove that prejudice?—A land court would do it, and combination between farmers. Let the farmers understand each other.

41,098. What is the great barrier to combination amongst farmers now?—I could not say exactly. They do not congregate often to talk over those things frankly to each other.

41,099. Why do they not congregate?—I do not know.

41,100. Has it occurred to you it may be this, that in order to combine, it is necessary for some few men to make a start, and do you think that really tenant farmers are afraid to incur the displeasure of the landlord in making the start?—Yes, and they are afraid (I must say this) that some one of their own party will betray them.

Mr. Grove.

41,101. In your evidence you say that they have contracted themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

41,102. What do you mean by that exactly, Mr. Morgan?—That they are not liable to what the Agricultural Holdings Act holds them to. I believe there are copies of agreements to show you that.

41,103. It is illegal to contract themselves out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act, with the exception of clause 33 as to notice. I suppose you mean that?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

41,104. Speaking of co-operation, are there any farmers' clubs in these parts?—No.

41,105. I think that is a most unfortunate thing. It appears to me that a farmers' club would be most useful, for they could then talk over matters. In our county we have a great deal of that sort of thing?—In our public gatherings, when anything of this sort is brought up, say after dinner, or at any time, then we get "No politics," and it is hooted down. That has happened in St. Clear's many times.

41,106. Would it not be better if they began before dinner?—Yes, you are right, much better.

41,107. You speak of the children helping their parents?—Yes.

41,108. Is that pretty general do you think, amongst the small tenant farmers?—Yes, it is.

41,109. And without that help you do not think they could stand the present bad times?—I believe that is so.

41,110. You agree, I suppose, that there is great depression in agriculture at the present moment?—Very great.

41,111. As to the wages which you have quoted, have you had the books to verify the figures you gave?—I have.

41,112. And the information as to the population you have taken also from the census returns?—Yes, from the census returns.

41,113. Is it your opinion that land bears too many burdens in the way of rates and taxes?—Yes.

41,114. An undue proportion?—An undue proportion; and a landlord should be made to contribute towards the local rates in proportion to the requirements of the locality where his land is situated.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,115. Do you consider it a good or a bad thing that the population should have decreased in the agricultural districts?—A very bad thing.

41,116. For the farmer?—For the farmer.

41,117. Because they want more labour?—More labour.

41,118. Has the decrease taken place in the villages as well as in the agricultural parts?—Here in the immediate neighbourhood of the railway it has not decreased but increased.

41,119. Is the tendency of the agricultural population to get together in the villages?—Yes, because there is no accommodation in the country for them.

41,120. Then is the accommodation very much worse than it used to be?—Yes.

41,121. If it is not as good as it has been, is that on account of the cottages falling into disrepair?—Yes.

41,122. On whom have the repairs been, on the tenant farmer or the landlord?—On the tenant farmer.

41,123. Then it would have been to their interest, you think, if the cottages had been better maintained?—Yes. I believe we should have a large number more in the country if there were cottages to accommodate them.

41,124. Is there not another question, the question of increased wages obtainable near the railway stations?—I do not know that it is very different in the country than at the works, if there were cottages for them.

41,125. There are various reasons all pointing in the same direction?—Yes.

41,126. Is there not another reason in the shape of greater social advantages obtainable in villages?—Yes; but the social advantages are getting less and less as people go from the country. I believe, as things are at present, you could have nearly all the social advantages in the country as well as in the villages. We have our parcels post and daily post, and all children can write, and they have to read the same books in our board schools in the towns as in the country. I believe the social advantages could be regained there to a great degree in that way.

41,127. Is not the society they get in the villages a great attraction to the young people?—Yes.

41,128. Would you place the offer of a house as the principal factor in the attraction to the villages?—I would give it a very great importance.

41,129. Supposing that the agricultural labourers were attracted back again to the farms, do you think that the best class of the workmen could be employed at the best rate of agricultural prices?—I have no reason to think otherwise.

41,130. When you say that the landlords on a whole make no improvements, do you in that include the buildings?—I do.

41,131. Is it not the custom of the landlords to do the buildings on the farms themselves?—Not in all cases.

41,132. Do the tenants do them?—The tenants patch up things as well as they can. There are some houses in this district which I represent which are a disgrace to any landlord—tottering on props.

41,133. Would you instance any?—Yes, I will mention one, Manarddwylan by the station, and Maesllan, not two miles from here, and other places I could mention in the neighbourhood. See 41,247, 41,296–41,337.

41,134. Have you been brought up on a farm yourself?—No, but I have been 30 years in the country.

41,135. You are not directly connected with agriculture?—Well, I have a small glebe.

41,136. You spoke about the Government advancing money. You think it would be a good thing if the Government were to advance some money to the sitting tenant to purchase, in the case of a farm coming into the market?—I believe they would avail themselves of that with avidity.

41,137. You say that has been granted to Ireland, and you see no reason why it should not be granted to Wales?—Yes; they would go in for it with avidity.

41,138. Probably the security would be at least as good in Wales as in Ireland?—The Government would have what every landlord has, the land to fall back upon.

41,139. You think it would be taken advantage of?—I believe so.

41,140. Under those circumstances you would think that a freeholder would be in a better position than the tenant farmers?—Yes, he would have greater inducement to work.

41,141. Where rents are now arranged, you say that the highest bid is used to screw up the offer of the selected tenant?—Yes.

41,142. Do you give instances of that?—Well, I can, but perhaps the parties would not be willing. I have instances in my mind.

41,143. As to any instance you have in your mind, we will say, how long ago would it be?—Three years ago.

41,144. Is the tenant still continuing to pay the rent?—Yes, and I can vouch for him that he lives upon the interest of the money more than from the profits of the farm.

41,145. You mean he has other means of his own?—Yes, a little.

41,146. Perhaps he looks upon his farm as a luxury. He was a rich man?—Well, comparatively, and a young man.

41,147. Can you tell us what the figures were. How much was the first offer, and how much he eventually accepted the farm at?—No, I cannot.

41,148. You said also that the tenant was afraid to say what was right in relation to his farm without fear of the landlord?—Yes.

41,149. Can you give any instances?—I can.

41,150. With regard to your idea of a land court, what kind of a land court do you suggest?—A court where both parties could be represented, and an arbitrator to settle between them.

41,151. Would you admit lawyers?—I do not know. I would rather not say. I would certainly desire some one with authority and knowledge.

41,152. Under the head of the general relations between landlord and tenant, you say that landlords should be made to contribute towards the local rates in proportion to the requirements of the locality where the land is situated. Kindly explain that a little more?—I should say this, that a fair proportion of what is paid by the tenant for local rates as the rates increase should be paid by the landlord. Another thing, land in the neighbourhood of villages greatly increases in value for building purposes, and the landlords pay nothing at all towards local rates for that.

41,153. Do I understand you think that, supposing a landlord has let a farm for, say, 50*l.* a year, and that is agreed upon as a fair rent—the tenant would pay the rates, and the rates amount to 10 per cent.—if in process of time the rates amount to 20 per cent., the increase should be borne by the landlord. Do you say that?—That he should pay a share of it.

41,154. In the meantime the power of voting is in the hands, not of the landlord, but of the majority of the population, who fix what the rates are to be?—Well, exactly, but they cannot avoid it in many places. Laws are made in Parliament, and we are obliged to obey them. We have no alternative at all.

41,155. I want to get at what you think would be a fair proportion of the increased rating subsequent to the arrangement upon which the basis of the rent has been fixed?—I should leave that certainly to the occasion when it arises

41,156. Then it would vary with different circumstances?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,157. Do you think that more could be made of the land if our laws were different to what they are?—I think so.

41,158. You think there would be more improvements?—Yes.

41,159. Do you think if the Government were prevailed upon to lend money at 3 per cent. or so, they would be able to keep up that, Are they generally industrious and honest people?—Well, I should not be surprised that they would gladly avail themselves of the advantage.

41,160. They would go on with more courage?—Yes, with more courage a great deal, and they would not have that fear which now surrounds them.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,161. You said, Mr. Morgan, that you knew of about six or seven farmers who had migrated into other districts?—Yes.

41,162. Where have they gone to?—Some to Glamorganshire, and a number to Hereford and Shropshire, and to Northamptonshire and America.

41,163. How have the people done after migrating?—They have done well without exception.

41,164. Are the tenant farmers in this neighbourhood acquainted with that fact, namely, that the people who have migrated have succeeded?—Yes.

41,165. Then what is the reason they do not move off into other parts?—They have not the same enterprising spirit I suppose, and they cling to the land where they were brought up.

41,166. Is there any special reason why they should cling to their own neighbourhood?—Well, early associations.

41,167. They would be deprived of the religious ministrations that they have been used to?—That is a great thing with a Welshman.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

41,168. And possibly an Englishman has never realised it?—Yes, that is very possible.

41,169. You spoke about the man who farmed his place, and who was only able to pay for it from private sources. Does he really farm for profit the place where he is?—Certainly, and a good farmer he is too.

41,170. Does he enjoy many more luxuries than his neighbours?—Well, he could if he wished.

41,171. But he does not?—No, he lives plainly.

41,172. You cite that as an instance of farming paying badly?—Yes.

Chairman.

41,173. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Vincent; first, "Does not Sir Marteine "Lloyd live at Bronwydd"?—Yes, Bronwydd, Cardiganshire.

41,174. "Does not Sir Charles Philipps live "at Picton Castle"?—Yes.

41,175. Where is that?—In Pembrokeshire.

41,176. "Do you say that the tenants of the "Ecclesiastical Commissioners are afraid to "come forward and give their evidence"?—Well, I could not say so; but I know the tenants live in that atmosphere. I do not hear that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners are against that at all—not in any case.

41,177. Not as regards the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—Not as regards permission.

41,178. "You have spoken of inexperienced agents"?—Yes.

41,179. "Is Sir Marteine Lloyd's agent, Mr. 'Davies, of Frood Vale, inexperienced"?—I believe he has experience. He was brought up on a farm.

41,180. "Has Mr. Thomas, the Haverford-"west agent for the Ecclesiastical Commis-"sioners, no experience"?—I cannot say.

Chairman—continued.

41,181. "Do you know that Mr. Sackville "Owen, agent for Sir Charles Philipps, always "has the assistance of Mr. Rule Owen to fix "rents"?—No, I do not.

41,182. "Has Mr. Rule Owen no experience"?—I cannot say.

41,183. "Have you read the evidence given "by agents showing money spent by landlords "on improvements and repairs"?—I believe that is not applicable to our case here.

Mr. Grove.

41,184. You say you believe that it is not?—Yes, from the buildings I know it.

Chairman.

41,185. "If you have read that evidence, or "any part of it, do you adhere to your state-"ment that the landlords as a whole do no "improvements"?—Yes.

41,186. I believe you have read the evidence?—Yes.

41,187. "Do you say in fact that the figures "produced by, for example, Mr. Mousley, Mr. "Sackville Owen, Mr. D. W. Drummond, Mr. "Beynon, and others, are inventions"?—I cannot say.

41,188. Then there are some questions by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Do you not think "that if the Government lent money to the "tenants at a cheap rate of interest in order to "enable them to purchase their farms the land-"lords would ask more for the land"?—It is possible, but they should not, that would be no benefit at all to the tenant.

41,189. "If the tenants would not benefit by "the loan would you be in favour of such a "Government loan being made"?—It would be of no use if the tenants did not demand it, but I believe they would demand it in case it was permitted.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Perkins called and examined through an Interpreter.

See 40,976 "Hard-ship" No. 5.

41,190. Is the statement which has been made by the Reverend Mr. Morgan accurate. The statement he made is as follows: "Cluncar, "in the parish of Llanginning, owner Mr. "Thomas Howell, Llanfynydd. Small farm of "28 acres. The tenant, David Perkins, took it "in 1884, as a yearly tenant. He limed all the "farm, he set up new gates and posts, erected "new sheds, mostly at his own expense, and "worked hard on the farm for five years, and "had greatly improved it. Then at the end of "the five years he had notice to quit, and was "obliged to leave, because he voted for a "guardian at the election of guardians against "the will of the owner, without any compensa-"tion whatever, and what was due to him from "the owner, according to the agreement for the "yard manure, was not allowed him before he "was threatened with a law suit"?—It is not altogether true. I was to a certain extent paid for the manure.

Mr. Vincent. There was another expression used which was not translated; the witness said "Again what you have there is not all true."

Chairman (to the Interpreter).

Will you put that to the witness.

Mr. Vincent's observation was interpreted to the witness.

The Witness.

The gates were referred to. The landlord supplied me with the timber, but I had to make some of the gates, I worked there very hard for five years.

41,191. I wish to call your attention to this. The Reverend Mr. Morgan said "He set up new "gates and posts and erected new sheds, mostly "at his own expense"?—He paid for the stone posts, and I went for them and brought them down.

Lord Kenyon.

41,192. Was the expense you were put to in respect of the haulage?—Yes.

41,193. And the haulage only?—And to fix them.

Chairman

41,194. You worked hard on the farm for five years?—That is so.

41,195. And you greatly improved it?—Yes, half as much again.

41,196. At the end of five years you had notice to quit?—Yes.

41,197. And were obliged to leave because you voted against the owner?—Yes.

41,198. Without any compensation whatever?—Yes, I received nothing.

41,199. And without what was due to you from the owner?—Yes.

41,200. Do you wish to alter the statement about the farmyard manure?—I had no manure when I went there to live, and it was by strength of the law that he had to pay for my manure when I left there.

Mr. Richard Jones.

So that really there is no statement to withdraw with respect to the manure. It is quite true.

Chairman.

41,201. That is quite true. All you want to correct in the evidence is as regards the setting up of new gates and posts. You explain that when you talk of setting up the new gates and posts, you mean that you did not supply them yourself, but you put up the gates and put up the new posts?—The most important thing that I wish to say is, that I worked hard for five years without receiving a penny for my labour.

Lord Kenyon.

41,202. Did you claim any compensation?—I tried to have compensation, but I failed.

41,203. Did you go through a court?—No, I did not. I had not any money to go to law. I took the farm 5*l.* higher than it ever was before, on condition that there was to be no rise afterwards whilst I lived.

Chairman.

41,204. The following question is by Mr. Vincent: "How do you know the reason why "you were obliged to leave"?—I know from what he himself said.

41,205. Who is the person you refer to?—The son of the owner told me plainly that I would have notice unless I voted for him. The owner did not tell me plainly, but the son told me plainly.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. My Lord, I object to that. I do not think the translation is quite correct.

Chairman.

The translation is not correct.

The Witness. We had an election in the parish two succeeding years.

Lord Kenyon.

41,206. Let us have the correct translation of the first answer?—And the first year they came to me to ask me to vote for such and such a person.

41,207. Who were they?—David Lewis and Mr. Williams, Penlan. The first year I did not do so at their request. The second year they asked me to go to Carmarthen to meet them, and I went there. I received a letter before this.

Chairman.

41,207*a.* Please let us have this perfectly accurate?—I received a letter before that. I received a letter before going to Carmarthen, and I went to Carmarthen, and they asked me if I would vote for the person for whom they asked, and I said, "No, I did not think of doing so" and they told me I was bound to do so. I said to them that I did not believe the same as they did, and the son told me that if I did not vote with them I would be sure to get notice the next Michaelmas.

41,208. "The son said that if I did not vote "for them I would be sure to get notice next "Michaelmas." Is that correct?—Yes.

41,209. And you did get notice?—Yes, I did receive notice, and I had to go away from there as well.

41,210. The following question is handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Who were these persons; are "they large landowners or not"?—No, they are not large landowners.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,211. Was it a school board election, or what election was it?—No, it was an election for guardians. My landlord did not know the man for whom I was to vote.

Chairman.

41,212. The following question is by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "What did the father, the "landlord, tell you when you were sent "away"?—Do you mean when I was sent away from Carmarthen?

41,213. No, from the farm?—Nothing in particular, only that I had to go—that was all.

Chairman—continued.

41,214. Mr. Llewelyn Williams asks "You "say that the father almost told you that you "were sent away for voting against his wishes." Is that what you meant to say?—The words that the father used are these—that I would be sure to repent of it. He did not tell me that I was to go away at that time.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID THOMAS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

See 40,976, (Hardship, No. 3), 40,996.

41,215. Mr. Vincent asks the following question: "Is Mr. John Williams a large owner or "a small owner?"—He is a small landowner.

Chairman—continued.

He has only got one farm. He may have a little besides—he may have one farm besides.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. T. EVANS called and examined.

Chairman.

See 41,906.

41,216. Mr. Vincent asks: "Who for the "landlord requested you to make these build-"ings;" that refers to the buildings which have been mentioned?—Mr. Ward, from Cleobury Mortimer, Shropshire, who was agent for Mr. Plowden, of Plowden Hall. He was the owner at the time.

Chairman—continued.

41,217. And who promised to defray the expenses?—Mr. Ward, or I should say that it was not Mr. Ward, but Mr. Dallow, the former agent. There were two agents. He was agent for Mr. Plowden.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JAMES THOMAS (of Haverfordwest) called and examined.

Chairman.

41,218. Whom do you represent?—I represent at this court Henry Levallin Puxley, Esq. I am also agent for very extensive estates in Carmarthenshire. I am agent for the Right Honourable Lord Kensington, Sir Owen Scourfield, and the late Lady Hamilton's estates, and several large estates in Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire, and Cardiganshire.

41,219. Will you confine yourself to rebutting evidence?—Certainly, my Lord. I simply wish to rebut the statement made by the reverend gentleman Mr. Morgan, who has given evidence this morning. He stated that in all cases repairs were done by the tenants. Now I unhesitatingly contradict that statement from beginning to end.

41,220. I beg your pardon; I do not think he said in all cases?—In most cases, then.

See 40,976 ("Cultivation").

41,221. He said, "Landlords on the whole "make no improvements?"—Yes. I think I should not be doing my duty as agent in this county if I were not to state that landlords as a whole do the repairs, and do execute the improvements. I have numerous instances where extensive new buildings and repairs have been done.

41,222. In this neighbourhood?—On the estate of Henry Levallin Puxley, Esq., in this neighbourhood, immediately adjoining this place in the parish of Laugharne, and also at Whitland, the estates belonging to the same gentleman. In all those cases the repairs have been done and the new buildings have been done solely at the expense of Mr. Puxley, and the tenants have not been asked to contribute one farthing towards the outlays.

Chairman—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

41,223. Not even haulage?—Haulage they have done—always the haulage.

41,224. It is the invariable custom, I suppose, to do the haulage?—It is the invariable custom to do the haulage, especially on the other estates that I have named. It is the invariable custom even up at Llandilo. In this county on the estates of the late Lady Hamilton all the improvements which have been made, and which have been very expensive during the last few years, have been done by the landlord. That is the statement I wish to make particularly.

Fearing that my silence might be misconstrued, I wish to inform your Lordship and the other gentlemen composing the Commission that with regard to the cases of Treventy which have been mentioned, and which will be dealt with perhaps later on in this Court, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have elected to give their evidence in London through their Secretary, and that I have nothing further to say on that subject here. I am the local representative in this neighbourhood, and fearing that my silence might be misconstrued, I simply wished to make that statement that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners intend to give evidence in London before the Commissioners through their Secretary.

With regard to my experience, a remark was made about my qualifications as agent, and as to whether I was an experienced agent I may say that I was brought up on a farm. I have worked on a farm, and done everything that any man could possibly do on a farm—reaped, sowed, ploughed, and done everything that could possibly be done. I then went into a land agency office, and was in that office for about 25 or 26 years, and subsequently became one of the firm.

41,225. Would you tell me the name of the gentleman in this neighbourhood whom you represent?—Henry Levallin Puxley, Esq., and his brother, the Rev. Herbert Puxley.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,226. I understand you to say that you do not agree with this statement in Mr. Morgan's evidence that the landlords as a whole make no improvements?—Yes.

41,227. And that they are all done by the tenants?—I do not agree with that.

41,228. If that is so, how do you account for the fact that we see so many farm houses in obvious need of improvements, and so many farm houses out of repair?—The farm houses that you see out of repair are not on estates that I have anything to do with. Although there are very many of them just about this place, I think on the larger estates, such as Picton Castle estate, and many other estates in Carmarthenshire, the farm houses may be considered to be in very good repair. The small landlords may not have houses that could be designated as in very excellent repair, but as a rule I think the farm houses in this neighbourhood, especially of those landlords who have been mentioned here to day (and I would remark particularly the Ecclesiastical Commissioners), are in excellent repair, and where they are not in repair they are generally rebuilt.

41,229. Then I take it that practically no money is spent upon the estates with which you are connected by the landlord?—Very large amounts of money are spent.

41,230. Why should large amounts of money be spent if the farm houses are in good condition?—Because that is what I say; they have all been put into repair by the landlords at their expense, and they are renovated and renewed at their expense.

Lord Kenyon.

41,231. Mr. Thomas, I take it you have to keep an estate in repair, and when one farm is repaired you have to go back to where you began originally some years ago?—Yes, go all round them and keep them in good and tenantable repair.

41,232. Have you ever known an estate that did not require repairs?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,233. That is what I am upon. I understand that you have come to rebut the evidence, and to say that no repairs need be done?—No, what I said was this, that the Rev. Mr. Morgan said that most if not all the repairs were done by the tenants; I say that most if not all the repairs are done by the landlords, especially those whom I have to deal with, and I do not think that that statement of Mr. Morgan's should be allowed to go uncontradicted.

41,234. Do you go so far as to say that the tenants do not do any repairs themselves?—I do not mean to say that they do not. Some of them do, and some do not.

Lord Kenyon.

41,235. Always excepting the haulage?—Always excepting the haulage; the haulage is principally done by the tenants.

Mr. Grove.

41,236. Do you represent any property in this county council division of St. Clear's?—The Treventy Estate I am the local representative of. I am not certain whether Mr. Puxley's estates in Laugharne are in this division. They are not in this division; they are three miles outside this place.

41,237. Do you or do you not represent anything in this division?—I am the local representative of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for the Treventy estate, which is in the division spoken of.

Chairman.

41,238. The following questions are put in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Can you say that in "all cases repairs are done by the landlord?"—In all cases that I have to do with they have been invariably made by the landlords, and I say it without fear of contradiction.

41,239. What is the general condition of the "farms on your estates in this county, both as "to repairs and accommodation?"—I think they can be considered very good.

41,240. You consider the general condition very good?—I think so, my Lord.

41,241. "How many farms are there on your "estate in this county?"—In this county I should think, roughly speaking, there may be 100.

41,242. "How often have you visited them "during the last five years?"—I visited them, I should think, two or three times a year as a rule.

41,243. "Do you consider the farms of Sir "Charles Phillips, in this part of the county, "are in a good state of repair?"—I have never been on one of them, so I cannot say.

41,244. "Is it a fact that the tenants have to "pay interest on the landlord's improvements?"—Not on the estates that I manage—not one.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. SACKVILLE OWEN recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

Previously examined at 29,194–29,270.

41,245. Would you kindly tell us where you live?—I live at Tenby.

41,246 You have given evidence to the Commission before, I think?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

41,247. Where was that?—At Pembroke. A statement, my Lord, has been made by the Reverend Mr. Morgan in reference to the farms in the neighbourhood being in bad repair. He mentioned Manarddwylan, See 41,133, and evidence of next witness.

41,248. Is that in the printed statement of his evidence?—I think not, but he said it was in very bad repair. I was going to explain why it was. It belonged to the Picton Castle estate, of which I am the agent.

41,249. The tenant is coming forward to speak about this. Perhaps you will tell us what you have to say, and we will call him afterwards?—Certainly. The farm is one amongst several others in this immediate neighbourhood that have been advertised for sale, and it was to have been sold two or three years ago, but for private reasons—reasons with reference to title and other things—we have not been able to bring the farms into the market, and therefore we did not consider it our duty to spend much money in repairs. But we have repaired twice during the last two years all damage done by storm, and we have put the dwelling-house up as well as we could. The outbuildings are not in good repair, but that is the reason.

41,250. You consider Manarddwylan Farm in a bad state of repair?—Yes, it is, and that is the reason. It is to come into the market this summer with some other farms.

41,251. How long has it been in this bad state of repair?—The present tenant held a lease, that lease expired about six years ago; under that lease he was bound to give it up in repair. The lease expired in Michaelmas 1886. The rent of the farm was 110*l.* under the lease.

41,252. What is the size of it?—I think it is somewhere about 90 acres. It was re-valued at 120*l.* First of all, as I said, the tenant ought to have given it up in repair. It was a repairing lease. We did not ask him to spend 1*s.* upon it, neither have we raised the rent. That is all I have to say in reference to it.

41,253. It is in a very bad state of repair, and it has been in a very bad state of repair for nine years?—It was in a very bad state when the lease ran out in 1886.

41,254. And the reason was that you hoped to sell it?—Yes. It is so seldom when a lease runs out that we do call upon the tenant to do the repairs.

41,255. So that you have left it in this miserable condition for nine years?—No, seven years; but we have repaired the dwelling-house several times and repaired the roof, and so forth.

41,256. The tenant is going to make a statement with reference to the state of the farm?—In reference to the statement of Mr. Morgan that the tenants do all the buildings, I say it is quite new to me.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,257. He does not say that the landlords as a whole make no improvements?—The Reverend Mr. Morgan said that the main buildings were not done by the landlords in the neighbourhood. He said that the landlords as a whole make no improvements. That is quite new to me, because all the buildings are done by the landlord on the estate which I represent, and all the important repairs. I shall be ready to answer anything further.

41,258. Of course that is a very general statement; it may mean several things?—I have never heard in this county at all of tenants doing new buildings.

41,259. I should read that to mean that Mr. Morgan simply meant to say that the landlords do not improve the farms as they ought to be improved?—I do not assent to that suggestion.

41,260. I mean I understand Mr. Morgan's statement to be a negative statement; he says that the farm buildings and so forth are inadequate; that is what is implied in his evidence—that the landlords do not make the improvements?—He says the landlords as a whole make no improvements. I say they do, and on the Picton Castle estate some very fine farm houses have been built in this neighbourhood, and we are doing all the farm houses as quickly as we can on a large estate.

Chairman.

41,261. How large is the Picton Castle estate?—About 23,500 acres.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,262. Was the roof in the dwelling-house of this farm leaky?—Yes, it was. It suffered from some severe storms. However, during the four past years that we intended to sell it, we have repaired it several times. The tenant bought a new farm himself, but he did not seem inclined to give this farm up, although of course he might have done so. I more than once offered to take it up.

Chairman.

41,263. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams. "How many farms "on the estates which you represent in this "county have you visited during the last five "years?"—I have made such visits as were required.

41,264. What do you consider is required?—I have been over most of the farms in Llandowror and this neighbourhood during the last three or four years.

Chairman—continued.

41,265. You have visited them once a year for the last four years?—Well, once a year, or according as the repairs are required, when the tenants come to me, I go. I do not go and visit them unless I am asked to, unless there is any special cause.

41,266. Then that means that you visit the farms which have been repaired?—I visit farms requiring repairs, before the repairs are done, and also during the repairs and after completion.

41,267. But not the others?—Sometimes I do. I make no rule, my Lord. If there is anything required, or the tenant comes, I go.

41,268. "Do you consider them to be in a "good condition, both as to repairs and accommodation?"—The farms in this immediate neighbourhood?

41,269. The farms on the estates that you represent?—Some of them are very good, but some are not. It is a very large estate. We have spent, as you will see was mentioned in my evidence, something between 30,000*l.* and 40,000*l.* in the last 13 years.

41,270. The answer to that question is that some are good and some are not; is that it?—Yes.

41,271. "Are not you a solicitor and a County "Court Registrar?"—Yes.

41,272. "What practical experience have you had?"—Very little in law, but I have farmed for 30 years. I have not practised as a solicitor excepting doing the Picton Castle work for 20 years.

41,273. "Were you not obliged to repair "Manarddwylan twice over, because the first "repairs were only a makeshift, which were "destroyed by a storm?"—That is so, my Lord.

41,274. "Do you think it an encouragement "to good farming to keep the tenants in a state "of suspense as to whether they are to leave or "not?"—Certainly not, but we could not help ourselves, my Lord.

41,275. "In what state are the buildings of "Dolerwydd?"—The Dolerwydd buildings are very good for the purpose for which they are required. There is no one living there. It is all grass land, and let for grazing.

41,276. "Do you charge interest on the land-"lord's improvements?"—We do in some instances.

Chairman—continued.

41,277. "In what state of repair are the "buildings of Maesyllan?"—That is one of the farms that is going to be sold again in this immediate neighbourhood; they are not very good.

Mr. Seebohm.

41,278. As I understand it, the part of the estate that is going to be sold here is the outlying part of the estate?—Yes.

41,279. Could you say how many acres it is of the whole 23,000 acres that you mentioned?—I think it is about 500 or 600 acres.

41,280. And you consider that to be quite an exceptional part of the estate?—Yes.

41,281. That is to say as to the condition of that part?—Yes, and this tenant who complains at Manarddwylan bought a farm of his own, with a very good house upon it, where he might have gone to if he had chosen, but he begged me not to take the place up, but to let him stop on, and we let him stop at the old rent, and we never made him do the repairs when the lease went out.

Chairman.

41,282. The following question is also put in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Why cannot you "put the buildings of farms about to be sold "in good repair, and raise the reserve price?" —We did not think it would be advisable, my Lord.

41,283. You do not think that it would be advisable?—No. We have been intending to sell for the last four years, but for certain reasons we have not been able to bring the property into the market, but we are going to do it this spring or this summer.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,284. I think it would be a question of price?—Yes, quite so.

41,285. It would be a question of price, and the purchaser would have to expend the money in his own way, because he would not pay so much to you; there is no rule; it is as broad as it is long, I take it?—Yes. Re-examined 41,339.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

See 41,133, and evidence of preceding witness.

41,286. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

41,287. Where do you live?—At Manarddwylan, close to St. Clear's Station.

41,288. How far from the town is it?—About half a mile. I should be glad if some of you would visit the place.

Chairman—continued.

41,289. Have you had this evidence translated to you, and do you understand it?—There is no need to translate. I understand a little English, but I prefer someone to read it.

41,290. This is correct?—Yes.

41,291. And you are prepared to vouch for it?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

The Evidence of WILLIAM EVANS, tenant farmer, Manarddwylan, in the parish of Llanfihangel Abercowyn.

PERSONAL.—Within the last 50 years my father, William Evans, as joint tenant with my uncle John Phillips, was holding the Farm Manarddwylan under a life lease at the annual rent of 50*l*. Then at the expiration of the lease, my father, William Evans, retook the said farm in September, 1865, at the annual rent of 110*l*., which was at the time a very high figure, without any improvements being made to the buildings or anything else. A lease was offered at the time to my father, which he refused for a while, but some years afterwards my father was induced to take a lease which was dated December 6th, 1870, but the re-enter was in September, 1865, as seen in the accompanying agreements. And according to the agreement the Land Tax is to be allowed me, but it has not been allowed me at all until the date of the accompanying agreements dated September 30th, 1892. In the old agreements above, it is shown that out of 92 acres there are about 50 acres of arable land, most of which has been converted to permanent pasture entirely at my father's and my expense. And in the accompanying agreement of 1892 only 14 acres are allowed for arable land. In the year 1884 I built a shed worth 10*l*. The timber in it alone cost me 2*l*. 10*s*. I asked the agent, Mr. S. H. Owen, if he would give me some timber, instead of what I put in the shed. He certainly did promise, but by way of fulfilment he allowed me exactly 13 feet, which was only a sham. When the depression of trade began it was stated in the newspapers that the Picton Castle estate tenants had a remittance of 10 per cent. Then at the next audit I asked Mr. T. R. Owen, the agent, why was not the remittance allowed me as it was to the other tenants? The answer given was that I should see the other agent (meaning S. H. Owen), and lay my case before him. At length I resolved to lay my case before this agent, and the reply I received from him was "that he "never saw the places about St. Clear's, and "that he was told that they were rented ridiculously cheap, and if I wished, he would take "possession of the farm." So I then gave up in despair asking for any remittance in my rent.

In 1890 I had notice to quit, as the farm was going to be sold in the following summer. In the meantime, the agent came to see the place. At that visit I stated to him that many improvements were made on the farm. I asked him if he would consider the improvements, and nominate a valuer to estimate the value thereof, and put the value of such improvements in the conditions of sale to be paid by the purchaser to me as the outgoing tenant? The answer he gave was, 'you better buy it yourself.' Then in that case I asked him would he sell me the farm by private contract? The answer was,

Chairman—continued.

"I cannot do that, the farm must be sold by "public auction." I told him, "then in this "case, I would have to pay for improvements "made by myself." At this answer he shifted the conversation to something else in order to avoid talking about improvements.

In this state of suspense I, and other tenants adjoining my farm, were left until late in the following September, when we were summoned down to Narberth to the agent's office, with the view of retaking my farm for another year, and the others, who were in the same position, to do the same. At this interview I asked the agent if he would agree to an arrangement to have a new roof on the dwelling-house, as it was leaking and in a dangerous condition. He said that he could not agree to any arrangement of this sort, and he earnestly desired me to make a shift anyhow, with things as they were, as the property would be sold without fail the following year. In about a fortnight or so after this we were visited by a violent storm, which took away a great part of the roof, and even our beds were wetted by the rain. Then I decided to repair it myself, at the risk of not being repaid. I had bought laths and slates, and engaged a mason to do the work, but the severity of the weather for some time prevented the mason from doing the work. Then in the meantime the agent (S. H. Owen) came to the neighbourhood, so my wife took advantage of his visit, and laid the state of the house before him. Then the said agent sent the farm-bailiff to me, by whom I was told "that "if I would put a roof on I could not expect "payment for the repairs done." The bailiff said that he would shift things so as to pass the winter through.

I then wrote to the landlord, Sir Charles Phillips, stating as well as I could how things were with me. This was replied to, and this is the letter in which I am accused that I had neglected the repairs which I had covenanted to do:—

Picton Castle,
Haverfordwest,
SIR, 28th October 1891.

I AM directed by Sir Charles Phillips to say that he will forward your letter to Mr. Owen of Narberth.

Mr. Evans, the bailiff, has informed Sir Charles that he has made sufficient arrangements for repairs, but if the house is in the state you describe, I am to add that it speaks very badly for your observance of the "covenant to repair" contained in your agreement for a lease.

Yours, &c.,
(Signed) H. L. LOWE,
Secretary.

Mr. W. Evans,
Manarddwylan, St. Clears.

In answer to this accusation I beg to reply that the agreement to keep things in tenantable repair had ceased five years before. The materials which I had bought to mend the roof at my own expense had to be carted away.

The landlord's workmen came to do the repairs in their own way, and in a week after they had completed their work we, as a family, were in a worse plight than ever, and had to wait another month for them to make another piece of shift work. The building is simply in an awful condition, and perfectly untenantable. The buildings and fences were kept tenantable until I had notice to quit in 1890.

July 28, 1893, I had a letter from the agents stating that the proposed sale would not take place. Then on the receipt of this letter I asked him on what conditions he would permit me to stay at Manarddwylan. This letter of mine was not answered at all, until November 20th, 1893, when he requested me, through his clerk, to sign an agreement for another year, which I refused to do. Then December 12th, 1893, I had a letter requesting me to be at home on a certain day. At this interview he asked me what was my reason for not signing the agreement, and he told me that, if I would not sign it, 'he would take possession.' At this I told him that I had lived quite long enough under such uncertain conditions. I asked him when he intended taking possession. He said 'I 'shall leave that to you.' I answered 'It shall 'be September, 1895.' At this answer the agent said 'My dear man, do not take us to be your enemies. We are your best friends. I am doing my best to stop the sale, and if the sale will not take place you shall live here and we will repair and make it comfortable for you. We do not want to throw old tenants away.' But, notwithstanding these good promises, the managers of this estate manage to keep their tenants sufficiently under water. It is a wonder that they are able to live at all, and I believe that if a prize had been given for the most effectual mode to prevent their tenants from thriving they could not have hit upon a better way to effect their purpose than by their yearly agreements, of which I and others around here are the victims.

Chairman.

41,292. In your evidence you say that your father and uncle took the farm under a life lease at the annual rent of 50*l.*?—Yes.

41,293. The lease expired in 1865, and your father took it at the annual rent of 110*l.* Then you do not agree with the evidence of Mr. Sackville Owen, who said that the lease expired nine years ago, and that the rent was 110*l.*?—A life lease was the first. That was not exactly the same as the agreement of lease.

41,294. I understand that. The life lease was 50*l.*?—Yes, my Lord.

41,295. And in 1865 when the farm was rebuilt it was put up to 110*l.*?—Yes.

41,296. Mr. Sackville Owen told us, if I have not misunderstood him, that the original rent was 110*l.*, that the farm was revalued at 120*l.*, but out of consideration to you remained at the old rent of 110*l.* That you disagree with?—Yes.

41,297. Then you have been living for nine years in this farm, which was in a deplorable condition?—Yes, my Lord. Four years I kept it up upon my own responsibility, until I received a notice. I left it afterwards.

41,298. Did the roof tumble in?—It slipped down.

41,299. Did you repair it?—No, I did not repair it, but I bought material for repairing, with a determination to do the repairs myself.

41,300. Did the agent tell you that if you repaired it he would not give you any compensation?—The farm bailiff did, my Lord. It was like this: the house was in a bad condition, and I determined to make the repairs myself without asking them. I had asked when I took the place for a second time, after they endeavoured to get me to make a shift——

Chairman.

41,301. Yes, to make the best of it?—And a storm came and I consider that there was no means of doing anything to the house without putting a new roof on it. After that I bought the slates and the laths, with the intention of putting them in on my own responsibility. At that time we were prevented by the weather, and the agent came to the neighbourhood, to St. Clear's Station, and my wife went to him and told him how I stood, and Mr. Owen sent the farm bailiff to the house at the time. The consequence was that I was prevented putting up the house myself.

Lord Kenyon.

41,302. I think this agreement explains the difference between Mr. Sackville Owen and you. It states that the yearly rent is to be 121*l.* 10*s.*?—I took two leases. The first was a life lease, and then a lease for 21 years.

41,303. The last agreement in 1892 says that the yearly rent is 121*l.* 10*s*?—That is dated after the notice to quit.

41,304. You have only been asked for 110*l.* per annum?—I paid 110*l.* and the tithe besides.

41,305. Did that amount to 121*l.* 10*s.*?—Not exactly—a few shillings under that—I am not quite sure of the amount.

41,306. How much was the land tax?—14*s.* 4*d.*

41,307. What do you complain of in the yearly agreements?—You do not know how to till your land. Supposing you prepare this year, a farmer wants to know two or three years in advance.

41,308. I do not understand what you mean. Do you mean that you complain that you are not allowed to plough more than 14 acres. Is that it?—Yes. That appears to be very hard, as it was so from the beginning. Everything is down on my statement that I wish to say.

41,309. That is what I wanted to know. You say at the end of your evidence that if a prize had been given for the most effectual mode of preventing the tenants from thriving, they could not have hit upon a better way to effect their purpose than by their yearly agreements?—Yes, I do.

41,310. What I want to know is, what you complain of in those agreements?—You are obliged to leave, and you cannot do anything to improve the place or improve yourself.

41,311. Why; that is what I do not see?—Because they will not allow compensation.

41,312. It does not say so in the agreement, does it?—Yes; but I asked for that before, and it was refused.

41,313. I want to know what you complain of in the agreements?—Yearly notice more particularly. Of course I must acknowledge this, that the agent had told me that he would not press me. There is a clause binding me to keep the buildings in repair, and I refused; but he said that he would not press that clause. Still, I would have to do it, inasmuch as others did it.

41,314. That is one clause you complain of. Is there any other clause that you complain of?—Nothing particular with regard to the condition, but rather the time.

41,315. Simply that it is a yearly agreement?—Yes, that it is a yearly agreement. You are obliged to leave, and unable to prepare for the worst.

41,316. I do not know why it should win a prize. That is all I wanted to know. It is very much like other people's agreements; I cannot see much difference?—Yes, only that you must leave on the 29th of September if they ask you. The other agreements are not so, without notice.

Mr. Seebohm.

41,317. I want to have this point quite clear. I think you said, in reply to the Chairman, that you had been living nine years in a place that was kept untenantable—which was out of repair?—That is not exactly right. I was doing that myself until I received a notice in in the year 1890.

41,318. So that really you state that up to 1890 the buildings and fences were kept tenantable by yourself until you had notice to quit?—Yes.

41,319. So that it is only four years at the most, instead of nine years, that you have been in this terrible condition?—Yes.

41,320. And your real complaint is that you are living on an estate which, owing to the fact that it is going to be sold, cannot be properly let to tenants to their advantage?—Yes, because they refused to allow me to do it myself, and they failed to do it themselves.

41,321. Is it true that you have another farm of your own?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

41,322. Then why do you continue this uncertain tenancy if you have a farm to go to?—It was after I received a notice that I happened to buy that farm. It is a piece of land without a building on it, and I have been endeavouring to erect a building.

Mr. Grove.

41,323. You see no reason why the landlord should not have repaired, even if he was going to sell the property?—I do not see it, but Mr. Owen perhaps can say.

41,324. We will not ask Mr. Owen about it. Would not the property sell so much better if the buildings were in proper repair?—That is my opinion.

Chairman.

41,325. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Stephen: "Did you ever ask for an "allowance in respect of the land tax before "1892?"—No.

41,326. "Has the amount of land tax you "paid been paid to you?"—No, not up to the present. Mr. Colbert Owen has promised, and said that it was not his fault, and he asked me to ask Mr. Rule Owen when I paid the next rent, and Mr. Rule Owen could not do that unless the name of Mr. Owen of Narberth was on the face of the receipt.

41,327. Then the answer is No. Mr. Stephen's questions continued: "When you asked for a "new roof did not Mr. Owen offer to repair the "old one?"—No, he told me to make shift, if possible.

41,328. "Have you not got a farm near Kidweli with a good dwelling-house on it?"—It will be so. I have not finished there. It is in the parish of Llanstephan and not Kidweli. I have not finished the buildings of the new house.

41,329. "Was not the farm valued at 170*l.* in 1886 when the second lease ended?"—I have nothing to say. The agreement says 110*l.*

41,330. "When you got the materials for a new roof, were you not aware that the farm was to be sold?"—Yes.

41,331. "Was not the clause about repairs "struck out of your agreement?"—Not in that, but it has been in the last.

41,332. "Did not Mr. Owen offer to take up the farm in 1890?"—I cannot say. I do not remember that.

41,333. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams. "Why do you "object to being allowed to plough up only 14 "acres? Is it because 50 acres used to be "allowed to be ploughed up?"—My chief object was to show in my evidence the improvements I have made.

41,334. "You say Sir Charles Phillips made "a mistake in a letter which you produce, "when he said that the repairs fell upon you?" —Yes, because the lease had expired about five years before I received the letter, or before the time of the letter.

Chairman—continued.

41,335. "Were you not born on Manarddwylan?"—Yes.

41,336. "And is it not your wish to live in "your old home?"—If I could have a building, of course that would be so.

41,337. "Did you simply rely on your land-"lord's honour that you would be repaid when "you bought the materials for repairing the "roof?"—Yes

Mr. Griffiths.

41,338. Did you make application in writing for compensation for the improvements under the Agricultural Holdings Act when you made improvements?—No, I only did so verbally.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. SACKVILLE OWEN recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

41,339. Do you wish to state anything further, Mr. Owen?—Yes.

With reference to the statement of the last witness about his not getting an allowance for land tax that was promised him, I wish to say that I did tell him he should get it, but by some mistake it was not given. I do not receive the rents of the estate. I manage the estates, but Mr. Rule Owen receives the rents. I told him to allow the land tax, but by an oversight he did not do so.

41,339A. Then there is nothing you rebut; you say that that is quite right?—That is so; it is quite accurate. Further I should like to state that when the first notice to quit expired, some few years after the lease had terminated, the tenant had done no repairs. So far as I could I did the best for him to patch up the premises until the sale took place. He did it himself till the notice to quit was given. When the notice to quit expired some four years ago I offered to take up the farm, but he has year by year since begged of me to let him keep it on, because the price of stock was so low that it would be ruinous to sell it.

Chairman—continued.

41,340. I think we understood that?—May I add one word. He asked to have the property sold privately to him. The property is in the hands of trustees; it is a life interest, and we could not comply with that.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 41,858.

The Rev. GEORGE BANCROFT recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

Previously examined, questions 29,738, 29,221.

41,341. My Lord, I wish to state that, though I had no connexion with the farming interest, that is, as a farmer, yet having regard to my long residence in the district where I have lived for 31 years, and having so much to do with the working people there, I thought it gave me not only a legal but a moral right to speak before the Commission, and I did so at Narberth. A week or so after there appeared an anonymous letter in the "Tenby Observer" saying that I was guilty of a vulgar intrusion. Now, you promised us when this Commission was opened that we should have protection, and I think for anonymous persons to write and abuse one just because he gave evidence in a legal way is going beyond what is his right. I wrote to you, my Lord, and sent you the letter that this person wrote and likewise my answer to it in the "Tenby Observer," and saying that I should appeal to you for protection.

Chairman.

41,341A. When was that letter written—I mean your letter to me? I have received no letter from you?—I wrote to you last Friday week I should think, or this day fortnight, but I addressed my letter to 6, Old Palace Yard.

Chairman—continued.

41,342. Perhaps that is the reason why the letter has not reached me. The headquarters of the Commission have been moved to Trafalgar Buildings in consequence of the wish of the Government to have another Royal Commission sitting at 6, Old Palace Yard. Perhaps that is the reason why the letter has not yet reached me. I am very sorry your letter has not been answered, but up to the present it has not come to hand?—I think one of the Commissioners has the letter of which I complain.

41,343. That is the letter signed "Watson Moor"?—Yes, or more correctly it should be "Vatson Moor."

41,344. Then there is an answer on the 2nd April 1894 written by you to that letter?—Yes, my Lord.

41,345. In reference to that I have to say that we are all unanimous in our determination to protect any witness who may in any way be threatened or interfered with. We have said that several times and we are fully determined to carry it out. With regard to the letter that you have brought before our notice, we are of opinion that the writer on reflection will regret having written it. We consider it an improper and a foolish one, and one which is not improved by being anonymous, and it should be publicly known that evidence is not confined to any class of persons, and we consider your evidence of value to the Commission?—Thank you, my Lord. Then you do not consider me a vulgar intruder?

41,346. No, in no way?—Thank you. I value your opinion more than that of the anonymous writer.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 41,482.

Mr. C. R. VICKERMAN called and examined.

Chairman.

See 29,384–29,493, and 29,738–29,921, also 41,482–41,494.

41,347. You appear before the Commissioners wishing to make some rebutting statements on the evidence of the Reverend George Bancroft, who has just addressed us?—Yes, and of a man of the name of John Hilling.

41,348. You quite understand that it is rebutting evidence; you do not wish to bring forward any fresh evidence?—No, this is only rebutting evidence.

41,349. Kindly confine yourself to that?—Yes, and I will be as brief as I can, but I think I shall have your sympathy when I tell you.

41,350. We want to do what is fair and right to everybody?—For six weeks past I have been under the imputation of being a very bad landlord and being most inhuman. In the "Western Mail" of the following day after your sitting at Narberth on the 7th of March, in large print at the beginning it says, "Sitting at Narberth "yesterday. Mr Vickerman and the Widows. "Rival Colliery Proprietors;" and then another paper has it, "Eviction of Widows. Rents "raised on Tenants' Improvements. The affairs "of the Hean Castle Estate," the Hean Castle estate being my estate. "Competition in Mining. "Widows' tabooed." And then another paper (all these are local papers) "Serious allegations "against Landlords." For six weeks I have been under these imputations, and I wrote to the Secretary for the minutes of the evidence that I might have an opportunity of replying to it. He wrote to me that he was sorry to say that they would not be ready for five or six weeks, and I only received them a day or two ago. I took the earliest opportunity thereupon of coming here to rebut these statements and in self-defence. I do not come at all as fighting the battle of the landlords; the landlords are able to take care of themselves. I merely wish to state my own case, and I think I shall not have much difficulty in rebutting and refuting all those imputations. Mr. Bancroft's evidence was really so lengthy that I scarcely know where to begin, but I think his main charge was this——

41,351. Will you give us the numbers of the questions to which you refer; we had better not have anything vague, just point it out exactly?—Your Lordship will see this at question 29,741.

See 29,741.

41,352. That is the case of the widows?—You do not wish me to read all his evidence of course.

41,353. No; just contradict anything that you say is not the fact?—After beginning about the tenants being afraid to come forward and that there were Nicodemuses and Josephs of Arimathea and that sort of thing, he says, "I submit that a landlord's responsibilities "are such, the kind of property he owns is so "bound up with the interests and even existence "of many that he must exercise his rights with "prudence and forbearance, if he does not he "injures his fellow creatures in such a way as "the possessor of no other property can. This "prudence and forbearance has not been exercised in our own neighbourhood. Landlords "have studied self and no one else. They have "injured widows and the poor. In 1871 Sir "Pryse Pryse, of Gogerddan, sold his estate in "our district. This comprised five farms of 100 "acres each or thereabouts; 12 or 13 smaller "holdings of from 15 to 40 acres and about 14 "cottages, some of these having two or three "acres, some one, some with gardens only."

41,354. Is that correct?—Oh, yes, that is correct. "The tenants had been long on the "land, were much attached to their homes, and "hoped to make terms with the new landlord."

41,355. Is that correct?—Yes, that is correct no doubt. As to their hoping to make terms, that I do not know.

41,356. But much attached to their homes?—Much attached to their homes, oh yes, they are very fond of their homes here. "The sale did "not take place until August 28th, though "there was only one month to Michaelmas "Day" (this is the particular point I want to call your attention to), "the merciless instruction was issued that no widows would be "allowed to retain possession of land. Four "had to leave, one Hannah Griffiths, of North "Park, kept a cow, she lost the land and was "obliged to sell her cow. Elizabeth Thomas, of "South Hill, cultivated 25 acres; her husband "built the cottage, it was but moor land when "he took it; they made the hedges, and did all. "She had a son of 40 years of age, a steady, "sober, industrious man, who could and did "cultivate the place as well as any farmer in "Pembrokeshire, and, yet because his mother "was a widow, and had the place in her name, "they could not keep it. Mary Thomas, a "neighbour, held 15 acres, her husband built "the cottage, and did the same with the land, "and she had the same severity meted out to "her. Mary Owen, of Moysland, had 25 acres; "she kept a labourer and looked after her place, "but she too had to leave. They may live in

Chairman—continued.

" cottages, but not on the land. None of these " widows were on the parish before, but, having " the means of livelihood taken from them, " some of them had no other resource. Eliza- " beth Thomas died in one month. Mary Owen " kept off the parish for a few years, and Mrs. " Griffiths was an early recipient. The other, " Mary Thomas, found refuge with her son-in- " law. Here, my Lord, I wish to say that I " wrote to Mr. Vickerman, the new landlord, to " say that I would appear here to-day to speak " of this, so that his not being present, there- " fore, is not my fault. Here I would em- " phasise the following, if Mr. Vickerman should " reply to-morrow or the next day, that the " places were small, and such as a widow could " control, that in the case of one she kept only " a cow; in the case of the other two a labourer " was kept on one, and the son lived on the " other; that widows may be as successful " farmers as others. Three of the best culti- " vated places I know of are controlled by " widows. (Q.) Did Mr. Vickerman state any " reason for his objection to widows?—(A.) No, " not that we know of. It was dealt out all " round." Now, I must ask permission to make a statement on the subject of that which will prevent confusion, and, I think, save time. This evidence refers to a purchase that I made (not in 1871, as the witness says, but in 1872, but that does not make much difference), of an outlying property belonging to Sir Pryse Pryse, of Gogerddan, in South Wales, one of the largest landowners in Cardiganshire. This was an outlying property, containing about 1,000 acres in two blocks; it had no residence upon it; and apparently was never visited or noticed by the Pryses at all. The sale was by the trustees of Sir Pryse Pryse; I believe they were raising money to pay younger children's portions. They appointed a surveyor (who did not know much of the district) in order to survey the estate, and lot it out in lots for sale. Of this property they formed 10 or 12 lots; they offered them in the first instance in two blocks, and then, if they were not sold, they were to be sold in these 12 lots. Now it was the most singular sale that in my experience I ever had to deal with. I can pass up these particulars if that is any satisfaction. First of all, there is not a rent stated ——

41,357. I beg your pardon for interrupting you, but what we want to get at is, were these four widows on the property when you bought it?—Will your Lordship allow me: Mr. Bancroft had every allowance made to him; he was examined at very considerable length.

41,358. One moment. What we want now is the rebutting evidence?—Well, I am coming to that, and I think in the shortest way possible, but you must allow me to state my case, so as to absolve myself from these grievous charges.

41,359. Quite so, but you must be specific?—I am under the charge of inhumanity, but I will make my remarks as short as possible. Not only was there not a rent stated, or an occupation stated as it then was; they say in the occupation of A., B., and C., and their under-tenants; but every tenant was under notice to quit at the following Michaelmas. The sale was on the 27th of August, only a month before Michaelmas, and every tenant was under notice to quit, so that of course a purchaser might have had the whole thing thrown upon his hands. On the other hand, the tenants, I think, were very unfairly treated, because they were left entirely at the mercy of the purchaser. Under those circumstances I did what was the only thing practicable to be done: I consulted the most experienced land surveyor in South Wales who was then alive, Mr. Goode, who was the senior partner of Mr. Rule Owen, whom you had under examination that day for a consider- able time. I put the whole matter into his hands, and left it to him to re-survey and re- arrange the estate, and let it out to the best of his judgment and ability; and so far from giving any merciless instructions that widows were not to be allowed to have any land, the only in- structions I gave him were these: "Keep as " many of the existing tenants as you can." I am naturally by instinct and practice a Con- servative, and I hate changes. Those were the instructions I gave him. Then another instruc- tion I gave him was, "I hear there has been an " immense amount of under-letting on this " estate; that there are middlemen. Now I object " to middlemen very much; as far as possible " let direct to the holders of the land;" and he acted on those instructions. Therefore, I say it really is a vindictive fabrication to say that I gave merciless instructions that widows were to be ejected. Furthermore, later on in Mr. Bancroft's evidence, you will find this passage: "Is this the state of things now; " does Mr. Vickerman object to widows now?" He had to admit that Mr. Vickerman did not. Now, it was well he made that admission, because ——

41,360. Will you point out that to us, please?—I will if you give me time, but his evidence is very extensive. At Q. 29,768 you will see this: "Can you tell us whether Mr. Vickerman " requires any service from his tenants besides " rents that the widows could not perform?— " A. No; he requires none that I know of. " Q. Does he still insist upon the same treat- " ment?—A. Oh, no. Q. It was only just when " he came into the estate. Any who become " widows now are not turned off?—A. No. " Q. The evidence you have given with regard " to all the cottages is such as you are per- " sonally acquainted with?—A. Yes." So that there is the admission that that state of things does not prevail now. It seems to me that Mr Bancroft has really gone out of his way to go nearly a quarter of a century back to make these railing accusations against a neighbour. Now, I may say, considerable remarks have been made about tenants being afraid to come and give evidence before this Commission.

41,361. I should just like to ask a few questions before you leave this. When you bought this property were there four widows on the land?—Yes.

41,362. Was one called Hannah Griffiths?—One was Hannah Griffiths, very likely. I really cannot profess to know.

41,363. Do you know, or do you not, whether she was obliged to sell her cow and leave the land?—Now I see the point. Mr. Goode, in exercising his discretion in re-letting the estate, allotted to one or two, two or three perhaps, of the chief farming tenants two or three cottages apiece for the purpose of housing their labourers. In the particulars of sale the vendors, the trustees of Sir Pryse Pryse, had got all the cottages off their hands for they had stuck them all on the farmers. Mr. Goode found that the farmers would not take all these cottages on their shoulders, and only two or three of them agreed to have a cottage or two. This of Hannah Griffiths' was one which was allotted to one of the principal farms, a farm called North Vatson, and for anything that happened to her the tenant of North Vatson was responsible; I was not.

41,364. May we take it from you that one Hannah Griffiths, of North Park, kept a cow, and she lost the land and was obliged to sell her cow?—I cannot tell at all.

41,365. You do not rebut that?—No, I had not the slightest knowledge at the time, nor have I now.

41,366. Then Elizabeth Thomas, of South Hill, cultivated 25 acres?—Yes, that was a similar case; only that was South Vatson.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,367. It cannot be similar, because she cultivated 25 acres?—Well, it was only a cottage she had.

Chairman.

41,368. "Her husband built the cottage." Are you aware whether that is true?—No, I am not aware at all.

41,369. Do you know whether "she had a son "of 40 years of age, a steady, sober, indus-"trious man"?—No, I do not know at all; I left it entirely in Mr. Goode's hands. I may say at that time another and important reason why I was compelled to leave it in Mr. Goode's hands was this: I was not resident in the county at that time; I was only down in the summer for three or four months. My chief residence was in Essex, 300 miles from here, and consequently I could not by any possibility re-arrange and re-let the estate myself.

41,370. Will you permit me to ask you what you are rebutting?—I am rebutting these statements where it is made to appear that I am responsible for all these atrocities.

41,371. You were the landlord, I believe?—I was the landlord.

41,372. And one of your tenants was Hannah Griffiths?—No, she was not.

Chairman—continued.

41,373. When you bought the land I mean?—No, she was an under-tenant to some one or other of the farmers.

41,374. Anyhow she was in a cottage and also kept a cow?—She was an under-tenant of one of the farmers. I shall produce witnesses; four of my tenants are coming here to support me.

41,375. But you know nothing about Hannah Griffiths?—No, I know nothing about Hannah Griffiths

41,376. You know nothing about Elizabeth Thomas?—You must recollect that at Michaelmas 1872 there were no tenancies. Every tenancy expired at Michaelmas 1872

41,377. But still this Elizabeth Thomas, of South Hill, cultivated 25 acres, and she was under notice to quit——?—By the late owners, not by me.

41,378. And when you came into possession of the estate you allowed that notice to quit to come into force?—Well, I did personally nothing; I left it all in the hands of the most experienced man in South Wales.

41,379. But you are morally and legally responsible, are you not?—No; I do not consider I have the slightest moral responsibility. I bought the land——

41,380. Before we go any further, let me get that: you consider you have no moral responsibility at all?—I do. I consider that under the circumstances all those tenants——

41,381. I beg your pardon; let us take these cases in order. Now take Mary Thomas, the next case. She held 15 acres Mr. Bancroft says. Do you know anything about her?—Yes, she was in the same category as Elizabeth Thomas, under the same man at South Vatson.

41,382. Then Mary Owen, of Moysland; do you know anything about her?—No, I do not recollect anything about her—yes, I think I did hear that she was a very old woman; utterly unable to manage these 25 acres; the buildings and everything connected with it were in the most ruinous condition, and, I think, she went into one of the cottages.

41,383. Are you aware that "Elizabeth Thomas died in one month?"—No; I do not know that at all.

41,384. Do you know that Mary Owen was kept off the parish for a few years?—No; I do not.

41,385. Then you do not rebut that. Do you know that Mrs. Griffiths was an early recipient?—No; I have nothing to do with that.

41,386. And do you know whether the other Mary Thomas found refuge with her son-in-law?—No; that I cannot tell.

41,387. Then you know nothing about these four widows, and you do not rebut the evidence of Mr. Bancroft about them?—Pardon me, I do know something about three of them, and I have rebutted the evidence. I say that they are cottages and land which were sub-tenancies, which were allotted to several farms, and the cottages I expect were required by the tenants of those farms for their labourers. You have had plenty of evidence that farmers must have labourers, and that their labourers must live near, otherwise they are not ready on any emergency.

41,388. Then what you really take exception to is the "merciless instructions?"—Yes; it is a falsehood.

41,389. You think that is too strong a word?—Well, I appeal to what your Lordship thinks.

41,390. I have no opinion whatever here. I am only here to take your evidence?—Well, I have no doubt what I think; I think it is rather a shameful statement altogether; perfectly untrue.

41,391. You are perfectly satisfied that these four women were turned out; you say that was quite right?—I do not think you have a right to ask me such a question as that.

41,392. You need not answer the question?—I had nothing to do with it.

41,393. You need not answer. I only ask, do you?—No; I had nothing to do with it.

41,394. Now we have finished with the widows. What is the next point you wish to refer to?—Now I think we will go to the case of the cottages. At Q. 29,749 towards the end of his long statement you will see this: "Then, as to cottage dwellings, "I should like to say this:—Mr. Vickerman "thinks that they are nice comfortable homes "In the 'Tenby Observer,' a local newspaper, "he calls attention to them. I am quite the "other way of thinking; they consist chiefly "of two rooms only. In some of them as many "as 10 live. Where they sleep I am at a loss. "The windows of most are too small; the "floors often damp and broken. I would like "you to take a drive, and come and see some of "the cottages. They are answerable for much "of the sickness. I should like some of the "Commissioners just to come into our neighbourhood, and see the kind of cottages, and "whether you think they are such comfortable "cottages as Mr. Vickerman has made out. "Q. Do you happen to know what is the rent "of those cottages? A. About 4*l.* Q. What "would be the expense of building it, if one "put up such a cottage now. A. I do not "know, I should think it would be dear at 30*l.*, "I should think. I do not know. I would not "like to give 30*l.* for a good many of them "that I could show you. (Mr. Grove.) Do you "mean to say that the cost of building a "cottage would be about 30*l.*? A. I do not "know. I cannot say. I have had to do with "buildings too, but not, that sort of thing. Q. "There is no upstairs. It is all on the ground. "A. Yes, no upstairs at all; and only a mortar "floor." Now, with regard to those cottages, I need scarcely say that the purchaser of a property finding cottages of that kind on his estate is not responsible for having put them up. Having purchased this estate, I found that I had made a very bad bargain. I had given a very large price, and the whole of the buildings on the estate were in a woeful state of disrepair. I will venture to say there is not a farm house or building of any kind on which I have not spent a very considerable sum of money. These cottages I have repaired and keep in repair. They are not so comfortless as some people imagine. In fact, as a rule, they are very much preferred by the cottage tenants to better cottages that I have built. I have built between 20 and 30 cottages of a superior kind. Several of those cottages at this moment I have on my hands; but one of these thatched cottages is never unlet. The people are accustomed to them. I need not tell you there is no roof so comfortable as the thatched roof; it is warm in winter, and cool in summer, and the mortar floors, or concrete floors, that they put keep the damp from rising. There is always a small fire kept in the house, which keeps it dry and warm. I do not think I have a cottage on the property which has not some upstairs accommodation in the shape of a loft where the male members of the family sleep. With reference to these being overcrowded, I do not believe there is a cottage on my property that is so overcrowded. If it had been brought to my notice that such a state of things existed, or if I had known that such a state of things prevailed, I should have taken immediate measures to do away with it. There is a large adjoining estate still worse off than I am. Now, what is to be done with regard to these cottages? If I only studied my own interests, I should evict all those tenants, and pull all the cottages down, because there is land attached to every cottage, and the rent of the land (good old land), would pay as much as the cottages pay, and I should be saved the repairs. The thatched roofs are most expensive roofs; they are the most comfortable, and the most expensive; of course in this particular season, this particular winter, when thatch, as every one knows, has been about three or four times its original price, it has been very expensive. I have always masons and carpenters and thatchers attached to the estate, who are constantly going round and doing repairs. All the repairs and improvements on my three estates are done at my own expense. I have built, including my own house, seven gentlemen's residences. I have built five entirely new farm buildings and outbuildings, and repaired, with large additions, six others. I have built an hotel and six houses and shops and offices, and substantially repaired three more. I have built 20 or 30 cottages and substantially repaired 10 or a dozen more. Public-houses, I thought, were too many in my village of Saundersfoot, and I closed two voluntarily, by which I sustained an annual loss of between 80*l.* and 100*l.*, because of course I do not get half the rent I used to get. I have made additions to the public roads at my own expense. In fact, I think I have done my duty as a landlord, and in the last 30 years I may say that that outlay upon these estates has exceeded 60,000*l.* The tenants, I may tell you, do no repairs; I do all the repairs. Then with regard to making any distinction between Dissenters and Churchmen, I never dream of such a thing; in fact, I think Mr. Bancroft will admit that one of the earliest things I did on Mr.

Chairman—continued.

Goode's death, when I then came to reside here and took the management of this property into my own hands, was to make a present to his chapel of a valuable bit of ground to increase their burial ground. I have among my papers here, but it is no use referring to it, a most effusive letter of gratitude for that act. I had done the same to a chapel in another part of my estate, and so far from making any difference, or showing any bigotry, I may say that I presided on one occasion at the opening of the chapel by Mr. Bancroft—I was subscribing to the building—and at another chapel I took some part in the service by reading the lessons, or whatever they call them there, and I think I have shown in every way a disposition to live and let live. For the last 15 or 16 years I have lived among my tenantry. All my income, or rather all that is left of it, I spend among them. The collieries that I own there are—well, the means of subsistence of these poor people, and I disburse from 14,000*l.* to 15,000*l.* a year in fortnightly payments for wages alone. If I had nothing more upon my conscience than my failings as a landlord or a neighbour, I should have a very clear conscience indeed. I have got four tenants here. I may tell you that I have intimated to all my tenants that they are most welcome to come before this Commission and to give evidence and bear examination and all that sort of thing, but you know what agricultural tenants are. None of them would have taken the trouble to do it excepting that in this case, seeing me assailed in the public prints, as they knew me to be unjustly assailed, four of them very kindly volunteered to come, and they are here to-day, and they will support what I have got to say. Now, that is as far as Mr. Bancroft's evidence goes. With your Lordship's permission, I must now go into John Hilling's evidence. My Lord, I wish to make a supplementary statement before we have done with the other part of it. As I have been so unjustifiably assailed on the subject of the widows by Mr. Bancroft in his evidence, I think I should give an instance, not going back 22 years, but going back only two years—an instance of his careful solicitude for widows.

41,395. I am afraid we must keep entirely to rebutting evidence; we cannot have these personal recriminations?—But is it fair for any one to come and attack another person here and then not allow the other to carry the war into the enemy's camp, because that is the thing?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,396. But why were you not at Narberth; this is St. Clear's, and we are here for the purpose of hearing evidence relating to this district?—Why was I not at Narberth?

41,397. Yes?—Because I had a business——

41,398. I am only using this by way of argument. You have a perfect right to come or not to come, as you like; but the view I understand the noble chairman is putting is this: This is a St. Clear's day, and we will hear your rebutting evidence, as we always have done, but we cannot go into what may be called substantive Pembrokeshire evidence here to-day?—Well, this was the first appointment you could give me within reach. I have been under these imputations for six weeks; but I will tell you about the Narberth day why I was not there. I had a particular engagement of some standing, which would have inconvenienced others as well as myself, but understanding from Mr. Bancroft—he did not tell me what he was going to say, but he said, fairly enough, that he was going to give evidence that I ought to hear—I sent one of my agricultural tenants with his note and with a letter from myself to my solicitor in Tenby, and asked him to attend, and I thought he would attend. Instead of that he wrote back, "Well, if I were in your position I should "pay no attention to it;" and so I was not represented. But I do not care to go into anything further if it is your opinion that I should not.

Chairman

41,399. I think if you will kindly rebut the statements we can take the matter on its merits?—Very well, now I will take John Hilling's case, please. His evidence begins at Q. 29,834

Chairman.

Is Mr. John Hilling in the room?

Mr. John Hilling. Yes, my Lord.

Chairman.

Kindly listen to what the witness is going to say.

Witness.

Unless you wish it I will not go through all his evidence. He states that he had notice to quit, and how it was in connexion with a certain little colliery where his father was working (although he speaks of it as if he were working it himself), and that in consequence of interfering with my collieries I gave him notice to quit, and insisted upon it. As shortly as I can I will tell you the circumstances. Hilling, the father did open a little surface working where he raised culm as we call it; that is the small coal to supply what is termed the country trade, which Mr. Griffiths will know all about; that is where the farmers come with their carts for this small stuff and pay ready money and use it for making their ball fires. This had gone on for several years, and it became a question whether it would not be better for both—certainly for Hilling's colliery—to agree upon a price instead of cutting into each other and underselling each other, and an agreement was come to; I do not know what it was; I left that to my colliery managers; but it appeared that it came under my son's notice that William

Witness—continued.

Hilling, the father (for it was he and not John Hilling) was not adhering to this agreement, that he was underselling. Of course there are several ways of underselling—either by actually lowering the price or by giving undue weight or greater weight. At any rate it came to my son's notice that he was committing a breach of the agreement, and my son charged him with it. My son happened to be shooting over the land with some friends and with his keeper and markers when William Hilling, who, as all the world knows, is a man of ungovernable temper, swore at him, called him opprobious epithets, and warned him and his friends and neighbours off the land, and otherwise conducted himself in, I think, a most shameful manner. Well, I could not allow this state of things to continue, and therefore I sent word to William Hilling that really unless now that he was in a cool moment he would apologise or at any rate express regret for this unwarrantable conduct towards my son, I could not retain him any longer on the property. Well, he is an obstinate man and he would not even express regret. That went on and then I served him with notice. Having served him with notice, whenever my son went near the land one of the daughters would come out and throw up her arms like a mad woman, yell at him, and call him all sorts of names. That went on for about a twelve month until the notice was nearly expiring. When the notice to William Hilling (bear in mind William Hilling is the father and John Hilling the son) was just on the point of expiring a neighbour and cousin of theirs Mr. Thomas Thomas, who is here and whose evidence will be tendered, wishing to do a kind and neighbourly act to the Hillings, brought his son John Hilling up to me and asked if I was decided to insist on that notice, that I would not take the holding out of the family and that I would let it to the son. "Well," I said, "The last thing I like to "do is to disturb an old tenant, and if we can "come to an arrangement I will let it to the son; "but," I said, "it is upon this express condition, "that if I let it to you, your father is not to "remain on the premises. I will have nothing "more to do with your father until he expresses "regret or makes an apology." The son took it upon those conditions. I have two witnesses here to prove it. Of course he might have said —it was open to him to say—"No, I cannot "admit of such a condition, I will not turn out "my old father," in which case he would not have had the holding. However, he accepted the conditions and became my tenant. Well, another year elapsed and then my son, who happened to be shooting there again, said "Are you aware that William Hilling "is still on the premises just the same as "ever?" "No," I said, "of course I am not "aware. I expected that he would have left the "time he ought to have left." "No," my son said, "he is there." Then of course I inquired into this and found it was so, and therefore I gave John Hilling notice; but at any time if William Hilling had come up and expressed contrition, or at any rate apologised, for his behaviour, he might have been reinstated in the land.

Witness—continued.

Chairman.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams, do you object to this evidence as Mr. Vincent objected to similar evidence.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. I certainly think, my Lord, that the local witnesses should be heard first.

Chairman.

I do not mean that; but do you object to this as hearsay evidence—that it is only what was told to him?

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. Yes, my Lord.

Witness.

There are two witnesses here who will confirm what I say. I blamed Thomas Thomas for not telling me, as it was on his intercession that I had accepted John Hilling. However, he said he did not like to do an unneighbourly action, and so it was that I knew nothing about it. I acted upon that notice. I may tell you six months before that notice expired Hilling came up and asked if I intended to insist on the notice. "Yes," I said, "most certainly." Then immediately upon that he advertised for a ploughing match, and he ploughed up all the old pasture land that had been laid down for, as he says, 10 years, but certainly some of it for more than 20 years; ploughed it all up really in order to damage the property. Then he comes and gives evidence here, and makes it a complaint that I tried to hinder the ploughing up. Of course I did. I tried to stop the ploughing because it would damage the property. However, I was too late; he had his ploughing match, and he ploughed up all the land. Then it went on for another six months till the notice expired. In the meantime, Tom Thomas, his neighbour, who would have taken this land, but for not wishing to interfere with the Hillings, when he found from me, after asking me over and over again, that I would have nothing to do with these Hillings, he agreed to take the land, and then there was a regular Irish performance there. They took out the window-frames, carried away the doors, and tried to set fire to the building. When poor Tom Thomas had his plough there, the plough disappeared one night; a second plough and cart wheel followed the fate of the first, and altogether it was quite a matter of Irish doings, and yet they have the face to come here and complain as if they were very aggrieved. It has done me no harm —(that will not be a satisfaction to them)—for I have relet the place, notwithstanding my experience, to another Hilling, a cousin of theirs, at just the same rent, after all this damage to it. There are other points that I might go through, but really I do not want to weary you.

Witness—continued.

Chairman.

41,400. I have only one question upon that. Was Hilling under any agreement?—Originally he was under an agreement not to plough up pasture land.

41,401. Can you produce the agreement?—I can produce the original agreement before he had further land added to it. (Handing agreement.)

41,402. Are you aware that he built his dwelling-house and all the outhouses with the exception of the old widow's dwelling-house, and fenced it and drained a little over 1,000 yards of draining?—No. Of course all that happened before my time. I am not aware of it. The house was a very poor affair. In regard to draining, since you touch on that, he did some draining, and I supplied the pipes, but he used very little of the pipes, and positively, at his sale the other day, he sold the remainder of the pipes that I had provided, which I call rather "good business."

41,403. In the agreement it is "not to plough "or break up into tillage any mountain or pas- "ture lands described in the schedule." That was done?—Yes. I may say, of course John Hilling left with an arrear of rent which I shall never get a sixpence of. That is a matter of course.

41,404. Is there anything else you wish to say?—Well, as you are not unnaturally a little impatient to get through the work before you, I will not detain you. I could say a lot more. I wish you would allow me to bring my witnesses forward.

41,405. What have they got to rebut. You see this is entirely rebutting evidence?—Well, two of them will confirm some of my evidence, but I should like them to bear testimony to the state of things in our neighbourhood—what is their opinion of the landlords. We have heard a lot of evidence from the tenants' point of view. Now I am tendering some evidence from the landlords' point of view.

41,406. That is quite so, but we cannot go into any fresh matters from Pembrokeshire to-day?—Very well, only recollect they are here.

41,407. We are only pleased to hear rebutting evidence on any specific point—any statement that has been made by any witness; we are only too anxious to get at the bottom of everything, but it must be distinctly understood that we cannot break fresh ground that ought to have been taken when the reverend gentleman gave his evidence.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,408. I think you referred to some case that you described as an Irish piece of business taking place on your estate?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

41,409. Has any such occurrence come under your notice on any of the adjoining estates?—No, I have never heard of it except in this instance. It is a new importation into Wales, and I hope it will not take root.

41,410. Does it strike you as odd or not, that the first instance of such a thing happening in Wales should be on your estate?—Yes, certainly; and I hope it will be the last.

41,411. You cannot suggest any reason for its happening more than what you have said?—Oh yes, I can. I think I have given reason enough. They did not like to be dispossessed of their holding, although they had brought it about by their own misconduct, and this is their way of showing their resentment, no doubt. They thought they would injure me, no doubt.

41,412. But it indicates, does it not, that the prevailing opinion of the neighbourhood was against you?—Not the slightest; it indicates a little clique. Hilling, and Bancroft and Co., know who did all these things; they took refuge in Hilling's house close by. We had the police to watch, but we all know what the police are—country police—they never catch anybody. There were all these holloaings and shoutings, and letting off guns, and that sort of thing. Thomas Thomas was a stalwart man himself.

41,413. I have known a great deal about the carrying out of the law in Wales, and I can only say that no difficulty ever came under my notice in executing any warrant to recover possession of land. I have always found the Welsh a law-abiding people. That is my experience?—Pardon me, have you never heard of Rebecca in this neighbourhood, which was the headquarters of Rebeccaism. Do you call that law-abiding?

41,414. That was before my experience?—Well, my experience goes back further than yours. I appeal to my white hairs.

41,415. Yes, but then you lived in Essex?—But I have always been backwards and forwards down here during the summer.

41,416. What during the Rebecca riots?—Yes, during the Rebecca riots.

41,417. Now, how long was Mr. Goode your agent?—Until his death.

41,418. That does not tell me?—The sale was in 1872, and I think he died in 1875. He not only relet the estate for me, but he managed it, received the rents and all that sort of thing, charging the usual commission, until his death.

41,419. As I understand, you became a purchaser of an estate which, at the time you bought it, was occupied by the tenants of the late owner?—Yes, just so.

41,420. And your instructions to your agent were to relet the estate?—Yes, but to give the preference to the existing tenants—the old tenants. Wherever it was possible my express instructions were to make terms—to re-let, in fact to let again—to the existing tenants; and I know that Mr. Goode fulfilled those instructions, because they would be quite in accordance with his own practice and wishes.

41,421. But in the case of three people he does not appear to have done so?—Why not?

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

41,422. In the case of the three widows, I mean?—It was his duty to divide the farms, so as to have them cultivated properly, and to large farms he was compelled to allot a cottage or two, which he did.

41,423. I am confining my questions purely and solely to the question upon which you came to give rebutting evidence, and nothing more occurs to me now. I will not go into the question of the adjectives you have used. It seems to me that in substance the facts deposed to by Mr. Bancroft are not contradicted. The only thing is that you shift the blame on to the deceased Mr. Goode?—I have contradicted everything that I have been allowed to contradict, but my mouth has been so shut up on every occasion I have attempted to defend myself.

41,424. Do you deny that as a consequence of your purchase four people, who had been tenants of the estate, ceased to be tenants of the estate?—Not in consequence of my purchase in particular, but in consequence of any one purchasing. It is not only myself, but if A.B. or C.D. had purchased they would have been in exactly the same position. When that purchase was effected there ceased to be, you may say, a tenant on the estate, because they were all under notice to quit.

41,425. That is only a matter of legal inference if the people were there?—It is a matter of fact.

41,426. No, no, it is a matter of law?—It is a matter of fact as well as law.

41,427. Then you turn everybody out, do you?—I could; I could have turned everybody out.

41,428. But did you?—No, I turned nobody out.

41,429. Then, as a matter of fact, the notice to quit only operated in the instances mentioned by Mr. Bancroft?—I am sure I cannot tell you. As I have said half a dozen times before I left it entirely and exclusively to Mr. Goode.

41,430. So I understood?—I was away, I was an absentee at that time, because the sale was to be completed at Michaelmas, but owing to title and one thing and another it was not completed till the following February. I left everything to Mr. Goode.

41,431. I only want to get at the fact. Is it, or is it not, true that the four widows were sent away by Mr. Goode or somebody?—By the agricultural tenants to whom the cottages were allotted I daresay they were.

41,432. Then we seem to have got at that fact?—I thought we had got that fact half an hour ago; but that does not matter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,433. What was the date when you came into possession of this property?—I had to come into possession at the following Michaelmas. Mr. Goode (as you might have seen by the agreement with Hilling) had to make temporary agreements for one year with every tenant who wished to remain to give him time to be in a position properly to lot out the estate.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

41,434. What I want to know is the date of your coming into possession of this property?—I can give you the exact date if you like of the completion of the purchase.

41,435. Yes, the exact date, I want to know when you came into possession. Did you come into possession on the same day that these notices to quit expired?—No, I was not entitled to possession then. You know how these sales are effected. You pay a deposit, but until you pay the remainder of the purchase money you do not get possession.

41,436. When did you become the legal possessor of the property?—It was some date in the following February. If you will allow me a moment, I have a memorandum of it here.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

If that is so, the people remained and they were entitled to another notice.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,437. If you cannot find it, never mind?—I am sure it was in February because to refresh my memory I referred to it only yesterday.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,438. Have you a copy of the instructions you gave to Mr. Goode about the letting of this land?—No, they were verbal instructions. As you may recollect at that time he used to spend a good deal of the summer at Saundersfoot, my village, so that I was in daily communication with him.

41,439. The answer you just gave to Mr. Brynmor Jones was that you were away at the time?—No, because this was in August at the time I was always down.

41,440. Then you knew what Mr. Goode was doing with regard to this property?—Oh, yes, but I did not interfere with him.

41,441. You say you were not morally responsible, but you were there and seeing what Mr. Goode was doing?—Well, I was there till about October, then I used to go back to England.

41,442. Would the pleasant relationship that always existed between you and the Hilling family ever have been interfered with—would this unpleasantness ever have arisen, if it had not been for this colliery business?—Certainly, the colliery business had nothing to do with it except as giving occasion for the altercation. They say in the evidence—it is too absurd—that I envied this colliery. Mr. Bancroft repeats that. Is it likely when I have got so many collieries of my own that I should envy this?—I could have shut it up at any time—could shut it up now; but I know it is shutting up itself. You know what the commodity culm is, and you pretty well know that I have always some thousands of tons of that unsaleable on the bank. If I had only chosen to drop the price I could have shut up this little colliery at any time, but I did not care to do it.

41,443. Is the colliery on your estate?—Yes. I am working my own minerals and the minerals of adjacent proprietors that are commanded from our pits.

41,444. I understood the colliery was on the Lawrenny estate?—No; I shall reach some of the Lawrenny coal very soon I think, but the pits are not on the Lawrenny estate.

Lord Kenyon.

41,445. Is Hilling's colliery on the Lawrenny estate?—Yes, it is.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,446. That is the one I was referring to. Then how could you shut it up?—Simply by underselling, because the Hillings are not men of capital; they must have their daily receipts coming in to meet their daily wages, and if I had dropped the price to half, say, none of the country carts would have gone to them, and of course they would have come to my collieries; but I did not care to do it.

Chairman.

41,447. I have two or three questions handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams. "Do you act as "your own agent?"—Yes, I do now.

41,448. "What practical experience of farming "have you?"—I have farmed all my life, and had to do with estate management for ages.

41,449. "Is it not a fact that your training "was a legal, not an agricultural one?"—My training was both legal and agricultural. It is 30 odd years since I retired from the profession, when, I am proud to say, I was a member of a firm that could trace its existence back to 1710, the date of the formation of the Sun Fire Office, but even at that time I lived in the country and farmed; when I was in Essex I farmed 250 acres of land all about the house, and I farm now. In fact I have been in land all my life.

41,450. Then I have some questions by Mr. John Hilling: "Is not the cause of my father "having notice to quit that he opened a small "colliery?"—Certainly it could not be, because he opened this colliery years before he had notice to quit.

41,451. "Did you not say that father was "picking your pocket daily?"—Did I not what?

41,452. Yes?—No, I never said that.

41,453. You never said that Mr. Hilling, sen., was picking your pocket daily?—No, it was not an expression that I used.

41,454. "Did you not say that to Mr. Ban-"croft?"—No, certainly not.

41,455. "Did your son tell you that he on "one occasion when on Vatson Moor threatened "to shoot my father if he did not get out of "the range of his gun?"—I do not believe it is possible. My son is a very different sort of man to that.

Chairman—continued.

41,456. "Is he present to confirm or deny this?"—No, he was not aware that his presence would be necessary at all, else he would have had no difficulty in denying it.

41,457. "Has he not been the sole cause of "my father being turned out of his farm?"—I have given the cause already—his misbehaviour and ungovernable temper, and refusing to express regret for it.

Chairman.

Mr. Hilling, the Commissioners think that these declarations that you tender cannot be received, but if you desire to make a statement, of course we shall be very glad to hear you on anything you have to rebut in the statements made by Mr. Vickerman.

Mr. Hilling. Thank you, my Lord.

Chairman.

41,458. "Did father not drain by your in-"structions more than 1,000 yards on the "farm?"—I should say, speaking from recollection, that he did not drain anything like that quantity evidently; he did not use all the pipes that I gave him.

41,459. "Did he not cart the pipes from your "place above the 'Wogan Arms' to his farm?"—Very likely, for his own use.

41,460. "When you turned him out did you "pay him for his work and carting?"—No, certainly not. He had my pipes, and he sold the remainder of them.

41,461. "Did you not promise father an "agreement?"—I do not recollect. If he had wanted an agreement at any time he could have had it. Nearly all my tenants have 21 years' leases.

41,462. "Did you not charge him 1*l.* extra as "a condition of giving it?"—No, certainly not.

41,463. "Did you fulfil your promise of "giving him an agreement?"—First of all, I certainly should have fulfilled it if I had made it, but I do not recollect any promise. I believe I did not make any promise, and he certainly did not apply for it. If he had applied for it he would have had it if he liked to have paid the lawyer's charge.

41,464. "Can you explain why the rent was "risen from 19*l.* 15*s.* to 21*l.*?"—No, I did not even know there had been such a rise.

41,465. "Which your rent book shows?"—I did not know it. I do not say there was not, because of course I have not referred, but I am not aware of it.

41,466. "Why was John Hilling turned out?"—I have given the reason.

41,467. "Was it because of keeping his father "and mother on the farm?"—Yes, contrary to agreement.

41,468. "Did he make any condition that he "would turn them out?"—He certainly did, and I have two witnesses here to prove it.

Chairman—continued.

41,469. "His mother having been bed-ridden "for three years?"—That I knew nothing about.

41,470. "Your son came to get votes?" Is that the fact?—Well, I do not know. I think there was a county council election going on, and it is very likely he may have called there and at other places.

41,471. "And saw my father; was it not "after that visit that you turned me out?"—Well, that depends on the dates. The dates will show.

41,472. "Did you not tell me at the rent after "the election, for not turning my parents out I "would get notice to quit?"—That is not unlikely, because I may have just heard that he had not performed his agreement—had not performed his condition. As I said before he had a perfect right to object to the condition if he liked, but having accepted the condition he was bound to perform it.

41,473. "Did you not send me notice through "a solicitor that you were going to apply at "Narberth County Court for an injunction to "restrain me from ploughing?"—Oh, yes, most certainly, and I would have restrained him if I could.

41,474. "Did not the Judge refuse to grant "the injunction?"—Well, that was a blunder of the solicitor. It seems they cannot grant an injunction unless you commence an action previously, and it was such an expensive business and I knew that as I had a man of straw to deal with it was not worth powder and shot.

41,475. "The Judge did not grant the injunc-"tion?"—No, he did not grant the injunction. It was only a formal application, and therefore the old pasture land was broken up.

41,476. "Did you not through your solicitor "issue posters the night before the ploughing "match was to take place threatening with the "penalties of the law any person or persons "who trespassed on Vatson Moor?"—It is very likely my solicitor did.

41,477. "Did the law give you this authority?" —I suppose the law gives anyone authority to give notice to prevent their property being injured.

41,478. "Did not your solicitor come there "whilst the match was going on and take down "the names of persons who were on my farm?" —That I do not know, I left it in his hands.

41,479. "What right had you to do that?"—Well, I should think every right. I think a man has a right to go on his own land and take down the names of any people he finds there.

41,480. "Did you not make an improper use "of the law to frighten and intimidate me and "other persons?"—Well, I think not.

41,481. "Are you aware you intimidated "persons who were coming to plough so that "there were 12 teams less than there otherwise "would have been?"—In other words that I prevented so much damage being done. I am very glad to hear it.

The witness withdrew.

The Reverend GEORGE BANCROFT recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

41,482. Is there anything you wish to say?—I took the same view as the Commission did that this was a St. Clear's day and not a Pembrokeshire day, and before I came to the court I had written this down. Mr. Vickerman says he had an engagement on that day, but, my Lord, it was the races; that was the engagement.

41,483. I do not think that is rebutting evidence. He said he had an engagement?—All right, my Lord, I will say no more about that. But what I want to ask you is this: do you think that I have stated anything wrongly with reference to the widows? Is there any need of further evidence on my part.

41,484. I do not think so, sir. You have stated your case and Mr. Vickerman has stated his?—Then I just wish to state this, and I shall take up your time no longer. I give Mr. Vickerman every credit. I wish to God that there were more Mr. Vickermans in Pembrokeshire.

41,485. I do not think that is rebutting evidence. If there is anything you want to contradict, well and good?—He gives employment to a number of people. I have already said so, and others do not.

41,486. What is it you want to rebut?—Just one word more. Mr. Vickerman has charged me with a very serious offence. I declare before God and this Commission that I know no more about who fired that cottage or who stole those ploughs and wheels than an unborn babe.

41,487. Nobody ever said that you did?—Yes, he said Mr. Bancroft would know perfectly well. Is such a statement against a minister of the Gospel to be allowed to go forth to the whole world unchallenged.

Chairman.

41,488. I do not recollect that. Will the shorthand writer read his note?

The shorthand writer read the following passage:—

"Q. But it indicates, does it not, that the prevailing opinion of the neighbourhood was against you?—A. Not the slightest. It indicates a little clique. Hilling and Bancroft & Co. know who did all these things; they took refuge in Hilling's house close by."

41,489. Have you anything to say now?—I have to say: I demand an apology now from Mr. Vickerman, and that will suffice. If not, I am bound to go to law with Mr. Vickerman, poor as I am. If there is an apology, there is no more about it, but as a minister I am bound to demand it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,490. I do not think we can listen to any demand for an apology?—Very good; then Mr. Vickerman will have to give it elsewhere.

41,491. He certainly charges you with having been an accessory to what appears to be an unlawful offence?—For me to go and tell people to kindle fires in houses!

Chairman.

I am afraid we cannot take this.

Mr. Vickerman. As Mr. Bancroft says he did not do it, I withdraw that charge; but he lives right in the midst of all these cottages, and it seemed to me that he must know it.

Witness.

I live there to teach them better.

Chairman.

41,492. We quite understand your feelings on the subject?—But is that to go on the notes?

41,493. It is on the notes that Mr. Vickerman has charged you with being an accessory to an unlawful offence. This is a case that we cannot as Commissioners settle. The remedy must be sought in another place. It is a question on which we can give no possible opinion?—All right, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

The Commissioners conferred.

Chairman.

It is the unanimous wish of the Commissioners to know whether Mr. Vickerman would be prepared to withdraw that statement unconditionally.

Mr. Vickerman.

As Mr. Bancroft has denied the knowledge, I will withdraw it.

Mr. JOHN HILLING called and examined.

Chairman.

41,494. What do you wish to say?—My Lord, I have not much to say, but I come here just to tell the truth. I wish to say that all that Mr. Vickerman has said in reference to firing the cottage is untrue; but I will meet Mr. Vickerman's charge in another place.

See 41,399–41,481.

Chairman—continued.

The witness withdrew.

The Reverend WILLIAM THOMAS called and examined.

Chairman.

41,495. You are are an Independent minister at Whitland?—Yes.

41,496. Will you be good enough to give us your evidence?—

About six depressions have occurred during the 39 years I have laboured as a minister in the Whitland district. But the two last, and especially the last of all has been the most disastrous to the farmers of Carmarthenshire, Pembrokeshire, and Cardiganshire. I mention the three western counties of South Wales, because I have attended several meetings in each during the past 15 months in connexion with the land question. The complaints in those meetings and those made privately to me point in the same direction; that is, that the grievances of Welsh tenant farmers and labourers are really unbearable any longer and should be immediately redressed for their own sake as well as that of their landlords and the country at large.

The first grievance is exorbitant rents. Landlords demand more than their due of the profits of the land. No one denies their claim to a fair proportion of the produce, provided they keep within the bounds of justice. This is a general, though not an universal, complaint made by farmers during past years.

The second is unequal and unjust taxation. The lower classes are burdened with heavier rates and taxes than well-to-do people. For instance, 81 years ago land paid towards local burdens 70 per cent.; but it is assessed now at less than 25 per cent. Houses then paid 27 per cent.; but the same are now assessed at 60 per cent. Land has been reduced in 81 years nearly two thirds, whereas the rates on houses have been more than doubled during the same period. Again, well-to-do people pay less duty than the common people. The former pay 1*l.* for realty—freehold and copyhold—for every 6*l.* paid for personalty by the latter.

41,497. You mean probate duty?—Yes. Certainly this cannot be right.

The laws of a civilised and Christian country should not in any case favour the rich at the expense of the poor.

Chairman—continued.

The third grievance is insecurity as to the continuance of tenancies. I knew a small land tiller years ago whose tenancy was under 20 years; yet he had in the house 16 notices to quit. When notices to quit are frequent tenants have no heart to cultivate their holding. Then, there is no security for compensation for improvements without expensive law suits. To enter a law court against a rich landlord is no joke in the present state of the law, even to a well-off tenant; how much more so to a hard-up farmer, who is struggling against the adverse tide of circumstances?

The fourth grievance is losses caused by fox breeding and fox hunting. This may be a very trivial grievance in the estimation of well-to-do ladies and gentlemen, who are wonderfully inspired by the sonorous voices of dogs, and a possible sight of a fox either alive or dead. But to a hard-working farmer it is a great loss to find in one morning half-a-dozen fowls taken away, or the same number of lambs bled to death by foxes. If a farmer in a fit of temper were to kill the destroyer of his property, the consequences would be very serious should it become known to the executive. Then on the hunt day a number of strange ladies and gentlemen congregate on horse-back, gallop through the fields, break gates, pull down hedges and frighten cattle almost to death without offering a single penny for the damage done to a hard-working man's property. This happened in my own case once. It was indeed a loss of a few pounds to me in a few minutes, because so many horses went at such a rate through a tender soil, and the effect on the stock and hedges. Such trespass as this is unbearable, and should be effectually prevented, and ample compensation paid as soon as possible.

The fifth grievance—evictions on political grounds. To deprive any man of his livelihood on account of difference at the polling booth is both impolitic and unwise, as well as cruel. Instances of this happened on Whitland Abbey estate in the years 1868 and 1874. The owner then was the late Hon. W. H. Yelverton. The hon. gentleman had become a Conservative then; although he had represented the boroughs of Carmarthen for several years as a Liberal. In the year 1868 the ice of Conservatism was broken in Carmarthenshire by Mr. E. J. Sartoris. Mr. Yelverton's farm bailiff did all he could in every way to bring about the triumphant return of the Conservative candidates. In canvassing he approached the estate carpenter—William Morgan—and asked for his vote. The carpenter's reply was, that if he was free, he would like to give one vote to Sartoris and the other to Master, i.e., to whomsoever he directed him. No, that would not be satisfactory. It was essential to give the two to the Conservatives. The last order was, to be ready early on the polling day, and the carriage came for him at the time fixed beforehand. But William Morgan was not found—as if the earth had swallowed him up. He refused to go to St. Clear's, and it was no loss to either side as it happened.

Chairman—continued.

But on the following morning very early the bailiff visited the carpenter, and told him with an air of authority, 'Will, you go up to the 'Abbey to speak to the Honourable before you 'do anything again on the estate.' However, 'Old Will' was too old to stoop in such circumstances. It was too stormy at the Abbey then for him to ask anything. But he went in search of work, and succeeded in getting 3*d.* a day more than he had on the Abbey estate. He refused to return for three months to his work, and did not go before a special messenger came from his master asking him to do so forthwith.

41,498. What was the date of this circumstance that you have just mentioned?—1868.

In 1874 I was served in the same manner by the same landlord. I had been his tenant since 1864. The present owner—Mr. W. H. M. Yelverton—owned the house and garden then, and his father owned the fields, which he let to me as a yearly tenant through his son and heir. In 1874 there was a contest in the county for two seats. At the beginning of the campaign Mr. Yelverton sent me a printed circular asking me for 'my vote and interest.' I consider the circular very pressing. After thinking the matter over I wrote a respectful reply in the negative. It was unmistakable in its meaning I confess. I loved my freedom intensely, and made up my mind to use it in accordance with my deep convictions in favour of Liberalism, and that independently of all possible and certain consequences. In a few days it was made known to me that I had offended the Honourable gentleman, and that a notice to quit would follow on or before March 25th. This happened at the end of January. I was not at all frightened by the intelligence. However, on the 21st of March I was served with a notice to quit on the 29th of September next. On the 31st of August I sold all my stock and crops by public auction. The auctioneer asked the farm bailiff for permission to leave the hay on the premises until the spring. He blankly and bluntly refused in the hearing of a crowd of people, and thus I lost about 30*l.* on that rick of hay. But I never asked for the land because I felt I had no joint either in my body, mind, or creed to stoop to any landlord in such circumstances. But the present owner (that is the son) had no sympathy whatever with my eviction. I believe this firmly, because he offered me a lease on the house and garden, and we have been ever since on friendly terms. However, the Hon. Mr. Yelverton when he read a copy of his own circular and a copy of my reply to him, together with my comment on his treatment of a poor dissenting minister, in the "Carmarthen Express," made up his mind from that day forth to dismiss his farm bailiff, who had unfortunately dragged him before the tribunal of public opinion, unconditionally. In twelve months after Mr. Yelverton through the farm bailiff served me with a notice to quit, the latter received one himself, and died in six weeks. I maintain that no landlord has a right to tamper with the sacred convictions of their conscientious tenants.

Chairman—continued.

The last grievance is the abatements granted by some landlords. They have been inadequate to the circumstances of the farmers. Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., said at Harlech, about 15 months ago, that the landlords till then had only granted 7,000,000*l.* abatements, whereas the losses of the farmers amounted to 77,000,000*l.* already. Reduction would be better. Abatements are uncertain, and savour too much of a favour instead of rights—too much like parish relief to be satisfactory to men who feel their dignity properly. A great number have refused even abatements during the present depression.

I shall now propose the following remedies, which, in my opinion, will brighten the farmer's prospects very materially in the near future:—

The first is re-adjustment of rates and taxes. I endorse the views of Sir F. Fitzwygram, M.P., and those of Mr. J. C. Macdonald, M.P., in speaking on the Queen's Speech at the opening of Parliament on March 12th ultimo. The former 'Looked to the redistribu-' tion of local taxation as the means of giving ' to British agriculture a new lease of life.' The latter 'Did not think it possible to do anything ' to remedy the depression in trade which would ' be so effectual as the removal of taxation from ' the poorer classes and placing it on the ' shoulders of the rich or, in other words, as a ' popular budget.' To bring this about it is necessary to revise and amend the Poor Law Union system. Under the present system some parishes suffer grievously. Too much money goes out of some parishes, while only very small amounts return in relief to paupers. For instance, the ratepayers belonging to Bethel Congregational Church, Llanddewi Velfrey, for the year ended on March 31st, 1893, paid in poor-rate the sum of 117*l.* 4*s.*, but no more than 16*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* of that sum was paid to paupers who belonged as members of the same church, and if the said church supported all the paupers in the parish it would not cost more than 63*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* The rates paid by Churchmen and Baptists should be added to the 117*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.* paid by Congregationalists, in order to prove the enormous sum taken out of the parish in comparison to the small sum which came back to the same in the form of relief to paupers. Again, the Local Government Act should be amended forthwith. It is a good Act upon the whole, yet some of its clauses may be materially improved. Some parishes loudly complain, especially of the highway rates. By paying more than they used hitherto, other parishes are relieved correspondingly. This does not mean that rates are higher under County Council administration than under magisterial administration. It was stated before you at Pembroke that rates have been raised 25 per cent. It is not so in Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire. In the triennial report of the former the following fact is stated:—'The difference in the rates of the two ' triennial terms' (that is, the three years previously to the County Council administrations) ' amounts to a reduction in the latter term of ' one and eleven-twelfths of a penny in the ' pound, equal to an annual saving of ' 4070*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.*' This was uniform throughout the county. Rates were also lower in the parishes during the same period. The total saving of Llangan parish, the parish in which I live, was 305*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*—1*s.* 6*d.* in the pound—an average saving annually of 101*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* Llanboidy saved 634*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* during the same period, and that means an annual saving of 211*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*—1*s.* 3*d.* in the pound to the parish.

Pembrokeshire County Council succeeded in the same period in reducing the rates all over the county as the following statement satisfactorily proves:—'The total rates for the last three ' years of the Quarter Sessions were 9¾*d.*, ditto ' for the first three years of the Council 7½*d.*—' a saving of 2¼*d.* in the pound, equal to about ' 4004*l.*' That result is good, but if the Act be amended County Council administration will tell more favourably still on the rates.

The second remedy is the application of all public property to truly national purposes. The nation's money has been monopolised by a fractional minority of the population for sectarian purposes during the past 205 years, and it is high time every penny should be devoted to purposes which will benefit the people generally.

The third is a good land law. The land laws of this country have been weighed in the balances and have been found wanting. A new law should be framed without delay to safeguard the rights of all parties, landowners, land tillers, and land labourers. It should comprise the following provisions among others (a.) tenant right based on the tillers' improvements; (b.) security of tenure; (c.) cheap transfer; (d.) commodious buildings on every farm for men and beasts. A good dairy and kitchen more necessary than any room in the house; (e.) a sliding scale to regulate rents by the market prices of stock and crop. Such a scale is already used in hiring and letting land throughout the country. A perfect scale as is suggested will be a great boon to landlords, tenants, labourers, and the country. As soon as it is adopted landowners will get their rents punctually, regularly, fully, and cheerfully; tenants will get interest on their capital, remuneration for their labour (they, their wives and children), and sufficient profit to pay the required number of labourers to till the land so as to keep up and strengthen its productive power. Labourers will be tied down to the land by 'a living wage,' and will return to the country by thousands from underground works and overcrammed towns and cities. Then the whole country will benefit as a matter of course. The frictions between landlords and tenants and tenants and labourers, the classes and the masses will come to an end for ever. Better farming, better stock and crop, better prices and greater comforts; (f.) a land court fully empowered to settle every question, awarding damages to landowners from tenants who allow the land to deteriorate by neglect, and compensation to tenants with regularity for all kinds of improvements. Neither landlords nor tenants should be afraid of the scrutinies and disclosures of such a court unless there be something wrong in their procedures. To reflect on a prospective land court is a shameful weakness in any man. This cannot be done either without virtually reflecting on Her Majesty's other courts as far as I can see. Our Judges, as a class, are competent, upright, and conscientious interpreters of law, and we have no reason to doubt the Judges of the future, even if we believe in nothing but in the development theory.

The fourth remedy is Government help, by lending money to small freeholders at a cheap rate of interest or on the same plan as the Irish, by cultivating the immense tracts of waste lands which produce nothing for the good of the community, and by agricultural grants for good farming, &c. This will be much more profitable to the kingdom than wasting public money in imitating the madness of continental nations in building needless and expensive war ships.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,499. You speak of one of the grievances of farmers as being insecurity of tenure. How would you give them security of tenure?—Well, I would grant them good leases. Some farmers are satisfied with their present security on some estates, but in the event of a change of ownership, by the death of the landlord, or by the sale of the land, the tenant has no security whatever at present.

41,500. Probably you would be of opinion that the better the landlord the worse would be the change in case of a sale?—Well, of course the purchaser may be a good landlord too, but as has been the case in times past the rents rise as a rule.

41,501. What period would you recommend for any security of tenure—for how long a period?—Well, I suppose that would depend just upon circumstances.

41,502. Have you thought it out at all? For example, supposing that leases upon just and equitable terms were arranged, would you propose that there should be a revision every seven years, or 14 years, or 19 years, as is the custom in Scotland?—No, not every seven, or 14 years, but probably every 21.

41,503. But would you like a longer term?—Yes, a longer term certainly; it might be longer than that.

41,504. I was rather amused by your evidence about losses by fox hunting. I thought fox hunting was very popular in this part of the country?—Well, it may be popular, but still there is a popular feeling against it too.

41,505. Do not the farmers get an opportunity of showing their young horses?—Well, that may be.

41,506. And if any mischief is done, is there not a fund from which compensation was given?—I never heard of any compensation given. Of course I only express my own opinion in connexion with myself.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

41,507. You speak yourself of having met with some mischief done to your land from the trampling of horses?—Yes, quite so. No one asked me at all whether there was any damage done, and not a penny was offered to me for anything that was done.

41,508. Did you make any application for compensation?—No, I did not.

41,509. I am under the impression that Mr. Powell of Maesgwyn was very popular in his hunting days in this county?—Oh, yes, I grant that as a Member of Parliament he was very popular.

41,510. With regard to evictions for political reasons, you have told us some instances, and you have given dates which are not very recent. Do you think that the Ballot Act is a complete security?—I think it is. There was open voting in 1868 of course, and then in 1874 the farmers had no confidence in the secrecy of the ballot.

41,511. But you think now it is a complete security?—Oh, perfectly.

41,512. I did not quite understand. Amongst your proposed remedies, you said that some parishes pay too much, and "for instance the "ratepayers belonging to Bethel Congregational "Church, Llanddewi Velfry, for the year ending "on 31st March 1893, paid in poor rate the sum "117*l.* 4*s.*, but no more than 16*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* of that "sum was paid to paupers who belonged as "members of the same church." Would that indicate that the church was a very rich one?—No.

41,513. Does it mean that the ratepayers are all of a class above pauperism?—There are other paupers in the parish of course.

41,514. But it leaves a very large portion of the poor rate for other parts of the population?—I have only the particulars with regard to my own church. I have not got the particulars with regard to the other denominations; but what I say is that too much money goes out of the parish to other parishes.

41,515. But is not the tendency now to generally equalize the rates over the whole of the Union?—What I say is that the proportion is too much to answer the circumstances of the farmers who contribute that large sum towards paupers.

41,516. It appears to me that the pauperism of Bethel Congregational Church is very small, happily?—Yes, it is very small.

41,517. Does that throw more upon the Baptists and the Churchmen of whom you speak directly afterwards?—No, I do not think so, if you take the paupers who belong to the Baptists and the paupers who belong to the Church.

41,518. May I ask, with regard to your opinion about the application of all public money to truly national purposes, what is it that you mean, Do you mean the tithes?—I mean the tithes and public endowments.

41,519. You call that public money?—Yes.

41,520. I suppose you are aware that people are not all of the same mind as to whether it is public money or not?—Oh, yes, quite.

41,521. But that is what you mean by public money?—Money which had been given to the

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Church of England as the Church of the nation. The Church of England has been once, well, almost the Church of the whole nation. After that it became the Church of the majority, but now it is the Church of a fractional minority. The property was given to the Church as the Church of the nation, and inasmuch as it is not the Church of the nation, the property which was given to the Church as the Church of the nation should be now devoted to the nation to national interests.

41,522. That is what you call public money?—Yes, public money.

Mr. Seebohm.

41,523. Would you take away the tithes from the Universities for instance, or would you treat the Universities as public national bodies?—Well, the money having belonged to the nation, I would take it away.

41,524. The funds which at the time of the Reformation were handed over to educational purposes, you would put in the same category as the funds devoted to the Establishment?—Well, I should not be so much for that branch of the case as the other one.

41,525. There is one other point I want to ask you about, and that is as to these long leases which you speak of as being the best way of securing completeness of tenure. Suppose we had had long leases, fixed even by a Judicial Court in 1878, just before the bad years commenced, do you think it would not have been a very great damage to the holders of those leases that they should have had to have borne the whole of the depression instead of the landlords?—That would just depend upon the fair proportion demanded by the landlord. If the rents were fair, I think the longer the lease the better.

41,526. But the rent which was fair in 1878 might be quite unfair in 1888?—Then I want the rents to go down and up according to the market.

41,527. Do you think that the feeling or the want of good feeling between landlords and tenants in Wales is a thing which by increase of education, and by the changes in the law, or perhaps you would say by Disestablishment of the Church, and those questions, will die out?—Well, I think it will. As the relations improve, I think the feelings will improve between the two classes, and I think the sooner the friction is removed the better.

41,528. You would agree that it was very important, would you not, to do anything which would stimulate rather than lessen the amount of independence of tenant farmers in Wales?—Oh, certainly.

41,529. Would your opinion be, if things are left to take their natural course, with these changes in legislation that we speak of, that in future that independence will keep on increasing?—I should think it will; as the law improves I think the independence will increase, and the good feeling then will increase correspondingly.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

41,530. As that takes place do you think it will be necessary or wise that we should go very far in taking away freedom of contract as between landlord and tenant?—But freedom of contract—well it may be free, and yet just to both parties. I should not advocate oppression in any way.

41,531. I did not mean oppression; I mean fixing rents and things of that kind. You go in for security of tenure, and you have mentioned the land court. It is a little approaching the legislation that we have had in Ireland?—Yes.

41,532. You had that in your view?—Yes.

41,533. That takes away a great deal, does it not, of freedom of contract, and it is based on the fact that the two parties are not on sufficiently even terms to make fair contracts?—Both sides are allowed to state their case, and allowed to state their case fairly, and I do not think that that takes away the freedom of contract, for of course that tribunal has been appointed to settle the question between them amicably.

41,534. Yes, but it takes away the freedom of contract from the landlords if the tenant has free sale for instance; the landlord has no freedom in contracting with tenants on what terms he likes to bargain for?—There are restrictions even to liberty.

41,535. That is exactly the point I wanted to come to, but if we are really going through education, and in these other ways to raise the independence of the people it would be rather a pity, would it not, to get too much of what we might call paternal legislation?—Certainly it must be kept within bounds.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,536. Can you give us the periods of the different trade depressions? You have mentioned that there are six in the course of 39 years?—Well, they happened about every six years. Trade is flourishing for about three years and then it is otherwise. I cannot well fix the exact dates, but as far as I can see about six have taken place during my time.

41,537. Is there anything in the present trade depression that distinguishes it from the other trade depressions?—Well, there is more foreign competition; that is one thing, and rents are higher now a great deal than they were, say 30 or 35 years ago, and that makes the depression heavier.

41,538. I should gather from your answer that the present depression is more general; that it affects every branch?—Yes I should think so.

41,539. Whereas in the past trade depressions if cattle for instance were low, corn was high?—Yes.

41,540. And that really farms would recoup themselves from one branch if another branch was depressed?—Yes.

41,541. And consequently that the present depression is the worst in the history of trade depressions?—Yes.

41,542. In your remedies here you suggest tenant right. What do you mean by tenant right?—Well, when the farm is sold that the tenant has a right to get so much for the improvements which he has made.

41,543. Would you suggest that the tenant when the farm is sold should have the privilege of selling to anyone his interest in the holding?—That is what I mean; yes, a just claim to a certain sum for the improvements which he has made.

41,544. But do you think such a thing is possible? If a farm is sold and the tenant is cleared out and he wants to sell his improvements he will really have to appoint his successor will he not in that case?—That takes place in Ireland now; the tenant has a right there. When the farm is sold the landlord can claim so much and then the tenant can claim his share

41,545. But what is the consequence of free sale?—I did not mention free sale.

41,546. But tenant right and free sale are, I think, much the same thing?—No, not quite.

41,547. Free purchase is another thing; but free sale and tenant right are synonymous terms?—Supposing a farmer has invested say 500*l.* in his farm and then that farm is sold, I think he ought to get a capital sum for the 500*l.* which he has invested in that land when the farm is sold.

41,548. Who is to pay it—the landlord when he sells the farm?—Either the landlord or the purchaser. I should think the purchaser would have to pay both the landlord and the tenant.

41,549. But on a change of tenancy what suggestion have you to make—a change of tenancy only?—I think the outgoing tenant ought to have a claim for all the improvements which he has made say since he has been on the farm, or say for 10 years; he should have a first claim for a certain sum even when he goes out and another comes in, either from the landlord or the incoming tenant.

41,550. But do you go so far as to suggest that he should sell his interest in the holding, and also have the privilege of appointing the succeeding tenant?—No, I would not like to go so far as to say that he has the privilege of appointing the succeeding tenant, but whoever takes the land ought to be prepared to pay the tenant as well as the landlord.

41,551. I daresay you can see if a tenant is allowed to sell his interest to the succeeding tenant it practically resolves itself into the question of competition rent, so that the tenant would not be better off than he is at present?—Well, a farmer would not lose money when he went out of his farm.

41,552. But what about the succeeding tenant?—Of course, the succeeding tenant then gets the land better than it would have been if the other had not invested say his 500*l.* in that land.

41,553. Yes, but he gets it at a competition price?—Well, competition is very healthy sometimes.

41,554. It resolves itself as I said before into a competition rent?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,555. Do you think it would be sufficient for a tenant if he got compensation for any improvements that he made on his farm?—I am quite willing if he will get compensation, and that will include I think or become a branch of the tenant right that I mentioned in my paper.

41,556-7. If only some satisfactory means can be devised by which that compensation should be assessed or adjusted?—Quite so, yes.

41,558. With regard to the fixing of rent, I see you suggest a sliding scale?—Yes.

41,559. Based on the price of stock and produce?—Yes.

41,560. You will allow this:that there are other considerations which govern the question of rent besides the price of stock and produce?—Yes.

41,561. What are they?—Stock and crop are the chief.

41,562. They are the chief, but has not really the price of labour something to do with it?—Certainly so.

41,563. Do not you see then a difficulty in a sliding scale?—If you will allow me just to read a part of my letter in the "South Wales Daily News" yesterday, I shall explain myself more fully to you.

41,564. Very well, if you will kindly read it?—It appeared yesterday in the "South Wales Daily News":—

"This Land Bill should comprise amongst other things the following provisions:—1. A fair sliding-scale to regulate rents by the market prices of stock and crops. As a provision of law this scale must and will be compulsory on all estates. It may be voluntarily adopted, of course by an agreement between landlords and tenants before any Parliamentary measure becomes law; for to pass a Bill of this sort will take some time as a matter of course. The first question I shall be asked, I daresay is this: 'How and where will you find the basis of a workable sliding-scale?' My answer is, go back, say four years, or 21 years, to the year 1872, when trade was flourishing, with a view to find the market prices of stock and crops, when farmers were able to pay their way tolerably well. Then find out the difference in market prices now. Intelligent and well-informed people tell me that the market is 40 per cent. at least lower now than it was then. Fix their present market prices in comparison to 1889 or 1872 as a firm basis for regulating rents in future. Then I am asked, 'What articles would you include in the basis?' I answer, I would include all farm produce whether stock or crop. If intelligent men can fix a scale to regulate the price of one article, certainly they can by the same rule fix a scale with a dozen, more or less, articles. When cattle sell at 10*l.* per head, butter at 1*s.* in the pound on an average, hay at 4*l.* per ton, pigs sell at 9*s.* per score, let the landlord get a certain portion. When the market is higher or lower, let him or her have more or less correspondingly. But how much should the landlord get for the loan of his land for 12 months or more? A very important question certainly. A practical and experienced farmer said a few weeks ago that the landlord ought not to get more than 5*l.* out of every 15*l.* made out of the land. That farmer fixed the landlord's share as one-third of the whole profits made out of the land. How much did he get say three or 21 years ago? He got, say, 100*l.*, then he ought not to get now more than about 60*l.* or 70*l.* for the same number of acres. Then henceforth his share will slide up and down proportionately as the market moves up and down. Again, I am asked, 'How would you ascertain the prices?' Market and fair prices are well known now over the whole country. The prices of cattle, butter, corn, hay, horses, &c., are at the people's fingers' ends everywhere. Very well; concentrate that knowledge in a registrar's memorandum, let every tradesman-buyer and seller be compelled to register his purchase in a district office, that a reference may be made in a case of dispute, and then you will become well versed in the prices—average for 12 months and from three to five years to carry on a fair sliding-scale between landlords and tenants. Such a sliding-scale is of first importance to all classes.

(a.) To landlords. It will help them to get rents punctually, regularly, fully, and cheerfully. They will avoid the mortifications connected with distraining the goods of the tenants for their share of the profits. The services of county court bailiffs will be dispensed with.

(b.) To tenants who are investors in land under others. By it they will be able to get a fair remuneration for their labours—they, their wives and children. They do not get this now as a rule by farming. There may be exceptions of course. But farmers should be able to pay such hire to their children and wives as they pay to their servants, at any rate. To think of so many respectable and industrious men and women working for nothing is extremely horrible. It would secure to them also fair interest on their capital. Now they get no dividend at all, which reflects very discreditably on Welsh land holding as an old system. We cannot expect anyone to get his living very long in such a way. This will facilitate profitable cultivation by sharing the losses with the landlord, inasmuch as his due will be decided by the articles actually sold and really saleable though not sold. A sufficient number of servants and labourers will be employed to advantage for farm purposes, and paid out of profits made, and the tenant is thus raised above the dread of rent audits and the court of bankruptcy.

(c.) To wage-earners. Tenant farmers will be able to remunerate agricultural labourers with fair wages for their work. There is an impression, and it is very damaging to those who make it public, that labourers get too much for their work. Away with such a statement for ever, I say. They do not get sufficient, in my opinion; and farmers should be able to pay them well. They have not been able to do this in the past, because rents have been unreasonably high. If labourers were better paid they would settle down on the land to breathe God's air rather than endanger their lives underground in collieries and mine works, and idling their time away in large town and cities with nothing but semi-starvation staring them in the face.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

(d.) To the prosperity of the whole country. If farming interests are destroyed the whole country must, and will, suffer in the future. Farmers are the connecting link which binds the lower and upper classes together for the highest and noblest purpose. Adopt a fair sliding-scale as suggested in this paper; then, the land will improve in value, and better crops and stock will follow—friendship between landlords, occupiers, and labourers will be promoted all over the country—complaints and dissatisfactions will cease, and agriculture will be in a fair way to flourish by paying its way well. It is virtually acted upon now by landlords in letting, and by tenants in taking, farms. Regard is invariably paid to the state of the market in fixing rents, and in offering rents for so many acres. It will be essential to the decision of any land court that will be established in this country in the near future. No judges, however clever, can fix the amount of rent equitably without knowing the value of lands, and market prices and rent must necessarily rise and fall with the market. The objections to the adoption of a fair sliding-scale are frivolous. The difficulties are not insurmountable. It is an insult to the intelligence, the genius, the earnestness, and the heroism of the country to designate it as impossible, impracticable, and unworkable on account of half-a-dozen formidable or minor difficulties.

41,565. I think you have read far enough. Do you think that such an elaborate machinery as you have suggested could possibly work satisfactorily among tenant farmers?—because we hear complaints continually that really they do not keep accounts?—They ought to keep accounts, and they will do so too.

41,566. But we must take things as they are?—No, I think we ought to take things as they ought to be.

41,567. As a sort of preparation for the machinery which you suggest, do you not think it would be better and that it would work satisfactorily if the rent was fixed for a quinquennial period?—Very well, that will be a sliding-scale then.

41,568. Wait a minute; it would not be a sliding-scale quite—the prices have to be taken into consideration when the rent is fixed, the price of stock and produce, and also the question of labour and the cost of production generally?—Yes.

41,569. For a period of five years?—Well, I have no objection to fix the rent for five years, provided of course that it will go up and down with the market; then the farmers would be preserved from the anxieties which have disturbed their minds during the past two or three years in Wales.

20 April 1894.] Reverend William Thomas. [Continued.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

41,570. We will say it is fixed for five years, with a power of appeal for either the landlord or tenant; suppose prices do go up, and that the landlord makes an appeal to the Court for an advance in his rent; if the Court by valuation or otherwise conclude that there are some grounds for the landlord's appeal, and that he should have his advance, then the cost should fall on the tenant?—Do you refer now to the Land Court, or to any Court now existing.

41,571. We will say on a question of judicial rent; anybody may act as the intermediate tribunal?—I think the rent ought to be fixed in such a way that there should be no very much extra expense on the farmer, because he cannot compete with the landlords in that sense at all.

41,572. Do you think that any plan such as I have suggested now to you would work easier than the one that you have suggested?—No, I do not indeed

41,573. Of course it is a matter of opinion?—Quite so.

Chairman.

41,574. The following questions are handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen. "Do I rightly understand "that you do not accuse either of the Messrs. Yel- "verton personally of political intimidation?" —Does that refer to the present Mr. Yelverton?

41,575. It refers to the time when you were turned out of your holding?—I have acquitted the present one—that he had no sympathy whatever.

41,576. But you were turned out by the former Mr. Yelverton?—By his authority.

Chairman—continued.

41,577. "How do you know of the facts you have "related about Mr. Yelverton and Mr. Morgan?" —I was well acquainted with all the circumstances connected with it. I spoke to William Morgan himself, and knew all the particulars at the very time.

41,578. "Have you any reason for saying that "Mr. Yelverton knew of what his bailiff did?" —I should think he did, because he was responsible for what his bailiff did, and he knew I had been served with a notice to quit.

41,579. Mr. Stephen puts to you "Do I rightly "understand that Morgan went back to his own "old place in the end" That is the bailiff?—Yes, he did in three months.

41,580. Mr. Llewelyn Williams asks "Do you "suggest that fox-hunting should be abolished, "or that the farmers should be compensated for "all the damage done to their soil, fences, hedges, &c.?"—I think the farmers ought to be compensated. That just depends upon taste as to fox-hunting. I have no delight in it myself, but I do not object to gentlemen who delight in it. I suggest that damages should be paid by those who go through the fields and so on, and that they ought to make inquiries themselves, and not compel the tenants to make application before them and be very humble for a matter of a few pounds. It is a matter of right.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,581. Do you suggest that foxes should be exterminated?—I do not think there would be any loss by that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. J. Wilson re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

See previous examination, 37,181–37,195.

41,582. You live at Llanelly?—I do, my Lord.

41,583. And you are agent to Sir Arthur Stepney?—That is so.

41,584. You are a County Councillor?—I am.

41,585. The Stepney estate consists of 12,000 acres?—Yes.

41,586. What is the date of entry upon the farms?—The 29th September.

41,587. You have yearly tenancies?—That is so—occasional leases. I can give you a number of leases.

41,588. Do you consider that there are in your agreements any hard conditions?—No harder than the usual ones throughout England and Scotland. They are usual. On our estate they are not enforced.

41,589. You give compensation?—Certainly in all cases.

41,590. What is the average rent?—About half a sovereign an acre.

41,591. You make the tenants haul?—Yes, they all do that gladly.

41,592. Have you raised your rents on the Stepney estate?—They have not been raised for over 50 years.

Chairman—continued.

41,593. Do you think they ought to be reduced now?—I do not think so, if the farmers go with the times and conduct the farming in the proper way, and change their method, in order to meet the present peculiarities in farming.

41,594. When are the rents paid?—They are paid four months after due.

41,595. How many farms have you got on the Stepney estate?—Of farms and small holdings there are about 216.

41,596. What is the average size?—Of holdings under 25 acres there are 81 yearly tenancies, and 5 on lease, making 86; of between 25 and 50 acres there are 49 yearly, and 6 on lease, making a total of 55; between 50 and 75 acres there are 20 yearly tenancies and 3 on lease, making 23; there are 24 yearly tenancies of between 75 and 100 acres and 2 on lease, making 26; between 100 and 125, 16 yearly tenancies and 3 on lease, making a total of 19; from 125 to 150 acres, 3 on yearly tenancy; from 150 to 175, 1 on yearly tenancy; and between 175 and 200 acres, 1 on yearly tenancy and 2 on lease, making a total of 3. That is a total of 195 farms yearly, and 21 on lease, making 216 farms.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,597. Are they purely agricultural?—There are a few holdings under 25 acres that are not, but I should think 20 or 30 might be. The small holdings, as you heard the other day, are about 11 or 12 acres—something of that sort.

Chairman.

41,598. Is the cultivation good or bad?—It is not so good as I should wish. That is chiefly owing to the district that they are in. The farmers work in the colleiries, and limekilns, and they do not do sufficient on their own farms.

41,599. What are the landlords' improvements—buildings, gates, timber and stones?—We do all the buildings except in the case of leases; and we give the gates and the timber and stones for any purpose—what they call jumpers. and if they want to build a hay shed, seeing that the price of straw has gone up so much, we supply them with the timber, and they supply the corrugated iron.

41,600. Will you put in one of your agreements?—Yes. I may point out that this agreement was made by my predecessor, Mr. Gaussen, in 1882, and we have not altered it since. (The witness handed in agreement.)

41,601. Do you think that the compensation is sufficient or not?—The compensation for what?

41,602. For the outgoing tenants?—They manage that all between themselves. I have no difficulty whatsoever in the matter.

41,603. Have you any game on the estate?—Next to none. The hares are so scarce that they are all known by their names in my neighbourhood.

41,604. Do the tenants ever buy their holdings?—Yes. I will give you an instance in 1888. There was a small farm of about 32½ acres. It is rather an out-of-the way place for me to go to and it costs me always 2*l.* to go. It is let at 15*l.* a year rent; I was offered 450*l.* for it by an outsider, or 30 years' purchase. We would have been obliged to expend 150*l.* on it. I offered it to the farmer himself, and I told him "I cannot take less than what is offered; if you "will offer me 1*l.* more I will transfer and convey "it free of cost to you." He paid me that amount, and we made that conveyance, and he is on his own farm now.

41,605. Are the relations friendly in every way?—Extremely friendly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,606. Is Sir Arthur Stepney a resident landowner?—He is not. He has no house on the property at all. I advised him strongly not to build one. I thought the money that was expended in building the house might be better spent on the estate. Besides his health is not very good; he is in extremely bad health. But he makes up for that in other ways I think. He has a house in Llanelly, where he can live, and where he has lived, but there is no mansion—if you understand what I mean.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

41,607. But you would consider it a desirable thing for the landlord to reside on his property?—If he understands it. I have known instances of landlords in England who thought that because the farmer took a prize at a show his land was cheap, whereas the landlord did not understand the cost of producing the result. I do not say that that applies to Sir Arthur Stepney, but I do say that you put to me a broad question, and I think I must give you that as an answer. I think it is very right that all landlords should understand the management of property.

41,608. Will you tell us what has been your training as an agent, Mr. Wilson?—I was brought up with my uncle, who was a land agent, since 1870; I was educated at Wellington College, and during my holidays I was always with him. He farmed 400 acres. I left there in 1876 and farmed myself for two or three years. Then I was sub-agent to him in Sussex, Northamptonshire, and Surrey. I then went to Mr. Saville and articled myself for three years to him, where I had the advantage of seeing Hertfordshire, Oxfordshire, and parts of Essex and Somerset, and then I went back to my work, and I have been down here since.

41,609. You do not understand Welsh?—I do not find any need, not in the least.

41,610. Are all the tenants on Sir Arthur Stepney's estate Welsh people?—Yes, chiefly Welsh, but almost all of our farmers I think speak English. There are only about 30 that do not talk English, and then my staff all talk Welsh. I have three under me who all talk Welsh. I will tell you a peculiar thing, that here in Carmarthenshire at the time of the County Councils a man came down to Carmarthen to explain the County Council Bill or Act in Welsh.

41,611. That is the Local Government Act?—The Local Government Act of 1888. When the chairman put it to each person round the room to ask questions, they said they did not understand what had been said, and I think some of the reporters here will bear me out when I make that statement, because they were there.

41,612. What is the course you usually take when you have to let a farm?—Usually the next heir succeeds, and goes on, and I take the best man at the same rent if I consider the rent is just. I do not believe in raising rents, because I think it is bad policy. If it is too high you have to repair at the end of the time, and on behalf of the landlord it is bad policy, and it screws up the tenant.

41,613. What are the circumstances which would regulate the temporary abatements. You say in the syllabus of your evidence "temporary "abatements according to circumstances?"—Well, it may be a wet season, and you may have a wet farm; the tenant of that farm would suffer more with a wet season than perhaps the tenant of a dry farm. Last year some of our wet farms did very well, and the dry farms did very badly. Those are the sort of circumstances that I should always consider in giving abatements. Then I think the wholesale abatement of 10 per cent. all round is an extremely bad thing. Some men ought to get none, and others ought to get 20 per cent. back.

41,614. You say that very little arable land has been turned to pasture. You would not say that that was good farming would you?—It all depends upon where you are. I find that our farmers do not do enough root-growing in order to feed their beasts satisfactorily during the winter, and in those small farms there are some of them that absolutely only have half an acre of arable altogether. They cannot be expected to feed say five or six cows during the winter with say half an acre of roots. They are all small farms, and I would like to see a certain proportion, say 10 acres, of arable. It all depends upon the position.

41,615. What about large farms?—Large farms are another matter. If they are heavy land, then I should say lay it down in seeds.

41,616. Has there been any change on the large farms; that is what I want to know?—We have no large farms.

41,617. Have you not?—No. The largest farm we have is 200 acres, and this is in a town; it is at Llanelly, and it is purely a dairy farm. I think the large farmers in our neighbourhood are better off really than the smaller ones. They seem better-to-do.

41,618. You have provided manure tanks for some of the farms?—No, they have not been asked for.

41,619. You say in the syllabus which you have handed in that manure tanks are only looked after by good farmers?—That is among such men in the county as Marsh, of Penybedd, and Thomas, of Towyn, close by. I know their circumstances.

41,620. Not on the Stepney estate?—Not on the Stepney estate.

41,621. You have never had an application for them?—No.

41,622. The farmers would not be alive to that sort of thing?—I think they want education in all these matters.

Mr. Seebohm.

41,623. I have only one question with regard to this agreement to ask you; do you not think that it would be setting or following a good example to have it altered in compliance with the recent Acts?—Well, sir, out of 23 parishes there are 11 that have no agreement at all, and it is not enforced.

41,624. Would it not be better if it were altered?—The farmer comes to us about most of his little businesses, and we say, "Oh, if it is "a matter of a 5*l.* note, or 10*l.*, we will let it "slide, and here is the money"—we go on together as friends.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,625. Have you had any trouble in settling matters with the tenants?—Never, except in one instance.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

41,626. Did you in that case have recourse to arbitration or anything of that sort?—No, I do not know how the matter arose. A lease that was granted in 1825 for three lives fell out about 12 or 14 years ago; the rent was not raised, and the tenant went on at the same rent, and until the last two or three years he was paying no rent at all. I had to ask him for it, and he would not pay. He behaved in a very bad manner, and I had to go for an ejectment order. The land was distinctly under-rented by 50 per cent. I had a man to go in the next day. That is the only disagreement I have had since I have been there.

41,627. What is your opinion about a land court; do you think it would be a good thing?—It all depends upon the situation of it. I should think it would interfere with the relations between landlord and tenant in this way, that it would be rather irksome for the tenant to be taken before the land court by an arbitrary landlord to have his rent raised. Who is going to pay for it? Who is going to pay for the time? They say labour is scarce enough as it is, and if he has to go to a land court and dwindle away his time in the hay season, or at the time of setting roots and mangolds, I consider it would be a very serious matter. I think that some sort of Act ought to be brought in to protect the farmers against bad landlords, but certainly I think the present existing relations between the tenants and the large landowners are extremely good.

41,628. Do you think that any machinery that may be devised should be a simple and a cheap one?—I should think the simpler the better. I think that the transfer of land ought to be made cheaper, and that the agreements and leases on an estate if printed should not be charged for, and all those sort of things. But the fixing of the rent I think depends a great deal upon circumstances. A man may not get the most out of his farm; he may be an idle man, and the farm might be worth twice the amount if you have an active man upon it, and half the amount if you have a lazy one.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,629. If some simple means could be devised, would you have any objection to rent being adjusted between a landlord and tenant?—I do not think the tenants as a rule, from what I know of them in Carmarthenshire, or at least from what I have seen, and really have had to judge of on our property, have gone in for the new methods that I could suggest they ought to do to farm at present. Take the instance which occurs with regard to a great number of our farms: a man works in a colliery, he has a farm of say 35 or 40 acres, paying half a sovereign an acre for it, say 20*l.*; he, as a collier, would have to pay 5*s.* a week for a house somewhere else, and 5*s.* a week for a house means about 13*l.* a year out of the 20*l.*; his wife looks after the land, and then he has the use of the house when we put up the buildings. The house costs perhaps 250*l.*, and we ask no interest upon it. So that really I do not think we ought to be interfered with.

41,630. Then your contention is this, if I understand it, that no machinery could be made to apply to your estate owing to some peculiarity with regard to it?—I think it is a very peculiar estate in more ways than one. I have been thinking this over a good deal. In England we gave them two years' notice to quit. We thought that two years' notice to quit gave the tenant three years practically, from the 29th September, before his landlord could give him notice. We thought that was quite enough time for him to get anything out of the land in the shape of manure that he had put in. On the other hand, there might be a lease, say for 21 years, with the option of the lessee to give up his tenancy on giving the landlord two months' notice, or the landlord, if he found the tenant running out his land, or ill-using the land on the farm, by an appeal to the Board of Agriculture, could have the lease annulled—something of that sort. It would then give the tenant security for 21 years, and he could break it on his side by an appeal to the Board of Agriculture for some wrong, or where the tenant was running the land out or misbehaving himself. He would have a year's notice to do that or rectify his errors.

41,631. Practically that is an admission in favour of security of tenure of a farm?—I perfectly agree. I always advise a man when he takes a farm to have a lease. I ask him, "Will you not take a lease?" Since I wrote this "No leases are required," a man came to me the other day and said that he would take a lease for 21 years at exactly the same rent.

41,632. Of course, then, you suggest the condition that an appeal should be made to the Board of Agriculture. You will admit that it is possible for a man to abuse even a lease—that he might in the first seven years work the farm up into a good condition, the next seven years he might keep it in that good condition, and the last seven years he might work it out?—Exactly, or he might let the buildings run down, or do no painting, or 101 different things. I do not suggest that there should be an appeal to fix the rent.

41,633. No, it is not an appeal to fix the rent. What do you say about the adjustment of rent?—I think that it adjusts itself. It is the ordinary rule of supply and demand. You might as well say, "Why not fix the price of butter."

41,634. Yes, but I suppose you know that the rents are fixed in the Highlands of Scotland, and they have judicial rents there. It is fixed by a Commission?—Yes. Are they any better off?

41,635. We have had evidence in London that they were better off?—Yes—London evidence about things in the north of Scotland.

41,636. Wait a moment. The witnesses were testifying to the working of the Act in Scotland; they were Scotch witnesses who had come down to London to give evidence before us?—Well, I am not prepared to say that. I certainly think this, that if our rent were to be re-valued, there would be a general increase all round of something like 10 to 20 per cent. if the tenants farmed properly.

41,637. On Sir Arthur Stepney's estate?—Yes, I know one farm of 200 acres that I could put up double to-morrow.

41,638. And a man could make a profit out of it?—Yes, make a profit out of it.

Chairman.

41,639. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Williams. "You say that "the absence of the landlord makes no differ- "ence on a large estate. Is it true that Sir "Arthur Stepney has given a power of attorney "to a Llanelly solicitor for three years"?—He has given a power of attorney, as he always does when he has gone away, but he does not interfere with me at all.

41,640. "Is it true that Mr. Moses Williams asked you for Sir Arthur's address, and that you refused it"?—No, that is not true. See 38,334

41,641. "If no hardship exists when agents "receive no training, why do you say that "agents should be trained." I do not think that it is quite necessary to put this question?—I am quite willing to answer it; a landlord is not going to appoint a man that he does not think a proper man to manage his affairs.

41,642. "You say that compensation is always "given. Do you know that Mr. Moses Williams "built, or partially built, several outhouses, "and that he has produced a letter before the "Commission from a former agent to the effect "that compensation was due to him, and that "he has never received any compensation"?—I have got the agreement here, my Lord. That was not the arrangement. The arrangement, which is not signed, was written in Mr. Gaussen's handwriting, and it was that he was "to receive "compensation under clause 1 of the Agri- "cultural Holdings Act of 1875 at the end of "his tenancy, provided they are left in a con- "dition of good repair, but not otherwise." There it is in Mr. Gaussen's handwriting, and I take it that was the agreement made there and then.

41,643. "If penalising clauses are not en- "forced, why are they inserted"?—They are inserted as against bad tenants, when they may make a claim against you for letting them do as they like, and not meddling with them. They make a claim against you; you then go into the matter, and say "Here is our bargain, hand it "to the arbitrator, and let it be worked out."

41,644. "Who explains the clauses in the "agreements in Welsh to the tenants"?—My head clerk, who is an accountant, and who has been there for 22 years.

41,645. "If knowledge of Welsh is not neces- "sary, why is it necessary to explain these "clauses in Welsh"?—Simply because in the case of every lease, whether English or Welsh, I say it should be explained to these tenants.

41,646. "You say that the rents are fixed by "valuation. Who appoints the valuer"?—Sir Arthur Stepney, when he came into the property, appointed a valuer. He had to pay succession duty, and the whole estate was valued.

41,647. "You say that the rents on other "estates are higher than on yours. Does that "mean that the rents on adjoining estates are "too high"?—I do not say so. I say ours are too low.

41,648. "Why do tenants try to outbid one "another. Is it because there is land hunger "in this county"?—No, I do not think it is so; I think it is a case of Naboth's vineyard.

41,649. "You say that tenants with capital "are preferred. Does that mean that the most "desirable tenant is accepted"?—No; I do not think I would like to refuse a man who was the son of an old tenant because he had not sufficient to pay.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,650. Was not Naboth's case a case of land hunger?—It was hunger with regard to the king.

Chairman.

41,651. "You say that there is no need to "reduce the rents. Why, then, is it necessary "to make abatements"?—The abatements we gave were as follows: There was 10 per cent. at Michaelmas 1885, and 10 per cent. at Lady Day and Michaelmas, 1886; 10 per cent at Lady Day, 1887; and 10 per cent. and rates at Michaelmas, 1887. Then 10 per cent. and rates at Lady Day, 1888. Then at Michaelmas, 1888, 10 per cent. and rates. Then I assumed that these 10 per cents. were doing the farmers no good, so that I advised Sir Arthur to change his course of procedure, and we took the whole of our tenants (and I think Sir John Llewelyn will remember that some of his tenants joined us), to the Windsor Show. We said, "We cannot teach "these men practically; they are too old for "that, so that we will take them to see what is "the condition of things in other parts." That was in 1889. In October, 1889, we purchased an Aberdeen Angus bull from Scotland. In 1890 we started the butter factory here, and gave them 150*l.*, and there were all my expenses in travelling through the country and finding out the information. Then we took them in 1891 to the Llanelly Show, with their wives, and franked them through in every show, and in 1892 we took them and their wives to the Bath Show at Swansea, and we bought a Clydesdale horse last winter for them, and a bull. This last winter, owing to the short grass, we gave them barley meal, and they were very pleased to have it. I do not think there is any need for that, but it is a matter between landlord and tenant, and I am afraid if you had a land court all that would be interfered with.

Chairman—continued.

41,652. Mr. Llewelyn Williams' questions continued: "Do you consider that tenant "farmers are, as a rule, hard-working men?"—I think some are and some are not.

41,653. "Do they live well, and is their "standard of comfort high?"—Well, they do not live well, but they seem to live as they like. I do not see why we should interfere with them.

41,654. "How often do they have butcher's "meat a week do you know?"—They have a good many rabbits and game, but I do not pry into their private matters as to what they eat.

41,655. "You say that there are 216 farms "on the Stepney estate. How many are in "this district?"—There are I think eight or nine.

41,656. Where is the main portion of the estate?—There are about 4,000 acres in the Gwendraeth Valley, and in the parishes of Llanelly and Llangendeirne.

41,657. "Why do you elect to give evidence "at St. Clear's?"—The reason that I elected to give evidence at St. Clear's was because I had hopes that some of the other farmers would do the same in order to show that they have not supported the butter factory which was erected for their benefit, and I can prove that. I will read you what one farmer said at a meeting some year ago, that he, with 25 cows, in the months of June, July, and August, made 1*l.* a week, besides saving the labour. That means 2*l.* per head for each cow to that man. If he had 25 cows, that is 50*l.*, and yet they will not send their milk to the factory. We can get equal to 1*s.* 7*d.* per pound for butter now, and they are prepared to take 11½*d.* at Carmarthen.

41,658. "You say that land is insufficiently "cultivated. Do you think that with security "of tenure the land would be better cultivated?"—Well, I do not know. I am talking about our own estate in regard to that matter; I am not talking about it broadly.

41,659. "You have stated that very little "arable land has been turned to pasture. Has "that been done at the expense of the landlord "or the tenant?"—I have not had experience of it here.

41,660. "You state that there are no actual "cases of insufficient compensation although "alleged. Do you mean that Mr. Moses "Williams was not justified in stating what he "did, though he is supported by a former "agent's letter?"—No, I am talking about another farm, and it is the man who gave me notice to quit, having plenty of money, a man called Samuel Williams; and a gentleman who gave evidence at Llanelly, called W. N. Jones of Ammanford, a county councillor, was called in between us to settle the matter on the basis of an arbitration. Samuel Williams alleged he was entitled to a great deal more than he was, and we both saw him, and settled the matter.

41,661. Mr. Llewellyn Williams says he referred in his question to Moses Williams, Gellifawnen?—No, I did not mean Moses Williams in that remark at all.

Chairman.

41,661A. Mr. Llewelyn Williams' questions continued:—"You say that tenants are better "off than proprietors. Does that mean that "tenants are better off than their landlords? Or "does it mean that they are better off than "small freeholders?"—No, I think the men that have bought their farms are not better off.

41,662. "Why are freeholders worse off than "tenants? Is it because landlords spend more "on farms than they receive?"—If a farmer who has bought his holding has to go straight away after a storm and lay out 10 years' rent on the farm, it is natural to say he has to go for it somewhere, and if he is mortgaged before, he has to pay a very heavy interest to be able do that.

41,663. "Or is it because farmers who buy "their holdings buy them at too high a price?" —No, I do not think it is.

41,664. "Is this due to the fact that they "wish to be secure in their farms?"—I do not think they put by what you call a sinking fund to meet these matters.

41,665. "You say that the methods of farming "should be altered to meet the changes in the "times?"—I do.

41,666. "Do landlords help their tenants to "understand new ways of farming?"—Yes.

41,667. "You say that the rents have not "been raised. Has not the rent of Ffald in the "parish of Llangunnog been raised?"—I am talking generally of the whole property. With regard to Ffald, I shall be glad to answer that. When the lease fell out, which was a long lease, Sir John Stepney, Sir Arthur's father, on the assurance of the man's father, spent 200*l.* or 300*l.* in the buildings, provided he paid so much increase. The father and mother in the meantime have both died, and the son is now sitting there in their stead, although we have not settled with him, and he still owes us money. The same rent is going on, and he does not pay the odd amount at all.

41,668. "You say large farmers are better off "than small farmers, and that all your farms "are small?"—Yes.

See 37,180–37,195, 37,275.

41,669. "Am I to understand that your "tenants are worse off than others?"—No, I think they are better off.

41,670. The following question is by Mr. H. L. Stephen:—"Have you anything to say as "to whether any improper influence has "been brought to bear on persons intending to "give evidence here?"—Certainly I have. With regard to the man Thomas Owen, who made a statement about me at Llanelly, if you think that any explanation is needed I am perfectly prepared to give the explanation. He said that I to a certain extent intimidated him, as you heard. He said that he did not intend to give evidence when he came down. Here is an agreement of 1878. His aunt held the holding that he has now on a yearly agreement. When she died he came to the estate office and asked if we would take him on as the tenant. This holding, I may tell you, is 11 acres of land next Bynea Station, part of which he tries to let for 4*l.* an acre, and the adjoining land is let at 3*l.* an acre, and there is a house on it. He then comes down to ask whether he can have it; we say "You will have to make a small expenditure "of about 70*l.*, and we will grant you a 40 "years' lease." He had 30 years undetermined at the time that he made this charge at Llanelly, and I do not see how he was going to be intimidated by me. He is to be there for 30 years, and if we take up any land he gets full compensation for his crops staying on the land, and a proportion of reduction of the rent for what we take up for say colliery purposes.

There is one thing, my Lord, that I would like to say with regard to the pollution of the rivers. Sir John Llewelyn and I sat on a joint committee on that matter. It is a very serious matter indeed on the Loughor, the Amman, and Gwaendreth. In the summer you see the beasts standing in nothing less than vitriol, their hoofs rot, and they drink the water, which dries up their milk, and in the winter, when the floods rise, this is washed over all the low-lying grounds, and then the deposit settles, and the sheep and the cattle all round there are in such a state that it is heartrending. We applied to the County Council and we were advised that the present law was such that it was advisable not to go on with an action. The majority of the people on the County Council not being farmers, but rather getting their livelihood from tinplate works and other works of a similar nature, were inclined to let the matter slide, and I think the Commission might fairly take a note of that, as it is a thing that seriously affects the farmer, and by that seriously affects the neighbours.

Then again there are weighbridges. I think an Act was passed some time ago, and I have applied time after time at the County Council to know why the Weighbridge Acts are not put in force, and I have had no answer yet.

I am of opinion that unsound sires, horses, should not be allowed in the district at all. I think that if an unsound horse happens to be in the district, by an application to a justice of the peace it should be ordered out of it, because breeding unsound horses only tends to deteriorate the stock of the farm. Pigs and animals of that sort are dealt with by other Acts.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,671. I think with regard to horses there is a company in the county which is doing some work in that direction now?—Yes, but it does not protect us. The farmer, when he sees a horse coming round the county, say for half a sovereign services, will take it. We will not allow them in the rings here unless they carry a certificate on their head signed by two veterinary surgeons that the horse is sound.

If I may be allowed, I should like to read an article that may be of interest to the farmers here, which only shows the neglect that there is about certain matters. Now cheese is not made in this district at all. It could easily be made. Skim milk cheese is made, but not the really good first quality of Cheddar, or anything of that sort. I have here some notes which I made on experiments in farming in 1878, and I have a cutting from "The Live Stock Journal" which is as follows. "At the present time good ripe "cheese is worth no more to the maker than "say 65*s.* per cwt.—he can make no more of it, "that is, if we except fancy dairies—and this "is 6½*d.* per pound wholesale." Then it goes on to say "When cheese is making 65*s.* to the "farmer it is considered to do fairly well, and "75*s.* is considered very good, while 80*s.* is "regarded as a highly profitable return." So that shows that if the farmers should change their mode of agriculture, and turn their hand to chickens and fruit growing, they would find things improve. (Laughter.) Well, you may laugh, but it is no laughing matter. You ask for reduction of rents and fixity of tenure, and you do not take the trouble to go into these matters.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Johns called and examined.

Chairman.

41,672. Will you read your statement?—Yes, my Lord.

I am at present a small freeholder occupying the farm of Parkethyn, which is situated in the parishes of Llangunnock and Llandilo Abercowin in this county, I am also a county councillor for this division, viz., Llanstephan.

I formerly occupied a small farm called Morlaisisaf, in the parish of Pembrey. My ancestors had been tenants of the farm from time immemorial.

The whole buildings were rebuilt during my father's tenancy, it was about the year 1852 or 1853. He did all the haulage from long distances, even carrying the water to make the mortar, and was not paid or allowed anything for all his labour.

After my father's death in 1866, I was accepted as tenant. During my tenancy I spent a lot of money in improving the farm. I cleared several patches of gorse and thickets, and by applying artificial manures had increased much of its fertility and made it all into permanent pasture. I substituted my brother as tenant in 1878, when I went to live in my wife's own farm, but the landlord refused to accept my brother as tenant, therefore I kept the tenancy until 1883, when I was evicted. The reason given for my eviction was that the landlord, the Reverend Robert Colby, wanted it as a residence for his gamekeeper. I was allowed half a year's rent, not as compensation, but to prevent me carrying out my threat of ploughing up the land.

I was asked by a meeting of farmers held in the district to give evidence before this Commission. Most of the farmers are afraid of the consequences of giving evidence before the Commission, not only of offending their landlords—I know of several who would not hesitate to give evidence against their present landlords as they are so rack-rented that they would be ready and willing to leave their holdings to-morrow. But they are afraid that their giving evidence would militate against them in obtaining another farm.

The parishes of Llangunnock, Llanstephan and Llandilo Abercowin, to which my evidence relates, are comprised of small estates or parts of estates, most of which has been either revalued or sold during the last 40 years, so that the rents have been raised on an average 30 to 40 per cent., and very little abatements have been made during these late years of depression and none at all by some landlords. I am surprised, from my own experience of farming during late years, how many can manage to pay any rent at all, especially those farming on poor soil. Three farms adjoining mine, viz., Trerhose, Gelly, and Pentre Newydd were sold by auction only three years ago. These farms were greatly improved by the tenants during the last 20 years, the vendors selling the tenants' improvements without giving them any compensation, and they could not obtain any under the Act of 1883 for general improvements, such as increasing the fertility by applying artificial manures and buying feeding stuffs for cattle, also laying land down to permanent pasture. The rent of these farms prior to the sale was 250*l.*, but the rent was increased by the purchaser to 320*l.*, thus the tenants had to pay 70*l.* advance in their rents on their own improvements. The attachment of the farmers to their holdings is very great; they will undergo a deal of hardship and privations rather than give notice to quit for the purpose of having their rents reduced, as there are plenty of applicants for vacant farms.

The Law of Distress I think is responsible for much rack-renting as well as bad farming; it enables the unscrupulous rack-renter by securing him his rent to accept the highest bidder, even if he has no experience or sufficient capital as tenant. The consequences are often bad farming, other creditors defrauded, and the tenant a bankrupt, while the unscrupulous landlord is secure of his rack rent. The abolishment of this law would prevent undue and unfair competition for farms and would create a substantial class of farmers, and would eliminate the bogus amateur farmer, who is often the means of raising rents. In the interest of good husbandry, in the interest of the State, and in the interest of good and honourable landlords, I think some tribunal should be created by law to enable sitting tenants to obtain fair rent and fair compensation for all real and substantial improvements, but not fictitious or fanciful improvements.

I beg to say here, my Lord, that I have read a good deal of the evidence given by landlords and agents before this Commission, and I am surprised to find that they are invariably opposed to the establishment of any such tribunal, for if they are the honourable class they represent themselves to be, they would have nothing to fear from it, but it would be a means of distinguishing between the good and bad landlords.

Game Laws are very unfair for tenant farmers, as well as freeholders. It enables the great landlord, or great game preserver, to kill his 10,000 head of game for the same amount of license duty as the farmer or freeholder has to pay for killing his 10 head; it is simply a prohibitive tax for the last-named, so that they must let their shooting rights to the large game preserver next to them for a trifle, which is often insufficient to make good the damage done to their fences. Either a nominal amount of tax per acre should be fixed to compensate the State for relinquishing the license duty, or, occupiers of land should be exempt from license duty for killing game on land in their occupation.

Chairman—continued.

Peasant Proprietors. The anxiety of many farmers for security of tenure and the retention of their own improvements has induced many farmers during the time of agricultural prosperity to buy their holdings at a high figure on borrowed capital; these are as badly off or worse than tenant farmers, as they can get no abatements or consideration at the hands of their mortgagees, who charge exorbitant interest. I think the State ought to lend money to those on the same terms as it does in Ireland, so as to relieve them from the entanglements of unscrupulous money-lenders.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,673. I will only first call your attention to one thing; you are mistaken as to the artificial manure; there is a provision in the third schedule of the Act for compensation for artificial manure?—Only for the last year or two.

41,674. But it depends on the valuation?—But artificial manure that is given for years and years continually is continually improving the land.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Francis re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

Previously examined at Q. 31,939–32,148. See 32,523.

41,675. What is it you wish to state?—I shall only keep your Lordship a very short time.

41,676. Whom do you represent?—In this matter I represent Mr. John V. Colby.

41,677. The son of the Reverend Robert Colby?—Nephew, I think. I wish to rebut the evidence of the previous witness, Mr. John Johns. At the time that the Commission sat at Eglwyswrw, Mr. Colby's agent was alive. Since then he has died, and I have been appointed Mr. John Colby's agent. That is why I am before you to-day. I should not trouble you only that Mr. Johns said he was evicted from his farm of Morlais. He was good enough to write to Mr. Colby to tell him that he would appear here to-day, and that is why I am coming before you now. The circumstances he has mentioned are quite true so far as they go. I believe that about 35 years ago, from what I could gather—I have gathered all the information I could—these buildings were being built during Mr. Johns' father's time. They lived there for a good many years, but probably from a good feeling towards the late Mr. Johns the neighbours did nearly all the hauling. However, be that as it may, Mr. Johns married and went to his farm, and a person wrote to the then agent to ask for the farm for Mr. Johns' brother, but that was refused on Mr. Johns representing that his brother had no capital, and he rented out the land for, I think, four years as a bye-holding, his brother living in the house. There would have been no reason to have asked consent to let it to his brother if he wished, because it was in his own hands and there was no agreement. An arrangement was then made (I have the letters which passed between the late agent and the late Mr. Colby in his own handwriting) that Mr. Johns would have to give up the land or that his brother would have to leave, and he must live there himself, and they made an arrangement that on an allowance of half a year's rent Mr. Johns would give up possession, which (his own letter that I have here will state) he did upon that as a matter of fact. The land I find was not in a good state, having been allowed to go wild for four years, and Mr. Johns was not in any way entitled to compensation for what he had done at that time. I can carry that further if necessary, but as to being evicted he was not evicted, and those are the circumstances of the case.

41,678. Do you rebut the statement that the buildings were rebuilt during Mr. Johns' father's tenancy?—No, my Lord, they were rebuilt during that tenancy, and he possibly or probably did the haulage, but the buildings were built at the then owner's expense altogether, excepting the haulage. They were built 35 years ago.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,679. Really, so far as I can understand, Mr. Francis, you simply explain the reason why the brother was refused the tenancy of the farm?—Yes, and that Mr. Johns was not evicted from the farm by any means. The reason was that he was away in Llangunnoch, I should think, pretty nearly 20 miles at the least from the small farm, and underletting it every four years.

41,680. It was included as a bye-take for four years?—Yes.

41,681. Was his brother there?—His brother was in the house, and other people were occupying the land—Mr. Williams, I believe.

Re-examined 42,568.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN SKYRME called and examined.

Chairman.

41,682. You live at Pantglas, Whitland?—Yes.

41,683. You are a farmer and a labourer?—Yes.

41,684. You think the rents are too high?—Yes, they are.

41,685. Can you give any instance of rents having been raised from 100*l.* to 190*l.*, and 200*l.* to 600*l.*?—One farm on the estate of Maesgwynne, called Duffryn Farm.

41,686. Who is the tenant?—He is here now.

41,687. What was the rent?—120*l.*

41,688. What is it now?—190*l.*

41,689. What was the other rent which was raised from 200*l.* to 600*l.*?—I believe you will have evidence of it; it is Tynewydd, Whitland.

41,690. The tenant is in the room?—Yes.

41,691. Was his rent raised from 200*l.* to 600*l.*?—Yes, the farm has been raised.

41,692. Is that Mr. Thomas Williams?—Yes.

41,693. Then he will speak to that later?—Yes, to that effect.

41,694. Are there any abatements?—Yes, from 5 to 25 per cent. They are only acts of charity though.

41,695. Are they permanent abatements or are they only for a time?—No, temporary abatements.

41,696. Have you anything to say about insecurity of tenure?—No, not exactly, but we have got farms down there where the tenants have been changed 10 times during the last 32 years.

41,697. As to how many farms does that apply?—One farm—Pencawse Farm.

41,698. There have been 10 tenants upon it?—Yes, in about 32 years—I cannot state exactly.

41,699. And another farm with three tenants?—Yes. It is Duffryn Farm, on the Maesgwynne estate.

41,700. The labourers' cottages you consider very bad?—Yes. I took the dimensions of one of them lately, 20 feet long by 12 feet wide.

41,701. How many people live in it?—Six.

41,702. That you think is very bad for morality?—Yes, I have seen a father and mother and six children sleeping in the same bed, not sleeping but lying down on it.

41,703. And that of course is very bad for morality as well as health?—Yes, no decency can be in that place.

41,704. Is there enough labour on these farms?—No, not half enough.

41,705. Nor enough accommodation for stock?—No, there are hundreds of lambs perish in our district for want of accommodation to put them in at night. Poultry would pay if we had house room for them, but landlords will not build poultry houses.

41,706. Do you send your milk to the butter factory?—No, we keep it at home.

41,707. Do you consider the factory an advantage to the neighbourhood?—Not much, it is a great advantage to these gentlemen farmers, people who do not like to work, but I believe they could make more money out of it by utilising it at home.

Chairman—continued.

41,708. Have you any remedies for this state of affairs?—Yes, a land court as a last resort, I should try my landlord first.

41,709. Anything else?—Yes; game to belong to tenants wholly and solely.

41,710. What else?—Well, I think there ought to be some inspection on estates like the Government Colliery Inspectors, the Mercantile Marine, and so on.

41,711. Have you anything to say about local rates?—Yes, I think that this Local Government Board ought to be knocked on the head. There should be equalisation of rates. Land is overburdened with rates.

41,712. I suppose you wish for a reduction of railway rates?—Yes, the same as foreign producers.

41,713. Do you object to fox-hunters?—Yes, and other hunting—all trespassers.

41,714. And game of all sorts?—Yes.

41,715. I suppose you wish to utilise the tithes?—Yes, for experimental farms, I think, in every county. It comes from the land, and I think the land ought to get some benefit from it.

41,716. You wish the Poor Law to be amended in what way?—Well, I do not know—get some of these officials off—these overpaid and underworked officials ought to be got out of the country. There is nothing to be seen in the country now but carpet bags and white collars walking about.

41,717. Is there anything else?—There is the damage by timber cutting and hauling.

41,718. You object to the hauling?—No. I object to the cutting timber on my farm when they do not pay any compensation for it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,719. But is not compensation generally paid?—Not in my instance. There is in some instances.

41,720. Did you make any application for compensation?—Yes.

41,721. You suggest a land court as a remedy, I see. Why do you think agents oppose it?—Well, I think it would take some of the butter off their bread. That is the only reason they oppose it.

41,722. You say you think the game ought to belong to the tenant?—Yes.

41,723. Does it now belong to the tenant?—Ground game.

41,724. And the winged game?—No, not by law.

41,725. I think it does unless you part with it to the owner of the land by agreement; in the absence of any agreement I think it does belong to you?—Not the winged game.

41,726. Yes, I think so by law in the absence of any agreement. If you choose to make an agreement you can part with it to the landlord or anyone else.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I do not think that is generally known.

Sir John Llewelyn.

It may not be generally known, but it is the law.

(The Witness.) It is not known in the country. It is death for us to kill the winged game.

Mr. Seebohm.

41,727. You mean that the winged game is always reserved in the agreements, do you not?—Yes. Then we have got preserves round our land, and the rabbits and pheasants and birds come out and destroy all we have got. They did 13*l.* worth of damage to me last year, and I cannot get any compensation for it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,728. Have you any agreement?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

41,729. Perhaps you made an agreement by which you parted with your rights?—I have got to feed his game.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,730. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Yelverton. Oh, he is not a bad landlord; there are many worse, and many better too.

41,731. Have you had any abatement?—Yes, 10 per cent. We live at the mercy of our landlords. We want permanent reductions, not temporary abatements.

41,732. Did that satisfy you?—No, 60 per cent. would not be too much this year. Why the produce of the farm is down one-third. In 1872 you could get 22*l.* for two-year-old cattle; in 1882 they were not worth more than 14*l.* They are not worth more than 8*l.* now. Of course, butter keeps up reasonably.

41,733. The farm has not paid you then this last year?—No, it does not pay me, it ruins me daily.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

41,734. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

41,735. And you live at 2, Spring Gardens, Whitland?—Yes.

41,736. Will you kindly make your statement?

PERSONAL.—I farm a part of Tynewydd on a lease for 14 years at the rent of 112*l.* The lease (which I produce) states the number of acres as 37; the number of acres, according to the late Ordnance Survey Map, is 32 acres, 1 rood, 38 perches. The landlady accounts for this difference by stating that it is contained in the river which flows through one meadow. I consider several clauses in the lease unfair, e.g., I am bound to put 15 tons of lime yearly, which is more than is good for the land, and I will have to leave all the manure on the farm without any compensation. The rent of Tynewydd in 1844 was not above 200*l.*, and the rent of the whole of it now is 641*l.*, together with about 25*l.* ground rent, let on leases to build upon. There have been six changes of tenants during the last 50 years.

BUILDING.—Farm-houses and out-buildings, generally, are improving, but are far from being what would be desirable in many cases yet. In many cases they are erected chiefly by the tenant, and he always has to bear part of the cost as well as the labour connected with them."

41,737. Who is your landlady?—Mrs. Phillips.

Mr. Seebohm.

See 41,751. 41,738. How do you explain the rise in rent from 200*l.* a year to 641*l.*? Has it become almost building land or accommodation land?—It was sold.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

41,739. But has a large population risen up in that district?—Oh, yes, considerable.

41,740. So that it led to so much higher rent on account of that increased population?—Yes.

41,741. It is not simply agricultural land now?—There are five or six parties taking the land now.

41,742. You mean it is a higher rent because it is divided into several tenancies?—Yes, it was sold since then.

41,743. Are there any buildings erected upon it?—Oh, yes, many.

41,744. Many of the little holdings have had farm buildings built upon them?—Only the farm on it. There is a farm there and out-houses.

41,745. Only one farm building?—For myself I have got my own house, and a part of the outbuildings.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,746. But is the increase of rent from 200*l.* to 641*l.* purely agricultural, or does it take into consideration house rents?—Agricultural.

41,747. Entirely agricultural?—Yes.

41,748. Owing to its having been split up into different tenancies?—Yes, different tenancies of course.

Chairman.

41,749. Two questions are handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen—"How old is your lease?"—Four years old.

41,750. "How far is your farm from the "railway station?"—About a quarter of a mile.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. PHILLIPS called and examined.

Chairman.

41,751. Do you wish to say anything about the evidence of the last witness?—Yes, I should like to, my Lord.

41,752. You are the landlady of his farm?—I am.

41,753. What do you wish to rebut?—The tenant who has just spoken has had the land for about 15 years. Five years ago about seven acres were taken away and then a lease was given to him, but, of course, at a reduction of rent; I think there was a difference of 20*l*. It was mutually agreed that he should have a lease on the remaining part, of course I paying all rates and taxes and tithes; in fact it is entirely free with that rent.

41,754. 37 acres at 112*l*?—Yes, entirely free of rates, taxes, and tithes. It is quite accommodation land, the village of Whitland having increased from a mere nothing into quite a little town. When my father-in-law had this farm 50 years ago more than half of it was arable land, and then the rent, I think, was more than what was stated. It was 260*l*., he paying all rates, taxes, and tithes. Since that, of course, it has become almost all accommodation land and building land. The seven acres that were taken away from this last witness I have been repeatedly offered 5*l*. an acre for, but find it pays me better to farm it myself. When the last witness complained to me that there was a shortness of acreage—which really does not amount to more than one acre, more or less according to this map, and the river is not measured in the land, and when you let land half of the river is always included—when he complained I immediately said I was exceedingly sorry as I was certain that none of us ever knew of it until the ordnance map was brought out. When I heard of it I immediately said I would be perfectly willing to take it up, knowing that I would do far better by it.

Chairman—continued.

41,755. You agree that the number of acres in the lease instead of 37 acres is 32 acres 1 rood and 78 perches?—It is 33 acres by one map, and is nearly 33 by the other; and then, of course, there is the measure of the river. I wrote to the Ordnance Survey Department, and here is their letter if you wish me to read it.

41,756. We can take that as read; you both agree to that, that there is about four acres difference in the lease?—Oh, no, not when the river is measured. It makes not more than two acres, and on the lease it was agreed that it was 37 acres "more or less." Having taken part of that field out there was no map that we could refer to, so that it was mutually agreed, and the tenant having had the land for 15 years was quite as capable of judging as my husband, who is dead, so I thought it my duty to come and speak.

41,757. Is there anything else you wish to say?—No, nothing else, thank you.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DANIEL DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

41,758. The evidence you propose to give relates to Pembrokeshire, I believe?—No, it is Carmarthenshire evidence. I have only just gone from this district to Pembrokeshire. The penalising clauses in the agreements for leases are the worst. There is a copy of an agreement for your lordship to see. (Witness handed in agreement.)

41,759. I think you might read your evidence through; that would be the best way?—If your lordship pleases. I was a tenant on the West Mead estate, which consists of several thousand acres. It is in the Hundred of Derllys. I wish to state that I consider there is a difficulty in dealing with the landlord for land from which the sea has receded, and which is left in such a state as to be of some use for grazing. I may say that I have been upon the farm on this estate for a few years. There was a piece of land that was almost useless, and they wanted to raise my rent 78*l*. a year on account of it, and in consequence of that I left. As to ownership the estates round-about are owned by resident landowners on scattered estates. I should say that language makes no difference, but politics are a great consideration. I have known a tenant having notice to quit for voting against his landlord's wish. Religion is not considered.

Chairman—continued.

41,760. Is this your letter that you have handed in?—Yes.

41,761. This is important. Do you wish to put it in?—That is not on the paper that you have which I sent in. I only had that a day after I sent my statement in to the Secretary in London.

41,762. Is this any relation of yours to whom the letter refers?—No, my Lord.

41,763. Can you vouch for the letter?—It is a farmer, a man who was evicted from the West Mead estate, the one I give evidence for.

41,764. Is he a person who is present in the room?—Yes, my Lord.

41,765. Do you consider that that is one of the most important parts of your evidence?—There are three or four similar to that. He is in the room.

41,766. I think this is more important than the size of farms. Whom does the West Mead estate belong to?—Morgan Jones, of Penlan. He has an estate in Cardiganshire as well.

Mr. Seebohm.

41,767. Are these agreements now in use on the estate?—Yes.

41,768. They are very old, are they not?—I cannot say. In 1875 I went to the estate, when I married, and that is a copy of an agreement which was sent to me and my father before we went to reside on the farm.

41,769. In 1875?—Yes.

41,770. Is it in use now?—It was five years ago. I assure you that all these penalising clauses are carried out. They were carried out with me, anyhow

Chairman.

41,771. We will do which you like. Would you prefer that we should call Mr. John Howell, to whom the letter which you have handed in refers, or go on with your statement?—Just as you wish, my Lord. You can read that letter through; it is connected with my evidence. There are three or four cases of the same sort.

41,772. Yes, we had better go to that; it is no use dealing now with such points as the special training of agents, and so on. We have heard all about that?—Again, with reference to changes of tenancy, there have been on the largest farm on the estate, a farm which I have held, seven different tenants in the last 25 years.

41,773. Let us take that. Changes are much more frequent than they were?—Yes.

41,774. What is the cause?—The rents are too high, my Lord. The farm was let at 360*l.*, and then it was let at 480*l.*, and the tenant was there one year; then it was let at 380*l.*, and the tenant was there two years. I paid 480*l.* for it for five years, and of course they wanted to raise my rent, and I then left.

41,775. The largest farm on the estate has had seven different tenants in 25 years?—That is so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,776. Was your rent 480*l.*?—Yes, and they wanted 578*l.*

41,777. It is a very large farm indeed?—Yes, it was a large farm. Taken with a rabbit warren, altogether it was about 700 acres.

Chairman.

41,778. With regard to Castle Ely farm; that was advanced from 240*l.* to 390*l.* in 1890?—Yes.

41,779. And Great Pale was advanced in Michaelmas 1893?—Yes.

41,780. There have been some permanent reductions?—Some.

Mr. Richard Jones.

41,781. Was there any justification for raising the rent of that farm to the extent of 50*l.*?—They generally let their farms by tender. They are let to the highest bidder.

41,782. Is it advertised in the papers?—Yes, certainly, in the "Welshman," and the Carmarthen papers. We had seen it advertised, and we had come up here, and three farms were let at the same time on the estate, and my father tendered for one farm and my uncle for another. They wrote to my uncle asking him if he wished to alter his tender and to raise it, but shortly afterwards they wrote to him to say that they had accepted some other tender, and that it was too late, and that they could not accept anything further from him.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,783. That is dealing with it on strictly commercial lines?—Yes, and therefore he did not have it, and my father's tender was accepted.

Chairman.

41,784. What is the size of farms on this estate?—I should think they average about 250 acres. I was in two farms on the estate. The first was 175 acres, and the next between 700 and 800 acres, but there were scores of acres in the last farm—you may say hundreds of acres—that were almost useless.

41,785. Have the farms been consolidated?—Some.

41,786. And when the premises were out of repair on the small farms what did they do with them?—They put them in with adjoining farms if there was anyone who wanted them, and who would apply for them at the time.

41,787. What are they principally—upland or lowland farms?—Upland.

41,788. I understand you to say that labourers are scarce?—Yes. On this last farm that I held of between 700 and 800 acres they did not even have a single cottage on the farm. There was one in the middle of the farm, and they would not let it to me, and it was vacant nearly all the time I was there.

41,789. With regard to improvements, do they do anything to improve the farms?—I never knew of any compensation in any way being paid for improvements.

41,790. Did they charge you anything on the outlay?—They promised to build for me when I went to the first place, and they did not do it for four years after I went there. Then I wanted some more done, because there were very few buildings there at all. I wanted some more done, and they would not do it unless I paid 7½ per cent. That is the rule on the estate, as you will see from the agreement.

41,791. What is the custom of the country?—They would not go by a custom. The agents are London lawyers, and no custom would rule them.

Mr. Seebohm.

41,792. In your statement I see it is put at 7 per cent. per annum?—Yes, 7 per cent. is right; I should have said 7 per cent.

Chairman.

41,793. Growing crops, turnips, and mangolds are supposed to be taken by valuation?—Supposed to be, but when I left they would not take mine.

41,794. Then in your case the landlord refused, and charged you a full year's rent for the field for the three months, and the turnips could not be sold off the field by the 29th of September?—Yes. Of course they could not come to perfection. I offered two years' rent, and to keep the field for one year.

41,795. Would the landlord pay for the tillages?—No.

41,796. As to hay, corn, and manure, was that taken at a valuation?—It was supposed to be, but they backed out of it whenever they thought fit.

41,797. Are permanent improvements paid for or not?—I have never known any.

Sir John Llewelyn.

41,798. Where does your landlord live?—In the winter, during the shooting season, he lives at Llanmiloe, down in the middle of the estate. In the summer time he is most of his time at Penlan, and in Cardiganshire.

Chairman.

41,799. Does he preserve much game?—Yes.

41,800. Rabbits and hares are preserved by the landlord?—Many rabbits and hares, and pheasants by the thousands.

41,801. Was there much damage?—Not so much near the covers, because he kept so much land in his own hands for the preserves for the game.

41,802. Did you ever know of any compensation being paid for the damage done by game?—Never. I know of a tenant who asked for compensation, and the landlord told him that if he was not satisfied with his farm as it was, he had better take it up himself, and he would take it in for preserving, and he did so.

41,803. Were you ever expected to beat?—Yes, my Lord.

41,804. Is that really accurate, because this has been so often denied?—No doubt it is accurate. There are a dozen tenant farmers in the room now, but they do not like to come forward although they can corroborate anything I have said, by letter, on condition that their names should not be divulged to the agent or landlord.

41,805. Were you expected to beat yourself?—I and a couple of men with me a couple of days every year.

41,806. What did they give you?—I had a pheasant the second day, and the men would generally get a shilling or something like that.

41,807. Then you think game preserving under those circumstances has a very bad effect?—Well, it encouraged poaching.

41,808. And caused unpleasantness?—Yes.

41,809. Were you obliged to insure?—The landlord paid the insurance and charged it in the rent. You will find it is in the agreement that the landlord has the power to insure and charge the tenant for it in the rent.

Chairman—continued.

41,810. With regard to the general condition of the farming population, what do you consider: is it good, bad, or indifferent?—Not very good.

41,811. And the tenants and their wives work very hard?—Much harder than the hired labour—longer hours.

41,812. The children do not receive wages?—No, my Lord.

41,813. The present rents, you think, could not be paid if the children had their due?—I am positive of that.

41,814. The cottage accommodation you said was bad?—It was in the main very bad. I had one cottage on the first farm, and there was one on the second farm, and they would not let it to me, and it was in the middle of the farm.

41,815. You have told us of that. Do you think that the large estate holders are better people to rent under than the small ones?—I think so, on the whole. The landlord himself on that estate, I think, was a very good man, a thorough gentleman; and if we could have only treated with the landlord himself I think we should have got on very well, but his agents we can get nothing from, only the law. To everything we would ask them in any way reasonable—about improving or building or anything of that sort, they would say, "Well, "we do not know; so and so is your lease, and "so and so is the law." That is all we can get from them. The landlord himself was a gentleman, and I think we could have done well with him.

41,816. Do you think the tenant farmers were fairly housed?—Very fair on that estate.

41,817. But it was a hard life, taking it altogether?—Yes.

41,818. And both farmers and labourers have left the district?—Yes. Rents were too high to employ as much labour as we would wish, to make as much out of the land as could be made out of it.

41,819. What do you think ought to be done with regard to this depression?—Lower the rents.

41,820. Are you in favour of a land court?—With some landlords we could do very well without a land court, but really with some others it is very much needed.

41,821. You think it is a necessity in some instances?—Oh dear, yes.

41,822. For the protection of the tenants?—Yes.

41,823. The general relations between the landlord and yourself you have told us were very friendly?—Yes.

41,824. When you could see the landlord?—Yes, when we could see the landlord we could do very well.

41,825. But you could never get at him?—Yes I did once or twice, when they gave me this notice to leave, or rather when they told me they were going to raise the rent by 78*l.* I gave them notice for fear they should put it upon me, and that it would be too late and that I could not pay the money. I gave them notice and they wrote back from London acknowledging my notice and saying that they had been intending to send me notice, but as I had sent notice to them it would not be necessary. Then I went to see the landlord afterwards and he was agreeable for me to have it for 30*l.* more than I had been paying.

41,826. There are two questions handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen, "What penalising clauses have been enforced, and when?"—To begin with when I left the first farm they would not let me take my crops; they would take all my crops at a valuation, and when my time expired they refused to take them. Then they made me pay a year's rent for the field for three months, and there are plenty of people in the room who can say that when I left the farm I had improved the farm, but they sued me for a large amount of money for dilapidations, but I went to law and won the case, but it cost me 200*l.* for expenses.

41,827. "How many farms are there on the estate?"—The estate is one of several thousand, acres. There are a lot of farms, I should say 50, but I could not say precisely.

41,828. Do you wish this letter to be read?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

41,829. Then I understand the tenants are both in Court, and are prepared to substantiate it?—Yes.

41,830. Is Mr. John Howells in Court?—He was here 10 minutes ago.

41,831. The letter is as follows: "John "Howells and Catherine Howells were turned "out of Trevaughan Farm in 1869. Tenants "had a lease for 21 years, only three or four "years gone. When landlord broke the lease, "tenants refused to leave until forced by law, "landlord putting tenants (in law suit) to over "500*l.* expenses. Agent contracting out of "lease on the grounds that he was not agent, "only receiver of rents, but he has really done "all the business connected with estate. "Tenants received nothing for improvements. "Tenants done draining, &c. to the value of "100*l.*, and carted all materials for building "house and premises. Tenants reclaimed about "18 acres, and had no allowance. Twenty years "before leaving rent was 72*l.*—then 82*l.*, and "when taking lease rent was again risen to "115*l.* Tenants' family had been on the estate "over 400 years, and the tenant Catherine "Howells when turned out was 88 years of "age, and had to be carried out from the house, "and wished to remain." That was by action at law?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Carmarthen.

FIFTIETH DAY.

Second Court.

Schoolroom, St. Clear's, 20th April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON in the Chair.

Mr. David Brynmor Jones, Q.C., M.P.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.

Mr. Edwin Grove.

Mrs. Rachel Evans called and examined.

41,832. The following statement having been translated to the Witness was read by the Interpreter.

Evidence of Mrs. Rachel Evans, Maeslan, in the Parish of Llanddowror; acreage 109, owner, Sir C. G. Phillips, Picton Castle.

A lease was granted in 1810 in the joint lives of my father and mother-in-law and the son (Theophilus Evans), my husband, when he, my husband, was 13 years of age, at 80*l.* per annum, including tenantable repairs. Thus when the lease expired nine years ago I was requested to keep all things in tenantable order for a further six years, and the rent was raised by 30*l.*, from 80*l.* to 110*l.* No repairs in any shape or form have been made by the landlord since the lease went out except two days' repair, a new window, a loft, and a door were repaired by landlord. The dwelling-house and the out-houses are in a very dilapidated and dangerous condition, both for man and beast. I am obliged to carry water by the buckets full from the dairy when it rains. The landlord has been written to many times as to the uninhabitable condition of the houses, but no answer has been received. Mr. Owen came yonder once, and said that he was going to repair it now. This was three months ago. There is no workman's cottage on the farm, and this entails upon me 2*l.* 15*s.* additional annual expense. I took with we to Maeslan at my marriage 200*l.*; this has been swallowed up in the extra expense since the expiration of the lease, and my son works with me for nothing.

When the lease was granted, two heifers were sold for 40 guineas, but when the lease went out I sold four heifers for 5*l.* each.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,832A. When the lease expired did anyone from the estate come to see the repairs?—Yes, Mr. Owen came.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

41,833. Was the place put in repair then?—No, my husband said that the house was 300 years old, and that those who lived there were constantly making repairs.

41,834. Has the landlord done any repairs besides?—No, he has not made any.

41,835. What is the roof composed of?—The roof of the dwelling house is tiled.

41,836. All the roofs of the outhouses are straw?—Yes, except the barn, which also has a tiled roof and the building for keeping cattle in.

41,837. You say you took to the Maeslan on your marriage 200*l.* and that has been swallowed up in the extra expense since the expiration of the lease. What have you done since the lease ran out?—I have used it to pay the rent.

41,838. Then it was not in repairs?—We used to grow wheat for the straw thatch on the houses.

41,839. Do you raise much corn?—Two fields and a part.

41,840. Do you grow wheat?—Oh, yes, to make my bread to eat.

41,841. Do you think you can grow it cheaper than you can buy it?—Oh, yes.

41,842. I thought you might be growing it on account of the thatch?—We must have wheat in order to have a thatch roof.

41,843. You complain that the rent has been advanced to you from 80*l.* to 110*l.*?—I said that to Mr. Owen, and Mr. Owen, Cwmbrane, said we should never pay for it, and Mr. Owen said that they had been offered 110*l.* for it.

41,844. Is this one of the farms that has to be sold?—No, he did not say a word to me about its being sold.

41,845. Were these heifers you sold for 5*l.* each as large as the ones you sold for 40 guineas?—No, they were a year older; those were three years and the 5*l.* ones were two years. It was about the time of the Bonaparte war and it was a very good time then.

Mr. Grove.

41,846. Why do you consider the buildings in a dangerous state?—We were nearly killed under them once; three loads of stone fell about five minutes after we went out and we have only props now to keep it up.

41,847. You say that the landlord has been written to many times. Who wrote to the landlord?—Mr. Moore, of Maesgwrda.

41,848. He wrote on your behalf?—Yes.

41,849. To whom? Was it to the landlord direct?—One letter was sent to the landlord and another to Mr. Owen.

41,850. What age is the son who works on the farm?—Twenty-one.

Lord Kenyon.

41,851. I do not quite understand you. The place was kept in repair as long as the lease ran?—Yes.

41,852. Then it very soon got into a dilapidated condition afterwards?—I kept it for six years in tenantable repair after the lease had expired. They told me that I should have to do that.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

41,853. Was it not a very sudden dilapidation to get dangerous in three more years?—It is cracked all over the window place, and the loft where I sleep is all rotten and falling out.

41,854. Still you maintain that you kept it in good repair till the end of the lease?—Yes, we kept the old place pretty tenantable whilst the lease ran. There was a piece which was nearly falling but we made it good.

41,855. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Have you any grievance"?—A grievance for what?

41,856. Have you any grievance against your landlord?—No, he is a fairly good landlord, but he also raises the rent too high.

41,857. Your grievance is the rent. "Do "you think a farm ought to be held at the "same rent now as in 1810 before there was "any railway"?—It was very much better times when the lease was granted than when it expired. I worked very hard, and I failed to get the rent ready by the day for them. My landlord gives plenty of time for us to pay the rent, but he asks us to pay too much rent.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Sackville Herbert Owen recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

41,858. You are the agent of the Picton Castle estate?—Yes.

41,859. You wish to rebut the evidence just given?—My Lord, this was a lease granted in 1810 and ran out in 1885. It was a repairing lease, and when the lease expired no repairs were done. The premises are very old and in bad repair. I expected the tenant to repair, and told her she must. Seeing she did not do so for three or four years, I repaired the roof after a storm so as to make it wind and water-tight three times since the lease expired on behalf of the estate.

41,860. You rebut the statement of no repairs having been made in any shape or form?—Yes. My last visit was three months ago, when the architect was there with me, and we said as soon as the weather permitted we would put the roofs in better order and make her comfortable.

41,861. I think she says that?—We have promised to do that; the buildings are very, very old, and when the lease went out the tenant did not do any repairs whatever.

41,862. You are going to repair?—Yes.

41,863. Do you deny her statement that she kept it in tenantable repair while the lease was running?—Yes, I do, it was in a most ruinous state.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,864. Was it not ruinous in 1810?—I do not know; I cannot go into the state of repairs in 1810.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

41,865. I do not put it on your own knowledge, but more by way of suggestion; Mrs. Evans says she thinks it is 300 years old?—Well, it is very old.

41,866. There was the usual covenant, I suppose?—Yes.

41,867. As a matter of law you could not expect a new house from the tenant?—No, the building in the house is good enough, and the timber in the house, although very old, is good, but the slates have gone.

41,868. What do you estimate would have been the cost nine years ago to put it into a fair tenantable condition, having regard to the age of the house?—I should say it would have taken from 80*l.* to 100*l.*

41,869. What principle of valuation do you adopt in the case of these old leases?—In this case it was a valuation made some years ago by the late Mr. Goode; I have the valuation book; I did not put the rent up to the amount he valued it at; he put it at a value of 115*l.*, and it was let at 110*l.*

41,870. In raising the rent, did you raise the rent on the basis that the tenant ought to spend this 80*l.*, or that the landlord ought to spend 80*l.*?—When I raised the rent the tenant was to put it in tenantable repair.

41,871. You say there was a liability on the part of the tenant to give up the house at the end of the lease in fair and tenantable repair; but you say it would probably cost 80*l.* to put it into that fair tenantable repair?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

41,872. In raising the rent from 80*l.* to 110*l.*, did you in arriving at the figure of 110*l.* assume that the tenant had spent the 80*l.*?—No, but that the tenant would have to repair to the extent of 80*l.* or 100*l.*, in fact, to put the place in tenantable repair, according to the covenant in the lease.

41,873. Supposing the landlord had spent the 80*l.*, what would have been the fair rent then according to your principle of valuation?—If we had put new roofs on, probably we should have charged 5 per cent.

41,874. In addition to the 110*l.*?—Yes, in addition to the 110*l.*

41,875. You say this raising from 80*l.* to 110*l.* was a raising quite without reference to the condition of the repair to the dwelling-house?—Certainly.

41,876. Simply the change in the value of land as agricultural land?—Yes. The outhouses are all built of clom and thatch, and probably if thatch had been at a normal price she would have done a good deal on it; but thatch was very dear. Now all the thatch is tumbling down, and we shall have to put iron roofs or something of that sort on.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,877. By your description, the place is in such a state that it will have to be rebuilt?—Not the house, the timbers are good although old, but the outhouses are all bad.

41,878. Is the farmhouse adequate to modern requirements?—It is too large for a farmhouse; it is a very large farmhouse, but the ceilings are low.

Mr. Grove.

41,879. They say that the landlord was written to?—They wrote to me, and I have been there three times, and have sent my man at other times. When a tenant writes, I very often send the valuer to see the place before I go.

41,880. You are continually doing some repairs on the estate?—Yes. We are doing them all up as fast as we can. We have spent in 13 years 35,000*l.* on the property. We are doing the best we can everywhere. This is a bad case. It is about one of the worst we have. It was said in the other court that this is one of the farms for sale. This was a mistake. This is not for sale. It was my mistake in the name. I see the valuation of the dilapidations when the lease was out was 96*l.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Williams called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

41,881. You are Mr. John Williams, of Penlan, Llanginning?—Yes.

41,882. Are you a county councillor?—Yes.

41,883. Are you a tenant farmer as well?—I have a small tenancy.

41,884. Who is the owner?—Mr. Lewis Williams, of Trelech a'r Bettws.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,885. Have you not two holdings?—I have three.

41,886. I think you live on your own holding?—Yes, I live on my own holding. I thought you asked if I had any occupation besides.

41,887. You have some other occupation besides farming?—Yes, I have an occupation besides my own farm. The following is my statement:—

Owner: Mr. Norman Bond Young, London.

The place has been connected with my family for 200 years. The rent has varied in the meantime from 16*l.* to 118*l.* I came into possession as tenant after my parents in 1850. The owner at this date was a minor, and a student at Oxford, reading for the Church. During the time he was at Oxford he got into difficulties, and was, therefore, obliged to sell his life interest in the estate to a firm of solicitors in London. This firm granted me a lease at 90*l.* a year for seven years only, but gave no repairs, although the repairs were in the condition of the lease. In about two years after granting the lease the property was offered for sale. Then I bought the life interest of the owner, and held it from 1859 to 1872, in which year the life dropped. Then his infant son, a ward in Chancery, came into the property. Two valuations were made during the minority of this ward, with the view of giving repairs, but no repairs were made by the landlord. During the last year of the said minor's life 50*l.* was expended by the mother of the minor in building a new dairy. During the whole time the place was in the occupation of my parents and myself, all the buildings that are on the farm were made by us, without receiving any compensation, except the aforesaid 40*l.*; and when I bought it in 1879, no compensation at all was made to me for any improvements and expense in connexion with converting arable land into permanent pasture, &c., which increased the value thereof 30 per cent. And I believe that my individual case is typical of that which is common in the district.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

41,888. To what does that 40*l.* refer; you say, "the aforesaid 40*l.*"?—There was only 40*l.* spent (it is down in my statement 50*l.*) on repairs during my recollection, and by any history I have had of the tenancy from the family.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

41,889. Was there any money paid in compensation at all?—None whatever, my Lord.

41,890. The 50*l.* you say should be 40*l.*?—Yes, I think so.

Mr. Grove.

41,891. You say the old rent was 16*l.*?—Yes.

41,892. How do you get proof of that; do you get it from old documents?—Yes, from the old lease.

41,893. Was the size of the farm the same then as it was when it was 115*l.*?—To the very inch.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,894. What is the date of the lease at 16*l.* rent?—I cannot say, because it was granted to my great grandfather.

41,895. That was some time in the 18th century, I suppose?—It was, no doubt, some 160 or 170 years ago. My father would have been there under it if he had been alive. My grandfather was bred and born on the place.

41,896. You say the obligation of repairing was on the landlord?—So it was in my time, ever since the 16*l.* lease expired. The responsibility of the repairs was on the landlord.

41,897. You did not carry out the repairs?—I never saw anything except the things mentioned.

41,898. Then was the laying down into permanent pasture done entirely at the expense of the tenant all the way through?—Entirely; everything.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,899. You are very well acquainted with the district. Very much of the land in this district has been laid down to pasture?—Yes.

41,900. And always at the expense of the tenant?—Yes, always. I never heard of it otherwise.

41,901. Has the landlord ever done it?—No, I never heard of a single case.

41,902. He does not even pay for the seed?—Not to my knowledge.

41,903. It is a great district for dairying?—Yes, it is a great district for dairying.

41,904. The factory here has not proved a great success?—No, the supply is too small. There would be a good return if there was plenty of supply.

41,905. Do you not think that more can be made of the milk than can possibly be made of the butter and cheese?—That is my experience. I have supplied the factory with all my milk ever since the opening day.

41,906. What size dairy do you keep?—From 16 to 18 cows.

41,907. You send it to the factory?—Yes, every day.

41,908. You consider it pays better?—Yes, especially now for the first three months of the summer, May, June, and July, it pays much better, because I never send my milk that I do not make one shilling a pound on the butter, whereas the butter from the farmers on the other farms which is sold in the market is sold at 9*d.* or 9½*d.*

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

41,909. You have to send the milk to the factory?—Yes, that is the only extra expense.

41,910. The farmers do not unite and send a van round?—No, they prefer the old system; they do not fall in with any of these new inventions.

41,911. Do you find any difficulty in getting servants—dairy maids. Are they scarcer than they used to be?—A great deal. I have not suffered any inconvenience of late, because I have daughters working milking.

41,912. Are there any men milking in this neighbourhood?—Some boys. It is difficult to get men. I do not know of any men milking except small boys.

41,913. In England men are generally employed?—Yes, and I think it would be much better if they were to take to it here.

41,914. Do you think there would be expense saved if they employed men to milk?—No doubt, and especially if they would take to sending their milk to the factory.

41,915. There would not be so much work at home?—Yes.

41,916. You say people are not ready to adopt the new system of dairying?—No, not half of them that should support the dairy do so.

41,917. Have you thought of any plan as to how a factory could be kept going?—Last year we had a milk cart go round and take the milk of the farmers, but our experience of last year would not teach us whether that would answer or not, because it was such an exceptionally dry summer that we had no milk in the country. We are in hopes of getting a supply this summer. We are under very good promises. The farmers in this part of the neighbourhood are taking it up.

41,918. Do you not think that Government ought to assist you to establish these factories in this part of the neighbourhood?—There would be no mistake about that in my opinion if they were to do so.

41,919. How are the dairies generally throughout the neighbourhood; are they suitable?—No, I do not think the dairies are what they ought to be in such a dairy country as this.

41,920. Is the butter good?—I think it is the best district for butter, and we have had the dairy school here in the neighbourhood, and young girls have taken great delight in it, and have practised the way of making it.

41,921. You do not think there is much improvement to be made in the construction of the dairies?—Yes, there is.

41,922. Do you not think it would pay the landlords better to take a little interest in this and let the dairies remain?—I think the landlords ought to pay more attention to dairies and stables and in buildings on the farm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,923. You know the farmers round about your district?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

41,924. At any rate you deal with them?—Yes.

41,925. Do you agree with the evidence that the tenant farmers usually give us that the times are exceptionally hard?—Yes.

41,926. You think there is a genuine difficulty on their part to make both ends meet to pay the rent?—Yes, I can say conscientiously not one-half could meet the last audit.

41,927. Is there a general complaint amongst the tenant farmers that the landlords are not sufficiently ready to meet them as regards improvements?—I cannot say there are complaints so much against what we call big landlords; they are making allowances, and some are making promises.

41,928. The grievance is not so much against the larger landowners, so far as the rents are concerned, as it is against the smaller landlords?—Yes, the smaller landlords.

41,929. I am talking of the question of improvements now. Do you find that the tenant farmers complain that the landlords are not sufficiently ready to meet them in regard to improvements and making buildings and so forth?—No, not generally speaking.

Lord Kenyon.

41,930. What is the acreage of your holding?—My holding altogether, on this very farm that I am speaking of, is 116 acres.

41,931. About 1*l.* an acre when it was valued last. Are you satisfied with your purchase; do you think you are better off as a freeholder?—No, I am not better off so far as I am pecuniarily concerned, only my improvements are mine, and I am safe. I was quite contented before. I was always under the impression that the estate was entailed that it would ever remain so as long as I should live, and I should have been quite content to live under them as to live under myself, because they were a very nice family.

41,932. I suppose it was a great grief to you when the owner got into difficulty?—Yes, it was a great grief. He was a very nice man; but still when his son came of age he only kept it a very short time. He came of age on the 1st September, and I remember signing the contract of purchase on the 9th November.

41,933. He did not take long to get rid of it?—No; he purchased an estate in Africa, and the money was wanted to pay for it.

41,934. These are questions from Mr. Vincent: "May I ask you whether a full law of "compensation for improvements, if it could be "framed, would not meet every need that strict "justice calls for"?—I think it is a great want in the country that no compensation is given to people when their farms are sold, after being properly farmed and money expended upon. I know of several instances.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,935. Do you mean permanent improvements or general improvements?—Full improvements. Supposing a tenant had taken a farm six years ago, and improved that farm, and that farm became for sale, the landlord, perhaps, would have several hundred pounds more for that farm, because of the industry and expenditure of the tenant, than he otherwise would have.

41,936. Do you mean by the improvements that he laid out on the land?—Yes, and his good skill and industry.

Lord Kenyon.

41,937. "Was the old lease one for lives or for "a limited period of years"?—Lives.

41,938. For so many lives?—Yes.

41,939. For how many?—Three, I believe; but I know my grandmother was in it—she was the last.

41,940. "Do you know whether any premium was paid for the lease"?—No, not in those times, because my great grandfather leased farms besides that in the neighbourhood for a similar rent in comparison.

Mr. Grove.

41,941. Do you follow the history of dairying in Denmark at all?—Yes, I do.

41,942. Do you know there are 1,000 butter factories, for instance, in that small country, and that they are a great success?—Yes, I do.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

41,943. Do you reside at Landwr Mydrim, St. Clear's?—Yes.

41,944. What is your opinion of the rents at present?—They have been raised too much now during these bad times—during the last 10 years.

41,945. Have there been any abatements?—There have been a few; some give more and some give less—2*s.* in the £; but 2*s.* in the £ is not sufficient with the price of cattle as it is now.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

41,946. What do you consider would be sufficient?—The rents ought to come down one-third of what they are. Cattle have come down to half their prices.

41,947. Do you think that that depression is permanent?—I believe that prices will remain as they are now.

41,948. Is there a sufficient number of labourers' cottages?—No, we have no labourers' cottages now. We have no labourers about now in the country because we have no cottages for them. The old cottages have come down, and they are now not fit to be used as potato stores.

41,949. Do you think if the landlords built cottages in the country there would be labourers to fill them?—Undoubtedly the young men who marry now would do so. I had a servant man and maid who got married, and I could not keep them because I had no cottage for them to go to.

41,950. You would have been able to keep them, and have paid them for their labour?—But I could not keep them unless I had a cottage for them.

41,951. Do you think there should be some compensation given at present, further than is given by the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, undoubtedly the farmers ought to have something to improve their land as they go along, and not to be in fear of receiving notice to quit.

41,952. Are you aware of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I know of such an Act, and I know that it is necessary to receive the permission of the landlord for every improvement.

41,953. Not every improvement; but still some?—Yes, some. I should like to say this: we want open sheds in the winter for cattle, for instance; we have not sufficient accommodation for young cattle, at any rate not worth speaking of.

41,954. Would you put them up if you got your landlord's consent?—Oh, yes, if we had the the permission.

41,955. Have you asked for permission?—I have not asked my own landlord, but he is quite willing that I should put up a labourer's cottage—that is after the visit of this Land Commission.

41,956. Who is your landlord?—He is my cousin.

41,957. You are on very good terms with your cousin, I suppose?—Why I was selected to come here to-day because I am on good terms with my landlord, but the tenants generally do not come forward because they are afraid of offending their landlords. I took the place 10 years ago, and my landlord has given me a reduction in rent of 20*l.*, and I am therefore on good terms with him.

41,958. What is the rent now?—It is 110*l.* now.

41,959. What is the acreage?—100.

41,960. One hundred and ten pounds now since the reduction?—It was 130*l.* before.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,961. Where was the meeting held at which you were selected to represent certain gentlemen?—In Mydrim, at a farm called The Close.

41,962. Is that in the parish of Mydrim?—Mydrim is a parish, and The Close is the name of the farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,963. I think you say you have been at St. Clear's at a meeting as well?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

41,964. Was there a meeting of the tenant farmers at Mydrim?—Yes.

41,965. How many farmers attended the meeting?—A good lot met there, but you see they are afraid of the landlords, and they do not come. That is why they selected me. They said: "You are on very good terms with your first cousin, so you can go and represent us"

41,966. Some farmers did meet you, Mr. Davies?—Yes; some of the farmers came there, and they told me everywhere where they met with me that I should be right to tell the truth.

41,967. About how many of them came?—About six or seven; I cannot say for certain how many there were.

41,968. You said you went to another meeting as well, did you not?—Yes, I was also present at the meeting here at St. Clear's.

41,969. How many attended that meeting?—A great number. I cannot be sure how many, but about 100 or so, I should think—more perhaps.

41,970. Are these parishes of Mydrim, St. Clear's, and Llanddowror, and the others, immediately adjoining the place we are sitting in Welsh-speaking parishes?—Yes, almost altogether.

41,971. In fact, I suppose that all these parishes to the west of Carmarthen are Welsh speaking?—Yes, until you come to Llandowror and Laugharne. There they speak English.

41,972. Are the farmers and the labourers chiefly Nonconformists?—Yes, mostly. For the most part we are all Nonconformists. There are Churchmen in Mydrim.

41,973. Is it a fact that most of the farmers find it very difficult to pay the present rents even with the abatements that are made by the landlord?—They are able to scrape the rent together, but the abatements are not anything compared to the fall in the price of cattle.

41,974. Did the gentleman who met you suggest any remedies for the present condition of the farmer?—Yes.

41,975. What did they say should be done?—That we wanted a land court to value the land in order to have a proper valuation of the land in accordance with the present prices. I do not believe that prices will be any better owing to foreign competition, and we must live according to the rules in America, and so on.

41,976. Do you find there is any difficulty in getting proper compensation for improvements. I do not mean you, but the farmers for whom you speak?—We do get compensation, by farming well. We cannot farm the land without a labourer, and we cannot get a labourer without having a cottage for him to live in near the house. A man in the village is not near the farm for his work, and you want him about the farm. I should prefer a small holding for them and keep two cows. Many of the cottages have come down these last 20 years, and they look very bad there, and are all full of thorn. I want to see every labourer with a cow or two; to live and have a small holding for every labourer. That is my opinion, and that is the opinion of the country. Then you could have a labourer, and a good wife to milk the two cows or one cow, and you might have a convenient place for the labourer who worked on the farm, near the house, about a quarter of a mile or half a mile off.

41,977. You would like the Small Holdings' Act of 1892 applied?—Yes; for the men to come to the farm to work. I think the landlords ought to provide the small holdings.

41,978. Do you find among the tenant farmers in these parishes any complaint about the buildings being insufficient—there not being enough buildings to farm properly?—Yes, we want sheds to have cattle in, and so on.

41,979. Just go back for one moment to the meeting. Did you suggest, when you were pressed to come here, to some of the others, that some of them had better come with you?—Yes.

41,980. But they would not come?—I saw one to-day, and a large farmer too, and he said, "You will make it all right to-day," and then he went home.

41,981. Are they afraid that they will get notice to quit if they come here?—They do not like to do anything to their landlord for fear they might have such a notice.

41,982. Have the landlords said or done anything in this neighbourhood that would create the impression that they disliked the tenant farmers coming before us?—They have not said anything to the farmers at all; but they do not speak favourably about the Land Commission.

Mr. Griffiths.

41,983. You say that many of the cottages tumble down?—Yes, in my neighbourhood alone, about 25 to 30 have fallen.

41,984. And the landlords have not built new ones?—I know of two cottages that they have built.

41,985. You are sorry to part with a good servant because you have no cottage to put him in?—Yes; this year, too I did.

41,986. What wages did you pay that servant?—20*l.*

41,987. Do you think he would have stopped if you had had a cottage for him?—He said to me that he would be sure to stop.

41,988. Would you be willing to part with a few acres out of your farm for that purpose to keep him there?—Yes.

41,989. Where do the workmen go to?—They go to where there are houses, and to the villages and to the collieries—anywhere where there are houses.

41,990. You think that the Land Commission has done some good already?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

41,991. Did you have many meetings here or at Mydrim, or only one in each place?—We had two small meetings at Mydrim, and I was here at two meetings, I think.

41,992. Was the attendance as good at the last meeting as at the first?—At the last meeting those who wanted a land court were present—those who possessed sense—there were workmen and labourers and all.

41,993. Are you of opinion that more could be made out of the land if the farmers had some security for the money they lay out?—Undoubtedly they would be able to—the majority, not all.

41,994. How are you able to work the land now. The labourers have all gone away, you say?—I went down to my neighbour's. He has five sons here, and he is also a freeholder, and I failed to get workmen to come yonder, so that he allowed one of his sons to come, and his son works with me to day.

41,995. Are these sons that are at home paid for their work?—The father is a freeholder and they are at home with him.

41,996. There are many farmers' sons working?—They do not receive pay for their work, only their clothes and food.

Mr. Grove.

41,997. You think that more cottages are wanted on the land?—Yes, that is my opinion.

41,998. And if there were more cottages they would get more labourers on the land?—Yes.

41,999. Do you know of many farms of 100 acres with a labourer's cottage?—I know of farms of 200 acres without a single labourer's cottage on them.

42,000. Do you think it would be reasonable to expect a cottage on every farm of 100 acres?—Yes, there ought to be a labourer's cottage on every 100 acre farm.

42,001. Do you think that they could afford in the present bad times to pay the labourers if they could get them?—Yes, we could, only we should have to farm the land and the rents would have to be reduced. We could not get the labourers because they are bound to have something.

Lord Kenyon.

42,002. This is a question by Mr. Vincent—"Did you ask your landlord for a cottage for "this man and maid of yours"?—Yes.

42,003. "Do you not think the real reason "the men go away is simply that they get "better wages at the works and collieries"?—Our labourers earn more than they do now at the works providing we give them food and they pay for their lodgings. A labourer returned from Llanelly and told me that he preferred having 1*s.* 6*d.* a day and his food on the farm than 1*l.* a week at Llanelly.

42,004. "Were all the farmers who met of "one mind"?—They were all of the same mind that we want labourers and that we want cottages for them.

42,005. "I daresay your men are a great deal "better off than colliers; but do you think they "realise it"?—No, they do not realise that until they are about 30 or so.

42,006. "Were all the farmers at the meeting "of one mind?" I want to ask you that question again?—The majority were of the same opinion as myself.

42,007. "Is there anything besides the absence "of the others which makes you say they were "afraid"?—They did not care to come to the meetings because they were afraid that the masters would not be willing that they should come.

42,008. The question is, is there anything besides the absence of the others which makes you say that they are afraid?—I meet them on the high road and in fairs, and they say they would not come to the meeting because not much good would come out of the Welsh Land Commission, and the reason for that was that they did not like to say anything contrary for fear that the landlord might hear.

42,009. "Do you seriously say that the men "about here who farm 400 and 500 acres, "Derllys for example, are afraid"?—The larger farmers, with the exception of an occasional one, have their land cheaper than the smaller farmers.

42,010. Do you not know any farmers who disagree with you?—Yes, one or two not worth speaking of.

42,011. "Can you tell us whether prices for "beasts rose at Llandovery Fair three days "ago"?—The prices may have been a little bit better at Llandovery, but not very much.

42,012. "In reference to the question pre-"viously put then, do you think that the large "farmers have no case of complaint"?—Some large farmers have reason to complain—Treventy, for instance.

42,013. "Have not the large farmers to lay "out more money for labour than the small "ones"?—Yes, no doubt.

42,014. Then they have more room to complain, have they not?—Speaking of Derllys, he would not go anywhere without his landlord, because he has a good place.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EVAN WILLIAMS called and examined through an Interpreter.

42,015. The following statement was translated to the witness and then read by the Interpreter:—

Evidence of EVAN WILLIAMS, Glasfryn, Llanfihangel Abercowin.

Acreage, 118: Owner, J. L. Phillips, Bolahaul.

The above farm was taken by me in 1890 from the former tenant, Benjamin Williams. I gave 80*l.* to Benjamin Williams for retiring in my favour, subject to the permission of the landlord, as the accompanying agreement shows. The landlord promised me 12 gates, but the promise was not fulfilled. During the first two years of my tenancy I gave 60 tons of lime to the land, and opened the ditches, mixed the lime with earth therefrom, and spread the compost over the land. Then the third year the farm was sold. I went to Mrs. Phillips and Mr. Rowland Browne, the agent, to ask for compensation for what I had done. But no compensation was given. I had asked Mr. Browne for the agreement, but it was withheld from me until the place was advertised to be sold. I received the agreement about a week before the place was sold. Mrs. Phillips said that she left everything to Mr. Phillips, of Clungwyn, but Mr. Phillips wrote to me to the effect that he was prevented from visiting the farm to see what was done, and therefore, he could not say what compensation was due. But after I had the agreement and signed it, I saw that it barred me from any compensation. I was not able to understand it myself on account of my being a very poor Englishman, and the lawyer quite as poor a Welshman. I signed what I did not thoroughly understand. I made other improvements in the dwelling-house, and in the outhouses, and with very great difficulty I received a very scanty compensation for those things for which I received 7*l.* in December, although it was promised me, the lawyer excusing himself from time to time stating that he could not find the bills. The solicitor made a demand for making the agreement. Said I, "Do you expect me to pay for an instrument to bind myself?" "Well," said he, "I demand payment." I answered him in a passion, "Very "well, I will pay you, if you will give me "your receipt." At this I was permitted to leave without paying. I beg to state that I, by what I had done during the first three years of my tenancy, had greatly increased the selling value of the farm, at least 12*l.* a year more in value, without receiving a penny by way of compensation.

Lord Kenyon.

42,015A. Have you the agreement?—Yes. [Handing same.]

42,016. Do I understand you only had this agreement just before you left?—Yes, but I had signed it before that.

42,017. You signed it when you took the farm?—Yes.

42,018. Was the agent, Mr. Browne, referred to in your evidence, the lawyer?—Yes

42,019. Did he try and explain the lease to you at all?—He read it in English.

42,020. But he could not speak Welsh?—Mr. Browne was not able to speak much Welsh.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

42,021. It is a most extraordinary agreement I must say. It is perfectly illegal?—I did not know that.

Mr. Grove.

42,022. Do they not always get copies of agreements when they go to sign?—Yes, with the previous landlord I had one at the time I signed it.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,023. Who was your previous landlord?—Mr. Gwynne Hughes, Tregib.

Mr. Grove.

42,024. Is it not usual on estates in these parts to give a copy of the agreement?—Yes, generally speaking, I think; I cannot speak of anyone except myself.

42,025. Why did you not ask for it when you went to sign your own agreement?—I asked for it several times, and they said they would send it by post afterwards.

42,026. You said you did improvements worth 12*l.* a year?—Yes, and the neighbours say that it is worth more, but I do not care about that.

42,027. What would you consider 12*l.* a year worth cash down?—300*l.*

42,028. So that you consider you left 300*l.* behind you?—That Mrs. Phillips had gained as much as that through my improvements.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,029. You say you went to Mr. Browne for compensation. Did you bring a claim in writing for the improvements you made?—I asked him if he would be good enough to give me compensation, and I gave him a sort of a sketch of what I thought I ought to have.

42,030. What did he say?—He said I had signed the agreement, and that I could not get any.

42,031. Did he not also fail to fulfil the promise he had made in giving gates?—I did not get a single gate.

42,032. You referred to Mr. Phillips. He said he could not say what compensation was due. He admitted there was something due to you, did he not; you mean Mr. Phillips, Clungwyn?—Yes; Mrs. Phillips, Bolahaul, told me that she had left the matter in the hands of Mr. Phillips, Clungwyn; and then I went to Mr. Phillips, Clungwyn, to ask him if he would be good enough to come and see the improvements I had made, and he promised to come to see them provided he had the permission of Mrs. Phillips, Bolahaul, first, and this is the letter which I had from Mr. Phillips afterwards. [Handing.]

42,033. Was the farm sold?—Yes.

42,034. Did you have the first offer of the farm before it was sold?—No, it was sold by auction.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

42,035. I have not had time to look over this agreement very carefully, but I think that you are a little mistaken as to your being barred from compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. What the agreement recites is this: "Whereas Benjamin Williams is the pre-"sent tenant from year to year of the farm, and "being desirous of leaving the same, has agreed "to give up possession without receiving com-"pensation from the landlord for so doing, "either under the Agricultural Holdings Act or "otherwise, in consideration of the landlord's "granting to the new tenant"—that is, to Evan Williams—"possession of the farm." All that that says is that Benjamin Williams shall have no claim for compensation. Why should Benjamin Williams have compensation, since you were paying him 80*l.*, which represented probably the value of his improvements. Why should Williams get compensation from the landlord if he got it from you?—Williams did not ask the landlord. I had not heard anything about it.

42,036. Then the agreement goes on to give you a tenancy from year to year, but it does not say that you are not to have compensation. How was it you did not give your notice under the Act of 1883, before you left the farm?—Because I did not understand the agreement. I was not a sufficient scholar.

42,037. I am not surprised at that. We unfortunately find a good many cases of that kind. I cannot find any clause which says that you are not to have compensation; but what I do find is this, that although you were only tenant from year to year, you covenanted to keep the premises in repair?—No; the place was not repaired when I entered.

42,038. You received no money to put the place in repair, nor was the place put in repair when you went there?—Only 7*l.* for the bills, which covered repairs in the house.

42,039. Did you ever agree with Mr. Browne to do the repairs?—No.

42,040. I mean before you signed this agreement?—No, I did not.

42,041. Did you not understand when you signed the agreement that you were bound to do the repairs?—No, I could not understand it; I was not a sufficiently good scholar.

42,042. Really what it comes to according to you, so far as I can make it out is, although you paid Benjamin Williams 80*l.*, which got rid of Benjamin Williams, your agreement was a worse agreement than what Benjamin Williams had with the landlord. Are you sure that Benjamin Williams had not an agreement under which he was bound to repair?—No, he had not. That is how he was able to rent the place to me because he had no agreement.

42,043. He did not rent the place to you. It was the landlord, Mr. Phillips, who rented the place to you?—Yes, but I made the agreement with Mr. Williams that I would give him 80*l.* if I should get it from Mr. Phillips.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

42,044. Have you the agreement which you made with Benjamin Williams?—I only received a receipt for the money.

42,045. What were you charged for this agreement?—I had nothing to pay.

42,046. You said: "I will pay if you give me a receipt"?—Yes, I had said that to him.

42,047. But you did not actually pay?—No, I did not. He said that he had a bill, but he did not give it to me when he heard I was ready to pay.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,048. Did he tell you what the amount of the bill was?—No, he did not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

We will keep this agreement, and consider it, Mr. Williams. It seems to me a somewhat unusual agreement.

Lord Kenyon.

42,049. Where does Mr. Browne live?—His office is at Carmarthen. I do not know where he lives.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

42,050. These are questions by Mr. Vincent. "I heard you mention the name of Mr. Gwynne "Hughes. Would you mind telling me what "you have to say about him?"—I have nothing to say against him.

42,051. "Do you agree now that there is no "evidence in the agreement, as you said there "was, that you paid your predecessor 80*l.* for "going away?"—Yes, I know that now.

42,052. "Was not the 80*l.* simply for his improvements?"—Whose improvements?

42,052A. Benjamin Williams'?—Williams did not say a word about improvements to me.

42,053. But was not the 80*l.* for Benjamin Williams' improvements?—I paid the 80*l.* to Benjamin Williams.

42,054. Was not that for Benjamin Williams' improvements?—No, for manure and seed and wheat and so on, and nothing else, only that he was to give me the right to have the place.

42,055. Mr. Vincent wishes you to know that he thinks it is a hard case to be sold up so soon?—I felt it to be a hard case at the time.

Adjourned.

FIFTY-FIRST DAY.

Town Hall, Carmarthen, Saturday, 21st April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN)

Lord KENYON.
Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERICK SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Chairman.

The list of witnesses to-day is so exceptionally heavy (and we are very glad to see so many persons willing to come forward and give evidence), that the Commissioners propose sitting in two different places. A list will be placed on the door of this chamber so that witnesses may see in which room their evidence will be taken.

Mr. JOHN THOMAS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

42,056. Where do you live?—Troedyrhiw, Llanfynydd—about 12 miles.

42,057. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes; I may state that I am also churchwarden of the parish for the fifth year, and that I am a member of the Llanegwad and Brechfa School Board as contributory from Llanfynydd.

42,058. Is this a statement of your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

Evidence of JOHN THOMAS, tenant farmer, Troedyrhiw, Llanfynydd.

Llanfynydd is a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Cathinog, county of Carmarthen, situated about 8 miles (N.W.) from Llandilofawr, and about 12 miles (N.E.) from Carmarthen. The population in the year 1833 was 1,436; at present, according to the last census, the population is below 1,000. At a public meeting of the farmers of the parish and district held on the 4th of May 1893, it was unanimously resolved that a committee be at once formed for the purpose of preparing evidence to lay before the Commissioners. The said committee subsequently appointed two persons, viz., Messrs. John Thomas, Troedyrhiw, and John Jones, Brisken, to represent them and to tender evidence on their behalf before the Commissioners. See 42,764.

Nature of the Parish.—The greater part, i.e., about two-thirds of the parish of Llanfynydd, belongs to Mr. Gerwyn Jones, of Pantglas, as landlord, and all the farms on the estate are yearly tenancies. Nearly all the farms are held under agreements, but no copies are allowed to the tenants. Farms are let on the estate from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, subject to 12 months' notice. The Agricultural Holdings Act is here practically a dead letter. To some extent the tenants are permitted to avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act. The agent on the Pantglas estate since the year 1878 is Mr. J. Watkins, bank manager, Llandovery. This gentleman, though able to speak Welsh, has no practical knowledge of farming, and consequently, in my opinion, is not a suitable or competent intermediary between the landlord and his tenants. The larger portion of the parish consists of mountain land, for the most part enclosed. The lower part, rather less than one-third of the whole, contains some good and productive soil. Nearly all this parish is difficult of access, and very inconvenient as regards railways. There are very few good roads here, which renders it extremely difficult and expensive to cart coal, lime, timber, manure, &c. All the coal is hauled at a great distance from the pit's mouth in order to save carriage. See 45,723–45,877.

Chairman—continued.

Rents.—There can be no doubt that the rents in this parish are too high. This is the universal complaint among the tenant farmers. I am sure that my testimony on this head would be confirmed by dozens, if not scores, of my fellow-tenants if they were not kept back by the fear of offending or displeasing the landlord and his agent. The sentiments, feelings, and circumstances of most of them are well known to me. In the year 1877, a general or all-round, advance was made in the rents on the Pantglas estate, and all the tenants had notice to quit. There was no official valuation to regulate this advance or increase in the rents. It is also customary on this estate to increase the rent when a farm changes hands. The incoming tenant has generally to pay more rent than the out-going tenant. This rule is only deviated from in the case of a special favourite. In many cases an increase has been made in the rent, as the result of the improvements made by the tenants themselves. When a tenant leaves a farm no compensation is paid to him for unexhausted improvements. This serious loss, together with the insecurity of tenure, deters the tenant farmer from investing his capital in the land to the extent that he otherwise would. The following is a list of some of the advances in rent:—

Name of Farm.	Rent previous to 1877.	1877.	Remarks as to Subsequent and Present Rent, &c.
Penlan - - -	£160	—	£200.
Troedyrhiw - -	£105	£120	At re-taking £124, with 5 acres taken away. Now £110, with warren taken away.
Pistyll South - -	1860, £81 1870, £124	—	£120; bad buildings. Rise on tenant's improvements.
Brynreglwys - -	1868, £30 1873, £35	1840 (planted £5 worth of land).	Tenant left at 1892. Refused farm on the estate, though one of the best farmers.
Penygoitre - -	£145	£160	£170 (to new tenant in 1881).
Marchoglwyn Fawr -	£32 in 1853 £38 in 1857 £40 in 1870	£55	£56 (new tenant 1888). Present rent £63.
Clawdd Owen - -	£32 in 1854 £40 in 1860	£45	In 1878 tenant sold up, leaving £200 in improvements on the farm. 1880, £85. 1881, £100 (after valuation).
Maesyrhaidd - -	£50 in 1844 £55 in 1860 £70 in 1865	£75	1883 (new tenant), £105. Lease offered to 1844 tenant, but refused. Son succeeded him. Advances all made on improvements by tenant. Farm is all enclosed mountain land.
Tir Ifan Ddu - -	£50	£52	£57 in 1884 (new tenant).

Chairman—continued.

Land-hunger and Consolidation.—There is a great land-hunger in this district, owing to the fact that the land is much too limited for the demand. During the last 40 or 50 years many farms have been consolidated, and many of the old farmhouses and peasant cottages have been allowed to fall to the ground.

I submit a list of farms which have been consolidated during the last 30 or 40 years:—

Chairman—continued.

About 50 cottages and numerous small farmhouses have fallen besides. Thus the country is being gradually depopulated, and, in consequence, labourers have become scarce, and the price of labour is nearly double what it used to be 30 or 40 years ago.

Labour.—This scarcity of labourers and the consequent high wages render it difficult for the tenant to cultivate his land properly so as to make the best of it. Under these circumstances the tenant farmer has no alternative but to keep his children at home to work on the farm, thus depriving them of education, their most valuable possession and their most precious boon.

General Condition of Farmers.—For the tenant farmer to be able to pay his children any stated wages for work done is out of the question. It is as much as he can do to pay the rent when it becomes due, and to make both ends meet. There is here no union or mutual understanding among the farmers; on the other hand, whenever a farm becomes vacant, there is at once the keenest competition for it, and, as a rule, it is given to the highest bidder. To such an extreme pitch is this eager desire for a farm sometimes carried that a young farmer will recklessly take a farm at a rental so exorbitantly high that it is impossible for him or anyone else to pay for it. Very often a tenant farmer begins life without any capital, and has to borrow money at a high rate of interest. He is thus seriously handicapped at the very start, and may not be able to extricate himself fully for the remainder of his life. I know of many cases where the rent has been paid by borrowed money, year after year. I also know of cases where tenants have been compelled to sell their stock to their own disadvantage in order to find money for the rent.

Abatements.—The following abatements have been made on the Pantglas estate in recent years to tenants paying rents in full:—

In 1887 - -	5 per cent.
„ 1888 - -	do.
„ 1893 - -	10 per cent.

No notice was previously given to the tenants of the intended abatements.

Chairman—continued.

I only know of one case in my district where a permanent reduction has been made to a tenant by reason of trade depression or other cause, and that occurred during this last week.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

42,059. Only one case?—Yes. I only know of one case.

Religion and Politics.—Nearly all the farmers in my district are Nonconformists. The adherents of the Church of England are a very small fraction. The vast majority of the tenant farmers being Nonconformists in religion, it follows as a natural consequence that they are Liberals or Radicals in politics. The landlord and his agent are Churchmen and strong Conservatives. I know of instances where Churchmen have been prefered to Nonconformists as tenants. I also know of cases where Nonconformists have left, or have been asked to leave, the chapel for the Church, on being given a farm. It is of course difficult to prove these matters, but I submit the following instances:—When I took Troedyrhiw the landlord, the late Mr. John Jones, Blaenos, ex-M.P. for Carmarthenshire, made me promise to go to church, as I was leaving Cwmdu, my old home, and would not, therefore, find it so hard to leave the Independents. I go to church to this day. Pengoitre farm was recently given to a Churchman and a stranger, though Tom Howells, the son of Penlan—a farm on the same estate—and Mr. Faulkner, Myddynfych farm, Ammanford—one of the best farmers in the county—were applying. Another Churchman, the father of the Pengoitre tenant, lives at Whitlera. The tenant of the Grach Gelli Fach and the Factory tenant have gone over to the Church after marrying, though they were Nonconformists before. Although the tenant farmer has now the protection of the ballot at election time, still pressure, direct or indirect, is often brought to bear on the tenant to give his vote on the political side espoused by the landlord, or, what practically amounts to the same thing, the tenant is requested to stay at home on the polling day. At the last election this was done by Mr. Gerwyn Jones to myself, John Lewis, Pengoitre; Stephen Evans, Cwmcelly Fach; Wm. Morgan, Nantgwliw; and John Simpson, Cwm.

Personal case.—I became tenant of Troedyrhiw farm in September, 1880. Rent 124*l.* This was an increase of 4*l.* on the rent paid by the previous tenant. Five acres of the land were taken from me at the start for plantation, &c. Troedyrhiw farm is virtually two farms, joined together many years ago. Total acreage of the conjoint farms, 155 acres. In this figure (which is the figure on the rate-book) are included plantations and a large warren for the preservation of game in addition to the pasture land and fields under tillage. This rabbit warren was erected in March 1885. It occupies about nine acres of my land, passing through the middle of four fields, and depriving me of one entire field—the best and the most convenient for my use on the farm—within a radius of 100 yards of my farmyard. I had given to this field five cart-loads of lime before I thus lost it, for which I have never had a farthing by way of compensation. I made an agreement with my landlord and his agent to let them have seven acres for the purpose of the warren, for which they were to pay 9*l.* They broke this contract by taking a great deal more land than had been originally agreed upon. I at once pointed this out to the agent, and remonstrated with him for depriving me of the extra land which was now being enclosed for the warren. He promised to put matters right, but did not. I then went to Pantglas to have a personal interview with my landlord, but after waiting for him for four hours, he declined to see me. The work proceeded in spite of my objection, and I had no alternative but to put the matter in the hands of a solicitor. After receiving a letter from the solicitor, the landlord and his agent visited me, and now consented to pay me 14*l.* a year for the land thus taken. Prior to the setting up of this rabbit warren there was an ancient road (passing through the middle of the warren) from Llanfynydd village to Brechfa. This road had been used as a public thoroughfare from time immemorial. It now became necessary to close up this ancient road, and to substitute another for the convenience of the public. To carry this into effect a parish vestry was summoned, the object of which was stated to be 'to take into consideration a 'proposal for partial change in the direction of 'a road known by the name of Rhiwgoch, lead-'ing from the village of Llanfynydd to that of 'Brechfa.' This was done at what I do not hesitate to call a packed meeting of the landlord's tenants and dependents. Here the matter rested, and no new road has been made from that day to now. People have to make a random guess as to what direction to take over my fields—there is not even a pathway to guide the traveller. This means, as a matter of course, a serious loss and annoyance to me. It involves the breaking down of hedges, and trampling over pasture and corn land throughout the year. For this I do not blame the public, but the landlord and his agent, for not having carried out their promised undertaking to open up a new road instead of the old and well-known parish road. I wish to add here emphatically that all this was done without asking my consent, and without the slightest compensation. Up to September 1888, i.e., for more than three years, I had to pay poor rate, highway rate, and land tax for the said warren (made for the sole benefit and pleasure of the landlord). I pay tithes for the same up to the present day; that is to say, the amount of tithe is the same since as before the making of the warren. No compensation was made or offered to me for damage done on the land during the construction of the warren. At Michaelmas 1885, that is, six months after the warren was put up, a notice to quit was served on me. That notice is still in my possession, and has never been revoked. Ever since this my landlord, when he comes to shoot with a party over Troedyrhiw, makes use of my house without asking for my consent or thanking me for its use. The beaters have their lunch in the kitchen; the landlord and his friends in the parlour. They walk in and out without taking any notice of me, and if I happen to meet my landlord in the passage of the house or elsewhere, he never takes upon himself to recognise me or address a single word o me.

42,060. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Gerwyn Jones, of Pant Glâs.

The buildings on my farm are in a very unsatisfactory state. The dwelling-house and out-houses at Cwmcelly Ucha (the holding that has been consolidated with Troedyrhiw) have been in ruins for the last eight years. At Troedyrhiw the dwelling-house is fairly satisfactory, but there is no back kitchen, and the dairy is much too small. With respect to out-houses:—Stable much too small; can only accommodate three horses, whereas I need accommodation for five horses. The barn is too small; also the cart-house. The accommodation for cattle in winter much too limited, partly owing to the fact that the stables at the other farm (Cwmcelly Ucha) have been allowed to come down.

42,061. Is Mr. John Lewis in the room?—Yes.

42,062. Is Mr. John Lewis prepared to substantiate the case that you are coming to now, if called upon to do so?—Yes, my Lord.

See 45,737–45,756; 45,872–7.

The case of Penygoitre.—The above farm was taken by Mr. John Lewis in March 1881, possession being given on May 1st, at the yearly rental of 170*l.*, being an advance on the old rent of 10*l.* He had to pay the outgoing tenant the sum of 160*l.* as goodwill, a half-year's rent 60*l.*, together with 60*l.* odd for crops sown in land, on a valuation, bringing up the total paid for the said farm for the first year to 300*l.* The above amount was paid on an understanding that the same chance would be given him if he should happen to leave, by the agent Mr. Jonah Watkins, bank manager, Llandovery. During his tenancy Mr. Lewis greatly improved the condition of the farm, and paid over 250*l.* for manure, feeding stuffs, clover, &c. (as shown by the receipts); besides, he converted some 25 acres of arable land into excellent permanent pasture, emptied and cleaned some 20 acres or more, hitherto uncultivated, into arable land, thereby greatly improving the farm. On September 20th, 1892, he received notice to quit, and had to leave on September 29th, 1893. I may mention that through the long drought last year his crops failed, and stock being so very low in prices that the estimated loss to Mr. Lewis would be at least 500*l.* Besides, he received applications from several highly respectable persons for the farm (pending the landlord's acceptance), who were prepared to pay Mr.

Chairman—continued.

Lewis as much as 200*l.* for improvements made by him. He, in a straightforward manner, approached the agent, and laid the whole case before him in a fair and reasonable way, but to no avail. He (Mr. Lewis) also signified his willingness for the agent to appoint any competent man he might choose to come and see the farm if he did not believe him (he, the agent, not having seen the farm himself since he took possession); but he even refused that, giving most childish and foolish reasons for non-compliance with a most just offer. Mr. Lewis was also prepared to abide by what that valuer did, even if he said that the farm had not been improved during his tenancy. Eventually Mr. Lewis asked Mr. John Francis, Carmarthen, the most competent land valuer in Carmarthenshire, to go over the farm, which he did (see copy of this report), but all in vain; he had to leave without a fraction of compensation. The case is considered a very hard one in the neighbourhood, Mr. Lewis being looked upon as a man of most excellent character and a good farmer. A fact also worth mentioning is that the landlord never expended a penny on the holding during the tenancy, which extended over 12 years, except putting some flags on the floors of two kitchens when he came there. The only reason that can be given for the conduct of the landlord and agent in particular is that Mr. Lewis in 1886 left the Church of England and joined the Nonconformists in preference; from that day until he left the farm the agent, who is a Tory and Churchman, acted towards him in a most revengeful manner. During the bye-election in July 1889, when Mr. J. Lloyd-Morgan, M.P., contested West Carmarthen, his landlord, Mr. Gerwyn Jones, called on him and told him he knew he was a Radical, therefore he would expect him to refrain from recording his vote, which he did in obedience to his command.

42,063. Is this farm upon the same estate as the one upon which you farm?—Yes, my Lord.

I produce receipts and copy of surveyor's report. (Handed in.)

The acreage of Penygoitre is made up as follows:—

	Acres.	Roods.	Perches.
Penygoitre -	109	3	12	Consolidated.
Penrhiwfelyn	50	0	7
Rhydgaled -	3	0	39

The case of Marchoglwyn Fawr.—The above farm was taken by Mr. Joshua Griffiths in the year 1853 at the yearly rental of 32*l.* In the year 1856 he received notice to quit, which was afterwards revoked, but he had to advance his rent to 38*l.*; in 1870 advanced to 40*l.*; in 1875 to 50*l.*; in 1876 to 55*l.*; eventually he had to leave in 1877.

42,064. Is Mr. Joshua Griffiths in the room?—No, he is dead.

42,065. Is there any member of the family in the room?—No, but we have the receipts, my Lord.

Chairman—continued.

42,066. There is no objection taken to this evidence?—(Mr. Vincent.) Not by me, my Lord. I am not concerned for this gentleman at all.

42,067. You are not interested in this case?—(Mr. Vincent.) No, my Lord

When he took the farm he had to pay the out-going tenant for all improvements done, and farmyard manure, &c., but he had himself to leave without any compensation whatever, owing to an agreement which he had to sign during his tenancy. I may also add that the landlord expended nothing on the farm. The above advances in rent were entirely made on the tenant's own improvements; no reason can be given for such rapid advances in rent, but that the tenant took a prominent part in the agitation against paying Church rates. In 1878 the said farm was let to Mr. Henry Davies, the present tenant, at the yearly rental of 56*l.*

42,068. Is Mr. Henry Davies present?—No, my Lord, he is not.

In 1889 he received notice to quit; no reason whatever assigned, only that the tenant had refused to pay the tithes without protest on December 14th, 1889. He received a letter (dated 30th August 1892) from his landlord to the effect that his rent in future would be 65*l.*, he (the landlord) paying the tithe, which amount would be 2*l.* odd, and that if he did not agree to this rent he could give notice to quit. (Letter produced.) The above farm is enclosed mountain land, and comprises 80a. 2r. 8p., or thereabouts, situated in the upper division of Llanfynydd. The agreement has most stringent and arbitrary clauses, but the tenant has not got a copy of it, and is only allowed to see it at his landlord's house when he wants to. The landlord's name is James Richard Hughes, Johnstown, Carmarthen. I produce receipts for Marchoglwyn from 1852 to the present time, to prove these advances in rent. (Receipts produced.)

42,069. Do you wish to have this case of James Richard Hughes dealt with, Mr. Vincent.

(Mr. Vincent.) I think not, my Lord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

42,070. At whose instance have these papers concerning Maesyrhaidd been put in?—I put them in at the instance of Mr. David Davies, the tenant who died on the 9th of January. He told me on the Thursday before he died.

42,071. Do you know the facts relating to Mr. David Davies' case?—Yes, many of them.

42,072. You say that David Davies is now deceased?—Yes.

42,073. Is this Maesyrhaidd farm on the same estate of Mr. Gerwyn Jones?—Yes.

42,074. What year did David Davies go there?—He was brought up there, and his father before him.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

42,075. When did he become tenant?—I have not got that date. He lived about 40 years there.

42,076. On the farm?—Yes

42,077. When did he get notice to quit?—In 1883 he left the place.

42,078. What were the grievances of which he complained to you?—That he was shockingly oppressed.

42,079. In what way?—That the rent had gone up from 75*l.* to 100*l.*

42,080. Are you right about it being 1882, was it not 1892, because there is a letter here from David Davies dated December 1st, 1892, addressed to the landlord?—He had left for his daughter to come to the place in 1883.

42,081. And did he continue to live on the place from 1883 to 1892?—No, he had retired, and gone to live in the village with his wife at the time that that letter was written. During the period before that, he lived at Maesyrhaidd.

42,082. Did he get any compensation when he left for any of the improvements he had effected?—He had nothing.

42,083. Did he make any claim under the Act?—No.

42,084. Was the rent paid by his daughter the same as he had been paying, 100*l.*?—Three years after the daughter had come to live in the place the landlord reduced the rent by 15*l.* The letter from William Davies that I received says that.

42,085. Do you understand that this letter, a copy of which has been handed up, which is from David Davies to Mr. Gerwyn Jones, dated December 1st, 1892, was actually sent?—Yes, it was sent. That is a copy of it. It is the Welsh letter that should be read.

42,086. I am speaking of the letter which is in English?—Yes, I quite understand that, but I say that the Welsh letter ought to be read.

42,087. Is this a translation of the Welsh letter. I think it is the same as the Welsh letter?—It is the letter that he himself wrote that is the Welsh letter, in order that Mr. Oliver might send the English letter to Mr. Jones.

42,088. Mr. Oliver is a friend, I suppose, the Rev. Mr. Oliver, you mean?—Yes, he lives near.

42,089. I do not think we can very well take a letter written by this tenant to a friend of the family. The other letter was written by Mr. Oliver for David Davies, as I understand it?—Yes.

42,090. And sent to Mr. Gerwyn Jones?—Yes.

42,091. That letter can be taken, but I do not think we can take the Welsh one?—

42,092. The letter is as follows:—"Rock House, "Llanfynydd, December 1st, 1892.—Dear Sir, "May I venture very respectfully to approach "you by letter to lay before you in as few "words as I can the subject of the rent of "Maesyrhaidd farm? My apology and my "excuse for doing so is, that on account of my "very imperfect knowledge of the English

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"language, it was very difficult and indeed impossible for me to state the case as I ought to have done, when a short time ago I had the honour of calling on you personally at Pantglas. The object of that visit, as it is likewise of this letter, is to beg of you the favour of granting a reductionof the rent of Maesyrhaidd from what it is at present to 75*l.* yearly. I ask this favour on behalf of my daughter and son-in-law, simply aud solely on the ground that I consider conscientiously that the present rental is too high, and more than they can possibly pay in these bad times. I take the liberty of mentioning the figure 75*l.*, as it was my rent on the farm before it was raised as the result of the ignorant interference and the false misrepresentations of the agent or agents on the estate in those days. Had it not been for this most likely I should have remained there to this day. I venture to speak thus plainly, because I know, sir, that you, personally, wish at all times to deal kindly and justly and even generously with your tenants. Maesyrhaidd has been the homestead of my family for upwards of 100 years; my father and grandfather having lived there before me. I think you will admit that this fact is worthy of your favourable consideration. In my grandfather's time the rent was 40*l.* at first, and he was offered a lease on it at about 50*l.* before it was sold to Mr. Jones, Blaenos, your grandfather. The acreage is now exactly the same as then. Why has the rent gone up by leaps and bounds? The only reason I can give is that I and my ancestors paid more attention to cultivation and tillage than the majority of our neighbours. But is it right that we should be punished in a manner for this? I appeal to your sense of equity and fair play. If Maesyrhaidd is a good farm today, it is because of the labour and outlay put into it by myself and father before me. To my son-in-law and daughter, with their large family of little children, the burden of raising the rent as it is now is more than they can bear. If you cannot see your way to take compassion on them, they will have to seek deliverance elsewhere. My son-in-law was recently on a visit to a friend in Gloucestershire, and saw several good openings. I should be sorry myself to see him leaving the old place, but as things are at present what can he do? In conclusion, let me once more beg you to give this matter your kind and generous consideration. It will probably be the very last favour I shall ever ask at your hands. The sum and substance of my request is as follows: that the rents of Maesyrhaidd and Maes Ivan (part) stand for the future thus:—

	100	0	0

"With many apologies for the length of my letter and with great and sincere respect, I

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"am, yours truly, David Davies." Was there any answer to that letter?—No. Mr. David Davies, when he gave me those letters, asked me to give his own Welsh letter to the Commissioners, and ask them to read it.

42,093–4. Yes, but I do not think we can take a letter written by one friend to another. The reason why we accept the letter which I have read is because it is a communication to Mr. Gerwyn Jones from a party concerned?—Yes, but it contains the instructions of a man who is dead, and I like to see that his wishes are properly carried out.

42,095. Who wrote this Welsh letter?—David Davies, Maesyrhaidd.

Chairman.

42,096. Does this letter confirm the letter that you have just heard read?—Yes, my Lord.

42,097. Then we will take it in as evidence?—I think Mr. Oliver is in Court now, and the writing is rather hard to understand in some places, so perhaps he would read it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

42,098. It may be that Mr. Oliver would read it and translate it.

(The Rev. William Oliver, M.A., Llanfynydd.) If I may be allowed to explain, my letter is based substantially upon this Welsh document, which is very illegible, and is very difficult to read. I will attempt it if you desire me to do so. My letter is based upon this Welsh document, it is not a literal translation.

Chairman.

42,099. Does the witness consider it of great importance that that letter should be read. We quite understand that it substantiates it and it is practically the same.

(The Rev. William Oliver.) The letter read in English contains the particulars from this Welsh letter.

Chairman.

42,100. If that is so, we need not take a translation of that letter.

(The Interpreter.) So far as I can understand, the importance the witness attaches to it is this, that he was asked by David Davies, a little before he died, to place it in your hands.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Then we will take it but we need not read it at present. (The Welsh letter was handed in.)

42,101. Your evidence is so clear in detail that I do not propose to ask you any questions upon the further cases. Formally we ought to have this, as a matter of fact the rent of Maesyrhaidd was not lowered?—It had been reduced by 15*l.*

42,102. Yes, but not to the 75*l.* required by that letter?—William Davies had it down to 85*l.*

42,102A. Quite so. Then the request contained in that letter was not complied with?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

42,103. Did the son-in-law and the daughter leave the farm?—Twelve months after this time they went off to Huntley in Gloucestershire.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,104. May I ask you, are you a brother of Mr. Lleufer Thomas, the Secretary of this Commission?—Yes.

42,105. What is the acreage of your farm?—155 acres. It is so in the parish rate-book, but there are a lot of warrens and a lot of nurseries included.

42,106. What is the rent?—110*l.*

42,107. You say that the population of the parish has decreased very much, by some 436 people?—Yes.

42,108. What do you attribute that to?—Farms have been consolidated and the labourers' cottages have been allowed to go down.

42,109. Is there not so much labour used upon the farms now as formerly?—No.

42,110. Is it the custom on Mr. Gerwyn Jones' estate not to give a copy of the agreement?—I never heard that there is any copy given. When I took the farm my father-in-law asked Mr. Watkins for a copy of the agreement, but Mr. Watkins answered that he was accustomed to charge 15*s.* for an agreement, and that no one asked for an agreement.

42,111. Do you know of any that have suffered because they have not had an agreement?—No.

42,112. Do you consider that Mr. Watkins is not a competent valuer or agent?—He is a bank manager, and understands nothing of farming.

42,113. He has had no agricultural training, has he?—I do not know what he had in his early days, but he cannot have any now.

42,114. Does he often come to see you?—The only times I have ever seen him on the land are the times when he came to draw out the warren, and the time he came to settle with me afterwards.

42,115. Did he do that himself, or did he employ a surveyor?—No, only himself and a man named Smith, who was under him at Pantglas.

42,116. A good part of your farm is mountain land, is it not?—Yes, practically the highest land on it has only bare banks ("cloddiau moelion") for fences.

42,117. Are there roads there?—The parish road comes to the house, but you cannot take any manure from the house to the higher land.

42,118. Is it too hilly, or a bad road?—The highest land is very high, and there is a rock in the middle of the land, on the steep side of the hill.

42,119. Do you consider that the rents in the whole of this parish are too high?—That is my own feeling, and that is what all the neighbourhood says since 1877.

42,120. But they have not come forward as you have to express their minds?—They have come to me to ask me to say this, although they were not willing to come forward themselves to the Court. But I have told them to.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

42,121. Why are they not willing?—They have too much fear.

42,122. In the year 1877 the times were good, were they not—the stock sold well?—I did not occupy a farm of my own then, but I remember the time.

42,123. Do you remember what the rents were upon the whole estate?—I remember hearing of it.

42,124. Where there is a change does the incoming tenant as a rule pay a higher rent than the one that is going out?—That is the rule.

42,125. Do you know of any instances where compensation is given for improvements?—No, I do not, with the result that there are hardly any improvements being made there now.

42,126. Why do not the tenants improve the farms?—They work hard, but they do not venture to pay any money out in that way.

42,127. Do you think it would pay to lay out more money if they had security of tenure?—I do not know about that, but the ill-treatment of David Davies, Maesyrhaidd, has spoilt the whole parish.

42,128. In what way has his case spoilt the whole parish?—The fact that he was one of the best farmers in the parish, and that they had raised his rent from 75*l.* to 100*l.*, and that they would have raised the rent still more if he had not left.

42,129. It frightened the rest of the tenants from making any more improvements on the farms?—It has created a want of confidence altogether.

42,130. There is land-hunger in your neighbourhood still, though the population has decreased?—Yes.

42,131. There are some parishes where the decrease in the population does not show itself in the same manner as in yours. Can you account for that?—It is a poor mountainous parish.

42,132. Have people the tendency to run to the best land?—Yes, and to the neighbourhood of the town and the works.

42,133. You told us just now that several farms had been consolidated. Is it the case in these other places such as Llansawel?—I do not know much about Llansawel. There are some farms at Llansawel that I know of which have been thrown together.

42,134. What do you say is the reason that they are so consolidated?—The only reason that I have heard is that the buildings have been allowed to get too bad, and that they are coming down.

42,135. Do you find it difficult to get sufficient labour to do the farm in your parish?—I am placed in a more advantageous position than most of the farmers, because I live near the village. There are a few that live near me.

42,136. Have you any children that are able to work?—They have to work as soon as they are able to do anything.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

42,137. Are they regular in school?—They lose some days sometimes.

42,138. Are they obliged to work night and morning, before and after they go to school?—Yes, they have. It is only about 100 yards between our house and the school, so that they have to work a great deal night and morning, and dinner time too.

42,139. I do not mean in your own case particularly, but in the case of the parish that you represent?—Yes.

42,140. In what state of repair are your buildings; are they in pretty good repair?—I cannot complain of the roof, as much as there is of it there.

42,141. Who generally does the repairs?—The landlord.

42,142. You say in your statement "to such "an extreme pitch is this eager desire for a farm "sometimes carried, that a young farmer will "recklessly take a farm at a rental so exorbi-"tantly high, that it is impossible for him or "anyone else to pay for it." Do you mean to say that they are so greedy and anxious to take the farm, that they take the farm at any price?—They think so much of getting a farm near their parents, and their old home.

42,143. Do many of them take farms without capital?—They have not got any money, but they get their stock from their parents.

42,144. Do they borrow much money?—Well, it is very hard to say. That is the idea in getting a farm near their parents—in order to get help.

42,145. You say that the vast majority of the tenant farmers are Nonconformists?—Yes.

42,146. And that the landlords and agents are Churchmen and strong Conservatives?—The agent, at all events, is a Tory and a Churchman, but I have never seen the landlord in any place of worship, or at any religious service.

42,147. Do you think that although he does not go himself he is in favour of the tenants going to church?—That is a question I am not able to answer.

42,148. You say that you know of instances where some tenants have had to leave the chapel for the church?—We know of some in our district.

42,149. Can you mention any instances yourself?—You can see their names in the rate-book of the parish, but I do not like to name them. I can name myself, and leave all the others out.

42,150. Did you have to leave the chapel for the church?—Those were the conditions on which I had to take the place from Mr. Jones Blaenos.

42,151. Did he tell you that you must attend church? Tell me the words he used to you.—(Witness handed in a letter.) After I said who my family was and things of that sort, and that my mother's family had always been on the estate, he said, "Well, you will have the "place from me, but I want you to do one thing. "As you are changing your neighbourhood you

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

"should go to church,"—that these devilish chapels had turned him out of Parliament.

42,152. Did you promise to go?—Yes.

42,153. And you have been to church ever since, have you?—Yes.

42,154. Do your children go to church too?—Yes, all but one.

42,155. Tell us the honest truth. Are you still a Nonconformist at heart?—I prefer not to answer that question.

43,156. Who pays the rates and taxes upon these plantations that are planted?—The landlord pays the rates on that, and on the warren now, but I paid it for three years or three and a half years.

42,157. The rabbits have been doing you some damage, have they not?—They do it now.

42,158. Do you claim compensation?—No.

42,159. Why was not the new road made that you have spoken of?—I cannot say.

42,160. Have you any remedies to suggest for this state of things?—A court that the tenant could appeal to in any difficulty.

42,161. With regard to the rent of the farm?—Yes, and to settle any disputes.

42,162. Do you consider that tenants should be paid for all the improvements they make on their farms?—Yes, I do.

42,163. Do you think they would improve their farms and that they could produce far better crops than they do at present if they had that security?—I am certain of it.

Mr. Seebohm.

42,164. I have only one question to ask, and that is about the public road that passed through your farm; when was it closed?—This is the vestry book, which will show it [producing same].

42,165. I see it was in 1885. Was this matter taken before quarter sessions?—No.

42,166. Can a road be closed without the matter being taken before the quarter sessions?—I do not know that.

42,167. It probably is a case that the new parish council may take up when it is formed?—I daresay we have not heard the last of it yet.

Mr. Grove.

42,168. You say that the coal is hauled a great distance in order to save carriage. What distance?—15 or 16 miles of road.

Mr. Seebohm.

42,169. Just about this public road; do we understand it is a public thoroughfare or only a road through a farm?—Oh no; it connects us with Cardiganshire—40 miles.

Mr. Grove.

42,170. I think you have said that coal is hauled 15 or 16 miles?—15 or 16 miles.

42,171. How far out of that 16 miles would the railway be available?—The station is about six miles from the village.

42,172. Then that would be that they would haul the coal 10 miles on purpose to save the railway rate?—No, we do not have it always from the same place. The Cross-hands pit is nearer us, but it is further if you have to go to Llandebie.

42,173. But do you mean this, that the railway companies charge so much that the farmers haul the coal in preference to going by the railway?—Yes.

42,174. As to the raising of rents at Maesyrhaidd, do you consider that those rents were advanced on the tenants' improvements?—David Davies himself told me so, and I know it.

42,175. Is there any farmers' club in your neighbourhood?—No.

42,176. Or agricultural association?—Nothing.

42,177. Why is there not more union amongst the farmers?—I do not know.

42,178. When abatements are made do they give notice of abatements?—No. One of the notices of rent I have put in my rent-book, which I have handed in; there is nothing there except the usual thing.

42,179. We have seen that; there is nothing mentioned there; but did you get an abatement of those rents for which those are the receipts?—Yes, in one of them I think, for certain.

42,180. Would not you wish to have had notice of that abatement?—No; that would not make any difference as far as we understand it there.

42,181. Then you would get all your money ready and go to the rent audit, and perhaps not want it all when you got there?—They are very merciful to us in receiving the rent; they receive it in two or three instalments.

42,182. I am very glad to hear that. Do you get any damage from the rabbits on the warren at Troedyrhiw?—No, I do not. The rabbits that come from the woods do more damage.

42,183. And you get an allowance of 14*l.* in the rent for that warren?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,184. Do you and the farmers in your neighbourhood pay any attention to the breeding of stock cattle and sheep?—We do not in these bad times.

42,185. Did you do so in better times?—Yes, we used to look for a ram or a bull—fresh blood—when we had the money.

42,186. What kind of breed have you?—Black cattle there.

42,187. You have been from your youth a practical farmer, have you not?—Yes, on a farm of about 100*l.* a year on the Taliaris estate I was brought up—Cefn Hendre.

42,188. Your wife is also practical in farming, is she not?—Yes, she is a daughter of a large farmer, Mr. Harris, of Bailey Vicar, near Llansawel.

42,189. Has she been accustomed to farming?—She had the sole management of the dairy on a farm of her brother for three years before I married her.

42,190. But after all you cannot make things pay?—Well, we cannot pay these last few years.

Chairman.

42,191. We are much obliged to you for coming forward to give evidence?—I wish to thank you for hearing me and allowing me to state David Davies' case to you, and so fulfil my promise to a dying man. Re-examined 45,812.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

42,191A. Is there a representative in the room of Mr. Gerwyn Jones of Pantglas?

[No response.]

Mr. J. E. VINCENT recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

42,192. You represent the Landowners' Association?—Yes, my Lord.

42,193. Have you anything you want to hand in to the Commissioners?—Yes, my Lord, I hand in, for what it is worth, a table of abatements and reductions in rent, with some observations as to the history of rents, got in the following way. Shortly after the Commission was appointed, in, I think, February or March 1893, I sent out a series of questions, both to people who are members of my association and to people who are not, requesting them to fill up answers to those questions in their own hands or in the hands of their agents. In many of the cases, of course, I know the handwritings, and I have had opportunities of verifying them from cheques; in other cases I have not had those opportunities. The exact words used by each of the persons who answered, and by every one of the persons who answered in this county, are included in this return. I have the originals which were handed in, except in about three or four or perhaps a dozen cases, but in those cases the gentlemen wrote letters, which I have in my possession.

Chairman—continued.

42,194. Mr. Llewelyn Williams, are you willing to take this return in upon that statement?

Witness. I only hand it in for what it is worth. It is not evidence of course, strictly.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. I am quite willing on that understanding.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

42,195. We received similar tables in the other counties, I think?—Certainly.

[The following return was handed in.]

CARMARTHENSHIRE.

TABLE of ABATEMENTS and REDUCTION on RENT up to March 1893.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
George Baugh Allen, London.	Cilrhiw (in Carmarthenshire, 162 acres).	Abatements granted to agricultural tenants all round; 25th March 1880, 5 per cent.; 29th September 1885, 15 per cent.; 25th March 1886, 15 per cent.; 29th September 1886, 15 per cent.; 25th March 1887, 10 per cent.; 29th September 1887, 10 per cent.; 25th March 1888, 10 per cent.; 29th September 1888, 10 per cent.; 25th March 1889, 10 per cent.; 29th September 1891, 15 per cent.; 25th March 1892, 15 per cent.; 29th September 1892, 20 per cent.	No reductions - -	In 1876 there was a slight increase from 223*l.* 10*s.* to 275*l.* on expiration of a 30 years' lease, following on a 21 years' lease, there having been no increase for 50 years.
Rev. Canon Allen, Porthkerry, Barry.	In Pembroke and Carmarthen (750 acres).	I have made abatements varying from 4 to 7½ per cent. in bad years.	No; all are, to the best of my knowledge and belief, reasonably low.	About the year 1850 I raised the rent on the Carmarthenshire farms about 25 per cent. on the termination of old leases.
R. E. Arden, Burnham, Slough.	In Pembroke and Carmarthen (5,350 acres).	10 per cent. at Michaelmas 1888; 10 per cent. at Lady-day 1892 to Michaelmas 1893, both inclusive.	I have made no reductions since 1887.	No valuation has been made within the last 30 years.
Earl of Ashburnham, 30, Dover Street, W.	Pembrey and Llanddeussant (7,520 acres).	In 1886, 15 per cent. on one half-year's rent; in 1887-8, 15 per cent. on two half-year's rents; in 1889 on one half-year's rent; in 1892, 5 per cent. in January and 10 in July; in 1893, 10 per cent.	On the Pembrey estate rents have been reduced by about 14 per cent., but it is right to say that as some of these reductions were caused by the destruction of the land in consequence of the encroachment of the blowing sands from the seashore, the amount for the purposes of this investigation may be set at about 10½ per cent.	The Llanddeusant estates were re-valued about 20 years ago, and the rents considerably increased, but it has never been regarded as a highly rented property.
Edward H. Bath, Alltyferin, Carmarthen.	Alltyferin (1,300 acres).	Michaelmas 1879, 5 per cent.; Michaelmas 1885, 20 per cent.; Lady Day 1886, 10 per cent.; Michaelmas 1886, 10 per cent.; Lady Day 1887, 10 per cent.; Michaelmas 1887, 10 per cent.; Lady Day 1888, 5 per cent.; Michaelmas 1888, 5 per cent.; Michaelmas 1891, half-years' tithes; Lady Day 1892, 7½ per cent.; Michaelmas 1892, 10 per cent.; Lady Day 1893, 15 per cent.; Michaelmas 1893, 10 per cent.	No - - -	The estate was valued about 28 years ago, with the result of increasing the rental slightly.
His Honor Judge Bishop, Dolygarreg.	Doly-garreg (1,200 acres).	In the last year I have returned 10 per cent. to tenants.	I have not permanently reduced all the rents, but I have done so in two instances to a small amount.	The estate has not been revalued, nor have rents been raised during the last 50 years.
James Bevan-Bowen, Llwyngwair.	Llwyngwair (3,203 acres in Pembroke, Cardigan, and Carmarthen).	In 1885-6-7 and 8 I returned 10 per cent. to tenants, also in 1891, 5 per cent., and in 1892, 10 per cent.	- - -	I came into the estate in 1856 (37 years ago) and am not aware of any increase of rent during the preceding 12 years. There has been no increase since.
H. S. Carver, Blaencorse, St. Clears.	Blaencorse (500 acres).	10 per cent. - -	I have not reduced the rents since 1877.	The rent of one farm has been raised at the expiration of an old lease; previously the rent was merely nominal.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Earl of Cawdor, Stackpole.	Carmarthenshire (70,000 acres in Pembroke, Carmarthen, and Cardigan).	For three years from Lady Day 1886 to Lady Day 1888, allowances of 15 per cent. were made to the farm tenants. For one year from Lady Day 1891 the tithes have been allowed, being almost 7½ per cent. For the present year from Lady Day 1892 the tithes are again allowed, and an additional 10 per cent. out of the rents.	No permanent reductions of any consequence up to the present time. Now a few trifling reductions are proposed.	All the estates were valued about 30 years back, and the rents were increased by re-lettings about 5,000*l.* a year.
Major Colby, Ffynone.	Ffynone (10,000 acres in Pembroke and Carmarthen).	In 1886, 10 per cent. was allowed; in 1887, 10 per cent.; first half of 1888, 10 per cent.; second part of 1888, 5 per cent; last half of 1891, 10 per cent.; last half of 1892, 10 per cent.	The rents have been reduced in a few cases where farms were purchased with high rentals. The rental of the original estate has not been altered for several generations.	The estate has not been revalued.
Lord Dynevor, Dynevor Castle.	Dynevor Castle (7,000 acres).	10 per cent. on year's rent due 29th Sept. 1885. 10 per cent. on year's rent due 29th Sept. 1886. 10 per cent. on year's rent due 29th Sept. 1887. 10 per cent. on year's rent due 25th Mar. 1892. 15 per cent. on year's rent due 29th Sept. 1892.	£ £ A farm from 70 to 58 A farm from 68 to 52 A farm from 35 to 30 A farm from 45 to 38 A farm from 46 to 41 A farm from 82 to 80 A farm from 84 to 76 £430 to 375	The estate was re-valued in 1874, and the result was to increase receipts. Rents have been raised on re-lettings when they were extremely low let.
L. G. De Ferry, (jure uxoris,) Kilymaenllwyd.	Cilymaenllwyd (600 acres).	A percentage of 5 per cent. was returned to tenants at the two half-yearly rent audits in 1889; a percentage of 10 per cent. was returned to one particular tenant at the Michaelmas half-yearly audit in 1892.	There has been no permanent reductions of rents since 1877.	——
Erasmus Gower, Castle Malgwyn.	Carmarthenshire (2,360 acres, in Pembroke and Carmarthen).	1890, Lady Day, 5 per cent.; 1891, Lady Day, 5 per cent.; 1891, Michaelmas, 5 per cent.; 1892, Lady Day, 10 per cent.; 1892, Michaelmas, 5 per cent.	I succeeded in 1884, and have made reductions of 6 per cent. on two farms.	Rents have not been raised to my knowledge during the last 25 years, except on one farm held on a 21 years' lease expired in 1885.
Mrs. Gwyn, Dyffryn, Neath.	Blaensawdde (1,130 acres).	Amounts of 10 per cent., 15 per cent., and 20 per cent. have been remitted to individual tenants, leaseholders as well as yearly tenants. 10 per cent. all round was remitted at the last rent audit.	Many of the rents have been permanently reduced. During the last 12 years ending September 29th, 1892, the rental of the Carmarthenshire estate has been remitted about 10 per cent. all round.	The farm rents of the Carmarthenshire estate were raised 4*s.* in the £ (i.e., 20 per cent.) by the late Mr. Howel Gwyn from Lady Day 1863 (30 years ago), 10 per cent. of which has now been permanently given back.
Col. Gwynne-Hughes, Glancothy, Nantgaredig.	Glancothy (800 acres).	In the years 1885 and 1886, 10 per cent. was granted; in the year 1887 7½ per cent. was granted.	No permanent reduction has been made except in one case.	There has been no valuation though the rents have almost all been the same for the last 40 years.
Edward Hopkins, Carreg-Cennen, Llandilo.	Carreg-Cennen.	I have allowed 10 per cent. and 20 per cent. respectively since 1885, but there has been an intervening period when abatement was not wanted or expected.	- - -	The estate has not been revalued during the last 50 years.
J. P. Howell, Cardigan.	Carmarthenshire, parish of Conwyl-Elfet (311 acres).	In 1887 on the two half-years of 10 per cent.; also in 1892, and also I think intermediately on two or three occasions.	I have reduced the rent of a small holding of house and fields from 12*l.* 10*s.* to 10*l.*	On one occasion I caused the estate to be re-valued; but the result was to leave it as it was, the rent neither increased or reduced.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Lt.-Col. W. P. Howell, Penrheol, Mydrym.	Carmarthenshire (462 acres).	I have not till lately, then occasionally.	No, because they have been rented low.	——
P. L. Hughes-Garbett, Island House, Laugharne.	Island House (650 acres).	At Lady Day 1893, 10 per cent.	No, except in one case to the extent of a few pounds only.	The estate has not been re-valued; the rents remain about the same as in 1810, and have not been materially raised, while other lands neighbouring and of no better quality have paid largely increasing rents during the same period.
R. E. Jennings, Gellideg, Kidwelly.	Macnamara estate and other lands (1,013 acres).	1885, 10 per cent.; 1886, 20 per cent.; 1887, 15 per cent.; 1888, 7½ per cent.; 1891, 10 per cent. (at Michaelmas only); 1892, 10 per cent.	Rents have not since 1877 been permanently reduced.	——
Mrs. Johnes, Lt.-Gen. Sir J. Hills-Johnes, K.C.B., V.C., and Lady Hills-Johnes, Dolaucothy.	Dolaucothy (3,613 acres in Carmarthen and Glamorgan).	Lady Day, 1882, 20 per cent.; Michaelmas 1882, 10 per cent. (to small tenants who pay once a year); Michaelmas, 1885, 20 per cent.; Lady Day 1886, 10 per cent.; Michaelmas 1886, 10 per cent.; Lady Day and Michaelmas 1887, 10 per cent.; Lady Day 1888, 10 per cent.; Lady Day 1892, 10 per cent.; Michaelmas 1892, 10 per cent.	Since 1877 rents reduced 155*l.* 13*s.*; rents increased 13*l.* 10*s.*; total reduction, 142*l.* 3*s.*	——
A. H. Jones, for Rev. D. S. Jones and Mrs. Jones.	Carmarthenshire (about 1,000 acres).	In 1887 and 1888 an abatement of 10 per cent.	Two farms reduced 10 per cent. permanently.	——
Mrs. Jones-Jones, Tibwrwen, Carmarthen.	Eim Lodge (1,805 acres in Carmarthen and Glamorgan).	For the years 1886 and 1887, 10 per cent.; the half-year ending Lady Day 1888, 10 per cent.; Lady Day 1892, 5 per cent.; Michaelmas, 1892, 10 per cent.	No permanent reductions in rent since 1877.	My estate has been valued twice; each time increasing my receipts.
Thomas Jones, Llandovery.	Carmarthenshire (965 acres).	I have this year allowed 10 per cent.	——	——
Capt. Jones-Parry, Tyllwyd, Newcastle-Emlyn.	Tyllwyd (500 acres in Carmarthen).	Constantly. I have returned from 5 to 10 per cent.	- - -	The estate was re-valued in 1874. In one case there was a decrease; in the others some were unaltered; the rent increased, varying from 5 per cent. to 2 per cent. The increase was almost nominal. The property had not been valued since 1818, or perhaps before that even. Very large sums had been laid out in buildings and improvements.
H. J. H. Lawrence, Waungron, Pembrokeshire.	Carmarthenshire (188 acres).	In 1892 I made an abatement of about 7½ per cent.	- - -	Within these last few years my farms have been re-valued, with the result of increasing the rent, but not up to the re-valuation.
Mrs. Lawrence, Middleton Hall.	Middleton Hall (2,256 acres).	1886, 12½ per cent. on farm rents, 10 per cent. on park land for half-year ending December 24, 1885; 1886, 7½ per cent. on farms; 1887, 5 per cent. on park lands for half-years ending June 24, 1886, December 24, 1886, June 24, 1887; 1888, December 24, 1887, June 24, 1888; 1889, 2¾ per cent. on farms, 2½ per cent. on park lands for half-year ending December 24, 1888; 1892, granted	Have reduced the rents of three farms by 40*l.*, 18*l.*, and 12*l.* respectively, and the rents of several divisions of the park by 66*l.* 10*s.* altogether making a total reduction of 136*l.* 10*s.* on the rent-roll. The landlord pays all outgoings on park lands, and does the fencing, and it is let as accommodation land.	The estate was re-valued by three different valuers about 1878 or 1879 on account of a Chancery suit. As a whole have not had the rents of the lowest valuation. Some rents were raised by the late owner.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Mrs. Lawrence, Middleton Hall—cont.		an abatement of 40*l.* to one tenant who was in arrear, and let him the farm afterwards afresh at a rent reduced by 40*l.*; 1893, 10 per cent. on farms, 5 per cent. on park lands for half-year ending December 24, 1892.
Col. W. P. Llewellyn-Lewes, Llysnewydd, Llandyssil.	Llysnewydd and Grange (4,200 acres in Carmarthen and Cardigan).	My father, who died in 1890, granted abatements from 5 to 10 per cent. on several occasions. Last year I granted 5 per cent., and at the last audit for Michaelmas I granted 10 per cent.	In two or three cases -	The estate was re-valued in 1871 by a most competent estate agent; the rents were raised slightly in some instances, but the rents generally are the same now as they were in 1871.
Major C. Basset Lewis, Aberystwyth.	Cwmcloydach (785 acres).	I returned 5 per cent. in the years 1885, 1886, and 1887, and in some cases 10 per cent. in the year 1892.	Since the year 1877 I have permanently reduced my rents from 15 to 30 per cent., viz., farms reduced from 68*l.* to 48*l.* per annum; 62*l.* to 45*l.* per annum; 42*l.* to 32*l.* per annum; 70*l.* to 50*l.* per annum.	—
C. W. Mansel Lewis, Stradey Castle.	Stradey Castle (4 135 acres).	Abatements have been made this year, and since 1881 in three other years.	—	—
David Jones Lewis, Llwyncelyn, Llandovery.	Gilfach and Llwyncelyn.	Abatements of rent granted at the audits of January 19, 1886; July 22, 1886; January 26, 1887; January, 1888; July 22, 1892; January 18, 1893; on each occasion at the rate of 10 per cent.	Rents have been reduced in three cases, viz., from 33*l.* to 30*l.*, from 75*l.* to 60*l.*, and from 28*l.* to 24*l.*	About 25 years ago the estate was re-valued. In most cases the rent was raised. In one case nothing was added to the rent except that the tithe rentcharge, which had been formerly paid by the landlord, was then laid upon the tenant. The general result of the valuation was an increase in the rents. Previous to this, as far as can be gathered, no increase of rents had taken place for at least two generations.
John Lewis, Nantgwynne.	Nantgwynne (500 acres).	For the last half-year only I have allowed them 10 per cent., and that is the general amount given by the other landowners, except a few cases where farms are rented high more is allowed. I have not been asked for abatements until this half year's rent, which is entirely due to bad seasons and the loss of cattle and sheep.	—	—
Mrs. Lewis -	Clynfiew (4,870 acres in Pembroke, Cardigan, and Carmarthen).	10 per cent. was given on the rents payable Michaelmas 1885 and Michaelmas 1892. Reductions have frequently been made at other times during the interval in individual cases.	- - - -	The estate has not been re-valued for purposes of rental, but in the year 1888 a competent local valuer went over the whole property for the purpose of inspecting the state of repair and cultivation or re-arranging boundaries and re-adjusting values when necessary. The estate was at that time very unequally let, and the valuer advised a reduction in some cases and an increase in others. His recommendations were followed, but the rents were not raised to the figures mentioned by him in any one case, and in many cases no change was made at all. The net result of the valuation was a slight increase of the estate rental.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Bishop of Llandaff, Llandaff.	Henllan and Grove (in Pembroke and Carmarthen, 3,500 acres).	In 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1892 I returned 10 per cent. I succeeded to the properties in the year 1886.	Since 1886 I have made reductions in eight instances on the Henllan estate, amounting to the annual sum of 115*l.* On the Grove estate reductions have been made in six instances, amounting to the annual sum of 120*l.*	The estates have not been re-valued for the last 50 years so far as I am aware. I have not raised the rent in any single instance since I became possessed of the estates.
Geo. W. B. D. Lloyd, Brunant, near Pumpsaint.	Brunant - -	The late Mr. Lloyd granted allowances on each half-year's rents to the amount of 5 per cent. for some years previous to his death in 1887, but I cannot say for how many years. Since then reductions have been granted at the same rate at various times, and at the last rent audit a reduction of 10 per cent. was given.	——	——
T. Lloyd-Barrow (for his wife, the owner of two-thirds of the Lloyd estate).	Lloyd (in Brecknock and Carmarthen, 4,457 acres).	20 per cent. in November 1892; and 10 per cent. for the audit now due promised.	——	——
Thos. Edward Lloyd, Coedmore, Cardigan.	Coedmore and Trewern (4,500 acres in Cardigan, Carmarthen, and Pembroke).	For the Coedmore estate, 5 per cent. was allowed at Lady Day 1886, Michaelmas 1886, Lady Day and Michaelmas 1887, Lady Day and Michaelmas, 1888, and Lady Day 1889; and for Michaelmas 1892, 10 per cent. (except where there were leases). For the Trewern estate 10 per cent. was allowed at Michaelmas 1885, Lady Day 1886, Michaelmas, 1886, Lady Day and Michaelmas 1887, Lady Day and Michaelmas 1888; 5 per cent. was allowed at Lady Day 1889, and 10 per cent. at Michaelmas 1892.	I have not made any very material reductions of rent.	——
Capt. Tudor Lloyd-Harries, Brynamlwg, Llandilo.	Maesllydan and Trawsnant (5,811 acres in Carmarthen and Brecon).	Michaelmas 1885, Lady Day 1886, Michaelmas, 1886, Lady Day 1887, Michaelmas 1887, Lady Day 1888, Lady Day 1892, Michaelmas 1892, 10 per cent. allowed.	In some cases rents are permanently reduced.	The estate was re-valued in 1877; the result was a small increase in some places, not amounting to 3 per cent. on the rental.
Mrs. E. F. Lloyd-Philipps, Aberglasney, Golden Grove.	Aberglasney (868 acres).	In 1892, 5 per cent. -	Since 1877 I have reduced the rent of almost every farm.	The estate was re-valued and rental increased some years since, but again reduced.
Misses E. & E. J. Mansel.	Maesteilo (1,000 or 1,100 acres).	When agricultural losses touched one's sympathy we have always been willing to listen to the tenants' appeal and make allowances, but in 1892 gave back 10 per cent. generally.	One farm has been reduced 25*l.* from 140*l.* per annum.	The estate has been re-valued, and in two farms only was there a slight increased rental.
E. W. Milner-Jones	Velindre (1,800 acres).	10 per cent. last half year.	——	——
Howard Spear Morgan, Tegfynydd.	Tegfynydd (1,923 acres in Carmarthen and Pembroke,	Since times have been depressed returns of 10 per cent. have been made.	No permanent reduction has been made except in some small holdings, the lands are all let at low rates.	——

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Herbert Peel, Taliaris, Llandilo.	Taliaris (3,000 acres).	10 per cent., half-year's rent due, Michaelmas 1885; 5 per cent., Michaelmas 1886; 5 per cent., Lady Day 1887; 5 per cent., Michaelmas 1887; 10 per cent., Michaelmas 1892.	Since I have come into this estate, which was in 1883, I have reduced the rents slightly in four cases, and have raised them slightly in three cases, thus reducing my rent-roll by 23*l.*	The rents were increased 10 per cent. in 1855. Since 1855 a few of the rents have been slightly raised in the changing of tenancy.
(Late) John Peel, Danyrallt, Llangadock.	Danyrallt (3,420 acres).	For the half-year ending Michaelmas 1885, an abatement of 20 per cent. For the two years ending Michaelmas 1887, of 10 per cent. For the half-year ending Lady Day 1888, of 10 per cent. For the half-year ending Michaelmas 1891, of 5 per cent. For one year ending Michaelmas 1892, of 15 per cent.	- - -	I purchased the bulk of these estates in the year 1881, and there has been no subsequent valuation for rental purposes. It is within my knowledge that there were several valuations of them made prior to my becoming the owner, but I have reason to know that these were made more for mortgage and sale purposes than for rental. In many cases the rents of farms were, on my becoming the owner, considerably lowered from the amounts alleged to have been previously paid.
Wm. Lewis-Philipps, Clyngwynne.	Clyngwynne (710 acres).	In 1887 and 1892 I gave a reduction of 5 per cent.	- - -	The property as a whole has not been re-valued within the last 50 years as far as I know. The rents of these farms have been raised. Warnfawr, in consequence of extensive drainage. Penenwe, new purchase, afterwards drained. Waunfach, re-valued by tenant and rented at his own valuation.
Edward Schaw Protheroe, Dolwilym, Hebron.	Dol-wilym (about 1,600 acres).	Abatements have been made in bad years—1882, 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888—to about 5 or 6 per cent. In 1892 the tithe rentcharge was remitted on a part of the estate for the year and on the remainder for the half-year.	In 1882 I reduced the rent of the largest farm 10 per cent., having granted lease of 21 years not long before. No addition was made to rent when lease fell in.	The history of this small property is shortly this: in my grandfather's time farms were held on leases of three lives; these fell in in my mother's time, who succeeded in 1841, and the farms were then re-valued. I succeeded in 1872. The only lease of lives fell in soon after, and that farm was then re-valued. I have since reduced it by 10 per cent.
A. P. Saunders-Davies, Pentre, Boncath.	Pentre (6,700 acres in Pembroke, Cardigan, and Carmarthen).	- - -	- - -	The Pentre old estate was valued about 30 years ago. Some of the farms were increased in rental and some reduced. The Pentre Celwindeg estate was bought in 1884, and the rents have remained the same with the addition of the tithe.
David E. Stephens, Traws-mawr, Carmarthen.	Part of Tra Usmawr	Abatements of 10 per cent. were allowed on rentals of farms at several audits about 1885 and 1886. In some cases larger reductions were made.	——	——
Sir E. A. A. K. Cowell-Stepney, Llanelly.	Stepney (12,000 acres, chiefly in Carmarthen).	For three years, 1886-7-8, remitted 10 per cent.	Since 1877 we have not reduced our rents permanently, but they have not been raised for 50 years.	It has been re-valued, but whether for the purposes of rental I do not know. Rents have been undisturbed on an average for about 50 years.

John Crow Richardson, Glanbrydan Park, Manordilo.	Glanbrydan (1,200 acres).	1885, 1886, 1887, 10 per cent. on each year to Michaelmas; 1888, 10 per cent. on half-year to Michaelmas; 1889, 5 per cent. on half-year to Michaelmas; 1892, 10 per cent. on one year to Michaelmas.	- - -	If at any time a tenant thinks his rent too high and tells me so, I give him the opportunity of having the farm valued by a competent assessor on the understanding that the annual value he may consider fair shall be the future rent, and in cases where this has been done the result has been in my favour.
Mrs. Saunders, Court Henry, Golden Grove.	Court Henry -	No abatement required -	- - -	The property was bought about 25 years ago. The tenants remained on at the same rents, and, from enquiries made, the rents were the same quite 20 years previously.
David Thomas, Mile End, Llandovery.	Carmarthenshire (320 acres).	Last Michaelmas rent I gave all my tenants an abatement of 10 per cent.; and at last Lady Day rent audit an abatement of 15 per cent. was given.	In 1881 I made a permanent reduction of 20 per cent. to my tenant at Berthllwyd, and he had 10 per cent. last Michaelmas out of that reduced rent.	——
David W. J. Thomas, Ely Cottage, Brecon.	Henllys (1,038 acres).	10 per cent. allowed at present, and in the depression in the years 1886, 1887, and 1888 the same was allowed.	- - -	In 1863 the estate was revalued by my father when the rents were raised. Four valuers were employed at great expense. Each valued separately, and the average of the four valuations was adopted as the basis of the increase.
John Thomas, Moreb, Llandilo.	Tycanol (198 acres).	- - -	Have let the land at a reduction from 140*l.* per annum to 120*l.*, and again to 105*l.* 10*s.* for three years from September 29, 1891.	——
John Lewes Thomas, Caeglâs, Llandilo.	Caeglâs (1,800 acres).	Returned 10 per cent. on last half-year's rent due Michaelmas day last.	——	——
Rhys Goring Thomas, Plas Llannon, Llanelly.	Gellywernen (1,000 acres).	I have occasionally made a reduction of 10 per cent., but in no case permanent.	Gellywernen farm was reduced by 30*l.* in the year 1880. It was formerly 210*l.*, now 180*l.*	——

Mr. Grove.

42,196. When we have had time to examine these you will be able perhaps at London or some place to give us further information if we require it?—Certainly. All my papers are always at your disposal, and I am afraid I am always at your disposal too.

Mr. Grove—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. BENJAMIN MADDY recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

42,197. You are a rabbit-catcher?—Yes.

42,198. And you live at Graig, Penllyne, Cowbridge?—Yes.

See 26,181. 42,199. You gave evidence in Cardiff on November the 4th, 1893, before the Commission?—Yes.

See 36,029, and further rebuttal at Qu. 50,724–50,805. 42,200. And that evidence was rebutted by Mr. Bassett, master of hounds, on the 17th of March 1894, at Chepstow. Why do you wish to come and appear before the Commission again?—The reason is this. Through giving evidence, at Cardiff, and Mr. Bassett rebutting my evidence I have been stopped from employment through Mr. Bassett and others ever since that time. I was regularly employed for several years before as rabbit-catcher, and since that, I think it was about the 5th November that I gave evidence, I have only had 10 days employment where I had been continually rabbit-catching for several years—six or seven—before that.

Chairman—continued.

Chairman—continued.

42,201. Since you gave evidence you have only been employed for how many times?—About 10 days altogether.

42,202. About 10 days altogether?—Altogether.

42,203. How many days a week were you generally employed before you gave evidence?—Full time.

42,204. Four days a week?—When I could go I had always plenty of employment the full time—six days a week.

42,205. You were generally employed six days a week up to the time of giving evidence?—Up to the time I gave evidence.

42,206. And you have only been employed 10 days since that time?—Altogether 10 days since that time.

42,207. Have you got your evidence written down?—Not entirely. I have part of it written down.

42,208. Just give us your evidence as closely as you can; do not go into old stories, but just tell us exactly what the state of affairs is now?—I gave evidence before the Commissioners at their sitting in Cardiff; I have been a rabbit-catcher since the Ground Game Act was passed, and was employed very widely throughout the district to catch rabbits for the farmers and gentry. After I gave evidence at Cardiff I was stopped from catching at most of the places where I had been formerly employed. The farmers said that they were afraid to put me on because of their landlords on account of my giving evidence. I was engaged to catch rabbits by Mr. Watts of Tydraw, a farmer in the neighbourhood. This was after I gave evidence, and some days afterwards I went. On the first morning of my going there I met the keeper of Mr. Bassett of Crossways, near Cowbridge.

42,209. What was his name?—Groom, Alfred Groom, I believe, and he told me that Mr. Bassett had sent him to ask Mr. Watts not to employ me, and that Mr. Bassett would give Mr. Watts' sons a day's sport if he would not employ me.

42,210. The keeper told you, Alfred Groom, told you that himself?—He told me personally. Two of Mr. Watts' sons heard this conversation. Mr. Watts refused to obey Mr. Bassett's request, and Mr. Bassett did not invite Mr. Watts' sons to the day's sport whilst inviting the sons of the other farmers in the neighbourhood. Mr. Watts' sons told me this. I should like to add a little to this if you will allow me. They even shot over covers belonging to Mr. Watts' farm; brought other farmers and their sons for a day's sport, and shot even over part of Mr. Watts' farm, the woods belonging to his farm, and never invited Mr. Watts' himself or his sons because of employing me, for only four days I was there. I was asked by Mr. Loughor of Tregough to come to his farm to catch rabbits. Before I went I met Mr. Loughor, and he told me that he had received a letter from Mr. Bassett, who requested him not to employ Ben Maddy. Mr. Loughor said that he was very sorry, but he must ask me not to go to the farm, as having received the letter from Mr. Bassett he did not like to offend him.

See 50,764.

Chairman—continued.

42,211. Is Mr. Loughor a tenant of Mr. Bassett's?—No, but he rents the shooting. He has the privilege, I believe, to rent the shooting over his farm and covers that he has got belonging to the farm; he rents the shooting from Mr. Bassett.

42,212. Mr. Bassett pays him for the shooting?—Mr. Bassett pays him for the shooting, and he has two keepers on the ground preserving game and foxes.

42,213. Can that letter be produced?—I beg pardon.

42,214. Can you get that letter?—I have failed to get it so far. I asked Mr. Loughor on Tuesday last, and he told me and four who were in the company that Mr. Bassett had stopped him. I asked him just like this, "Mr. Loughor, "did Mr. Bassett or yourself stop me from going "to catch rabbits there after you had engaged "me"? He said, "Mr. Bassett stopped you. I should only be too pleased," he said, "but since "that Mr. Bassett sends any amount; as much "as I want.'

42,215. You have not got that letter?—I have not got that letter. Mr. Loughor has that letter.

42,216. Now, will you go on?—I did not go to the farm, therefore Mr. Loughor will state this, and has repeatedly made the statement to other persons, amongst others to Mr. John Williams of Glossop Terrace, Cardiff. In consequence of these and other interferences of Mr. Bassett to prevent me from getting employment, I spoke to Mr. Bassett on the matter, and told him that I should go to Carmarthen, and complain to the Commissioners when they met there, and hoped that he would be there to meet me. He replied, "Oh, very well, but mind get your expenses paid." This was on the 20th of March, Cowbridge Fair Day. I think it was on the 20th of March. On Thursday the 5th of April I received the following letter from Mr. Bassett, "Crossways, Cowbridge, S. Wales, "Wednesday.—Maddy, If you are out of a job "now I can give you one, if you will call here "on Saturday next, 7th, about 10 o'clock. I "shall be glad to see you. T. Bassett."

42,217. Have you got that letter?—Yes.

42,218. Will you put that letter in? [The original was handed in.] I went to see him on the Saturday, and he asked me if I would go and catch rabbits at a farm called Coed-hill, as there were hundreds, as he said, come there during the past week. He then put a sovereign into my hand for my trouble in coming to see him—the distance between his house and mine being less than two miles. I said I would go and see the farm, but when I did go I could find not sufficient indications of rabbits there as would pay me for catching them, and I wrote to Mr. Bassett to that effect. I have a copy of the letter here if you wish to see it. (Handing copy of letter.)

42,219. This is the letter, "Craig Penllyne, "April 9th, 1894. R. T. Bassett, Esq.—Sir, I

Chairman—continued.

" have been to Coed-hills, and I don't see that " there is many rabbits there to do damage, and " I think it would be waste of time for me to " go, as I am busy at present. I shall be pleased " at any time to oblige you if wanted. I remain, " your obedient servant, B. Maddy." Now, will you go on?—The farm of Coed-hill joins the farms of Mr. Loughor and Mr. Watts on both——

42,220. Have you read this, "He has made me no other offer since then?"—No, I had missed that out. He has made me no offer since then. The farm of Coed-hill joins the farms of Mr. Loughor and Mr. Watts on both of which Mr. Bassett had tried to prevent me from getting employment, and on one of which he did prevent me. On January the 31st I received a letter from D. W. Davies, Esq., J.P., of Maes-y-ffrwd, Ton-y-pandy of which the following is a copy: " To Ben Maddy.—Mr. Williams and myself " accept your terms for catching the rabbits on " Llansannor estate. If possible, should like " you to start Thursday. Have sent a letter " by Mr. Morgan to Hill informing him, and " also keep the account of the number killed. " Yours, &c., D. W. Davies." Mr. Davies and Mr. Williams took the shooting over Llansannor estate from Mr. Alexander. I do not know his agent, but he rented the shooting of Sir Joseph Spearman. He had been acting as auctioneer, selling part of the estate. He rented the shooting of Sir Joseph Spearman, and sub-letted it to Mr. Alexander of Cardiff. Mr. Williams took the shooting over Llansannor estate from Mr. Alexander, the agent of the estate, who, I believe, rented it from his principal. Messrs. Davies and Williams paid Mr. Alexander 130*l.* for the shooting from November the 14th to the 1st of the coming May. I do not know what rent Mr. Alexander paid his principal. As there was so much bother about the rabbits, Messrs. Davies and Williams resolved to give it up. At the time I went there to catch the rabbits, I offered them 50*l.* for the right to catch the rabbits, but I was stopped from having it by the agent, Mr. Alexander.

42,221. How do you prove that?—Well, I will prove it later on. It is coming a little bit before the other, but I shall be able to prove it to you as I go on. And at last Messrs. Davies and Williams were constrained to abandon the whole affair to the agent, Mr. Alexander, to whom they had paid 130*l.*, for the sum of 5*l.*

42,222. What do you mean by that. I do not quite understand that?—It is like this. I will explain it to you. They took the shooting on the 14th November, and on the 20th March they gave it up; they were forced to; they employed me. I offered them 50*l.* for it from the 1st February to the 1st May. When I went there I was only there three or four or five days. I cannot exactly say, till I was stopped. Through that the rabbits burrowed in the ground, and they could not get shooting, and they employed me to catch them, and through the bother with the keepers and Mr. Alexander they gave up the place for the paltry sum of 5*l.* after giving 130*l.* for the shooting from November to May. They gave it up for 5*l.*, and through my being stopped I could not be employed on the place. On the Wednesday or Thursday following the receipt of the letter by me from Mr. Davies, I went to the Llansannor estate, and commenced to catch the rabbits. On the very first day I was ordered to leave by the keeper in the employ of Mr. Alexander, the agent.

42,223. Do you know what his name was?—Hill his name is. And on the next day and the two or three succeeding days I was peremptorily ordered off by the keeper, because I had given evidence. The keeper told me that he was obeying the orders of Mr. Alexander. Of course I refused to leave as I had been employed by Mr. Davies. On the fourth or fifth day of my being there I received a telegram from Mr. Davies asking me to leave as Mr. Alexander would not have me to catch rabbits on the estate.

42,224. Have you got that telegram?—No, I have lost it. I did have it, but I did not think anything more of it at the time, so I did not keep it.

42,225. I want to ask you one question before you go any further. Was there in the telegram any reason given?—Nothing. I had a letter following it.

42,226. But in the telegram there was nothing?—The telegram came as this:—" Maddy stop catching for the present," with the initials of the sender. That was all that was on the telegram. Shortly after the keeper came and told me to leave, and said that if I would not go, he had Mr. Alexander's order to fetch a policeman and eject me off the place.

42,227. Was that Hill?—Hill told me that. I then left on the same day, but later I received a letter from Mr. Davies, of which the following is a copy. This is the original (producing same):—" Maes-y-ffrwd, Ton-y-pandy, February " 6th, 1894.—To Ben Maddy. I have this " morning received a letter from Mr. D. T. " Alexander, and on the other side I send you a " copy of it, and under the circumstances I " think you had better stop killing rabbits at " once as I do not wish to have any unpleasant- " ness with him, although I very much doubt " his power in the matter. Yours truly, D. W. " Davies."

42,228. That is quite right. You have handed in the letter?—Then the enclosed letter is this—" 5, High Street, Cardiff——"

42,229. That is handed in too: you have handed in both these letters?—Yes. " Dear Sir, " Hill has just come in to see me from Llan- " sannor, and he informed me that Ben Maddy " is on the ground killing the rabbits, and that " he declined to leave the premises. I have " consequently instructed him to return and to " go into Cowbridge to-morrow morning, and " to take out a summons against Maddy for " trespass. I do not know whether or not you " are a party to what he is doing, and if so, I " would point out to you that you are rendering

" yourself liable to a very serious charge, and " would advise you at once telegraphing instruc- " tions to Maddy to desist. Please do not fail " to give this matter your immediate attention, " otherwise the consequences may be very " serious. Yours faithfully, D. T. Alexander." Hill is Mr. Alexander's gamekeeper, who ordered me so repeatedly to leave, and Mr. Alexander gave evidence at Cowbridge respecting the manorial rights of Lord Bute. I had been employed on the farms of the Penllyne estate—— 42,231. I want to ask you one question. You say " The farmers informed me they could not " put me on because they should offend the " landlord, Mr. Homfray, who is Mr. Bassett's " nephew." Can you give the names of any of the farmers who told you that?—Yes, in the first place there was Thomas Radcliffe of Great House Farm, in the parish of Penllyne, the first man I went to after I had been giving evidence, where I had been catching for at least 20 years regularly, only barring my giving a few days ferreting to some outsider. I was the regular catcher.

42,230. Whose is the Penllyne estate?—Captain Homfray is the landlord—for many years catching rabbits. But after giving evidence at Cardiff I was instantly stopped. The first time I went to where I had gone regularly before that, the farmer told me he could not employ me. The tenant farmers informed me that they could not put me on because they should offend the landlord, Mr. Humphreys (who is Mr. Bassett's nephew), because I had been giving evidence before the Commissioners. This is the general reply I have at all or nearly all the farms where I used to be constantly employed. The tenants say they are afraid to employ me lest they should offend their landlords.

See 50,753.

42,232. What was the rate of pay that you received when you were put on to catch rabbits for the different landlords or farmers?—Well, it is like this, as I could agree with the farmers generally; I generally got 4*s.* a dozen, and in other cases I have done it, whether I broke the law or not, I have caught on shares; I have given so much for a week's catching on some occasions as I could agree with the farmer; 4*s.* a dozen is my general rule for catching rabbits.

42,233. They gave you 4*s.* for catching a dozen rabbits and the rabbits to be left behind?—The farmers to have the rabbits, and I have caught for their giving me half the rabbits for my catching.

42,234. Are you generally paid before you catch the rabbits or after?—After, because then I would hardly know how many dozens I would get.

42,235. Then what was the reason in your mind that Mr. Bassett gave you a sovereign before you had caught any rabbits?—Well, I do not know, but it is like this: I have been around there now since the Ground Game Act came into force in 1881, I believe, and I have never had an offer of work or a sovereign so cheap as that. I told Mr. Bassett on March

Chairman—continued.

Fair Day, at Cowbridge, that I was going to give evidence against him at Carmarthen, and I received the letter on the Thursday week after, I believe. I thought it was something to tempt me from not coming to give evidence before your Lordship and the Commission.

42,236. If you had caught any rabbits would you have taken that sovereign as part payment of the rabbits that you caught?—Oh no. The sovereign was given me for my trouble to go and see him that day; that is what he told me.

42,237. That sovereign was given to you——? For the trouble of going to see him that day; that he told me.

42,238. That sovereign was given to you as a present for the trouble of going to see him a distance of two miles?—Yes. I have a letter here. It is the authority I had from Mr. D. W. Davies, J.P., for the right of going to the Llansannor estates to catch his rabbits. I omitted to bring it out in the first instance (The original was handed in.)

42,239. I will read the letter. " Maes-y-ffrwd, " Ton-y-pandy, Glam. January 30th, 1894. " To Ben Maddy, Mr. Williams and myself accept " your terms for catching the rabbits on Llan- " sannor estate, if possible should like you to " start Thursday, have sent a letter by Mr. " Morgan to Hill informing him, and also to " keep the account of the number killed. Yours " &c., D. W. Davies"?—I should just like to state to your Lordship that I saw Mr. D. W. Davies yesterday week at Ton-y-pandy at Maes-y-ffrwd, his residence. He told me that they were forced to give up the shooting for this sum of 5*l.*, and I thought perhaps, being as they would give it up, that Mr. Alexander of Cardiff would rent it from them on to the 1st of May. I went to Cardiff on the Saturday and went to Mr. Alexander's office and I saw him and I stated to him what the conversation had been between me and Mr. D. W. Davies, and I asked him if he had the rabbits to rent for the short period from then to the 1st of May. He said no, he intended letting them with the house, if possible, that is on the ground, and he says, " For who do you want to rent them?". I said, " For Ben Maddy the rabbit-catcher of Penllyne." He said, " That is all settled; he shan't have them at any price." That was on Saturday week to-day.

Mr. Grove.

42,240. Which Mr. Alexander was that?—D. T. Alexander of Cardiff. [The Commissioners conferred.]

Chairman.

42,241. The Commissioners having heard your statements will consider them carefully and will if on consideration your allegations seem to present a primâ facie case, lay the matter before the Public Prosecutor?—Thank you, my Lord. There are a few instances, if you will allow me time, about the danger of keepers. Now, I am continually insulted by keepers, and I should think there is a great want of improvement in the Ground Game Act.

42,242. I do not think you need go into insults of keepers?—Well, my Lord, there is no chance for me as a rabbit catcher with the tenant farmers in any way to catch the rabbits where they are in such numerous quantities; the law does not allow you to put traps above ground. One man cannot catch them all with long nets because there is not another man allowed to go with him; the keepers are so jealous of men like me, a rabbit-catcher, that they will invent any lie to get a prosecution.

42,243. You had better leave your evidence as it is, I think?—It is hard lines on me. I do not believe that I will try to catch any more if I can get a living in any other way because of that. I have been persecuted wilfully through lies of keepers, being as I could not have anybody with me as a witness on the ground.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

42,244. Is this statement which we have in your handwriting?—Not in my handwriting. I have a letter there which I wrote to Mr. Bassett as I was coming here to-day before your Lordship and the Commission. [Handing in letter.]

Chairman.

42,245. Will you sign the statement which you yourself read to us. Put on it—"I certify this statement to be correct, Ben Maddy." [The witness did so.] This letter has not been read—"Graig, Penllyne, April 19th, 1894. R. T. "Bassett, Esq.—Sir, a line to inform you that I "am going to Carmarthen on Saturday to give "evidence against you, and to clear myself as "you said that I had told an untruth at Cardiff "before when I told the truth, so I think that "it is only fair for me to clear myself. I remain, "your obedient servant, B. Maddy."

The Assistant Secretary.

A telegram has been handed in to me by Mr. Vincent who has received it from Mr. Bassett.

Chairman.

42,246. "The Secretary of the Welsh Land "Commission from Mr. Bassett. Only heard "this morning that Maddy gives evidence to-"day. If I am asked please say I am in London, "Bassett." That last letter of Maddy's is dated the 19th April?—Yes, on Thursday I wrote that letter.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID LONG PRICE re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

Examination continued from Qu. 40,975.

42,247. You live at Talley, and you are a solicitor and a land agent, steward of the Crown (copyhold) manor of Talley, county treasurer for Carmarthenshire, and clerk to justices, and that you also own and farm some land of your own?—Yes, my Lord.

42,248. What estates do you represent?—Only the Tanrallt estate at present for this purpose.

42,249. Belonging to whom?—Mr. St. Vincent Peel, but I have been asked to give evidence as to the Edwinsford estates which were formerly under my management.

42,250. I understand you mean to confine yourself entirely to the evidence before the time that Mr. Drummond came in as agent?—That is so, excepting where I may mention some little incidents that have come to my knowledge since, which I will specify.

42,251. Whose evidence do you particularly wish to rebut?—Would your Lordship allow me to take that first of all?

42,252. Yes; who was it that spoke to that estate?—I have been asked to give some explanation as to the evidence of John Jones, tenant farmer, Penlan, Llansawel. I think it will be more convenient if you will allow me to read my own evidence in chief first. It will come before the Commission in a more intelligible form.

42,253. Very well. Then you will give your own evidence about the Edwinsford estate first. You will take Sir James Drummond's estate and then you are going to take Mr. St. Vincent Peel's estate I understand next?—I do not propose to offer any evidence with regard to Mr. St. Vincent Peel's estate.

Chairman—continued.

42,254. You only represent his estate, but you wish to say something about the estate of Sir James Drummond?—That is so.

42,255. You were agent to Sir James Drummond up to 1890?—To the end of 1889.

42,256. Then will you kindly tell us what you wish to say?—In the latter partof the last century my grandfather was appointed agent of the Edwinsford estates, then the property of Sir James Hamlyn Williams, the great grandfather of the present owner. Sir James Hamlyn Williams died in 1829, and his son the late Sir James Williams succeeded to the estates, which were then under the management of my father, who had succeeded his father, who died in 1815, in the agency. Previous to 1829 the rents of the estate were very unequal, many farms being let at very trifling rents, while a considerable number of the larger farms were let on leases for three lives at "war prices," the rents being substantially at the same mark as they are now. The effect of these leases was disastrous, as when they fell in from time to time the buildings were, with one or two exceptions, simply in ruins, and required to be and were entirely rebuilt. On the accession of the late Sir James Williams in 1829 the rents were re-adjusted on a valuation made in 1830 by the late Mr. D. Jones Lewis of Gilfach. Dairying was then one of the principal resources of the farmers in this part of the county, and one of the bases of Mr. Lewis' valuation was that a lb. of butter and a lb. of cheese should produce one shilling. The buildings on the estates generally were then of the poorest character, being almost all straw-thatched, which thatch was kept up by the tenants. On the accession of Sir James Williams he at once commenced rebuilding, and very large sums were laid out year by year continuously until his death in 1861, a period of 32 years. During the same period he continuously employed a head drainer with three or four assistant labourers in draining. All these works of building and draining were done wholly at his expense, except that the tenants did the haulage without payment beyond an allowance for their expenses when their teams were from home. No interest was charged on any of these outlays, nor has any been charged on the subsequent outlays for both building and draining, except some trifling sums in draining in the last three and four years of Sir James Williams' life, and which interest ceased on Lewis and Morgan's valuation coming into effect. Prior to this valuation the tenants were obliged under their agreements to deliver at Edwinsford certain specified 'duty' payments of coal, lime, and poultry, and they were also bound to grind all their corn at the estate mills. These duties and obligations were also abolished at Lewis and Morgan's valuation. On the death of Sir James Williams in 1861 the estates, then under my management, were valued by Messrs. Frederick Lewis and William Morgan. This valuation was modified in several instances by me, but it was considered to be unequal, and in 1877–8, on the occasion of Sir James Drummond attaining his majority, I valued the estates myself. I did not interfere with Messrs. Lewis and Morgan's valuation in a large number of instances, but I reduced their figures in some and increased them in others, the net result being a small increase. At the time I valued the estates in 1877–8 the values of farming produce were almost, if not quite, at the highest point they have ever reached, and were greatly higher than when Lewis and Morgan valued in 1862. From that time up to the date of my ceasing to act as agent for the estates in 1889, I reduced several of the rents, and I am informed that some small reductions have since been made. Subsequent to 1861 considerable outlying portions of the estates were sold, and other lands of large extent from time to time bought. The rents of these purchased estates were fixed by valuation at the time of their acquisition and practically remain unchanged, or if changed, I believe the change has been always in reduction. I have gone carefully through the estate documents, and I have compared the present rentals of the original portion—the main portion—of the estates with those fixed in 1830–1. The figures show as the ultimate result of the two last valuations an increase in the rentals of the lands in the parish of Caio of about 17½ per cent.; the lands in the parish of Llansawel of about 17½ per cent.; the lands in the parish of Talley of about 17½ per cent., giving a general—almost equal — average increase in each parish. This increase has, however, been materially lessened on these estates by allowances of 10 to 15 per cent., made from 1889 to the present time, and of which Mr. Drummond has already laid the particulars before your Lordship. During the period, within my own recollection, only few changes have been made in tenancies. I have always done all I could to avoid any changes of tenants as much as possible, as I have found from experience that the costs attending a new entry are seldom less than half a year's rent, and often amount to more. There are no existing farming leases on the estates, nor has there been any application for such, and the agreements are much more liberal than those generally in use on English estates, but as they are, they are simply dead letters, and there are not, I believe, six tenants on the estates who do not contravene them every year up to the present day. Previous to the passing of the Ground Game Act there was, and always had been, particularly after 1861, a certain amount of soreness and friction as to game and rabbits, but the tenants more than availed themselves of the powers of that Act, and I have no reason to believe that any dissatisfaction now exists, except perhaps in some few instances of lands adjoining or contiguous to the home covers. The question of the religion of any applicant for any farm was never, during my time, allowed to have any effect in the selection of tenants, nor do I know of any benefit or privilege of the smallest kind which is now, or ever has been, enjoyed by the few Churchmen on the estates. The buildings on the estates are now generally in good order, and will compare very favourably with those on the principal estates in this part of the county, but no doubt there is still room for improvement, especially having regard to the accommodation of farm servants, sanitary arrangements, and further and better dairy accommodation, having especial regard to the great improvement now being effected in the system of dairying. The position of labourers in this part is better in all respects than it has ever been in living memory, but there is a scarcity of labour." That is all the evidence I propose to offer with regard to the Edwinsford estate. Perhaps it would be convenient for me to now remark upon the evidence which was given before with reference to the Edwinsford estate.

42,?57. I should like to ask you one question before you go on as regards Mr. Drummond's evidence. He told us that cases of sub-letting by tenant farmers were common on the Edwinsford estate, that he thought they were very objectionable, and that in cases land was charged two and three times over as much to some tenants as was paid by the direct tenant. Was that the custom on the estate during your management?—Mr. Drummond was not quite accurate. There were very few instances of sub-letting on the estate at all, but those that had existed had been done away with in my time, with the exception, I think, of two or three farms.

42,258. Then most of the cases to which Mr. Drummond refers, and which he deplores, must have crept in during his time?—Oh, no, they existed also. I was aware of them, but I was not aware until a very recent period of the terms under which some of the sub-lettings were made. There always had been sub-lettings I can say of my own knowledge for more than half a century.

42,259. He gave me certainly to understand that there were more than two or three of these small portions of land sub-let?—There are two or three farms of which portions are sub-let.

42,260. I understand. There are only two or three farms on which the practice prevails?—Yes, at present. There had been in my time a very much larger number, but they had been discontinued and either added to the farm or else taken away from the farm and let directly to the tenants.

42,261. Is it a practice of which you approve?—No, I disapprove of it strongly, excepting in so far as it can be utilised on large farms to enable the tenant to have a certain amount of control over the labourers necessary for working his farm.

42,262. Do you consider that the tenant farmer should have control over the labourers who work for him?—I do.

42,263. Then will you proceed with your statement. What do we come to now?—The evidence given at Llansawel by some witnesses called there.

42,264. Whom do you refer to first?—First of all John Jones, Penlan. Your Lordship will notice, he says, "They took away 16 acres of land, the best I had." There were 16 acres of land taken from his farm which was enclosed within the wall of a rabbit warren, but so far from its being the best it is about as poor as you can find, excepting a little bit of the lower part of it, and, in fact, runs up to a shingle on the rock. The value of the 16 acres is certainly well within 5*l.*

See 40,144–40,240.

42,265. I want to call your attention to that. He says, "They took away 16 acres of land; the best I had." But then it was qualified by words which you have not added: "for a sheep walk?"—Yes, so it was.

42,266. He did not say it was the best agricultural land he had, but it was the best land he had for a sheep walk. Now, is that the case or not?—No, I do not consider it by any means the best land he had for a sheep walk. On the contrary there are scores of acres of land on Penlan hill that are better than that—infinitely better—the land lying on the hill between his farm and Edwinsford. The greater portion of it is good, sound land, which would carry sheep of a fair size.

42,267. As regards the question of convenience, is it very convenient for a sheep walk?—

Chairman—continued.

It is a farm that is very unsuitable for any great use in the way of sheep. It contains such a large amount of wet, undrained land, that sheep practically would not live on it, except as a flying flock.

42,268. This was high and dry land?—This piece of land was high and dry.

42,269. Therefore it was good for sheep?—It was good for sheep, no doubt, to that extent.

42,270. Then it may be an exaggeration to say it was the best he had for a sheep walk but you would not contradict or rebut the statement that it was good for the sheep walk?—I do not contradict that, but I wish to add further that it was not included in the calculation upon which his rent was based in the valuation.

42,271. We will go into that later, if you please. All you say is that it may be a slight exaggeration to say that it was the best he had?—That is so.

42,272. But it was good for a sheep walk?—It was useful.

42,273. Useful and good for a sheep walk?—Well, I cannot say it was good. There was nothing good about it.

42,274. It was useful land for a sheep walk, and it was taken away?—Yes.

42,275. Now, as to the next thing?—He goes on to say that no allowance was made in the rent. The only explanation I have to give of that is that the cow-house, the stable, and chaff-room were rebuilt after this was done, at an expense of somewhere from 150*l.* to 200*l.*, upon which no interest has been charged.

42,276. Then, practically, interest was charged on these improvements by the rent being kept up to the old value?—To the extent of 5*l.*, that is all.

42,277. 2½ per cent. on the improvements was charged?—That is what has happened really, exactly.

42,278. But the fact remains that though the 16 acres (he is accurate in that) for the sheep walk were taken away, no abatement was made in the rent?—No, excepting in so far as you may consider it an abatement that a couple of hundred pounds was laid out on the farm.

42,279. We do not consider that an abatement. He is accurate there?—Very well; I am asked to state these matters. It is for your Lordship to judge about it.

See 40,802

belonging to Sir James Drummond, and he names those farms with great fairness and correctness, but he mentioned one—Goleugoed-ganol, which was not then a portion of the Edwinsford estate, and therefore ought not to have been included in any comparative statement.

42,281. Then you wish that Goleugoed-ganol farm taken out?—No, I only want to explain. As a matter of fact, there are 14 farms belonging to the Edwinsford estate, and the result is that there is an omission of the comparative rents of four of them.

42,282. You wish to put in the whole estate?—If you put in the whole estate, which I will put in directly, it shows an increase of 17½ per cent. as against Mr. Thomas Williams' increase of 22½ per cent. I believe it was entirely an oversight on his part, or it probably resulted from his not having proper means of information at his disposal.

42,283. Then what is between you is that there are 10 farms practically belonging to Sir James Drummond, on which the rent has gone up over 20 per cent., the others having been reduced, and it brings down the whole total to 17½ per cent.?—No; his figures cannot be correct, because I have the comparative figures, which I will submit to you, which are taken from actual rentals in 1830 and at the present time, and I also give the intermediate figures. Therefore, I say these figures cannot be correct, but I imagine that he has fallen into error from not having taken out all the farms.

42,284. As I understand, he took these rents from the rate-books?—I suppose so.

42,285. Then may we take it from you that the rents in the rate-books were right?—Not always, by any means.

42,286. It must be one thing or the other: either the rate-books are right or they are wrong. Either this gentleman is right in his calculation or not. He took it from the rate-book, and it is either right or it is wrong?—I am sorry to say it is a matter of everyday occurrence to find that rents are incorrectly stated in the rate-books.

42,287. Then what the Commission are to understand is, that your estate-books and the rate-books do not always agree?—Not always, by any means.

42,288. You do not dispute the fact that, according to the best means he had of ascertaining the figures he has given them to us?—I have no doubt that is so.

42,289. You have no doubt that he is right?—I have no doubt he is right according to his means.

See 39,742A.

42,290. Then the question between you is a question of a rise of 17½ per cent. as against 22½ per cent.?—That is so. I have no remark to make on his evidence further than to call attention to that. Then with regard to the evidence of Mr. Thomas Davies of Tynycwm. He says this, "Wion Farm.—Landlord: Sir James "Drummond. After the tenant had carried "everything towards the new buildings, the

"rent was raised to 12*l.*, adding (as an excuse "for the advance) a field to the farm. The "field is valued at 6*l.* Thus the rent was really "advanced 6*l.* on the tenant's work, who is over "80 years old. The tenant is the most hard-"working and sober man that ever lived." In that statement I fully agree as to the hard work and sobriety of the tenant. The impression that it seems to me this paragraph is likely to give is that this was an isolated instance of an advance of rent. This farm was valued at the same time as the rest of the estate.

42,291. What year was that?—In 1878. An additional field was added to it, and the rent was fixed at its present rent. It has not been altered at all since 1878, and since then I built a new dwelling-house there and a new cow-house at an expense certainly very little short of 300*l.* As a matter of fact, the tenant has become a very old man. He is unable to do justice to his farm, and during the time of my management he was simply allowed to remain there out of consideration for his old age and long tenancy. The farm is, as a matter of fact, seriously deteriorating in his hands every day.

42,292. Then the extra 6*l.*, I understand, was put on this farm on account of some repairs being made on it?—It was not. The extra 6*l.* arose on the new valuation of the farm generally, not with reference to the field that was put on it at all.

42,293. Then the cultivation could not have been very bad in that year if it was worth 6*l.* more than it had been previously?—But that was in 1878.

42,294. That man was the tenant then, was he not?—He was the tenant then.

42,295. Then I think he is right that the rent was really advanced 6*l.* on the tenant's work in 1878. The farm was in better cultivation, and worth more money, and 6*l.* more was put on to it?—Yes, it was worth more money than it had been before, but this tenant had only come there a short time before this from another farm on the estate where he had spent all his life.

42,296. Then there is really very little between you. It was in a better state of cultivation, and it is fair to assume that, he being a good tenant, the farm was worth 6*l.* a year more?—But there was a large expenditure made there for which there was no interest.

42,297. We put expenditure on one side. There must be either one thing or the other understood between us; either you charge a percentage for the improvements you were good enough to make, or you do not. The tenant has to pay either way, whether you charge it as interest on improvements or for improvements on the farm itself. It is for you to decide; but you agree with this statement that it was put up 6*l.*?—Yes, in 1878.

42,298. You say it is on account of new buildings. He says it was on account of improved cultivation?—The next statement I wish to notice is the one almost immediately following that. He says, "There has been an "increase in the rents in the neighbourhood of "Llansawel on an average of 25 per cent. "during the last 20 years." He follows that by giving a statement of a certain number of farms in the three adjoining parishes of Talley, Cayo, and Llansawel which he has selected, apparently because they show the greatest fluctuations in the rent. The figures put in the column headed "Rent" are identical with the figures in my rental for 1830, and therefore they do not represent an increase in the rents during the last 20 years, but rather an increase in the rents during the last 64 years. That, I think, is a very different thing.

Chairman—continued.

42,299. I suppose he took the rents of 20 years ago?—I have not the least idea what he took.

42,300. But do you deny that these were the rents 20 years ago. Are they accurate, or are they not?—Oh, 20 years ago the rents were very much more than they are put down there. Many of them had been raised.

42,301. They were higher 20 years ago than they are put down in this statement?—Yes.

42,302. We were told that these were all taken from the rate-books too?—I have no doubt they were.

42,303. Then it comes to this, that the rate books are not dependable in any way?—I do not think they are. You may get certain averages from them, but the rate-books in the country districts are very often incorrect, I am sorry to say.

42,304. Are the farms rated more or less, according to your experience. Would they be rated for more or less than the actual rent that would be paid to the landlord?—Generally less.

42,305. That is your experience?—Yes. Then, my lord, I wish to call your attention to the figures given by him in the column headed, "Advanced to"—meaning the present rents. The first item is correct. The second item should be 100*l.* instead of 110*l.* The third item is correct. With regard to the fourth item, that farm was one of the farms on which the old leases that I have referred to existed. The old lease expired in my time. The houses were absolutely ruinous. I pulled them down, and rebuilt the whole homestead, including house, barn, cow-house, stables, pig-styes, offices, new gardens, and yards, and everything else on an entirely new site, and if that was valued—I have not taken out the figures—but the amount expended on that farm could not have been less than 800*l.*

42,306. You charged interest on that?—I consider that the difference between the 29*l.* in 1830 and 50*l.* in 1894, with an expenditure meanwhile of 800*l.* is not a very advantageous one for the landlord.

42,307. I only wanted to know the custom of the country. You consider that it would be fair to charge the tenant interest on those buildings?—I consider that a farm with proper buildings on it is worth more money than a farm with a lot of ruins on it.

42,308. Everybody would agree to that, but the fact of a landlord putting his buildings into proper repair justifies a rise in rent you say?—So far as the value of the land permits it.

42,309. You put it up to the greatest value?—Well, to a reasonable value. I do not look upon those values as the top values by any means.

42,310. You do not look upon them as the highest values, but you think that when a landlord puts the buildings into proper repair then he is justified in asking more rent for his farm?—I think he is justified in asking the full value for the farm. When I say that I do not think these the top rents, I think that they are a great deal too high for the present prices that we have to deal with.

42,311. You consider these rents too high for present prices?—Oh, no doubt, for present prices. Assuming that they are to continue as they are at present I think that rents must inevitably come down.

42,312. Do I understand you to say you consider Sir James Drummond's estate too highly rented according to present prices?—I think every estate in the county is too highly rented according to present prices.

42,313. That is very valuable evidence. You consider every estate in the county of Carmarthen is too highly rented in the present state of things?—Yes, under present prices.

42,314. Now will you proceed?—The next item of 12*l.* advance is right, and there is no explanation on that. The next item, another advance of 12*l.*, is a similar case to the previous one excepting that it is a larger farm, and that the outlay was very much larger.

42,315. I do not think there is any necessity to go right through them unless you have something particular to point out with regard to them; just point out anything you wish to say?—There are two things I wish to call attention to as showing the incorrectness of this. Ffosgotta, rent 100*l.*, advanced to 143*l.* As a matter of fact the rent of Ffosgotta as far back as 1829 was 100*l.*, and it is now and has been for many years 132*l.*

42,316. Was it 20 years ago 132*l.*?—Yes.

42,317. Twenty years ago it was 132*l.* instead of 100*l.*?—It was let for a period of about three years several years ago for 143*l.* under these circumstances. I raised the rent——

42,318. I do not think there is any necessity to explain the circumstances; you say it was so; do you think there is any necessity to go into it?—As a matter of fact I only wish to quote it as an instance showing the incorrectness of the rate-book, assuming those figures are taken from the rate-book.

42,319. But we can take it from you that the landlords have not represented the full rent in the rate-book. Is that what you wanted to suggest?—Certainly. I do not suggest that in this case, because I know the rent is bona fide 132*l.*

42,320. We take it from the rate-book that it is 100*l.*?—No; the rate-book makes out that it is 143*l.*

42,321. And you have agreed that it was 143*l.* during three years?—Yes, but that was 50 years ago. It was only for a period of three years many years ago. It was reduced back to 143*l.* Therefore it cannot be a faithful transcript of the rate-book of the present day. But in order to show Mr. Davies' incorrectness or carelessness I call your attention to his own farm.

42,322. Which farm is that?—Tynycwm. In the same table he has stated the original rent correctly at 80*l.*, omitting to state that it was 80*l.* 64 years ago, and he states that his present rent is 91*l.* As a matter of fact his present rent is, and has been for many years, 98*l.*; he has done himself an injustice to the extent of 7*l.* a year.

42,323. I do not think there is any reason to complain of that?—I do not complain of that. I merely mention it to show that I am afraid his figures are not very accurate.

42,324. You might perhaps know this: is it rated at 91*l.*?—Indeed I do not know. If it is it is not rated according to the rent; it has been 98*l.* ever since 1878, and he is one of the principal farmers in the parish, and is constantly concerned in parochial matters. He is one of the guardians of the parish now and a very proper one too.

42,325. The only difference is that it is now 98*l.* instead of 91*l.*, that is the difference between you. It was 80*l.* 20 years ago?—It was 80*l.* 64 years ago.

42,326. And it was 80*l.* 20 years ago?—No.

42,327. What was it 20 years ago?—In 1863 it was 91*l.* 10*s.*

42,328. But it is 1894 now. What was it in 1874?—91*l.* 10*s.*

42,329. Then there is a mistake there?—There are very great differences between your rent-book and the rate-book apparently?—My books are bound to be right. They have been audited by a professional auditor.

42,330. Is there anything more?—In the same page he refers to a farm of the name of Cilwenau Uchaf. That was one of the farms which I have referred to in my evidence-in-chief as having been purchased. The rent of all those purchased farms was ascertained at the time of their purchase by valuation by Mr. Davies of Frood Vale, and they have remained without alteration, except where they have been occasionally reduced, as fixed by him up to the present time, and therefore I have not included them in my comparative statement.

42,331. You do not wish to speak about them?—Nothing beyond the mentioning the fact.

42,332. Then let us go to the next thing?—Under the heading of rents Mr. Thomas Davies says: "I shall give evidence respecting glebe farms "in the parish of Talley." I wish to call your attention to that, I am churchwarden of the parish of Talley, and have been so for 40 years. On the occasion of this vacancy I was one of the sequestrators.

42,333. We do not want much explanation of that. Will you just tell us what is wrong in the evidence, as time is getting on. We do not want to have to refuse evidence, but we must take it as shortly as possible?—I was endeavouring to make it as short as possible. I must read this first.

42,334. What does this refer to?—The statement is this: "18 years ago, when the late Rev. "David Rees came into the living, the valuer ap- "pointed by the Ecclesiastical authorities valued "the dilapidations on the estate from the former "incumbent at 300*l.*, which was paid by the "widow."

42,335. Is that right?—It is right as regards the amount which was paid, but it goes on to state that the Rev. David Rees put the money in his pocket. It is absolutely untrue. The money was laid out under the direction of the diocesan surveyor, and he certified that it had been laid out.

42,336. Have you got the certificate from the diocesan surveyor?—I have not got it here, but I have seen it myself.

42,337. I am afraid we cannot take hearsay evidence, or what you have seen, that will not do?—I think you might take my evidence to disprove a statement that a clergyman has stolen 300*l.*, when I say that the money was laid out under my personal knowledge.

42,338. There have been great difficulties about these hearsay statements being accepted. Mr. Vincent yesterday refused to accept statements under those circumstances, and I am afraid we cannot have any rebutting evidence on this unless the papers are handed in.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. May I suggest that what this witness has seen is eminently hearsay within his own knowledge, like the evidence which was admitted yesterday. What a man has seen is very much within his own knowledge. What Mr. Vincent objected to was what a witness had been told.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. I have no objection to this, my Lord, as long as strictly hearsay evidence is excluded.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. This is what he has seen.

Mr. Llewellyn Williams. Yes. Only let it be understood that strictly hearsay evidence is not admitted.

Chairman.

42,339. Very well. Then will you proceed?—I merely state that that statement is entirely incorrect, that the money paid to the vicar was entirely laid out, every shilling of it.

42,340. Of that you have no personal knowledge?—I have personal knowledge of that myself. I only wish to remove an imputation from the memory of a dead man. Then there was a statement by him under the head of Maesteile Pencarreg, "Thomas Thomas, tenant "of this farm, having a peat-house which was "nearly falling, cut an alder tree (pren gwer- "nen) for the sole purpose of keeping this house "up, which was the duty of the landlord. The "value of the wood was 1*s.* at the very outside, "but he had to pay 5*l.* to his landlord for "cutting it." The witness stated at the time that he did not believe the 5*l.* reached the landlord or the agent. I was then the agent for that estate, and this is the first time I ever heard of this. I do not believe a word of it.

42,341. You did not get the 5*l.*?—No, I did not. I believe it is an untruth, because the tenant of Maesteile was an old valued tenant that I was on the most intimate terms with—he was a client of my own, and I am quite sure that he would not have submitted to such an act of extortion without coming to me.

42,342. Anyhow, you do not agree with that, and if it is to be rebutted he will come here again?—I do not think I need trouble your Lordship further. Time is short, and I am leaving some little things, but I will go back now, if you please. I do not know whether you would like me to give any evidence as to manorial matters.

42,343. Is this Carmarthenshire evidence?—Yes.

42,344. Manors in Carmarthenshire?—Manors in Carmarthenshire. I may mention at once that I am Deputy Steward of the only copyhold manor in Carmarthenshire. I do not think any evidence of that kind has been laid before the Commission.

Mr. Seebohm.

42,345 We are in this position: this is the 51st sitting, and we meet here for Carmarthenshire evidence. I would submit that the evidence of the town or district should be taken before that, much as we should like to hear it?—I shall be very happy to submit it at some later date for your information. Then, if you please, I ask to make a few general remarks as to the depression in the county.

Chairman.

42,346. You have told us that all the rents are too high to begin with?—I have, my Lord, but I do not wish one part of my evidence to go without it is accompanied by the rest I do not think it is fair to myself.

42,347. If you please?—The depression is general, but has not, in my opinion, reached, nor is it likely to reach, a distressful stage, and it is felt most severely by the larger farmers. The smaller holdings (comprising the great bulk of the farmers of this county) have fared better owing (1) to their being able to work their farms with little, often no payment for labour; and (2) to the fact that the depression in prices has affected them only to the extent of their cash payments. The farmers of this district have always adopted the system of 'mixed farming,' and have therein comparatively 'found salvation.' In all these years of depression butter horses, pigs, and poultry have almost continuously commanded remunerative prices, and these means of providing for cash payments have not failed, and inasmuch as the ordinary farmer of this class obtains from his farm produce most of what is necessary for the maintenance of his household, it follows that his general actual loss is limited to the effect of the low existing prices of cattle, sheep, and wool as sources of his cash income. In my opinion the low price of all kinds of grain has but little (if any) injurious effect in this district. In the great majority of cases wheat is only grown to an extent sufficient to provide bread for the family, and comparatively few farmers look to a sale of grain of any kind as a source of income, and a great quantity is bought by numbers in this district for feeding purposes, and foreign barley is largely, and I believe profitably, used for supplementing the rations of cattle of all sorts and ages. Local rates press heavily on farmers, and they complain loudly, but they will not avail themselves of the remedy which lies in their own hands by attending the parish vestries, and by selecting guardians who will act independently in the matter of outdoor relief, which is, in my opinion, extravagantly wasteful. I regret to say that I think farming in this part is, to say the least, not improving. This can, no doubt, in some cases be fairly attributed to want of money, but there are many farmers who could do more in their farms and do not. The agitation on the land question is probably more truly the cause, as farmers have been led to expect great things from legislation, pending which they may think it prudent to rest on their oars. With regard to rents being raised on 'tenant's improvements,' I have seen very few instances, nor have there been any capricious evictions on estates with which I am or have been connected, but cases of hardship have often occurred within my knowledge from change of ownership. When farms have been bought either for occupation by the purchaser or where the rent is fixed pro rata to the purchase money, and this, I think, calls for legislative action to secure compensation for actual improvements made at the cost of the tenant. I consider the Agricultural Holdings Act as practically of little value in this district, and think that a simpler mode of dealing with land tenures should be sought for. I am strongly opposed to the creation of a land court, and I believe such a creation would only result in a series of valuations which would be more likely in the long run (having regard to the great and still continuing demand for land) to raise than to lower land values, and I think any disputes with reference to land tenure would be better arranged by reference to local official referees to be selected in each county. Fixity of tenure has always appeared to me to be almost chimerical, and if its probable effects were fully explained I believe the freeholders and smaller landowners would concur with the larger landowners in opposing it, but I am disposed to think that a great and permanent stimulus might and would be given to the cultivation of the land by the adoption of fixed rents for limited periods."

42,348. Might I ask what period you would suggest as a practical man?—Well, I think it should not be less than seven, and it should not be more than 21.

Mr. Seebohm.

42,349. Subject to abatements or not?—Well, I see no reason why it should not be subject to abatement. I see no reason why a generous man should not help his tenant if he thought he required it. I cannot recall any instance within my own experience of English farmers settling in this part of the county. I have known a good many Scotchmen farming here, but generally they have not succeeded, and their holdings were not benefited by their occupation. On the other hand I know of a great number of Welshmen who have taken English farms in recent years. I have personally recommended a considerable number of them, and in every single case they have been and continue to be successful. Those who were practically acquainted with the position of farmers in these parts prior to the opening of the present existing railways will agree with me in saying that it is almost impossible to describe the great benefits that were then given to the cultivators of land, and I believe that these could be greatly enhanced by the Government undertaking the making of further local lines of light railways. I observe the Chancellor of the Exchequer recently stated in the House of Commons that he considered the making of light railways by moneys advanced on the securities of local rates to be one of the remedies that occurred to him for the present agricultural depression. This boon is apparently to be had for the asking, and if farmers were to press its grant on county councils and Members of Parliament it could no doubt be secured. County councils would probably hesitate to add a possible further burden to the county rates, but I am confidently of opinion that no such burden would result. Almost all the local lines in this part of Wales have been made either on borrowed moneys or have been simply contractor's lines, and in each case they are saddled with nominal capitals which represent the cash value of their construction and equipment multiplied by various figures, and if the capital of those lines was now reduced to a sum fairly representing the cash cost of construction and equipment, I believe there is not one of those lines that would not now be paying a profitable dividend. I also think that some relief could be obtained by the "earmarking" of foreign meat, the sale of which under existing circumstances has a disastrous effect on the price of home-grown beef and mutton.

Chairman.

42,350. May I ask one question. Would you be prepared to go a little bit further, and to suggest anything to prevent cases of hardship in the event of tenant farmers' farms being sold. Is there anything you could suggest to help them in that way?—I think if you had fixity of rents you practically would have it, because in the event of a farm being sold during the currency of the term, the entry rent would form the basis of valuation to begin with, and the tenant could go to the landlord and say, "Please

Chairman—continued.

"give me the capitalised value of the property "in this farm for the remainder of the term, or "if you do not do it we will call in the valuer." I think it would be not enough to make that a first charge on the purchase money.

42,351. We are very much obliged to you for your evidence, which is extremely valuable and interesting?—I have here a comparative statement of the rents. I do not know whether you wish me to put it in.

42,352. Yes, we shall be glad of the information?—Very well.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,353. Do you consider that better accommodation should be provided for farm servants as so many cottages have been pulled down or allowed to fall down?—I think better accommodation is required for farm servants.

42,354. You mean generally in this district?—Speaking generally, yes. The farmers now employ their labour more exclusively in the shape of servants living in the house. They do not employ as many labourers living outdoors as they did in former years.

42,355. No, we find the old cottages are almost all pulled down?—Well, we have no labourers to put into them. If you will send us the labourers we will build the cottages.

42,356. It is again your opinion that the cottages should be let by the farmer and not by the landowner?—I should think on large farms a tenant ought to have a certain control over the cottages on which his labourers live.

42,357. We have had some labourers before us, and their view was that they should always have their cottages from the landlord and not from the farmer?—No doubt I should prefer that if I was a labourer myself.

42,358. But on behalf of the farmers you think that is the better plan?—I do. I think the farmer ought to have a certain control over the men on his farm.

42,359. Do we not take it for granted that a farmer should be provided with facilities to carry on his occupation?—Certainly as far as circumstances will permit that to be done.

42,360. You cannot expect the rent to be paid without?—Not a full rent without proper buildings.

42,361. Is it not possible that more could be produced on many farms if they had these facilities?—I think the produce of most farms in the part of the county that I am personally conversant with could be increased to an enormous extent.

Mr. Grove.

42,362. What year was it when a pound of butter and a pound of cheese were selling for 1*s.*?—1830.

42,363. At the time when your first rents began?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

42,364. Do you think that land has to bear too many burdens?—Well, I have always thought so.

42,365. Then you think that really the traffic on light railways would pay a fair interest if they were properly constructed?—I believe that if light railways were made for cash they would be remunerative at once. I am speaking with the fear of the county council before my eyes, but as county treasurer myself I should not be in the least afraid of seeing a charge on the rates.

Chiarman.

42,366. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Vincent, "Was the 16 acres included in "the valuation on which the rent of John "Jones was based?"—No.

42,367. "Is it not true that the Plas Farm "house, Talley, where it was alleged in evidence "at Llansawel that snow had been seen on one "of the servants' beds, is one of the best houses "in the whole district?"—The farm house itself is, I think, the best farm house on the Edwinsford estate.

42,368. "Is not the farmhouse perfectly sound?"—Perfectly sound I should say.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,369. The evidence was given with regard to the outpremises where the servants sleep?—Oh, the outpremises are not in such good order.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. If I remember rightly it did not refer to Plas at all. It was Mr. Simon Jones, of Plas, who said he had seen that on a certain farm. I do not think it refers to the farm of Plas at all.

Chiarman.

42,370–1. I think we can take it that it was not in the dwelling-house where it was alleged that the snow fell on the beds?—No, I think it was not, as far as my recollection goes.

42,372. I understand you do not contradict the possibility of snow having come in through the roof of one of the outbuildings?—I have not the slightest knowledge on the subject. I do not think the roofs of the outbuildings are all in such a condition that snow might not have come in.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. I wish to point out, in order that you may refer to the notes later on, that this may not be Plas at all.

Chairman.

42,373. Then there are some questions by Mr. Llewelyn Williams. "Do you know that "the tenant of Maesteile told several people that "he had paid John Jones, Banc-y-celwydd, 5*l.* "for cutting the alder tree?"—I have no such knowledge. I never heard of the incident until it was mentioned at Llansawel, and I am bound to say, in fairness to John Jones, that I do not believe it.

42,374. I do not think the second question had better be put. Then, "Has the practice of 'Cil-dwrn' fallen under your notice?"—No.

42,375. You are aware that it exists, I suppose?—I have no personal knowledge of it.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,376. It is not always that the landlord or the agent knows about this "Cil-dwrn" business, is it?—Well, I have never known anything about it, or lent the smallest sanction to it. That is all I have got to say.

Chairman.

We are much obliged to you for coming and giving evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. John Devonald Morse called and examined.

Chairman.

42,377. You are a county councillor, a tenant farmer, and a freeholder?—Yes.

42,378. Where do you live?—Llandawke.

42,379. How far is that from here?—It is six miles below St. Clears.

42,380. How far from Carmarthen?—About 14 or 15 miles.

42,381. Will you kindly read your evidence to the Commissioners, or would you like to have it read?—I will give it myself.

Personal.—On the 11th of October, 1849, I entered the farm of Sarnlas, in the Hamlet and

Chairman—continued.

Parish of Llangan, in the counties of Carmarthen and Pembroke, at a rent of 150*l.* a year. In 1843 the tithes had been commuted, and were paid by the tenant, amounting to 15*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* a year. The rateable value was 110*l.*, exclusive of rates and taxes. At this period times were bad, and farm produce and stock of every description were very low. Labour, however, was cheap. Good strong youths, from 21 to 25 years of age, could be got at 5*l.* a year, and maidservants of the same age at 2*l.* 5*s.* a year. Now they get four times as much, and are not nearly so useful, nor do they put by so much against a rainy day.

Chairman—continued.

In 1852 times improved. The year after 16*l.* 16*s.* was added to the rent, which now stood at 166*l.* 16*s.* till the death of the landlord, which took place in November, 1856. On the 24th December following, the new agent (Mr. D. Aaron) of the new landlord (Mr. Puxley), a grandson of the late landlord, and both Irish, and above 21 years of age, came to me and asked what advance I would give in the rent, as the landlord considered the rent too low. He also said that they intended to take two fields from my place and put them to an adjoining farm, where the agent's sister lived. I strongly opposed this, as I had only recently improved them by draining and manuring. I had also had a new hedge 200 yards long made in order to aid other fields and to provide shelter on the swampy ground. About an acre in each field had been drained. However, in February of next year (1857) Mr. Richard Harvey, of the firm of Messrs. John Harvey and Sons, came and re valued the estate, and on the 7th of March we were called together to hear the result. 13*l.* 4*s.* was again added to my rent, which henceforth stood at 180*l.* a year. I saw a letter from Mr. Harvey to Mr. Puxley, the landlord, advising him to grant leases on the valuation, that there were some superior tenants on the estate, and the farm that I was in was particularly mentioned. For a short time after, things went on quietly, but on the 7th of October, 1858, eighteen months after the re-valuation, the landlord and his agent went over the land together. Three days after, on the 10th, Mr. Puxley himself called and said he wanted me to advance 30*l.* a year. I refused to do so, and then he said I should hear from him again the next day. I did not hear from him, but on the 16th of March following, Mr. Aaron, the agent, served me with a notice to quit on the next 29th September. I intended to make a new hedge in one of the fields which was cut up for oats, and had left a space to indicate where. The agent did his utmost to induce me to make the hedge, and told me I could rely on his word that I should not in any way be disturbed in my holding. I was kept entirely in the dark till, on the 13th of May, I found that my farm as well as others on the estate were advertised to be let by tender. The only condition on which I could get the farm in the following July was at a rent of 317*l.* 10*s.* a year.

Improvements.—In 1849 there were 42 acres produced 68*l.* 15*s.* worth of hay; in 1859, 35 acres produced 220*l.* 10*s.* worth. The process of bringing the land to this state of cultivation was no doubt expensive, but if left alone to enjoy it, the result would have proved remunerative. Of the largest field in the farm—17½ acres—nine acres were in 1849 under seed (hay) and 8½ under corn, both producing together crops to the value of 21*l.* 4*s.* In 1859 all of it was under seed and produced a crop to the value of 150*l.* This field is out of the common run of the farm, it is true, but I had greatly improved the farm all over, chiefly by manuring, draining, making many new and repairing old hedges, and building two small new houses. The drains contained several hundred perches with the gutters all made of stones, which I had to cart for eight miles. I had also to carry all the materials in 1853 for a new kitchen, and had a long distance to go for lime, slates and flags, and in order to keep the work going on the farm had paid for carrying stones for walling 15*l.* In 1856 the dwelling house was repaired, and I had to carry all the materials towards it. There were also gathered on the farm when I left 3,000 loads of soil ready to be mixed with lime, dung, &c. I made no use whatever of artificial manures during the 10 years I was at the farm. I had carried in one year over 1,700 loads. According to the agreement under which I held the farm I could plough 60 acres, but I had only 38 under corn the year I left, and I presume that the reason I was not told before May that I was to leave was to prevent me breaking up any fresh land. Immense quantities of earth and mud had been found in the gripes and ditches. The opening of the gripes, though costly, was very beneficial, for it provided a fall for the stagnant water and so drained it. Sixteen acres having been thus surface drained was trebled in value. The mud, when taken from the gripes and allowed to remain under atmospheric influence for two years, was carted to the field of 17½ acres mentioned previously, which was 560 yards distant with an elevation of 111 feet. It was allowed to remain there for 12 months in a miskin, and then mixed with lime, in the proportion of five tons of lime to 100 tons of mud. This was done because in some portions the field had no more than two inches of soil, so that the application of so much lime carefully mixed with such quantities of rich loam produced results which were truly marvellous, but which I did not enjoy. In 1857, as I already stated, Sarnlas was re-valued; the practical and impartial valuer, Mr. Harvey, putting it at 180*l.* Two years later the landlord and his agent put the rent at 317*l.* 10*s.* I may here state that my landlord, Mr. H. L. Puxley, was brought up for the Established Church, and was now, in 1859, twenty-five years of age, but by virtue of his grandfather's will became possessed of what is called and generally known as the Llangan Estate, near Whitland. His agent, Mr. Aaron, was a country schoolmaster, and he had been at that trade for years in the district of Llanddarog and Abergwili; and was now, in 1859, nearly 50 years of age before he studied land valuing, so it can be easily ascertained what class of land valuers they could be. As a schoolmaster, Aaron was not in the least in advance of his fellows at that time I had also been at a great loss in not having to know the result of the notice before July, as I had in the meantime lost a very good chance of a farm under a considerate landlord. Inducements were held out so that I was allured in such a way by saying that preference should be given to the present tenants. My wife was born in the place, and her ancestors had lived there from time immemorial.

Chairman—continued.

My first landlord was a very strict preserver of game. Under the second the game was also preserved by an Irish gentleman, called Mr. E. Johnstone, and for years game committed sad havoc amongst the crops of hay and corn. Some two years after I left Sarnlas, Mr. Aaron, the agent, came to me saying he was sent by Puxley who wanted to know what rent I would give him for Sarnlas, as they could not go on at all with the tenant. I made no offer. And again on the 12th of June, 1863, he came this time and wanted to know what rent I would give him for Llwyndrysi, another farm on the same estate, which the tenant, Mr. Jones, had taken, four years previously, by tender for 300*l.* being 97*l.* 10*s.* above Mr. Richard Harvey's valuation two years before, but the tenant, Mr. Jones, gave it up this year in order to get a reduction of 50*l.* I made no bid to Mr. Aaron and the result was that the tenant, Mr. Jones, had the reduction he asked for, and had more reductions soon after. I have stated already that the estate in 1859 was advertised to be let by tender, and three of us had left that year, and the five that remained had to advance their rents considerably. The seven farms that were let by tender that year (of the eighth I can give no accurate account) amounted to 605*l.* above Mr. Richard Harvey's valuation two years before, but they were soon reduced, and there is not a single tenant that took them that year on the estate these many years. Mr. Henry L. Puxley unsuccessfully contested the county of Carmarthen in the Conservative interest. The election came off on Tuesday, the 24th November, 1868. Mr. Aaron, his agent, worked hard in order to effect his return, but was sadly disappointed.

Mr. Richard Thomas became tenant in 1851 of the farm adjoining, called Penback. When Mr. Thomas took the farm, I cannot safely say at what rent, but the year after, 1852, the prospect of farmers grew brighter and Mr. Thomas proposed to his landlord, Mr. Puxley, to take the farm at a long lease, providing new model buildings were erected on a certain spot at a rent of 100*l.* a year. Now I beg to state that the adjoining farm of Penback was far superior in value to Sarnlas at the time I entered it, taking it altogether, especially after the proposed modern improvements were carried out (and they were in that year 1852); when Sarnlas with only the dwelling house and a small stable were stone built. The kitchen with dairy joining was of mud walls, with roof thatched with straw, and all the other outbuildings with four cottages were of the same materials, and according to the agreement were to be kept in repair at the expense of the tenant. Such buildings in a dilapidated state were very expensive to maintain. Mr. R. Thomas is now, in 1894, living on the farm, and the lease granted then, nearly 43 years since, is this day valid. In 1859 Mr. Phillips had to leave Llwyndrysi (a farm near mine) because his rent was raised by Mr. Puxley from 202*l.* 10*s.* to 300*l.* Phillips had been there nine years, was a good farmer and had improved the farm, but had not a penny compensation. Having quitted Sarnlas on

Michaelmas, 1859, I went to another farm in the neighbourhood, under another landlord, the late Mr. W. R. H. Powell, sometime M.P. for the county, whom I found kind and compassionate. As the farm was small and my family numerous I left in 1862, and took the farm of Llandawke at a rent of 400*l.* free of tithes and land tax, which were paid by the landlord, and amounted to 55*l.* 10*s.* The landlord also did all the repairs. After three years I gave the farm up owing to an alteration in the incidence of the poor rates, which pressed heavily on the parish, though there is not a single pauper within its boundaries. Messrs. Harvey and Sons, however, valued the farm, and the landlord, acting on their valuation, reduced the rent in 1865 by 50*l.* In 1869, however, it was again valued by Messrs. Goode and Owen, and the rent was raised by 70*l.* making it 420*l.* The year after, 1870, it was sold by public auction, and I purchased it at 11,500*l.* The poor rates on Llandawke parish in 1862 amounted to 19*l.*, in 1872 to 52*l.* The road rate used to be about 6*l.*; now, after the County Council has joined together several parishes, against the wish of the majority of the St. Clears' Highway Board it is about 20*l.*

Proposed Remedies.—1. That land courts should be established, so as to deal effectively with arbitrary landlords. 2. That tenants should be compensated according to their merits for improvements, where money has been laid out judiciously and economically, and that without the consent of the landlord, provided it be beneficial to the farm.

Mr. Grove.

42,382. As to this advance in rent: it was a large advance on the farm where you used to live, at Sarnlas; it went up from 150*l.* and 15*l.* for tithe, that was 165*l.*, to 317*l.* 10*s.*?—Yes, and 15*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* for tithe, which made it 332*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

42,383. Was that large advance due to some extent to improvements that you had made there?—Well, I should say so.

42,384. Did you get any compensation for those improvements that you had made?—No.

42,385. So you consider that an instance where the rent has been advanced time after time on the improvements made by the tenant?—I do.

42,386. You consider that a fair typical case?—Yes.

42,387. Now, going to the last point in your evidence, you say the poor rates used to be 19*l.*, and now they are 52*l.*, and the road rate used to be 6*l.*, and now it is 20*l.*?—Yes.

42,388. So that instead of 25*l.*, that it used to be, it is now 72*l.*?—Yes.

42,389. That is really the statement of the case?—Yes.

42,390. These are the rates chargeable on your present farm?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

42,391. You now, I suppose, are in an entirely independent position as regards any landlord, being the owner of your own farm. You are occupying your own farm, are you not?—Yes.

42,392. So that you are quite independent of any influence from any landlord?—Oh, I am, yes.

42,393. Do you think that since the Ballot Act the independence of farmers has been very much increased?—Yes.

42,394. And do you think that through the establishment of parish councils, and that kind of thing, they will become more and more independent?—I cannot say.

42,395. Do you think that they have real reason still to be afraid of the landlord in the way we have been told they are?—I think they have.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,396. When you entered Sarnlas what state did you find it in?—Oh, it was not good at all.

42,397. It was not farmed well before, was it?—No.

42,398. And the times were bad when you started life?—Yes.

42,399. There was a great difference in the price of labour in those days to what it is at present?—Yes.

42,400. Though the times were bad. How many servants did you keep when you were there?—Six altogether.

42,401. And you say in your statement that they cost four times as much now?—Yes, they do.

42,402. And yet you say that servants are not so useful as they were in those days?—No.

42,403. How do you account for that?—I cannot.

42,404. Are they not so capable of carrying on the work of the farm?—No, they are not trained to do it now as they were then.

42,405. They are not trained to do it so well as the old people were, and with all the money, at the present day, you say, the servants do not do more than they did then?—No, not so much, as a rule.

42,406. You did not grumble very much when there were 16*l.* 16*s.* 0*d.* added to your rent, did you?—No, not so much then.

42,407. But you had laid out a good deal of money in improving the farm at that time?—Yes.

42,408. Then do you consider that Mr. Puxley was a young man who had no training in agriculture in any way?—No, not at that time.

42,409. And you think much the same of the agent?—About the same.

42,410. He was young, and you think he was led a little astray then?—Yes.

42,411. Yet they considered themselves quite capable of valuing the farm when they walked over it?—Yes, I should think so.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

42,412. They were not satisfied with the valuation Mr. Harvey made of the farm?—No.

42,413. Did you refuse to accept their valuation?—Yes, I said I would give 200*l.* for it, provided he would grant me a lease for 21 years.

42,414. And he would not do that?—He said he could not do it; that the estate was entailed.

42,415. So he gave you notice to quit?—Yes, the March following, but the year after the estate, I think, was disentailed, because he granted a lease then to the man who took it for 317*l.* 10*s.*

42,416. But, in the meantime, he advertised the farm to be let?—Yes.

42,417. What was the result of that. Was it let to the highest tender?—I believe it was.

42,418. Was it a competent farmer who took it?—No, I do not think he was.

42,419. Had he always been brought up as a farmer?—I did not know him before that time. No, I do not think he was.

42,420. What was his occupation before?—A saddler.

42,421. How many years did he remain there at that rent?—Five years.

42,422. But in two years, I think you said, the landlord and agent had got tired of him?—Yes.

42,423. Why was it. Because he did not farm well?—I do not know what was the reason. They could not go on very well.

42,424. I see the crops that you raised the first year and the crops you raised a few years following differed very much?—Yes.

42,425. You are a competent valuer to value hay, and you are called in to value very often, are you not?—Well, I have been.

42,426. So you are quite capable of judging what amount of hay you had upon the farm?—Yes. In 1849, when I entered the farm, I had to take the crops as valued at 68*l.* 15*s.* In 1859, the year I left, the hay was sold at a public sale, and the produce of 35 acres came to 220*l.* 10*s.*

42,427. Then you carted what we call a very great quantity of muck all over the farm, did you not?—Yes.

42,428. Can you tell us at what expense? How many carts had you carting?—Three was the lowest.

42,429. Sometimes more?—No, not more than three.

42,430. You laid out much money to lay the land down into grass, did you not?—Yes.

42,431. Permanent pasture?—Yes.

42,432. Instead of ploughing 60 acres you only ploughed 38?—Yes.

42,433. You thought it would pay better. Do you complain then that the landlord did not really tell you that you had got to leave until May?—No, he did not say really till right on to the middle of July. It was advertised to be let by tender in May.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

42,434. This place is rather a hilly farm, is it not?—Not very hilly.

42,435. You did a good deal in the way of cleaning the gripes and ditches, did you not?—Yes.

42,436. There was a lot of useful muck cleared out of the bottoms, was there not?—Yes.

42,437. I know the place. You not only lowered the ditches when you carted it out and mixed it with lime, but at the same time you also drained the fields alongside, did you not, by doing so?—Yes.

42,438. Were you satisfied with the result afterwards?—Yes.

42,439. You could grow better grass and more hay, could you?—Yes, much more hay.

42,440. Mr. Harvey's valuation was 180*l.*, I think?—Yes.

42,441. However, it was let to the new tenant at what rent did you say?—317*l.* 10*s.*

42,442. Your wife, I think you said, was born on this place?—Yes.

42,443. And her relatives had been there for many years?—Yes.

42,444. Then you were offered the farm again in two years' time?—Yes.

42,445. Why did you not make an offer to the landlord when he wanted you to take it?—Well I did not care much about trying for it again.

42,446. You did not think it was right to go and turn another tenant out?—Well, no.

42,447. If every one had been like you, I think we should not have had so much of this land-grabbing. You would not tell him what rent you would give at all?—No.

42,448. You never made him any offer?—No.

42,449. Did Mr. Jones, the incoming tenant, have a reduction of rent?—No, I do not think he did.

42,450. There were other farms besides yours in that neighbourhood valued at the same time. Most of the farms were revalued?—Yes.

42,451. And most of the old tenants left in consequence?—Three left in that year.

42,452. Who was the valuer who valued them. Was not there some stranger engaged to value them?—No, I do not think so at that time.

42,453. Then it is my mistake. Then you speak of Mr. Phillips, of Llwyndrysi; he had to leave his farm in just the same way?—Yes.

42,454. What induced you to go and purchase the farm you live in now; why did you feel inclined to purchase a farm; would it not be better to be under a good landlord?—I beg pardon?

42,455. Why were you induced to purchase a farm. Did you not think, as you have a very large family it would be as well for you to have farmed under a good landlord?—Yes, if I could get one.

42,456. It is not easily got, is it. You were afraid of being bitten again?—Well, I was afraid of that, but not under the same agents as I was then.

42,457. Can you give us the present rent of this farm?—280*l.*

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

42,458. Then you have already told us you approve of a land court?—Yes.

42,459. And you say "and the tenants should be compensated according to their merit for improvements where money has been laid out judiciously and economically"?—Yes.

42,460. Then you want to have some outside party to see whether the improvement is really an improvement to the place as well?—Yes.

42,461. You do not think it is right for a tenant to make any improvements according to any whim that comes into his head?—Oh, no.

42,462. But there should be another authority to settle that that improvement is for the benefit of the farm?—Yes.

42,463. I quite agree with you. You believe that that would be sufficient without any security of tenure. If a tenant is paid for his improvements, it does not matter so much about fixity of tenure?—Well, I think fixity of tenure as well would be useful.

42,464. Do you think that if a man takes a farm for 7, 14 or 21 years the farmer would farm the whole of that farm throughout the whole of that term to the very best advantage, would he not at the beginning of the term farm well and by the time the term was up pull in a bit?—Very likely he would.

42,465. But if he knew that he would be paid for his improvements he would continue going on every year?—Yes.

Chairman.

42,466. You say you are in favour of a land court?—Yes, my lord.

42,467. I understand you do not wish in any way to interfere with good landlords, but only to protect tenants against harsh landlords?—Yes.

42,468. There are some questions handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen—"Did you have any agreement with Mr. Puxley as to the improvements on Sarnlas?"—No.

42,469. "Are you aware of the effect which "the Agricultural Holdings Act would have on "compensation for such improvements as you "did at Sarnlas;" do you know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, I know something, but I do not think it is very useful.

42,470. You left Sarnlas in 1859?—Yes.

42,471. The first Agricultural Holdings Act did not come in till 1875?—No.

42,472. "Did the landlord do any improvements at Sarnlas"?—Since, he has.

42,473. But not in your time?—He paid for the kitchen, but I had to carry all the materials.

42,474. "Did not Mr. Puxley make improve-"ments on Mr. Phillips' farm"?—No, I do not think he did much there.

42,475. You do not think he did?—No.

42,476. "If you say he did not how do you know that he did not?—I was living close by in the neighbourhood.

42,477. It was the next farm?—Not the very next, but near.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,478. Did you do any building at all at Sarnlas yourself?—Yes, I built two small houses, one a calves cot, coal house, and a place to mix culm; the other for cutting chaff by water and for boiling for cattle; with a loft over the whole length. They were well built, and I had no compensation whatever.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

42,479. We have heard that none of Mr. Puxley's tenants did any repairs to any buildings?—Well, the two houses are there now

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Gad Prothero called and examined.

Chairman.

42,480. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am.

42,481. Where do you live?—At Ty Canol.

42,482. How far is that from here?—About 8 miles.

42,483. Will you kindly give us your statement?—I will, my Lord.

I am a tenant farmer, farming 77 acres. My evidence refers generally to the Llanstephan County Council Division, but chiefly to the parishes of Llangunnock, and Llandilo Abercowin.

General Conditions of farming. — The date of entry in this district is Michaelmas. Mostly yearly tenants. Compensation is given in some cases for damages done to land in timber cutting. Penalising clauses are common in agreements, but are seldom enforced. Tenants are usually given a copy of their agreements and their contents are explained to them in Welsh.

Rents.—The rents of the smaller tenants are higher per acre than large farmers, and competition for small farms is keen. The rents of upland farms vary from 10*s.* to 1*l.* per acre, and on lowland farms from 1*l.* 10*s.* to 2*l.* 10*s.* per acre. There are other services rendered by tenants to resident landlords, such as hauling coal, keeping puppies, &c., which are usually mentioned in the agreement. Rents are generally fixed on the basis of a valulation made by the agents. I know of two farms that have been let by tender in the neighbourhood, and let to the highest bidder, owner Mr. B. Lewis, Vronwen Llanboidy, tenants remaining only a few years, afterwards the owner kept the farms in his own hands to graze cattle, &c., but did not cultivate them. A few years afterwards they were let at a reduced rent, but when the tenants improved them they were obliged to pay 5 per cent. more rent or be turned out. Arbitration is not resorted to as a means of adjusting rents. Rents have been advanced from 25 per cent. to 100 per cent. during the last 50 years, mostly upon the improvements made by the tenants.

Chairman—continued.

Land agents do not exercise sufficient care when making their valuation. They visit the farms in the months of July or August, and base their valuation upon the general appearance of the land and the quality of the stock on it, whereas they ought to visit the farms early in the spring and late in the autumn, and should have made inquiries as to the improvements made, quantity of feeding stuff, artificial manures purchased and used on the farm by the tenants. I know of one instance on the Coombe estate where a tenant, John Evans—

(Mr. H. L. Stephen.) We ought to know why these people are not here, if they are not.

Chairman.

42,484. Is Mr. John Evans in the room?—I do not believe so.

Chairman—continued.

42,485. This is heresay evidence and objected to by Mr. Stephen?—I have the rent receipts in my pocket.

42,486. Do you put them in?—Yes.

(Mr. H. L. Stephen.) I venture to suggest that he has not been deputed.

Chairman.

42,487. That objection does not hold good. You have the permission?—Yes.

42,488. And he deputes you if necessary to speak for him?—Yes.

42,489. He gave you the receipts for that purpose?—He did.

(Mr. H. L. Stephen.) There are other cases.

Chairman.

I think you had better object as they come on.

42,490. [To the Witness.] Please proceed with your evidence?—I know of one instance on the Coombe estate where a tenant, John Evans, had his rent raised three times in succession, and considerably so the last time, about 15 years ago, owing to the tenant having drained wet land, cleared many acres of mountain land for cultivation, fallowed and limed it, and erected a cow-shed and an out-kitchen, and improved the 42,581. farm immensely. The original rent has, in this way, been raised to 128*l.*

Farmers also get their rents raised after the expiration of a lease when many acres of land have been reclaimed by the tenant. One case on Sir Arthur Stepney's estate. I have the receipts.

42,491. You are empowered to produce them?—Yes. For instance, when a lease of 21 years expired, the tenant, J. Loveluck, had to pay about 15 per cent. more rent owing to his having cleared a quantity of gorsy land for cultivation and improved it generally, at a cost of 200*l.* or 300*l.* The rent was raised 8 years ago from 46*l.* to 56*l.* 10*s.* Landlords have profited enormously by improvements made by tenants in their holdings before such holdings were sold and no compensation was granted to the tenants in respect of such improvements. I will only cite one or two cases. (1.) A Mr. Brock Jones, late of Carmarthen, let two small holdings to Mr. J. Evans, Ffynonseiri, the buildings of which were allowed to fall into ruins, at a rent of 25*l.* a year. Mr. Evans cleared away the ruins, drained the wet portion of the land, and reclaimed many acres of it for cultivation, limed it and fallowed it, top dressed the pasture, enhanced the value of the fields by taking down hedges, and spent a large sum of money to improve it generally. A few years afterwards the land was sold for 1,400*l.*, no doubt, were it not for the improvements effected by the tenant, it would not have realised more than from 700*l.* to 800*l.* The tenant received no compensation. (2.) A Mr. Henry Davis came to live at a small place called Blaentir owned by Mr. Brown Edwards. He repaired the house and the cow-shed, erected a new pigstye, raised the hedges, opened the ditches, top-dressed the land with bone and other artificial manures, besides using a quantity of feeding-stuff annually and farmed the latter place so well until it was a pleasure to see it. A few years ago the place was put up for sale. The tenant was obliged to buy or be turned away. He was paid only 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* for the new pigstye.

(3.) A farm on the Derllys Court estate (owned by Dudley Williams Drummond, Esq., Edwinsford), called Glog, was recently sold. The tenant, Mr. W. Lloyd, having spent 400*l.* or 500*l.* in clearing mountain land and in fencing it, no compensation was paid the tenant.

(Mr. H. L. Stephen.) There is the same objection to this case.

Chairman.

42,492. There is an objection made; have you any corroborative evidence of that?—I have only the word of the tenant.

Chairman.

Is that taken for what it is worth, or do you object to it altogether?

(Mr. H. L. Stephen.) I think we ought to have a man here, or the man's absence ought to be accounted for, at least.

Chairman.

42,493. We must pass that over, then. Is Mr. John Evans in the room? [No answer.] Is Mr. Henry Davies in the room?

(The Witness.) He is not in the town either. I have his authority to state it.

42,494. Have you it in writing?—No, I have not.

42,495. I am afraid we cannot take it. Is there any reason why these gentlemen are not here to-day?—Mr. Henry Davies, I understand, is groom to the Stud Company.

42,496. Why cannot he come?—I am told that he has the care of an entire horse to-day.

Chairman.

42,497. I do not think it will be possible for the Commissioners to get through all the evidence placed before them to-day, and the Commission, if wished, will re-visit Carmarthen, so that on that occasion, if you consider this evidence of great importance, perhaps you will bring your witnesses with you the next time, and then they will be able to speak to all this evidence and vouch for it if it is correct?—Yes.

42,497A. (4.) Please continue your evidence?—The Blackmore estate was recently sold. The tenants reclaimed a large portion of it, but instead of receiving compensation for their unexhausted improvements by the vendor, they were obliged to pay about 25 per cent. more to the purchaser. But the purchaser has erected some new buildings on the estate.

I believe it would be an advantage to tenants if the Agricultural Holdings Act were so amended as to render it compulsory upon a vendor to settle all claims under it prior to a sale taking place. To settle a grievance respecting the question of rent, I believe that a land court should be established, so that tenants might have a chance of appealing to that court if they should be unable to agree with the agent or the landlord as to the amount of rent to be paid. Considerate landlords would have nothing to fear from land courts, and it may protect tenants against bad landlords. Under the present system the better one farms the more rent one has to pay ultimately. Local rates have increased during the last 50 years by about one half. The increase has been borne by the tenants.

Consolidation.—The average size of farms is about 100 acres. There has not been much consolidation. It was done for the purpose of saving the expense of keeping up dilapidated buildings, and has resulted in decreasing the population. There have been no consolidations of late years, but Danylan, Bolahaul, Ffynonseiri, Green Castle, Pen-y-coed, Forlan, Scuborfach, Parc-y-Vicar, and Lanholewen have been consolidated. Small holders, as a rule, are more able to cope with the depression owing to less hired labour being used.

Cultivation.—Labourers are somewhat scarce, but there is no land going out of cultivation. Hundreds of acres have been reclaimed by tenants, and there is still much capable of reclamation. Considerable change has taken place in the nature of agriculture during the last 40 years, chiefly in arable land being laid down to pasture at the expense of the tenants.

Building, &c.—There is a great lack of dairy accommodation in the district, they being too small and ill-ventilated. Improvements effected are mostly draining wet land, digging up gorsy land, and clearing the same for cultivation by using artificial manures, chiefly phosphate, and by using grass seeds for laying down pasture. In the case of co-operation between landlord and tenant, the former pays for pipes and the latter for labour for draining. I know of no instance where compensation has been given to an outgoing tenant for general improved condition of the farm. There is no right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interests in their holdings to a solvent tenant to whom a landlord has no reasonable objection. The Act should be amended so as to establish a right to an outgoing tenant to dispose of his interests to any tenant he choses, providing the landlord would have no reasonable objection. The Agricultural Holdings Act in its present form is almost a dead letter.

Game.—Game is preserved by resident landlords. Tenants do not avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act. The game laws should be amended so as to give to tenants the right of sporting over their farms, and to have the right to dispose of such right should they wish to do so. It is also very unfair that a person who has the right of sporting over a small area of land should pay the same amount of Game License as a person who has the rights of sporting over a large area.

Chairman—continued.

Freeholders.—There are many peasant proprietors in the district who have bought their own holdings and their number is increasing. They have bought them owing to the great attachment they have for their home. They borrow about two-thirds of the purchase money from individuals at from 3½ to 4 per cent. interest. Their condition is generally better. They feel more secure in their holdings to enjoy the fruit of their labours, and therefore farm with more energy. It would be a great benefit to Welsh farmers if the Government would advance money to them at a low rate of interest to enable them to buy their holdings. Tenant farmers and their wives work from morning to night. Their children are not in receipt of wages. The present rents could not in many cases be maintained if wages was paid to their children in respect of their labour. I consider farmers rather too loyal to their landlords as they leave all their creditors to wait until the rent is paid which is often done with borrowed money. A great reduction in rent would be the only remedy against such a state of things.

Cottages.—With regard to cottage accommodation landlords as a rule allow them to fall into ruins, and what remains only consists of two rooms, muck floors, and thatched roofs. Labourers are obliged to live in villages and walk a few miles to their work. I consider that cottages should be rebuilt, and a few acres of land should be allotted to them. Wages have advanced about 100 per cent. during the last 30 years, but wages are not higher in the country in comparison than in the town. The relations between landlords and tenants are mostly friendly.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,498. You say you are in favour of arbitration to settle rents?—I do.

42,499. What is your reason for saying so?—Because under the present system a tenant has no voice in the fixing of the rents.

42,500. Do you consider that the rents are generally raised upon the improvements made by the tenants?—Yes, invariably.

42,501. Where did you copy the table from respecting the farms, Plas Isaf, Ffynon Seiri, Penlan, Bryn Tucker?—I had that list from the Land Tax Assessment, and the second list from the tenants themselves.

42,502. Are you able to give me the abatements made on these farms?—There have been some abatements made, but I have no particulars of them.

42,503. To what extent?—10 per cent. I believe.

42,504. The highest?—The highest is 10 per cent.

42,505. You consider that an agent or any valuer cannot value a farm by only going over it once a year?—No, he cannot in my opinion.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

42,506. How many times should he go?—He ought to visit poor land twice a year, because all land grows a little in July and August.

42,507. Some are very early, and some are very late, are they not?—Yes.

42,508. We heard from the last witness three or four went one after the other, and made different valuations. They may have gone at different times of the year?—Yes, undoubtedly.

42,509, You have not given us the original rent, but you have given us the present rent?—128*l.* is the present, and the original was 78*l.* in the table.

42,510. What do you consider the value of digging up gorse land and clearing and preparing the ground, per acre to be?—Well, in the parish of Llangunnock and the mountain land I should say 2*l.* an acre, a very small expense.

42,511. It cannot be done at the present wage, I suppose?—No, not at that I should say.

42,512. Do you agree with the statements we have heard from agents that there are not permanent improvements made by the tenants. You say here, hundreds of acres have been reclaimed by the tenants. That is surely the tenants' improvements?—That is a permanent improvement too.

42,513. You say that there is a lack of dairy accommodation?—Yes.

42,514. Do you not think that it would pay the farmers in the district to send their milk to the factories where they are situated?—I doubt it.

42,515. What is your reason for doubting it?—From a calculation I made myself I find it would not pay.

42,516. Did you send any milk yourself to the dairy?—No, but I knew the price that they were giving at the St. Clear's factory for it.

42,517. Did you measure all your milk?—Yes.

42,518. And calculated what it was worth?—Yes.

42,519. And you calculated that making the butter in the way you did it would pay you better?—Yes, because I was not living near the factory.

42,520. What is the average price you make for your butter all the year round?—Last year it was 12¼*d.*, but three years ago it was 14⅛*d.* That was 1-lb. rolls in Carmarthen market.

42,521. You say with regard to the game that that should vary according to the area of the ground. Do you think it depends more upon the quantity of game than the area?—Yes, but it is difficult to ascertain the quantity of the game killed.

42,522. Are you in favour of labourers having a little land to keep a cow?—I am.

42,523. You believe in what is termed the "three acres and a cow"?—Well, three or four or more acres.

42,524. Do you think it would be an inducement to keep the labourers on the farms instead of running into the towns and villages?—Yes, it would, certainly.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

42,525. They would be more attached to a place?—Yes.

42,526. Do you think that they would be more attached to a place than the farm servants would be?—Yes.

42,527. They can pack up and go, but if a man has three acres and a cow he cannot very well do so?—He cannot go sooner than the farmer, I should think.

Mr. Seebohm.

42,528. Following up the last question, how would you arrange this three acres for a labourer, would it not involve sub-letting?—There has been so much consolidation in some parts, whereas if the cottages had not been allowed to fall into ruins there would be more labourers available. If cottages are rebuilt, and some land allotted to them it would do very well.

42,529. Taking your own farm, would you object, if your landlord permitted you, to sub-let the cottage on the farm with a little land?—I do not think a large farmer would object at all, because it would be a benefit to him rather than a loss.

42,530. After all that we have heard this morning about the evil of sub-letting, might that evil be got over by the tenant letting the land with the cottages with the consent of the landlord?—I should say that the landlord ought to let the land, not the farmer. I am not in favour of sub-letting at all.

42,531. Still, I suppose in a great many districts all the land is in the hands of some farm or other?—Yes.

42,532. The land would have to be taken from the farm?—Yes.

42,533. And the farmer might not object to the land being taken from the farm if he had the permission of the landlord to sublet it with the cottage?—No, not at all.

42,534. And the only thing which would be wanted would be the consent of the landlord to the terms?—Yes.

42,535. Another question I want to ask. You say it would be a great benefit to Welsh farmers if the Government were to advance money to them at a low rate of interest to enable them to buy their holdings. We have had that before us several times, and so far as we have gone the evidence has been rather to this point, that all the benefit would not go to the tenant, and the fact that money was to be had by right from the Government to purchase farms would have a tendency to send up the price?—Yes, no doubt, but it would relieve them from the oppression of money lenders, and another thing, they could obtain money more easily. By the present system people do not get money very easily. They find a difficulty in getting money.

42,536. If it was lent by the Government it would be in connection with the sinking fund, would it not?—Yes.

42,537. So that the rate of interest for the time being would be increased?—Yes, no doubt.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

42,538. That would make the apparent rent for the next 30 years rather a higher one, would it not? The 3½ which you mention would hardly be sufficient to cover the sinking fund, would it?—I do not see why it should be given to them on the sinking fund system.

42,539. You think it ought to be permanent?—Yes, the Government lends money to corporations, I do not know why it should not to farmers.

42,540. That is on the sinking fund system you know. It has to be paid after a certain number of years?—Then the sinking fund system would be an inducement in the way of thrift.

42,541. So that after considering all the points all round you still think it would be an advantage if Government were to do that?—Yes.

42,542. Then the only other question is this: you say the Act ought to be so amended as to establish a right to the outgoing tenant to dispose of his interest to any tenant he chose, provided the landlord had no legal objection to him. Have you considered that question all round? Do you think it would end, looking at it from the point of view of the incoming tenant, in his being rack-rented? If he paid the full price for the land to the outgoing tenant, in addition to the rent which he had to pay, he would be a rack-rented tenant, would he not?—No, he would only be selling his goodwill, in my opinion.

42,543. But then with the land-hunger that we are told there is, that goodwill would be far higher here than it is in Ireland?—That would stop some of the land-hunger, no doubt, because people with small capital would not be able to take farms.

42,544. I should think you would require more capital to take a farm if you had to pay a large sum for goodwill?—But I mean people with small capital would not be able to take a farm then.

Mr. Grove.

42,545. In your first table you give two instances: Plas Isaf and Ffynon seiri. You say, "tenant improving." What do we understand by that?—Improving the farm generally.

42,546. But in the two others you say "farm improving," whereas in the first two you say "tenant improving"?—It is a misdescription, I believe. It has the same meaning.

42,547. The same meaning all the way down the table?—Yes.

42,548. I thought perhaps in one case the tenant was getting on a bit too well, and the landlord saw him going about with a new suit of clothes, and put his rent up or something of that kind; I did not know what it meant exactly. Now as to this right of sporting. The county council get the benefit of these game licenses, and I should just like to know exactly what is in your mind there. Do you think it might be regulated so that a man should only sport over so many acres of ground, and pay so much license. That is like tying him by the leg, is it not?—The present system is simply a prohibiting tax. It would be no advantage to a small farmer to obtain the right of sporting over his land if he would have to pay 3*l.* or 3*l.* 10*s.* for the licence, because he may not kill so much as that.

Mr. Grove—continued.

42,549. But he can obtain a license for 1*l.* can he not, and shoot over so many months in the year?—I did not know that.

42,550. There are different licenses. You are not bound to pay 3*l.*; 3*l.* is for the whole season; I think I am right; if not I can be corrected. You can obtain a license for 1*l.*, 2*l.*, or 3*l.* But the point is, it would be excessively difficult for the Revenue people to follow the acreage that a man is to sport over; therefore, I think it would be almost impossible for them to make a differential rate of that kind. I do not see how it could be done. Do you think there are many cases where a farmer takes a a gun license for 10*s.*, and shoots game occasionally?—No, they do not do it, I think.

42,551. I am very glad to hear it. In our county I am afraid they do, and, therefore, we lose a little bit. Now, you think the Government ought to lend money at 3½ per cent., including the Sinking Fund, do you?—Yes.

42,552. Consols will be down to 2½ in a short time, and you think 1 per cent. would be sufficient?—Yes; quite so.

42,553. I think so too. Do you think they would get more labour settled on the land?—Yes, certainly.

42,554. Do you think farmers in the present depressed times could afford to pay for more labour if they had the cottages?—A few, no doubt.

42,555. I suppose it is a sort of thing that would repay itself in a sense, because you can get extra labour on the land, and make the land more valuable and more productive?—Yes.

42,556. Just one other question. You consider, as a practical farmer, that a values cannot value your land properly unless he visits it at two seasons of the year?—No, I should say he cannot.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,557. How about the sleeping accommodation for the farm servants? In your district is it suitable?—There is great room for improvement, but it is better now than it has been.

42,558. Where do the men servants sleep who sleep out?—Well, on some of the farms they sleep in the lofts.

42,559. But we are told in some parts that they partake of the nature of the beasts by being kept there. Are you of the same opinion? It is rather degrading, is it not?—No doubt.

42,560. Then the female servants are kept indoors, I suppose?—Yes.

Chairman.

42,561. There are some questions by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Who is John Evans's landlord?" I think that is the case referred to on the Coombe estate. Do you know who Mr. John Evans' landlord was?—One of the Morrises of Coombe.

42,562. "Did John Evans tell you whether "his landlord had contributed to any improvements?"—He said he did not.

42,563. "When was John Evans' rent raised? Can you give me the three dates?"—I am not certain about the dates. He could not tell me the exact dates.

Chairman—continued.

42,564. "What was the name of Mr. Loveluck's farm?"—Ffald.

42,565. "When did his lease expire?"—In 1883 or 1884.

42,566. Will you find out which of the Messrs. Morris was Mr. Evans' landlord? Could you find that out and let us know?—Yes, I could. I believe the first one was David Morris, the second one William Morris, and the last one Thomas Morris, who has recently died.

42,567. Would you kindly find out and let me know the exact person who was the landlord of this Mr. Evans?—The first landlord's name is on the receipt there.

The witness withdrew.

Previously examined at 41,675.

Mr. JOHN FRANCIS further called and re-examined.

Chairman.

42,568. You are the agent and the nephew of the Rev. Robert Cole?—Yes.

42,569. What do you want to rebut?—The evidence of the last witness, Mr. Gad Protheroe, with regard to the nature of the value of the improvements done by the tenant.

See 42,497A.

42,570. Which case is that?—The first farm he mentions, in his second table, Gelly. He says: "Rent before sale, 50*l.*; rent after sale, "80*l*; top dressing with artificial manures and "general good farming tenant; spent 200*l.*" I sold the farm some years ago, and then the landlord desired me to go carefully over it, and report to him what compensation the tenant should have. I saw all his receipts for artificial manures which were used, which were superphosphates, and I put the case before them and they thought 10*l.* was sufficient, and he received 10*l.* I sent him a cheque for that amount.

42,571. What did he claim then?—He did not claim anything. I do not think he could have claimed the 10*l.*, because I pointed out to him the advantages of the Agricultural Holdings Act. It was nothing but manures. As to the cleaning of the land I went carefully over every field with him, and if I could have assisted him in sending in a claim that he could have recovered I should have done so. I was in that position. I was asked to do so by the landlord who was selling.

42,572. You say you think he spent 10*l.* in artificial manures. The statement is "top-"dressing with artificial manures, and general "good farming tenant; spent 200*l.*" Have you any reason to doubt that he spent 200*l.* on the farm?—Oh, yes, I have.

42,573. But you have no personal knowledge, except what you saw?—What I saw on the farm at the time, and I have known that part of the country for 26 years. The same remark applies to the farm at Pentrenewydd, where I could not advise them at that time to allow anything. There were no manures used there.

Lord Carrington—continued.

42,574. Do you wish from your own knowledge to rebut the fact that the tenant spent 1,000*l.* on the farm?—I should say he would not have spent it in the last 30 years.

42,575. But you do not know; you give your opinion, and we take it for what it is worth?—Very well, if you will take it in that way. I am often in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Seebohm.

42,576. May I ask whether you acted for the seller or the purchaser?—I acted for the seller.

42,577. And when this 10*l.* was given before the sale, in consequence of the sale?—Yes, on my recommendation.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,578. Are you in a position to state that this tenant of Gelly made no permanent improvements on this farm?—Not but what he had the full benefit of. It was such very poor land that if you left it alone in three years it would run as foul as it was before, a great portion of it.

42,579. How do you think he had the benefit of it?—In the sense that if you allowed the land to run foul, in three years it would be as bad as it was before. Unless you keep that land fairly well, all the time it will be worth very little, or worth nothing to you.

42,580. But if the land is kept in a good condition it will improve very much?—I quite see that; but if you improve the land so that it will continue in that state for 30 years, that is a very different thing to improving the land so that it will continue in that condition for three years. That is what I wanted to explain to you.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Howell Thomas called and examined.

Chairman.

42,581. Have you anything to say?—Yes, I am agent for the Coombe estate. With reference to the statement of John Evans, I have only been agent for the last three years, and I cannot speak to this evidence. I did not know it was coming before the Court, and I cannot speak as to how many times he had a rise in his rent, but I see the rent down here now is 128*l.* It is 110*l.* that we have got it down at in the rent-book.

42,582. Has it ever been 128*l.*?—Never.

42,583. What is the rent now?—110*l.* now. Then with reference to the part that Mr. Prothero has just spoken of, these farms of Pentrenewydd and Tyros, Mr. Morris bought these farms. With reference to the rent of Tyros, there was a very old lease of this farm. I may tell you that the farms have been altered altogether. The rents of them have nothing to do with the old rents as regards the acreage of the farms. They are different acreages now to what they were before they were purchased.

42,584. Are they larger or smaller?—Some at Pentrenewydd has been put to Gelly, and also some of the Pentrenewydd to Tyros. The three farms have been made more equal as regards the rent.

42,585. Is Tyros a bigger or larger farm than it was?—A larger farm now than it was before. As to Tyros there was an old lease, and the rent was then 70*l.* I believe the rent was to have been raised to 90*l.* the year the farm was sold. Mr. Morris paid the landlord 10*l.* a year for the sporting rights on the farm. The rent of Gelly farm now, instead of 80*l.* as in the schedule here, is 75*l.* The rent of Pentrenewydd is 130*l.* and the rent of Tyros 135*l.*

Chairman—continued.

42,586. Are you in the habit of charging additional sporting rents as well as the agricultural rent on your estate?—No.

42,587. Then why is he charged 10*l.* for the Tyros farm?—Mr. Morris took the sporting rights off the landlord before he became the landlord, before he bought the farm; he paid the landlord 10*l.* a year for the sporting rights.

42,588. We shall be in Carmarthen again, and you shall have an opportunity of giving further rebutting evidence, if you wish?—Thank you.

42,589. This is a question by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Do you not know that Mr. Evans "holds Bola and Bolahaul farms, and that the "combined rents come to 128*l.*?"—Mr. Evans holds two farms called Ffynonseiri and Penlan, and those come to 110*l.* a year.

42,590. "Can you say what compensation "was paid to the tenants of Pentrenewydd and "Tyros?"—I do not know that any compensation was paid. I may tell you that on Tyros we are spending 365*l.* in repairs. The outbuildings had got into a frightful state, and they were practically tumbling down, and those have all been pulled down. We spent 365*l.* I daresay with extras it will run into 400*l.*, and on Gelly we shall be spending, I expect, about 200*l.* this year.

42,591. "Do you know that Bolahaul was "included in Mr. Protheroe's statement as to "the rent of Ffynonseiri?"—I do not see anything about Bolahaul. Bolahaul is a separate holding altogether.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. P. Thursby Pelham called and examined.

Chairman.

42,592. Where do you live?—At Abermarlais Park in the parish of Llansadwrn, in the county of Carmarthen.

42,593. How far is that from here?—21 miles or so from here.

Mr. Griffiths.

42,594. What is your address?—Abermarlais Park, Llangadock.

Chairman.

42,595. What do you wish to say?—I wish to rebut and explain certain printed evidence which has been sent to me with regard to certain statements by Mr. Llewelyn Williams here present, with regard to a farm called Brown Hill in the parish of Llansadwrn forming part of the Abermarlais Estate, and at present in the possession of Mrs. Thursby Pelham, my wife.

See 37,825.

42,596. Who owns Brown Hill now. Is it your farm?—Brown Hill is owned by Mrs. Thursby Pelham, my wife, under her marriage settlements. She has the life interest. I am first contingent remainder man. It is occupied by the stepfather of Mr. Llewelyn Williams.

Chairman—continued.

42,597. It belongs to Mrs. Pelham?—Yes.

42,598. And is occupied by the stepfather of Mr. Llewelyn Williams?—Yes, namely, Mr. Rees Lewis. Perhaps I may be allowed to say that besides certain rebutting evidence of Mr. Llewelyn Williams' statement, I should be glad if the Commission would hear one or two facts at any time at their convenience with regard to fixity of tenure.

42,599. I am afraid we must keep entirely to the rebutting evidence please. We have a great many other witnesses down for hearing, and we must conform to the proper procedure?—Quite so, my Lord. Then I will begin with Mr. Llewelyn Williams' statements with regard to Brown Hill. It comes about the fifth paragraph. Shall I read that?

42,600. No. Kindly rebut what you say is not correct?—"The dwelling and outhouses were

" built in 1801, and are, I believe, considered " models of their kind." There Mr. Llewelyn Williams stops, but he quite fails to state that this model house and buildings were erected entirely at the cost of the then landlord, Captain Foley, and not by the tenant at that time at all. In fact there was no tenant, because it was part of the home farm, and there had been no previous house and buildings there. That is the first part.

42,601. But I think you agree about that. The dwelling and outhouses were built in 1801, and Mr. Llewelyn Williams' grandfather took Brown Hill in 1830, so they were built 29 years before he went there, and they were considered models of their kind. Is that right?—That is so, but Mr. Llewelyn Williams goes on to say that he believes the land was for some time of prairie value. Nearly at the beginning of a long paragraph it is mentioned that " An English- " man named Abbott was the immediate pre- " decessor of the grandfather of Mr. Llewelyn " Williams, but he was completely ruined and " died in the workhouse." There it stops. The fact of his being ruined and having died in the workhouse is quite correct, though Mr. Llewelyn Williams' evidence is entirely hearsay on the point, as is also mine, the only difference being that his witness is dead and mine is very much alive, though 87 years of age. My witness, the oldest tenant on this estate has informed me that Mr. Abbott indubitably did die in the workhouse, and was reputed to be a very good farmer in his day, that he kept his farm, the then portion of the home farm sub-let, in a very fair condition, and that his ruin and death in the workhouse were not due to losses incurred in due course of agriculture in Wales, but to other causes. This is all hearsay, only my witness is alive and his is dead.

42,602. There is no doubt this gentleman died in the workhouse, is there?—No doubt. The farm which is stated to be of prairie value was in fact a portion of the home farm of the old estate. I have this from documents in the possession of the family solicitor; it remained in a state of good cultivation in the personal occupation of Captain, afterwards Sir Thomas Foley, and his wife from 1805 to 1811, 19 years before a lease now referred to and executed in 1830, was granted for three lives to the grandfather of Mr. Llewelyn Williams. The grandfather aforesaid only held the lease for lives at a rent of 250*l.* a year, as stated here, for 12 years or thereabouts, after which, either with or without leave, I do not know which, from the landlord, he surrendered his lease to his son of the same name, the father of the present Mr. Llewelyn Williams, who gave evidence at Llandilo, on condition that 30*l.* a year extra should be paid to Mr. Williams, senior, by his son beyond the rental. That money was paid until the death of the grandfather—it does not matter very much when—oh, yes, it does—it was in the spring of 1870. Now, then, Mr. Llewelyn Williams takes another point; that in 1870 a lease was executed in favour of his own father for 21 years, and that this lease was dated back to Michaelmas of the year before 1869, and that the landlord therefore received half a year's rent at the increased value of the new letting under the 21 years' lease beyond that which he ought to have received under the 30 years' lease.

Chairman—continued.

42,603. He says: "In 1870 my grand- " father died, and the lease was therefore " determined." Where does it say that the lease was put back?—A little further down it says: "The lease produced was signed on " 30th August 1870, but was to date from the " 29th September 1879;" that is evidently a misprint; it should be 1869.

42,604. But is that the fact?—Perfectly, that is the fact. The lease was ante-dated because it was the custom on the Abermarlais estate always to have Michaelmas leases, but the increased rent on the new lease was not charged until it became due under the new lease, so that the landlord received no value whatever. Mr. Llewelyn Williams has received a letter correcting this from his own stepfather, since he gave his evidence.

42,605. You say the increased rent began on 30th August 1870?—Yes.

42,606. And not on the 29th September 1869?—Not at Michaelmas of the previous year, but at Lady-day of the subsequent year.

42,607. Lady-day is in March?—Lady-day is in March.

42,608. And the lease produced was signed in August?—It was dated back to August, but it really was executed in March.

42,609. Let us understand this. The lease produced was signed on 30th August 1870 Did you charge the increased rent from Lady-day?—No.

42,610. Then we understand that till Michaelmas 1870, no increased rent was charged for that farm?—That is so. I have this from documentary evidence shown me the day before yesterday volunteered to me by the stepfather of the gentleman who has given evidence. I think the next point is that Mr. Llewelyn Williams, in speaking of his father taking the Brown Hill farm on a 21 years' lease at an increased rent, says this: " He knew very little " English, and being at the same time 45 years " of age, &c." I think I ought to say a word or two about that.

42,611. Did Mr. Williams' father know much English?—He was perfectly conversant with English for all purposes of business. I knew him well, and he was not only an exceedingly shrewd man in business, but he was a man very much looked up to and of great weight in the country.

Chairman.

42,612. I only want to ask you this. Mr. Williams says he knew very little English, and being at that time about 45 years of age he would have found it extremely difficult to settle down elsewhere. Now what do you wish to rebut there?—Upon that I want to rebut this, that if the late Mr. Morgan Williams had wished to settle in any part of Great Britain, he was such a shrewd and capable man of business, and sufficiently conversant with the English language also, that he would have thriven where a Yorkshireman would have starved. He was a very shrewd man and thoroughly knew his work.

42,613. And you do not consider that, being 45 years of age, he would have found it difficult to found another home?—Not the slightest, unless he was handicapped by a large family. I have only two other points. One is a very small matter. It was with regard merely to the orchard which has been described as having been planted by the grandfather, and being a little paradise. I inspected it the other day. I have seen it for the last 20 years, and it is simply the ordinary very small orchard and a few trees which generally accompany the ordinary farmhouse, and I may say that none of the timber in the place has ever been used by the owner for any other than purposes connected with that farm in particular. The occupiers have derived all the benefit of from it. The occupier has had the full benefit of everything he has done, though the trees, I must say, looked a great deal older than could have been grown in the time.

42,614. With regard to the trees in the orchard, do you rebut that?—The orchard and the garden of leeks and potatoes are all in one.

42,615. Do you wish to deny that he has planted trees in the orchard?—Oh, no.

42,616. And do you deny that the garden is a little paradise?—I do. Well, "paradise" is such a comparative term. If a certain number of leeks and potatoes, and occasionally a few cabbages, can be called by a stretch of imagination a paradise, very well; but those are all I usually saw in it, and the whole paradise occupies about half an acre.

42,617. Is there anything else?—With regard to the re-letting at the expiration of the lease for 21 years, which occurred at the end of 1890.

42,618. He says "In 1890 the lease expired and during the 20 years not a single penny was given in abatements;" is that the fact?—That is the fact. I never advised the landlady to give temporary abatements—never.

42,619. "In 1872 or 1873 I believe the foot "and mouth disease caused wide-spread, and in "many cases, ruinous loss among farmers, I know my father lost considerably" do you deny that?—I do not deny it, for I do not know, I can only say that we have never had a single complaint from the tenants of Brown Hill since our connection with it 22 years ago nor have we been asked for an abatement of any kind.

42,620. "I know that on more than one "occasion cattle had to be resold at low prices "in order to meet the rent," do you deny that?—I do not deny it for I do not know.

Chairman—continued.

42,621. "One year I well remember, about "1878 I think, our most valuable carthorse was "sold for 60*l.* in order to pay the landlord." Is that right?—We have never heard of it before it appeared in print here.

42,622. I only want to know what you do rebut?—I cannot say.

42,623. "I do not believe that the full half year's rent was not paid on the day of the rent audit throughout that period." Has he always paid his rent?—Always.

42,624. "My father, however, had died before "the expiration of the lease." Is that the case?—He had.

42,625. "And my mother had married again "to Mr. Rees Lewis, the present tenant." Is that right?—That is so.

42,626. "Mr. Lewis, however, in 1890 was in "a more independent position than my father "was in 1870." Is that right?—I am not aware of it.

42,627. "He is the owner of one or two farms "in the parish of Llansadwrn, and possessed, "therefore, more freedom to contract with his "landlord. Nor, possibly, was he sentimentally "attached to Brown Hill in the same way as "my father was." Is that right?—He authorises me to say that he has two small farms in the parish of Llansadwrn, but that so far from he himself having used coercion to have a revaluation of his farm, it was I myself who simply proposed it to him before the expiration of his lease, according to our invariable practice when long leases are ended.

42,628. We will come to that in time. "He refused to accept the farm without a new valuation." Is that true?—He did not refuse any such a thing.

42,629. "The landlord appointed a valuer of "his own—a gentleman from Pembrokeshire—"who valued the farm at 280*l.*, which is the "present rent." Is that right?—That was the valuation, but the landlord did not appoint this person. It was by our mutual arrangement out of 3 or 4 landvaluers whom we amicably settled upon.

42,630. "For 20 years, 40*l.* a year had been paid more than the land was worth." Is that your opinion?—It was not so. The land had produced 40*l.* more than the new valuation; I agree with that thoroughly. Mr. Rule Owen told me that he took my own valuation at the end of the lease, with the rider that he would only have reduced it 20*l.* but for the present very low rate of cereals; and he recommended me, if cereals happened to go up in course of time, if I, as general manager for Mrs. Thursby Pelham, thought fit, to put on 20*l.*

42,631–2. There was a man who offered 320*l.* for the farm?—No.

(Mr. Llewelyn Williams.) Mr. Pelham was not the owner then.

Witness.

This man had nothing to do with the original offer. He is a comparatively young man.

Chairman—continued.

(Mr. Llewelyn Williams.) Mr. Foley was the owner in 1870, I think.

Witness.

It was before my day. I have only knowledge of these matters since 1872.

Chairman.

42,633-4. Then you do not rebut that?—I really do not know anything about it.

42,635. Is there anything else?—Not unless the Commissioners like to hear any facts about what has been spent on this farm since we have had it.

42,636. I do not think so. I think the only question between you is a question of degree. You say the garden is not a little paradise and that there is a mistake as regards the increase of rent which was paid in 1870 instead of 1869, and you consider that in the old days, in the early part of the century, the land was well cultivated?—And was not of prairie value previous to 1830.

42,637. The opinion of the tenant of the farm is that it was. That is apparently the point?—Both matters being hearsay, as neither Mr. Williams nor I was born at the time.

42,638. Both matters being hearsay, and therefore we take them for what they are worth. I do not think really practically there is very much between you. There is only the question whether the garden was a paradise or not, and about the 12 months' difference of rent, which has been acknowledged to be a mistake as I understand?—And also, I think, about the coercion for a revaluation; that is something.

42,639. The revaluation you do not speak to?—Yes, I do to the coercion in 1890. Mr. Llewelyn Williams makes out that I was coerced by the present tenant.

Professor Rhŷs.

42,640. You say it was by mutual arrangement?—It was made by an amicable arrangement according to the regular system on the estate.

Chairman.

42,641. These are questions by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Do you suggest that because Mr. Morgan Williams, senior, received 30*l.* a year for eight years out of the profits of a holding which he and a numerous family held for 32 years, his son should therefore pay 40*l.* too much for another 20 years?" Will you just read that through; it is a long question?—I think I can follow it quite well without reading. I cannot rebut that from personal experience because the matter did not come under my immediate attention in those days, but I can only mention that the man who relet that farm at the increased rent mentioned repeatedly, stated to me that he was very much blamed by neighbouring friends for having let the farm

Chairman—continued.

20*l.* too cheaply. That is merely hearsay. I have no personal knowledge.

42,642. "Is not the acreage of the farm 257 acres?"—The acreage of the farm is 270 acres odd on the new survey.

42,643. "Can you deny on your own knowledge that the farm of Brown Hill was offered to Mr. Morgan in 1823 for 20*s.* an acre?—I have no knowledge whatever.

42,644. You have no knowledge whether it was refused?—None whatever. I remember Mr. Morgan was dead, but I have no knowledge of the facts. It was before my day.

42,645. You have no knowledge that Brownhill was offered to Mr. Morgan in 1823 for 20*s.* an acre and that he refused it because it was not worth it?—No, I do not know that.

42,646. "Is it not the fact that the farm was "unlet for two or three years before it was "taken in 1830?"—I was not born then, and I do not know. I have never heard, and I have never asked the question. These are quite new matters to me.

42,647. Then you do not deny that statement?—I neither deny it nor affirm it. I have no knowledge. I do not acknowledge it, I do not affirm it, and I do not rebut it, for I have no knowledge.

42,648. "Do you know that the lease of 1870 was only signed on August 30th, 1879?"—Yes, I believe it to be the case; in fact, I saw it. It was shown to me the day before yesterday. It was put back.

42,649. "It was signed in August, and it dated from the previous Michaelmas?"—Yes, that is so, but without carrying an increased rent with it.

42,650. "Did not this new lease bind Morgan "Williams, junior, to pay 320*l.* rent from "September 1869?"—I cannot tell you, for I have never read the lease. I know, or I have been informed, the terms of the lease were very stringent, and that we have ameliorated them voluntarily to a very considerable tune.

42,651. "The original lease was very stringent?"—The 21 years' lease was a very stringent lease.

42,652. "And threw back to Michaelmas the previous year?"—It threw back by date, though not carrying rent.

42,653. "If the addition of 70*l.* was not "paid to the landlord, the payment could if "necessary have been enforced?"—No; there was a special codicil or clause attached to the lease, releasing the tenant from any such payment.

42,654. I thought you told us you had not seen the lease?—I saw, but did not read it. The codicil was pointed out to me by Mr. Lewis, the present tenant, the day before yesterday. He gave me the facts, and I declined to go through it.

42,655. "Did you see the garden in 1870?"—In 1872, not 1870.

42,656. Have you anything else to say?—Nothing in the way of rebuttal.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Llewelyn Williams recalled and further examined.

For previous examination, see 37,822–38,021.

Chairman.

Chairman—continued.

therefore that I was justified in saying that it was through the labour of my grandfather and his children that the land was increased from that value up to 250*l.* a year in 1850. With regard to the end of the second lease in 1890 I can only state that I had many conversations with my stepfather, previous to the expiration of the last lease, and that my stepfather told me distinctly, years and years before the lease came to an end, that he would not on any condition remain at Brown Hill unless a reduction of rent was granted him. I accept Mr. Pelham's statement that he may not have said that to Mr. Pelham, but that Mr. Pelham himself approached the tenant and not the tenant Mr. Pelham. I quite accept that, but I wish to justify, what I said myself that it was in that way I understoood it. I know that for years my stepfather told me that. That is all I have to say.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I am requested by my brother Commissioners to express our thanks to the County Council and to the Mayor of Carmarthen for their courtesy in putting this commodious hall at our disposal, and my brother Commissioners wish me to express the gratitude that we feel to those gentlemen who have gone to such trouble in preparing the evidence in the county of Carmarthen. The Commissioners hope that the example of those gentlemen will induce others in counties where evidence has not yet been taken to do the same. We are under great obligation to those gentlemen for all the trouble they have taken; it has considerably lightened our labours, and I believe has been a good thing for the Commission and in the interests of the whole truth coming out. We now stand adjourned to Monday morning at Cardigan.

Adjourned to Cardigan.

FIFTY-FIRST DAY.

Second Court.

The Assembly Rooms, Carmarthen, Saturday, April 21st, 1894.

PRESENT :

Lord KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

Sir JOHN DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart. | Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.

Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. HENRY ANTHONY JEREMY called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

42,657. Where do you live ?—At Blackwood, Monmouthshire.

42,658. Are you a tenant farmer ?—No.

42,659. What is your profession ?—I have been the Liberal organiser for Carmarthenshire for the last eight years.

42,660. The Liberal election agent ?—Yes, Liberal election agent, registration agent, and general Liberal organiser.

42,661. Would you proceed with your evidence ?—I have visited, I can say, every parish in the whole county, in fact I have attended committees in every parish throughout the whole county. I therefore claim that I have a little knowledge of the whole county. The majority of farmers are very industrious, and live very hard. Their children work at home and receive no pay whatever, they only get their clothing and a little pocket-money. They are supposed to have a little when they marry, but owing to the limited resources of their parents their portion is very meagre. Their living is exceptionally raw. They hardly have the taste of fresh meat, &c. from one end of the year to the other. Their food consists of salt bacon, skim milk, butter milk, Welsh cheese, which is sold at the rate of from 20*s.* to 25*s.* per cwt., oatmeal, and vegetables ; a meal of fresh herrings, when sold at the rate of 6*d.* per dozen, is looked upon as a feast. They are in great dread of their landlords, and are afraid to speak out. At the time of elections the system of espionage has been resorted to, and was resorted to even at the last election, and tenants have had to suffer. The shameless evictions of 1868 still terrify tenant farmers. The heartless treatment suffered in the past make them very apprehensive of the future. Some tenants were even intimidated at the last bye-election in West Carmarthen, and were asked not to go to the poll. I have received scores of letters informing me that they were afraid to attend a Liberal meeting or to call at that committee room on the election day and assuring at the same time that they would vote straight. In the year 1880 I myself, at 1.30 a.m., met 39 voters in a disused building in the middle of the country, and in order to convince them of the secrecy of the ballot conducted a sham election ; so much afraid were they of their landlords that they dared not come to a public meeting, nor be seen with me. Land-hunger is an indisputable fact. The bringing up of farmers seldom adapts them for pursuits other than agricultural. Their aversion to roaming and their tenacity to home customs and institutions, social and religious, are facts which are undoubtedly taken advantage of by unscrupulous landlords. The consolidation of farms, to wit, Glantowey, Barley-Mount, Derimoelon, Dryslwynfach. Farmers complain of their rents being too high ; great disparity exists as to rents paid on land of equal value, even rents on the same estates differ, old takings are moderate, but on a change of tenancy the rent is considerably raised. This is often the case when one of the children succeeds the parent. Remedies suggested : (a.) There should be uniformity of rentals. The one that has to pay an exacting rent is doubly pressed. The rateable value as a rule follows the rental. Temporary sympathy shown in abatements, though very much welcomed and appreciated by tenants, is no real remedy ; abatements are alms, the recipients of which lose their independence, and are involuntarily reduced to the abject state of serfdom ; bestowing favors in lieu of granting rights cannot have a healthy outcome, and will eventually act unfavourably on all concerned. (b.) Leases should not be encouraged, they may afford temporary security, but land is impoverished at their expiration. Farmers will naturally take from and not improve their holdings during the last year of their tenancy. (c.) Re-adjustment of taxation. Land has to bear the brunt of local taxation at present. The basis should be altered. The occupier of a farm that is assessed at 100*l.* has to contribute more to local rates than the landlord or the professional man, whose income varies from 600*l.* to 1,000*l.* Now this entirely ignores the great principle which is laid down by political economists, the weaker is overtaxed and the stronger undertaxed. (d.) The transfer of land simplified and made cheaper; extortionate charges in the transfer of land, cripple the seller and the occupier. (e.) More facilities for building purposes; exorbitant prices demanded for building sites are detrimental to the development of local industries. (f.) In cases of insolvency preference should not be given to landlord's claims. Priority of claims is an inducement to landowners to exact rack-rents, and is prejudicial to the interests of good farmers. (g.) Fair compensation for tenants' improvements. On change of tenancy this should be paid by landlords. When a farm is sold the seller should be made to compensate; the purchaser buys the land in its improved condition, and it is unreasonable that he should be charged for improvements for which he paid in the price given for the farm. (h.) Waste land should be cultivated. Government should compel owners of waste land to have it cultivated, and if necessary should assist in cultivating it. This would be an additional source of revenue to the country, would find additional employment to agricultural labourers, thus saving the depopulation of rural districts, and would aid in meeting the demands for land. Government, under certain restrictions, should advance money at reasonable interest to farmers to buy their own holdings. (i.) Land courts should be established, having full power to arbitrate between landlords and tenants; some kind of a sliding scale system should be established, whereby rents could be regulated by the prices of stocks and crops. Land courts not to be made absolute, but should be the resort for protection to tenants against exacting landlords, i.e., land courts should be to good tenants what the penalising clauses in agreements are to good landlords. It has been argued, and very properly too, that penalising clauses are never acted upon except when necessary. The landlord has his protection; why not grant the same to the tenant? The desire of a land court or its equivalent has been over and over again most emphatically expressed by an overwhelming majority of the Carmarthenshire peasants; temperance, church, and land questions were the three prominent local questions that have influenced the electors in all the elections since 1880. Special prominence was given to the land question in all the addresses of the Liberal candidates; so much prominence was given to the land question during the contest between Emlyn and Powell in 1885 that a leaflet was issued from the Central Liberal Committee contrasting the votes of the two re the Bill and its amendments. After the distribution of that leaflet the result of the poll became a foregone conclusion. I heard Mr. Powell, a very keen observer of men and of things, attributing his grand success at the poll of 1885 to his being in touch on the land question with the farmers. All his addresses and speeches prove that he was an ardent land reformer, and was in favour of the legislation to afford protection to the deserved.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

42,662. Have you any any evidence of those evictions in 1868?—No, I was too young.

42,663. It is only hearsay?—Hearsay.

42,664. How long has the complaint against too high rents been in this county in your recollection?—Ever since I remember, my Lord.

42,665. What waste land is there? What do you term waste land?—Mountainous land, uncultivated land.

42,666. Do you suggest it could be now profitably cultivated as things are?—I do.

42,667. What do you mean by cultivation, ploughing it up?—Yes, and fertilising; cleaning it.

42,668. You know it has been tried in some cases, and allowed to fall back in the same state?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

42,669. We have heard a great deal since we began this Commission about good and bad landlords, and we are beginning to have a general idea of what it means. Do you say you have many bad landlords in Carmarthenshire. I do not want you to name them?—I do not mean to say that the majority of what we call landlords in Carmarthenshire are bad. What I mean by the term "landlord" is a gentleman who has a rental of say 600*l.* a year at least.

42,670. Who owns something like 500 or 600 acres?—Yes.

42,671. That would make the number rather large?—Not so large in Carmarthenshire.

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,672. When you refer to waste land, Mr. Jeremy, do you refer to mountain land with a high situation, or do you refer to common land with a low situation?—To both.

42,673. Do you think that mountain land with a high situation can be profitably cultivated?—They tell me that even Llangeler mountain has been profitably cultivated; that is not far from Llandyssil, between here and Newcastle Emlyn.

42,674. Is it under cultivation?—Some of it, and what is under cultivation pays well for the cultivation, and grand crops are produced.

42,675. The soil then must be more fertile than it is in Montgomeryshire?—I do not know anything about Montgomeryshire.

Sir John Llewelyn.

42,676. Have the tenant farmers as a rule any capital to deal with?—Not large.

42,677. So that the rents generally come out of the year's produce?—And unfortunately they have to borrow to my knowledge to pay the rent. I am afraid that there are many of our farmers of the present day on the brink of insolvency.

42,678. Because last year, 1893, was such a very bad year?—Yes, and the year before too.

42,679. Two years running?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

42,680. That would probably account for their not having much to give to their children at the time of their marriage?—That has been the case for the last 20 years.

42,681. Have you not many instances in which the children have been brought up to the higher professions?—A few. Some have been brought up to the church, to my knowledge.

42,682. And the law?—Very few, but some have.

42,683. The Secretary of this Commission comes from this county, I think?—Yes; not as many to the law as to the church.

42,684. And as medical men?—A few.

42,685. There are some very bright examples, I think, from Carmarthenshire?—Yes, there are.

42,686. With regard to the cases of consolidation of farms, is that frequent in the county of Carmarthen. Are there many cases of consolidation of farms?—Well, I have been told there are.

42,687. You spoke of some of your own knowledge. You gave a list of some?—Yes, I did, on the estate of Lord Cawdor, and very good farms they were too.

42,688. Do you know the reason of the consolidation?—My impression is that it was the agent's idea of having large farms. He was a Scotchman. That is my impression, but I should not like to speak positively.

42,689. Of course that would be the adding together of small farms to make them larger?—Yes, and they were adding small farms to farms that were very large already, for instance Bremenda-Isaf and Bremenda-Ucha, they are very large farms, and they are good farms.

42,690. What became of the buildings in the instances you mention?—There are labourers living in some of the old houses.

42,691. The consolidation was not for the purpose of destroying the old buildings?—No, I do not think so.

42,692. Those buildings are still inhabited?—Yes, to a certain extent, but the buildings were in rather a dilapidated state.

42,693. Do you quote that as a bad thing?—I do really.

42,694. Kindly give me your reason why?—Because you deprive so very many families of a chance of livelihood.

42,695. I understand you the houses are still inhabited by people who are acting as agricultural labourers, so that there are an equal number of men employed upon the land, but one man would take the profits, and pay the rent?—Perhaps I made a mistake. There are two or three of the houses inhabited, I believe, by men who work on the railway, or were sometime ago, at any rate, and other houses are inhabited by widows. One of them is a clergyman's widow.

42,696. If you think it a bad thing how do you think it could be prevented, supposing there was a land court. I want your remedy for what you think an evil?—Improving the land, and renting it at a fair rent to tenants.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

42,697. Improving the buildings for one thing?—Yes.

42,698. At whose expense?—At the expense of the landlord. As a rule small farms pay better even to the landlord himself than big ones.

42,699. Is there a larger demand for the big or the small farms?—The larger demand by far is for the smaller farms. I can mention this of my own experience. Fortunately or unfortunately about three years ago I bought a little farm about 62 acres; the tenant was not under notice, and he is there still. In less than a fortnight I had 31 applications for that farm, although the tenant was not under notice by the landlord, and he is there still. I only just quote that as an instance of the land hunger.

42,700. That land hunger would be greater for the smaller farms than for the larger farms?—Yes, certainly; and even larger farms create it.

42,701. Do you not think there must be some special reason for the cases you mention in which there was consolidation?—Fancy, I believe, more than anything else.

42,702. Because, I think, the landlords are generally alive to their own advantages?—I think they are.

42,703. I do not think they would as a rule consolidate if there was greater demand for the smaller farms. Is consolidation at all common on Lord Cawdor's estate You have spoken of certain instances?—Certain instances I am absolutely certain of. I know, Sir John, they are not common on your estate, because I live near it.

42,704. Where do you live?—Now at Blackwood. I used to live at White Mill, Abergwili, near Hendre-hedog.

42,705. Do you know whether consolidation goes on now?—I do not think it does now. I do not know of any instances.

42,706. Then you spoke strongly against the system of giving abatements. You used these terms—that it involuntarily reduces the tenant farmers to a state of serfdom. Is not that rather an unkind thing to say of the tenants themselves?—I qualified that.

42,707. It is a matter of opinion?—I qualified that in my statement.

42,708. I thought it rather unkind to the tenant-farmer as well as to the landlord?—This is what I said: "Temporary sympathy shown "in abatements, though very much welcomed "and appreciated by tenants, is no real remedy."

42,708A. Why?—According to my idea "Abatements are alms, the recipients of which "lose their independence, and are involuntarily "reduced to the abject state of serfdom; "bestowing favours in lieu of granting rights "cannot have a healthy outcome."

42,709. You put the reduction as a matter of right?—Certainly.

42,710. Assuming that land is let below its market value, do you think it is a matter of right to the tenant to get a permanent reduction?

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

—I do not like the word "reduction" at all myself.

42,711. I am speaking of permanent reductions. Abatements are temporary. You do not like the word "reduction"?—I do not.

42,712. What do you like?—What is right and fair. If it is a permanent reduction it makes a difference. I withdraw that.

42,713. When an abatement has gone on for years by mutual arrangement is that not done upon an average of good and bad years?—I cannot say.

42,714. No two consecutive years are ever the same?—No, I am aware of that.

42,715. I think you have given us a sliding scale as a remedy?—Yes; say you have a sliding scale, the sliding scale exists at the present rate, tithe rent-charge, and so on.

42,716. You think that ought to exist also with regard to rents?—Some kind of sliding scale. I say the rent should be regulated to a great extent by the price of crops and stock.

42,717. A self-acting sliding scale?—A self-acting sliding scale.

42,718. Now to come to the question of the waste lands. Would you specify the cases that are in your own mind. What instances are there in your own mind?—I cannot specify, only my experience in travelling over the country in Carmarthenshire.

42,719. Surely there are some parts of Carmarthenshire totally unsuited for agriculture?—Yes, and some should be cultivated according to my idea and the idea of the people who live in the immediate neighbourhood. I have visited every parish throughout the whole county. I have attended committees in every parish in the county of Carmarthen.

42,720. And probably you know in some parts of the county some enclosures have taken place under the existing Acts of Parliament?—No, I cannot say that I do know.

42,721. Was there not an enclosure at Llanybyther?—Yes, I think there was. I should not like to be certain on that point.

42,722. Are you aware that under the existing laws, that is to say, the Enclosure Acts, there are opportunities for cultivation of what is now called the waste lands?—Yes, I am aware of that.

42,723. You think those opportunities might be extended?—I do.

42,724. May I suggest to you that there is machinery by which it might be done through your local authorities?—Certainly there is, but that machinery is not taken advantage of.

42,725. You recommend to the Land Commissioners that there is an opportunity for the extension of those in the county of Carmarthen?—Yes, and we should be very glad if it was put in motion.

42,726. We should be very glad if you were to give us the names of the places which you think would be usefully enclosed?—I should not like to speculate.

Lord Kenyon.

42,727. You are a generaliser?—Yes, I am a generaliser, and I should not like to specialise. If you will allow me I should like to say I have heard it complained over and over again, not once, not twice, but 20 times, that Emlyn Park should be better cultivated.

42,728. Where is that?—Near Golden Grove.

42,729. Is not the farm a model farm. You mean the park?—Yes.

42,730. Is that some of the waste lands you are speaking of?—No. I was not speaking of that land; only you pressed me, and then of course, I say that.

42,731. I am only anxious to get at what is in your mind?—That was not in my mind.

42,732. Nor could it come under the category of waste lands?—No.

42,733. That is a piece of private property which is used as a park?—Yes.

42,734. And some of the neighbours think that ought to be made up into farm land?—Not many, but some of them. I did not hear them say that, but they say it should be cultivated. I have heard that in public meetings.

42,735. I will not suggest to you it is not cultivated. It carries sheep as well as deer?—Yes, and especially rabbits and pheasants.

42,736. Are rabbits food or not?—They are.

42,737. That is a question I suppose of private right, and you were speaking of commons before?—Yes.

42,738. I do not in the least desire to lead you out of the question you were legitimately upon?—I beg your pardon.

42,739. I was entirely upon the question of the commoners and their rights, and I should have been very glad if you could have indicated any of the commons which you thought could be profitably enclosed?—Well, there is a common now which presents itself to my mind, between Llangendeirn and Llanddarog.

42,740. Where is that?—Waunyfran.

42,741. To whom does that belong?—There are some gentlemen present who can say more about it than I can, but I know it is a common.

42,742. If you suggest that some of these lands could be profitably enclosed I would further ask you whether it would be right that buildings should be attached to the enclosures. Well, I will not press you any further upon that. It is an interesting question, and I agree with you that there are some parts of Wales where there might be cultivation of what are at present open lands. It is going into a very large question I know. I know there are some of the commoners have such important rights, more or less, over the waste lands that they would themselves object to giving it up?—Yes, certainly.

42,743. You suggested a sliding scale, and you further said that there was a sliding scale with regard to tithe. Do you think that is a fair basis on the corn averages?—No, I do not think it is a fair basis. That is based entirely on corn.

42,744. Corn is very low, is it not?—Very low just now.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

42,745. Can you explain to me how people have asked for abatements on the tithe, and have received them?—I cannot explain that.

42,746. If a sliding scale is fair?—I know this much, that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in my old parish turned a deaf ear to it.

42,747. If there is anything in the sliding scale it should be fair?—Yes, certainly.

42,748. I have some questions to ask you, put by Mr. Stephen. "Can you produce any "letters relating to the intimidation which you "allege to have prevailed at the last election? "Which election precisely do you refer to?"—The election in Carmarthenshire when Mr. Powell died.

42,749. "Have you any letters relating to intimidation?"—As a Liberal agent undoubtedly I can safely say that I have in my possession some hundreds of letters, but they will never be divulged and never shown. I know that evidence will be given as to this in the other court by the tenants themselves.

Sir John Llewelyn.

42,750. Can you give the date?—I refer to the bye-election after Mr. Powell died.

42,751. After Mr. Powell died would be 1890?—The general election; it was 1889 or 1890.

Lord Kenyon.

42,752. "Can you tell us the size of the farms "which were consolidated on Lord Cawdor's "estate?"—There was a part of Barley Mount added to Bremenda-ucha, and that contained 47 acres.

42,753. Can you give the acreage of Bremenda-ucha before the addition?—Well, I should not like to be certain.

42,754. You know that a farm of 47 acres was added to Bremenda-ucha?—Yes; that is only part of Barley Mount, and there is another part of Barley Mount added to a farm called The Inn, Llanarthney.

42,755. That last farm you mentioned is divided into two parts?—Or even three parts. It disappeared altogether, and five farms disappeared altogether; that is, Pen-y-banc, Barley Mount, Llwyndu, Brynmelin, and Garreg gochucha.

42,756. "Have you had any practical experience of farming?"—I have; I am a farmer's son. (The witness here handed in a small book entitled "The Custom in Mynyddislwyn Parish, respecting Unexhausted Tillages, &c." This has been printed in the Appendix to the Monmouthshire evidence, Vol. II., pp. 955-6.)

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,757. Do you hand this book in as a custom which prevails in parishes in the neighbourhood of Blackwood, Monmouthshire?—Yes, I do. I was present at Blackwood when you asked the question, and the reply was that there was no custom. I knew that there was a custom, so I bought that book last night and gave 1*s.* for it.

42,758. Does the custom work satisfactorily?—There are different opinions about it, but it is in force there.

42,759. Is that the custom which we heard of in Monmouthshire as being brought out by the Chamber of Agriculture?—No.

42,760. This is only the custom of one parish?—Yes, but a very large parish.

Lord Kenyon.

42,761. Have the majority of the landlords and farmers in the district signed it?—Yes, it seems so in 1867, and that custom is adhered to 42,762. As a basis?—Yes.

42,763. It included 14 landowners in one parish?—Yes, it is a very large parish.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

42,764. This statement has been read over to you, and you say it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence of John Jones, Tenant Farmer, Brisken Uchaf, Llanfynydd.

See 42,056. Personal.—Along with Mr. John Thomas, of Troedyrhiw, I have been selected at a public meeting of the farmers of Llanfynydd to give evidence for this parish. The surface extent of the parish is 10,774 acres, 2 roods, 34 perches. The gross rental in 1893 was 7,195*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, and according to income tax assessment 7,875*l.* Then I wish to give the figures for 1869, in order that you may see the difference. It was then 5,392*l.* That is the rental which I have taken.

Farmers' Complaints. — 1. Excessive rents. 2. Insecurity of tenure. 3. No compensation for improvements. The nature of land in this parish is such that it requires constant cultivation and draining, as it is comparatively unproductive of itself. The flat land, as a rule, is marshy, and if left alone would grow alder, willow, rushes, and some kind of reedy pasture. The conscientious farmer has to uproot the alder and the willow, cut the rushes and open the drains, before he can get any produce of value from the land. The greater part of the parish, however, is upland or mountain land. This if left to itself would grow furze, ferns, and undergrowth of small briars, and a kind of dry and useless pasture. On such a soil the farmer who does his duty uproots the furze and briars, cuts the ferns, limes, and gives farm-yard manure, after that he will have two crops; then he will have to buy artificial manure and seeds. Another kind is the purely mountainous land, high, bleak, and open. This produces of itself, heather, and the surface must be lightly pared ("diddoni") burnt, limed, and ploughed, and after much trouble a crop can be raised. A small portion of the parish consists of good land.

Rents Increased on Improvements. — After the tenant has improved the land in the way which I have indicated, the agent considers that it is only just to increase the rent according to the value of the improvement that has been made on the farm. In order to meet this advance in his rent, the farmer is obliged to do with less labour and pay off one or two workmen. This has happened in the case of farmer after farmer, and the consequence is that the land is depopulated, and is losing workmen and servants. The cottages and houses wherein the workmen once lived are falling into ruin. I believe that all improvements made by the tenant should belong to him. Under the present law every penny which is put by the tenant in the land becomes the property of the landlord at the end of twelve months. I can give one good instance of this. When Daniel Jones became tenant of Llwyn'ryn in this district the buildings were in such a bad state of repair that in a short time part of the cow house fell on two yearlings, and killed them on the spot. In consequence of this, the owner offered the tenant the sum of 5*l.* a year for keeping the buildings in repair. But the buildings were falling faster than it was possible for the tenant to keep them up on 5*l.* a year.

42,765. Who is the owner?—He comes from Llansawel. I do not know his name. The name appears in the receipts handed in.

42,766. Do you know Llwyn'ryn of your own knowledge?—Yes, it is close by.

42,767. Did Daniel Jones ask you to state this case?—Yes.

He decided at last that it would be better and cheaper for him to erect new buildings. He did so. He built a cow house, 47 ft. by 22 ft., by 7 ft. 6 inches high. Also two sheds for keeping store cattle, all of which cost him over 150*l.*, besides the haulage. Besides all this, he drained 911 perches for which he used 21,864 pipes. He pulled down many crooked hedges, and put new and straighter ones in their stead. In the seventh year, after doing all this, this farm, with the improvements on it was sold by public auction at Llandilo, and the tenant never received a penny compensation for the expense he had been to, with the the exception of the 5*l.* a year which he had been promised for keeping the buildings in repair.

Cultivation. — The land is also allowed to go out of proper cultivation, because the tenant has no money to spare for cultivating the farm. And the land, which was once effectively cultivated, returns quickly to its old marshy condition for want of men to continue to keep open the drains.

Land Hunger. — One particular reason, in my opinion, why rent has become so high is that wealthy publicans and shoemakers and other artisans, and merchants who have made a fortune are so eager to get land that the agent is sometimes not allowed to ask a price, but gives it to the highest bidder. Three of the largest farms in the Vale of Towy have of late years been held by tailors and shoemakers, viz., Dryslwyn Fawr, Ro Fawr, and Pentre Dafis. Other farms held by artisans or people other than farmers are Waunlluest, Berthlwyd, Cefn Martin, Crug, and Nantymab. While there are so many asking for land it is impossible for the inexperienced landlord to believe other than that the land is reasonably cheap. When one of the class I have named happens to meet with a farm that suits his taste his object is not to get it for value but for money. The old tenant, therefore, has to give it up, though all his capital is in the land, and he has no claim to a penny compensation according to the present law. The following places have been lately vacant, and various applications, varying from 4 to 30, were made for them: Pengoitre, Troedyrhiw, Whitlera, and Blaensannan. This land hunger has a most grievous effect on the condition of the farmers. It raises rents, makes tenants suspicious of one another and servile towards their landlords, causes landlords to view with indifference the loss of a tenant, and the insecurity has a bad effect on the cultivation of the land.

Suggestions. — 1. Land Court to assess fair rents. 2. Fixity of tenure. 3. Full compensa- for all improvements.

42,768. Are you aware of the existence of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—We know of it as it appears in the book, but not practically.

42,769. How do you say you know that under the present law every penny which is put in by the tenant becomes the property of the landlord?—That is how we see that it has proved in our neighbourhood, because they raise the rents constantly if the improvements are made—but not to everyone, every landlord does not do so.

42,770. I want to know more about this landlord of Llwyn'ryn. Is he a large landlord?—No, he is not.

42,771. Has he any other land?—I think he has, I am not quite sure.

42,772. Has he any other land in that district?—Not in that district.

42,773. Only that one farm?—Yes, only that one farm.

42,774. You do not remember his name?—I do not remember his name, but it appears on the receipts.

42,775. They are not receipts for rent?—No.

42,776. Then I take it he is a freeholder and he prefers to let his farm?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

42,777. Did Daniel Jones make any application to his landlord for permission to make his buildings?—The 5*l.* which his landlord promised him for keeping the repairs up shows that.

42,778. That is not an answer to the question. The question is whether he made any application to his landlord before he made the buildings himself?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

42,779. What was the answer of the landlord?—To keep them standing for a time and to give him 5*l.* to assist him.

42,780. Was that equivalent to an answer that he could not afford to do it?—I cannot say that.

42,781. What is the name?—I do not know the name.

42,782. How are we to give this gentleman notice of the evidence which has been given here to-day if you cannot give us his name?—I can easily send in the name.

42,783. Is Mr. Daniel Jones alive?—He was alive yesterday.

42,784. Did he know this evidence was going to be given here to-day?—He wished the evidence to be given.

42,785. Would it not have been well to let the landlord know?—Yes, certainly.

42,786. We would do it if we knew his name. That is our principle. Can you not find out from someone present the name of the landlord?—I cannot find it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

The place was sold seven years ago.

Sir John Llewelyn.

42,787. What was the total value of the work of the house and buildings made by Mr. Daniel Jones?—I did not receive the total amount, but the several amounts are here in the receipts. There is a note here which shows that the money which had been borrowed was paid after the place had been sold.

Lord Kenyon.

42,788. Was the landlord who sold this farm the small land owner you referred to?—Yes, he was a small freeholder.

42,789. Was that the name you referred to, or were you referring to the present owner when you answered my questions?—I referred to the old landlord, I did not say anything about the present landlord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

42,790. Who bought the farm when it was sold?—The purchaser came from Llanelly.

42,791. What is his name?—I do not know the name. I can send both names to the Secretary easily, the old landlord as well as the present landlord.*

42,792. What is the rent of the farm now?—60*l.*

42,793. What was the rent then?—I do not know that.

42,794. You do not know whether the rent was raised or not?—No, I do not.

42,795. Who are the wealthy tailors and shoemakers who buy farms?—Relatives of some of them are in those two excellent farms of about 400 acres each.

Professor Rhŷs.

42,796. Why do you say relatives?—The parents are dead. The shoemaker's daughter is there now, and the butcher's son is also there. I do not know the rent.

42,797. You do not know who the others are?—I do not know whether any of the relatives of the other men are in the other place.

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,798. How long is it since Llwyn'ryn was sold? When was the auction?—Last year.

42,799. Is Daniel Jones still a tenant?—Yes.

42,800. What were these people that now occupy these farms that you mention, Waunlluest, Berthlwyd, Cefn Martin, Crug, and Nantymab. You say artisans?—Waunlluest a carpenter, Berthlwyd a draper, Cefn Martin a tailor, Crug a butcher, and Nantymab a shoemaker.

42,801. Are these large farms?—Yes, two or three of them are exceptionally fine farms. There is not a better one than Berthlwyd in the neighbourhood of Llandilo. Crug is near the town of Llandilo.

42,802. How many acres?—About 60 acres—I am not sure of that—they keep 12 cows.

42,803. Who is the owner of these farms?—I do not know the name of the owner of Berthlwyd, but Mr. Gerwyn Jones of Pantglas is the owner of Waunlluest. I do not know the owner of Cefn Martin, but the owner of Crug is Mr. David Stephen of Llandilo. John Williams, the shoemaker, lives at Nantymab, but I do not know who his landlord is.

42,804. We have been repeatedly told that on large properties generally the oldest son, or at any rate the nearest relative, succeeds the deceased tenant. Have these people become occupiers of these farms under circumstances of that sort?—No, they have not—not those.

Professor Rhys.

42,805. You do not find that the successful butchers and tailors take farms nowadays, do you?—Crug is an instance, and that during the last three years.

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,806. Is shoemaking in the country as profitable now as it was in former years?—I cannot say, probably it is so.

42,807. I suppose the shoemaker thinks that farming is more profitable?—No, I do not think he imagines it pays better, but if he has made a little money he likes to live on the land.

Lord Kenyon.

42,808. This is a question by Mr. Stephen: "Can you give us any information as to "whether Daniel Jones ever had any negotiations with his landlord about the cow-house "and drains? If you can will you do so? "Can you mention any case in which a farm "has been let to the highest bidder?"—Daniel Jones told me that he had seen his landlord.

* The following has been subsequently received by the Secretary:—"The name of the owner of Llwynyryn when Daniel "Jones became tenant in 1887 was Mrs. Davies, of Green Hall, "Llansawel. She died in 1892, and the farm was then sold to "Mr. John Williams, Pentwyn, Cross Hands, near Llanelly."

Lord Kenyon—continued.

42,809. Did he have any negotiations with him before the farm was sold?—Not at all; only a portion of the cow-house fell in, so that it was necessary to make some improvement.

42,810. He built at his own expense?—Yes, entirely on his own responsibility, That is the general rule on the estate, and on the estate on which I am, if the son succeeds the father they do not give it to the highest bidder.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

42,811. That is not an answer to the question. Can you give any instances?—I can mention farms whose rents were increased, but I cannot say that the occupier was the highest bidder.

42,812. Then the answer is "No"?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Miss Jane Rees called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

42,813. You say that this statement which is about to be read is accurate?—Yes, I do.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence of Miss Jane Rees, daughter of the late David Rees, tenant farmer, Llwynconwil Fach, Conwil Elfed.

Personal.—I remember my father first living at Clyngosen, Cilrhedin, 12½ acres, rent 10*l.* Landlord, James James, Ffoslin, Newchurch. My father remained there for 10 years, 1852–1862. In the second year of his tenancy, he received notice for a rise of 5*s.* in the rent, and four years after, another 10*s.* The only reason assigned for this last rise by the landlord was that my father had had a new coat, while he (the landlord) couldn't afford to get one. During his 10 years' tenancy, my father received five notices and five rises, until the rent was 12*l.* 10*s.* We then went to live at Nantllin, in the same parish. The rent before father had it was 16*l.* 10*s.* Rented to us for 18*l.* After living there for 14 years, we had notice for an increase of 10*l.* Paid them for seven years, but we could not continue longer as we yearly lost money. My father built outhouses, and drained the place at a cost of 80*l.*, 50*l.* on buildings, and 30*l.* on draining. He spent money on stables, chaff-house, pigstyes, carthouse, and dairy, and only received from the landlord 4*l.* towards the carthouse. When he received notice to quit, the outbuildings were in a bad state—those which he had not repaired—and fell two months after. He received no compensation for any of the improvements when he left. The owner (now deceased) was Mrs. Seth Lewis, Carmarthen. In 1883 my father removed to Llwynconwilfach, a farm of 57 acres. The rent before we had it was 43*l.* and for the first three years it was rented to us at that price. Afterwards the rent was raised to 50*l.* on condition that new buildings were to be provided, my father agreeing to fetch lime from the kilns, free of cost. My father fetched one load of lime; he was not paid for the haulage, and had to pay 6*s.* for the load, and no repairs were ever made. I produce letters from my late landlord, the Rev. J. R. Jones, Burghill Vicarage, Hereford, continually promising to build every spring from 1887, but we had nothing but promises. Snow had percolated into the bedrooms, and I have awakened many mornings finding two inches of snow on the bed, and in some places two to three feet of snow in the house. The stable has eight props under it and some little covering, and the carthouse has 10 props under it, and although we continued to pay 50*l.* rent we had no houses to stable the horses in. On the approach of winter we had often to sell at great loss; e.g., last autumn we had to sell our own cattle because we had no buildings. The cows have also been unwell owing to bad colds. Since 1883 we lost 300*l.* including 60*l.* of my own money which I had saved when out in service and by "jobbing" sheep, &c. My father signed an agreement, but we never had a copy, and he, being a monoglot Welshman, probably knew nothing about its contents. I am the sole executrix under the will of my father, who died last July, and am under notice to quit. The agent is the late landlord's brother, Mr. Evan Jones, Picton Terrace, Carmarthen.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,814. Was Llwynconwilfach glebe land?—It belonged to a clergyman, not of necessity to the church, it was not glebe land.

42,815. Your landlord was a clergyman?—Yes.

42,816. Were you a cattle jobber?—The time before I came to Llwynconwilfach I did that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

42,817. You seem not to be tired of the land. You change for a larger holding on each occasion?—Yes, I have gone to bigger holdings, but I have grown less by taking bigger holdings through not having improvements.

42,818. Do you think you are getting better each change?—No, I am getting worse now.

42,819. May I ask about the drainage. Did you not get any compensation for the drainage that was done when you left Nantllin?—None after improving the place, we had notice of an increase in the rent.

42,820. When was that?—15 or 16 years ago.

42,821. That was before the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—We had to pay that interest for seven years. When the 21 years came to an end we had notice to leave. Then our land was added to other land because our buildings were coming down.

42,822. You have been 10 years in Llwynconwilfach?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

42,823. You are now under notice to quit?—Yes.

42,824. Is there any reason given for that?—No, I cannot say that there is any reason than that I have received notice to quit after my father's death, although I had everything after him

Lord Kenyon.

42,825. I have been reading the letters you have handed up, and I see that the landlord continually says: "Would you get a respectable "tradesman to give an estimate for the "necessary repairs"?—I cannot say, but I was paying 7*l.* a year more on condition that I would get the repairs.

42,826. The point is this, that he (the landlord) asked your father to get an estimate of what was necessary. Did he do that?—No, he did not because no man could say how much it would cost without knowing from where the materials would be got, and after what plan the buildings would be made.

42,827. Was that the answer you gave to the reverend gentleman?—Yes.

42,828. I see the reverend gentleman writes to his brother to ask him to see the buildings, did the brother come?—Yes, every year the brother came in the autumn and they promised to build each spring.

42,829. Was the reverend gentleman old?—I do not know his age.

42,830. He died, I suppose?—Yes.

42,831. I see in each letter he says he is ill?—I have had to sell my cattle for half what they are worth in the autumn for want of buildings.

42,832. Do you not think that if you had sent an estimate as he requested that he would have put up the buildings?—No, I do not think so.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

42,833. Who is the present owner?—The daughters.

42,834. You do not know why you have had notice to quit?—No.

42,835. Are you in arrear of rent? You need not answer that unless you like?—No, I am not in arrear, I have paid the rent in full.

42,836. Have you asked the owner to allow you to stay on?—No, I have not, the place is too highly rented to stay on. It is at a rack rent (Crogbris) now.

42,837. Is it the same as it was at first? Has it been raised at all?—There are some pounds increased in the rent on condition that we should get the buildings.

42,838. A contract which was never fulfilled?—My father had to carry this cart load to the buildings, and they had to pay, but he after all had to pay for it.

42,839. This seems a very hard case. There are some questions put by Mr. Stephen: "Have you sublet Llwynconwilfach?"—Yes.

42,840. "Did you sublet it by auction?—Yes.

42,841. "At what rent did you sublet?"—76*l.*

42,842. Do you not consider that that was too high a rent?—I pay the tithe, rate, and taxes.

42,843. If you consider it was rack rented at 50*l.*, do you not consider it was more than rack rented at 76*l.*?—Yes, but there is a great deal of expense in keeping the fences in repair, and looking after the cattle, and paying the taxes.

42,844. What do the taxes amount to?—The amount varies from year to year, you cannot say exactly how much it is, sometimes 10*l.* and sometimes 12*l.*

42,845. How long has it been sublet?—This year the first time. I had not buildings to keep my cattle on it last year.

42,846. There is another question by Mr. Stephen: "Have you given notice to any "relation of the late Rev. J. Jones that you "were coming here?"—No, I have not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Howell Thomas called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

42,847. Do you reside at Derllys Court, Carmarthen?—Yes.

42,848. Are you a land agent, an auctioneer, and a tenant farmer?—Yes. First of all I should like to rebut the evidence of the last witness, as I am, since the death of Mr. Jones, the agent for the farm of which she spoke. I have been appointed agent by the trustee.

42,849. You heard Jane Rees' evidence?—Yes.

42,850. You wish to give your own evidence as well?—Yes.

42,851. Give the rebutting evidence first?—With reference to the notice to quit, I believe the trustee had heard that she was going to have a sale of her stock and everything there, and he told me that she was no use as a tenant, and she did not do the farm any good, and under the circumstances they had given her notice to quit. With reference to the repairs, that was before my time, and I know nothing at all about the promises made by the late landlord as to the repairs.

42,852. I suppose the place is in a bad state of repair?—The place is in a bad state of repair, but the repairs are going to be done this year.

42,853. Was any reason for the notice to quit given to Jane Rees?—I believe not. The notice to quit was given before I was appointed agent, some time. The notice to quit was given by the trustee.

42,854. Have you anything further you wish to say on that matter?—No, nothing at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,855. Has she in any way exaggerated the case with regard to these buildings?—I know nothing at all about the buildings.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

42,856. Have you never been there?—I have been there.

42,857. In reference to the present condition of the buildings, has she exaggerated the case? She says that there are eight props keeping up the stable, and the carthouse has 10 props?—Well, the outbuildings are in a very bad state, and we are going to make entirely new buildings there.

Lord Kenyon.

42,858. We may take it that this is not an exaggeration of the state of the buildings and the house?—Of the outbuildings, not of the house, I take it.

42,859. You think it was not possible for snow to percolate into the bedrooms?—Yes, I think it was not possible. The house is in a very bad state of repair, but the inside of the house looks as if no one lived there. The tenant, I believe, lives in rather a funny way, and the house looks as if there was no one living there.

42,860. Perhaps she wants to keep the inside of the house in keeping with the outside?—I do not know what her reason is for keeping the inside so badly; one would think she would take a little interest in the house in keeping it all right inside, at any rate.

42,861. There are some questions put by Mr. Llewelyn Williams. "How do you know that "Jane Rees was no good as a tenant as she had "no chance to be the tenant till last summer, "when her father died?"—Because I had been over the farm, and I could see but very little work had been done on the farm.

42,862. "You say that she received notice to quit because it was said she was going to have a sale of her stock?"—I believe so.

42,863. "Was she not obliged to sell because there were no buildings?"—I do not know about that.

42,864. That is her statement?—I do not know whether that is her reason for selling or not.

42,865. "Have you examined the roof carefully?"—No, I have not.

Professor Rhŷs.

42,866. Do you know whether the roof is pointed?—The roof is not pointed. I have seen it from outside, and it looks in a very fair state.

42,867. If it was not pointed the snow would come in, if there was snow?—If it had been so bad as that I should have fancied there would have been a very big hole in the roof for the snow to come in.

42,868. It is a slate roof?—Yes, a slate roof. If I had known that this witness was going to say that in her evidence I should have gone to see, and then I should have been able to explain to you. I have not been over the house, but have seen it from outside. I have been inside in the rooms below, but not up to the bedrooms.

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,869. With reference to the buildings, do you think the buildings were in a fit state to shelter the cattle in the winter?—No, I cannot say but that the buildings are bad, they are to be rebuilt this summer.

42,870. There is some justification for what she says then, that the buildings were not fit for her to shelter the cattle, and that she was obliged to sell?—Well, there might be.

Lord Kenyon.

42,871. There is another question by Mr. Llewelyn Williams. "Was not Miss Rees obliged to find security for the next rent?"—Yes, she was.

Professor Rhŷs.

42,872. Why was that? Had there been any difficulty about the rent before?—There had been no difficulty, I believe, about the rent before, but if she would not pay the rent for the last 25th of March or 29th of September, and if she refused to pay the next rent where were we going to get it from?

42,873. Was there no stock on the farm?—There was nothing on the farm. She has let the farm by auction. I was instructed by the trustee to get security from her, and I did so.

42,874. Do you know how old her father was when he died?—No, I know nothing at all about them. It was in March, I believe, that I was appointed agent, and I know nothing at all about them.

42,875. I want to know whether she did not do most of the management of the farm before her father's death?—I know nothing at all about that.

42,876. There is another question by Mr. Llewelyn William. "Was not the stock sold after the notice to quit had been received?"—Really I do not know. I did not know until I was appointed agent, or a short time before I was appointed agent, and notice had been given her.

Lord Kenyon.

42,877. Now, we pass on to your own evidence. You are the tenant of the Derllys estate?—Yes, the property of Sir James Drummond, and his cousin Mrs. Stuckeley.

42,878. What is the size of your holding?—A little over 500 acres

42,879. And your rent?—My rent and tithes come to between 650*l.* and 700*l.* a year.

42,880. Cannot you give it more accurately than that?—670*l.* as near as possible with the tithe.

42,881. Have you any statement to make?—I may say I think that the present arrangement between landlord and tenant is better than if we had a land court, and that on the estate neither language, creed, nor politics make any difference between landlord and tenant. I prefer yearly tenancies. My father died 18 months ago, and I took the farm, and the landlord told me I could take the farm on exactly as it was before. My father had been there for nearly 30 years, and his great grandfather had been there before him for 40 years. I believe there has been no difference made in the rent ever since my great grandfather went there first. Both my landlord and his agent, Mr. Dudley Drummond, told me at the time I took the farm, that so long as I could pay the rent I should never have to leave it, and I do not think I should, and I considered his word as good as a lease. If I was offered a lease on the farm to-morrow I should not want it. There is an agreement, and I have every confidence that any penalising clause therein would never be enforced against me. There are not many such clauses, it is simply an ordinary agreement, the same agreement as my father held under. As I said before, I object to a land court.

42,882. Will you state your reasons for objecting to a land court?—Because I, as well as all the other tenants on the estate, am on particularly good terms with the landlord, and I think it would be much better for us as it is than if we had a land court; that the arrangements between us would not be the same if there was a land court. The landlord now provides buildings, and expects the tenants to keep them in fair repair, and in case of repairs by natural decay it is always done by the landlord. I am speaking of this estate, the Derllys estate. On this estate I am certain of it, and in the neighbourhood generally I do not think the farmers have any grievances to bring before the Commission, in the parish I should say. I have not heard of any, at any rate. I have spoken to a few, and they have told me that they have no grievances to make. I may say that the landlord considers his tenants, and he treats us very well. We are treated very well both by the landlord and the agent. In saying that I think I am quoting the opinion of all the tenants on this particular estate.

42,883. Your acreage is about 500, and your rent 670*l*. How would that compare with the neighbouring holdings. Are the rents much the same?—The holdings on this estate?

42,884. Yes, and the surrounding adjacent land?—The surrounding land is not nearly as goods as Derllys, but the farms on the lower side of the estate are as good, and I believe are rented about the same as Derllys is.

42,885. Is there uniformity of rents?—Yes, on this estate there is.

42,886. Is there uniformity of rents on the other estates in the neighbourhood according to the value of the land?—Yes, I think there is in the parish. In the rent I gave you it includes the tithe.

42,887. Have you had any abatement?—Yes, we have had 10 per cent. the last half year, and 15 per cent. the half year before that, and 10 per cent. the half year before that, and sometime ago, I do not remember exactly which year it was, when the estate belonged to Sir John Davey, we had an abatement of 20 per cent.

42,888. Do you think the system of giving abatements is satisfactory, or would you prefer the rent on a sliding scale?—I think the system of giving abatements is satisfactory.

42,889. Do you look upon it as an alms—as a charity?—Yes, I do.

42,890. Now we have heard a great deal in this county and elsewhere that the tenants are afraid to come forward. Do you think there is any ground for that in this district?—Well, in my district I do not think there is any ground for that.

42,891. I suppose you know all the neighbouring farmers in your district?—Yes, very well.

42,892. Do you think that the evidence we have had from your district saying that there is a well-grounded fear of the landlord is representative of the district?—Well I do not think it is. I have not heard any complaints myself.

42,893. Do you think there is any other reason why farmers have not come forward?—No, I do not think there is.

42,894. You simply think they have nothing to complain of?—I think not in my district. I have spoken to several farmers and asked them whether they intended to give evidence, or whether they would like to give evidence, and they have said "No."

42,895. You think the farmers who come before us are chiefly those who have some grievance?—Yes, I suppose that would be so.

42,896. As to the preferential claim of the landlord, do you think that is a good thing or otherwise in the interests of the tenant?—I do not quite understand what you mean.

42,897. The landlord has a preferential claim for rent over all other debts?—Yes, I understand now.

42,898. Do you think that is a good thing from the point of view of the tenant or not, that the landlord should have that preference. We have been told both ways; some say it is a good thing for the tenant, that the landlord is likely to be kinder to him than a small shopkeeper, and on the other hand, we are told it is unfair that the landlord should have that preference over any other creditor?—I think it is quite right he should have. I can give you an instance on this particular estate. One of the tenants, two years ago, I believe, got into difficulties and filed his petition. He got his discharge as a bankrupt, and Sir James Drummond allowed him to keep on the farm subject to two of his brothers joining him to be security for the rent, and he is on the farm now.

42,899. Do you mean that he pays the full rent?—He pays the full rent now, but two of his brothers are security for him for the rent.

42,900. At that time did Sir James lose any part like other creditors of the rent?—Yes, he was a preferential creditor for the rent that was due. He held the farm on till the 29th of September, and he is a preferential creditor for that, but not for the rent that was due before.

42,901. That is limited by law?—Yes.

42,902. Did he have the full rent for that year when the creditors came to settle up?—I believe he did. I am not certain of that, but I believe he did. He had the full rent from the time he filed his petition until the farm was given up by the official receiver or by the trustee in bankruptcy. I am not clear of that, but I only give it as an instance.

42,903. You say the landlords do the repair to the building? I suppose the tenants do the haulage?—The tenants do the haulage.

42,904. That is the invariable custom?—That is the invariable custom.

42,905. Do you think there is any hardship in that?—No, I think not.

42,906. You think the tenant is glad to do the haulage if he can get the buildings done?—Yes, I am sure he is.

42,907. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

42,908. Do you think any improvement might be made in that Act?—Well, I am afraid it is not generally known to tenant farmers.

42,909. Is that because it is not printed in Welsh?—No. I do not think it is circulated amongst the tenant farmers. They do not know what is contained in the Act, I believe.

42,910. Perhaps they think they can do very well without it?—Well, I believe they manage to get on pretty well without it

42,911. We have heard very nearly everywhere, I think, that they want some further compensation for improvements, some greater security that improvements executed should be compensated for?—Yes, I think that they should know that they should have compensation for what they have done on the farms of late years, at any rate.

42,912. Do you think that farmers would lay out more money on their farm if they knew that they would have satisfactory compensation when they leave it?—I cannot say that.

42,913. Do you think that they have the capital to lay out?—Some have, but the generality of farmers have not capital now, I believe.

42,914. What other reason have you for saying that you do not think they would improve their holdings?—Well, I think in my district they do very well on them now, and they do not think about the compensation they would have if they left.

42,915. I mean, could they improve their holdings, or are they not capable of improvement?—I think the holdings are farmed very well.

42,916. In a satisfactory way?—Yes, in a most satisfactory way.

42,917. You do not think more money could be made out of them than there is made?—No, I do not think so. They ought to look after their interests better. Of course if they do not study what would pay them best, it is entirely their own fault that they do not make more out of them.

42,918. The evidence brought before us is this, that the farmers will not lay out money on the farms because they have no security of tenure. If they laid out money on the farm the landlord might come to-morrow and give them notice?—Possibly he would.

42,919. Is that the reason why, do you think, they do not lay out more money?—Not on the estate I have spoken of. I know my father has laid out a tremendous lot of money on this farm, and I am sure he never was afraid of laying out money on it.

42,920. Which would represent the majority of opinion, do you think, your father's case, or the case I was pointing out?—Well, I daresay the case you were pointing out.

42,921. You think that there would be a fear of insecurity?—Yes, to lay out a lot of money; an unusual amount of money on the farm.

42,922. Do you think that a stronger clause of compensation for improvements would satisfy that?—Yes, I think it would.

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,923. Are you a Welshman?—Yes.

42,924. You speak Welsh?—Yes.

42,925. Are you an agent on a large scale?—Yes, I am agent for three or four estates. I am an auctioneer as well as a farmer.

42,926. So that you have really other sources of income besides farming?—Yes.

42,927. Really we are not to take you as an ordinary sample of the farmer?—I think you can. What evidence I have given here is simply as a farmer and not as an agent at all.

42,928. You do not depend upon farming for a living?—No. Well, I depend upon farming and the auctioneering business.

42,929. You farm to some extent for pleasure, do you not?—No.

42,930. To some extent?—No, not to any extent at all. Merely for gain. I grant there is not much gain in it just now.

42,931. You say that farmers have no grievances?—In my neighbourhood I think not, simply no grievances to make in respect of their landlord, simply that the times are very bad. But I do not see that the landlord can help that; it is the trade that is so bad that affects the farmers a good deal more than the rent. If we could get the trade better farmers would not complain about the rent, I believe.

42,932. Do you not think inasmuch as trade is so bad that the rents should be adjusted accordingly?—Yes. I think that the rents would have to come down to a half at the present time.

42,933. If that is the case do you not think that should be so, because where is the margin of profit for farming?—I think something should be done to try and improve the trade. Of course if the trade does not improve something will have to be done, or else we shall all have to go to the wall. I know I shall have to go to the wall if trade does not improve anyhow.

42,934. Whoever the farmer is if that is the case, that is a grievance?—It is a grievance.

42,935. It is a grievance to the farmer if the farm does not pay?—Yes, it is a grievance of the state of the trade. I meant to say, no grievance against their landlord particularly.

42,936. You made practically a confession to Lord Kenyon that in many cases if a tenant laid out a lot of money in improvements possibly the landlord might confiscate what really belonged to the tenant?—Possibly he might.

42,937. Would you not consider that a grievance?—That would be a grievance certainly.

42,938. Against the landlord?—Against the landlord, but I cannot give you a case. I do not know a case in point.

42,939. You have admitted that such a thing might occur?—It might possibly occur.

42,940. If there is a sense of insecurity will you not find that a tenant would not lay out money to make really the land more profitable simply because he was in danger of his property being confiscated by the landlord?—Yes.

42,941. Well, that is a grievance, is it not?—That is a grievance.

42,942. Do you find that there has been any change in the method of farming in your district?—Yes. As regards cultivating the land?

42,943. Yes?—In this district there is nothing like the corn land that there used to be in days gone by.

42,944. They graze more?—They graze more.

42,945. And they raise more roots than they used to?—I know I do, and my father did, but in the district generally I do not think they raise the quantity of roots that they should.

42,946. But there is less corn raised?—Much less corn.

42,947. And of course more consumed?—Yes, more consumed.

42,948. And consequently the tenants keep more stock?—Yes, keep more stock.

42,949. Do you find that as a rule the landlords come forward to provide the increased accommodation which is necessary for an altered method of farming?—Well, I cannot say that I know many cases where landlords have done that—not made extra buildings. I know I have had some extra buildings.

42,950. Generally speaking, have tenant farmers sufficient buildings to shelter their stock, that is to say, to make the best out of the farm?—Generally speaking, I think not.

42,951. That would be a grievance, would it not?—Yes, it would be a grievance, that is to say, if they had more it would be better for them.

42,952. You admitted that really an abatement was an act of charity?—I think it is.

42,953. Do you think that the acceptance of charity tends to manliness of character?—I do not know about that.

42,954. You are not prepared to answer?—No, I am not prepared to answer that. I know I am very glad to have what my landlord gives me back, and I am very pleased to get it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

42,955. Does that impair your manliness of character?—I do not think it does.

Mr. Richard Jones.

42,956. Possibly it may induce you to court your landlord's favour in some way or other?—I should be very thankful to him for it, and I should like to speak well of him for doing it.

42,957. You simply take what he likes to give you?—I simply take what he likes to give me. I daresay if he did not give it to us we should ask for it as a body of tenants, but it comes home to us a great deal better that he gives it of his own free will than for us to go and ask for it.

42,958. Are the tenants satisfied with the amount that they get?—Well, I believe they are.

42,959. You think they are?—Well, on this estate, yes; but at the same time I do not see that they have made their rents out of their farms. I know I did not make my rent out of my farm last year, but still I was very thankful to the landlord for what he gave me back.

42,960. Do you think the landlord took his proper share of the loss?—No, I do not say that.

42,961. Were any of the tenants dissatisfied with the amount. Was it 10 per cent.?—10 per cent. the last half-year, and 15 per cent. the half-year before that.

42,962. You do not know anyone who asked for more?—No, I am satisfied myself, and I spoke to the other tenants, and they seemed satisfied.

42,963. You say that a land court would destroy the good relations between a landlord and tenant?—Yes.

42,964. In what way?—I do not think they would be the same. If a land court was instituted, would the farms be re-valued by this land court, and re-rented by the land court?

42,965. It would depend entirely upon the power of the land court, or whatever tribunal was established?—I do not know what power the land court would have, but I should much rather have my present landlord to fix my rent, and to receive my rent, than I should pay it to, or have my farm valued by, somebody appointed by the land court.

42,966. From whom are you most likely to get justice, from an interested or a disinterested person?—Well, I am perfectly satisfied with my present lot.

42,967. And you think the tenants generally on Sir James Drummond's estates are?—Yes, I do; well, I not only think it, but I know it.

42,968. You say that the farmers really are capable, and do their best with their farms?—Yes, I believe so.

42,969. The agent told us the other day that they were a lazy lot?—On the Derllys estate? See 40,434.

42,970. Yes, on Sir James Drummond's estates?—I do not think the agent was very right then. I think if he is now here he will withdraw that statement. I do not think there is an estate that has been better worked.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

42,971. He said they were a lazy lot, and he did not withdraw it, at any rate?—If he said it, I do not think he would mean that I was a lazy lot, or that the farmers themselves were a lazy lot. I know if I could see a loophole by which I could make a sovereign instead of 10 shillings anywhere, I should go for the sovereign. I do not think he was really justified in saying that of the tenants on the Derllys estate, and I think if he is here, after what I have said, he should come forward and say he was wrong in saying so. I know the tenants on the Derllys estate. Every tenant on the estate now has been there for a great number of years, and has succeeded a relation as tenant of the farm.

42,972. You have admitted, I think, that farmers in your neighbourhood are suffering from want of capital?—Yes, I believe so.

42,973. What is the cause?—I do not know what the cause is. Young farmers, for instance, do not have enough capital to start with.

42,974. And yet these young farmers probably have been working at home without getting any salary, and after working without any salary do not have anything to start on the farm?—I am speaking now of the smaller farms.

42,975. Who would be the small farmers who would take the small farms. Would they be men who had risen from the rank of workmen—labourers?—No, men who had been farmers all their lives, as it were, and still had not made much money on their farms.

42,976. Then farming is not a very profitable business?—No, I do not think it is. You do not hear of very many people making their fortune by farming. It is a nice, healthy occupation, but still it is not a very remunerative one.

Professor Rhŷs.

42,977. Who is your agent?—Mr. Dudley Drummond.

42,978. He was examined the day before yesterday, I think?—Yes.

42,979. Does he speak Welsh, do you know?—I believe not—very little.

42,980. You speak both Welsh and English?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

42,981. Are there any of the tenants on that estate who cannot speak English, do you think?—No, none; they all speak English.

42,982. The tenants on the Derllys estate all speak English?—Yes.

42,983. So that there is no difficulty about the language?—I think none.

42,984. About how many are there?—About a dozen, I believe, as near as possible.

42,985. You pay about 670*l.* rent a year?—Yes, rent and tithe.

42,986. How many of them pay as much as that?—None of them.

42,987. About what would be the average of the dozen, excepting your own case. Leaving out your own case, what would be the average rental?—I should say close upon 200*l.* a year, the average rental, or more. I do not know the rentals of the other farms.

42,988. Some would be as low as 100*l.*?—Oh, yes; some lower, but they are mostly large farms.

42,989. Still yours is a very exceptional case. Your farm would not be typical of the rest of that estate?—There is one farm next to it that is not as large, but it is close on 400*l.* a year, I believe, rent and tithe.

42,990. What farm servants do you keep?—I generally have about a dozen.

42,991. Where do you house them?—There are four houses belonging to the estate.

42,992. Near your own farmhouse?—Yes, and close by; and others that live in houses that they rent of other people.

42,993. You would call them labourers, would you not?—Yes, labourers. I only keep three boys about the buildings; they live in them.

42,994. The others are labourers that live in cottages about?—Yes, and have families.

42,995. Where do you house the three boys?—At the buildings.

42,996. In the outbuildings?—Yes, they sleep in a storehouse above the stable.

42,997. Is it a fairly comfortable room?—Yes, a fairly comfortable room.

42,998. Have you had any trouble with respect to their conduct in the evenings?—No, none whatever.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Griffiths called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

42,999. I believe you are postmaster and miller at Llanarthney?—Yes.

43,000. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—My father, David Griffiths, held Dryslwyn Fawr farm in the parishes of Llanarthney and Llangathen, of the landlord, Earl Cawdor, for 29 years, from 1837 to 1866, at 380*l.* per annum. The landlord built the barn, cart-house, stable, cowhouses, and shed for small cattle, but the tenant had to do all the haulage free. The tenant built a workshop and shed for the calves, and a shed to protect the threshing machine, a shed above the manure heap, and a cottage for the labourer on the farm. He also extended the present dwelling-house, adding to it a scullery, pantry, back parlour, and dairy. He added a storey to it, put a new roof and made three new windows, where there had been no windows before. In fact, he rebuilt the whole house. And he had to do this entirely at his own expense as his landlord refused to do anything. He made a new road also through the centre of his farm, pulled down the old hedges and put up new ones at right angles to the road, so as to lead all the fields into the road. He utilised the old hedges for filling in old gutters, and he dried up and cultivated eight acres—in different parts of the farm—of ground which, up to then, had always been covered with stagnant water. He laid over the greater part of the yard with gravel, three feet in depth.

After 28 years of heavy outlay in building and farm improvement, which were really necessary in the interests of the farm, he received a formal notice to quit for the purpose of raising the rent by 80*l.*, but the agent promised the tenant that as he had carried out the improvements he should have it for 20*l.* less. The tenant refused to accept these terms knowing that it was all through his own labours that the farm had been improved, and he had to leave. He employed a professional man, Mr. Collard, of Carmarthen, to value his improvements, and he did so at over 2,000*l.* As the landlord had offered the farm for 20*l.* a year less to the tenant than to anyone else he only claimed 1,500*l.* for compensation. The landlord refused to entertain the claim at all, and the tenant never received one penny. After leaving Dryslwyn my father (the tenant) came to Llandilo and took a tanyard, together with 24 acres of land, from the same landlord. He carried over 300 loads of manure from Dryslwyn, and about 30 tons of lime to improve this land. He only lived three years after coming to Llandilo, and during the whole of this time I looked after the land for my father, as I lived close by. In the year following my father's death they refused to accept me as tenant, and I was not paid any compensation, although I asked for it.

Agents — This shows how much tenant farmers are at the mercy of landlords and their agents as the law at present stands. The majority of agents do not understand the country or farming operations. Their only qualification is that they understand the law from the landlord's point of view, and can make agreements with clauses which are all on the landlord's side.

Consolidation of Farms. — In many cases two, three, and even four farms are thrown into one, and the tenant, finding it too much to farm by himself, underlets portions of his farm to, in some cases, five or six under tenants, e.g., the tenant of Golden Grove Arms, with part of Barley Mount, part of Glantowy, and part of Pantwgan sublets to five parties. The tenant of Typicca, with Deri Moelon, Ty Llwyd, and part of Glantowy, sublets to one party. The tenant of Dryslwyn Ucha, with Dryslwyn Fach and Tycastell, sublets to one party. Closglas now has Derlwyn and Tyrderi. Bremenda Ucha has part of Barley Mount. Bremenda Isaf has Penybanc. The farm of Garreg Goch Ucha has been divided between Closglas, Garreg Goch Ganol, and many others. This has the effect of thinning the population in country places tremendously, the population of some places having come down to half what it used to be.

Religion and Politics.—It is hard to prove that religion and politics influence the letting and taking of farms; but it is certain that farmers believe that a Churchman and a Conservative has a better chance than a Nonconformist and a Liberal. I mention the following case, not as deeming it sufficient to prove that Churchmen have preference over Nonconformists, but as illustrating the popular belief on the subject, and as facts which explain the reasons for such a belief. John Morgans, Llwyndu, Llanarthney, a tenant of Mr. Lawrence, Middleton Hall, when he took this farm, told me he had beaten all the Radicals of Llanarthney in taking this farm because he was a Tory and a Churchman.

43,001. He refused to give you the land after your father's death?—He refused to give me that 24 acres of land.

43,002. Had you in any way given offence to Lord Cawdor or his agent?—I had not given any offence at all, only that I was a Nonconformist.

43,003. You think that was an obstacle in the way of your getting the farm?—Yes, I think so.

43,004. You say you cannot prove that preference is given to Churchmen and Tories, but that that impression prevails amongst the farmers generally?—Yes, amongst them all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,005. I suppose there are many Nonconformists on Lord Cawdor's estate?—A good many.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID EVAN STEPHENS (Solicitor) called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,006. Do you give evidence as an owner?—As an owner, and also on behalf of Mrs. Stephens.

43,007. Your mother?—Yes.

43,008. That is as to the Trawsmawr estate in this county?—Yes; I wish it to be understood that my evidence will apply to the last 10 years only.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

43,009. Are you resident or absentee?—Resident.

43,010. What is your opinion about an absentee landlord?—I say that in the case of absentee landlords, a bad tenant would be less liable to disturbance, unless there was an agent employed to look after the property.

43,011. Do you act as agent for your mother?—In a small way.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

43,012. Have you an agent managing that property besides yourself?—No; I am the agent so far as that goes.

43,013. Do you consider that religion makes any difference in choosing tenants?—Not on our estate. We have not a single Churchman as tenant. They are all Nonconformists.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,014. Do you exclude Churchmen, and decline to let them the farms?—No; I should say some of the cottagers go to church, but none of the farmers.

43,015. Are there many farms?—Between 20 and 30.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,016. You have not given us the acreage of the estate?—I do not know it exactly. I should think it was from 1,500 to 2,000 acres.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,017. The entry is at Michaelmas. You have yearly tenancies and no leases?—That is so.

43,018. Have there been many changes?—There have only been two in my recollection.

43,019. And in those cases did relations succeed the preceding tenants?—Yes, except in one case. I could go into details of that if necessary.

43,020. You make compensation?—In case of timber-cutting we do. There was one large wood cut which went through a meadow. The tenant asked for a couple of sovereigns I think, and she was allowed that amount.

43,021. Are your agreements in writing or verbal?—They are all verbal, except, I think, possibly one or two.

43,022. Have you any special arrangements with the tenants?—If there are agreements the usual clauses are put in with regard to not allowing more than three white crops in succession, and hay, as a rule, is not allowed to be sold. But that is never enforced.

43,023. Have you any penalising clauses?—The ones above referred to.

43,024. Then there are some written agreements?—Two, I think.

43,025. Are the penalising clauses ever enforced?—I have not had occasion to enforce them.

43,026. How are the rents fixed?—I do not know how they have been fixed, they having been fixed before my time, and there they have been.

43,027. They are fixed at a gross sum per farm?—Yes.

43,028. Do you let the farms to the highest bidder?—No, the rents have always been the same, except there have been two reductions. One rent has been raised a sovereign. I may say that was at the request of the tenant. He took a cottage and a little holding, and in course of time he had a numerous family, some 8 or 10, and he asked me to extend the house. I built him a large storey on top on that condition, which he agreed to.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

43,029. Have you given any abatements?—Yes; 10 per cent. at Michaelmas 1886, Lady Day 1887, Michaelmas 1887, Lady Day 1888, Michaelmas 1888, and at Lady Day 1889, 5 per cent.; the others were all 10 per cent. Then Michaelmas 1892, Lady Day 1893, and Michaelmas 1893 all 10 per cent.

43,030. And the rents have not been raised for many years?—No; except that one instance I mentioned.

43,031. Except in the case of the 1*l.*?—Yes.

43,032. What have been the fluctuations in the prices?—The prices of cattle, sheep, and pigs have been up and down tremendously.

43,033. You say that the Lady Day rents are paid early in June, and the Michaelmas rents in November?—Yes.

43,034. What is your opinion about the preferential claim?—I think it inclines the landlords to give tenants credit at times, and also that it increases competition for farms. If the preferential claim of the landlord were abolished, I think it would tend to knock out what in the trade are called "wasters"—the weak competitors.

43,035. That would not affect the competition very much, would it?—Well, you see when the landlord has a preferential claim he, as a rule, does not inquire into the substance of the tenant as much as if he had not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,036. So that you really are in favour of the abolition of the preferential claim?—I do not say that. I am not against it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,037. What are the charges that are paid by the owner?—The usual charges; we pay the land tax and the chief rent; there are not many of them.

43,038. Are the tithes paid?—The tithes are paid by the tenant.

43,039. Have the rates increased?—Slightly in some parishes.

43,040. What is that attributed to?—They have school boards in one or two parishes.

43,041. What is the average size of your farms?—From about 50 to 100 acres, some less.

43,042. Have you had any consolidation?—There has been none in my memory.

43,043. In places if there is consolidation what would the effect be?—I think the larger the farm the larger crops they get in proportion as they have a larger command of capital.

43,044. Would it cause any increase of the employment of labour?—I do not think it would much, inasmuch as they have better implements and larger capital, and a greater division of labour.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,045. And more employment of machinery?—Yes, the larger the farmer the more capital he can employ in machinery, manures, and so on.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,046. Is there any sub-letting on your property?—None that I am aware, except in very small instances—I mean they sub-let small fields for cabbage plants and so on.

43,047. Do they sub-let at a higher rent as a rule?—I should think so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,048. But generally you discourage it?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,049. Do the large or the small farms get most attention from the farmer?—I am inclined to think that the small do.

43,050. But during the depression which of the two do you think were the worse off—the large or small?—I think the small were the worse off, inasmuch as they had not as many eggs in their basket as the large farmers.

43,051. What is your opinion of the cultivation of the land?—Do you mean as a whole?

43,052. We will put it in this way: is there more pasture than there used to be?—Yes, it is nearly all pasture. There is very little corn grown there.

43,053. Is there butter-making?—Principally butter-making.

43,054. And young stock?—Yes, they rear stock and sheep and so on.

43,055. Do you consider there is a scarcity of labour?—Yes, the labourers go off to the works as a rule.

43,056. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—None that I am aware of.

43,057. What are the improvements that are taking place on the estate?—We do all the improvements, the buildings.

43,058. Who does the drainage?—We do drainage, as much as is done; there is not much wet land, but all that has been done has been done by us.

43,059. Both finding the pipes and paying for the labour?—Yes. They probably would haul the pipes up.

43,060. Does the same thing apply, may I ask, with regard to the buildings done by the landlord—that is the material buildings, houses and outhouses: does the tenant do the haulage?—He would do the haulage unless it were excessive. If it were excessive we should get someone else to help him and pay him.

43,061. The ordinary rule would be that the tenant does the haulage, but in extraordinary cases you would help?—If the haulage was excessive, yes. With regard to the repairs, I may say that Mrs. Stephens has spent about 150*l.* a year for the last five or six years in repairs, and I should say her income was about 800*l.* from land.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

43,062. Do you find the gates?—We find the rough materials for gates.

43,063. And the roofing?—Yes, roofing of houses. It is always done by us.

43,064. By the landlord?—Yes.

43,065. What are the tenant's improvements: are there any?—None in the way of repairs that I am aware of.

43,066. But the usual course of husbandry?—A stitch in time they do here and there of course; just a small item.

43,067. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, is that used?—The 1883 Act, it is more or less a dead letter. They do not understand it, and they have never read it so far as I am aware.

43,068. You do not contract out of its operations?—No.

43,069. You have put down in the syllabus of your evidence that you do not contract out of the operation of the Act; that means, I suppose, the clause with regard to the six months' notice?—Yes, they all have twelve months' notice.

43,070. What are the allowances to the outgoing tenants?—They harvest and sell their own crops by auction. It has only occurred in about two instances within my recollection, and they have a sale about the 29th.

43,071. Does the manure and the produce remain on the farm?—If the incoming tenant buys the manure when he is going in, he is paid when he goes out; if not he is not.

43,072. Do you recognise any tenant right?—No.

43,073. Do you consider the Agricultural Holdings Act not to be quite satisfactory. You suggest some amendments. I should very much like to hear them?—I do not consider tenants have sufficient security for laying out capital on their holdings. I do not know whether I might put in a paragraph from the "Welshman," dated Friday, February 23rd, 1894, that I had the honour of reading before the Chamber of Agriculture here. It is very short, and it mentions the suggestions which I refer to.

43,074. I should be very glad to take your opinion upon it. It is a question which we want to have answered?—The article is as follows: "The Agricultural Holdings Act is all "very well as far as it goes, but, in my humble "opinion, it does not go far enough; and, more-"over, it is full of pitfalls for the tenant "unlearned in law, and what tenant, may I ask "gets a solicitor to advise him before doing "this or that improvement on his farm. Be-"sides, believe me, such advice is costly. The "remedy I suggest is something as follows: I "may say that I have not a cut and dried "plan, but it might be something on the follow-"ing lines: Suppose a tenant to have agreed "with the landlord to take the farm at, say, "100*l.* The farm should then be scheduled in "fields and valued by two farmers (one chosen "by tenant and one by landlord, with a referee "if they fail to agree); each field should then "be set down as in such and such condition

"and of such and such value, having regard to "the rent. Let us suppose the farm to be 10 "fields, and for simplicity, the fields to be of "equal value, they would then, of course, be "10*l.* each. The tenant then goes into occupa- "tion and improves half the fields, keeping the "other half in much the same condition. He "then leaves for some cause, or his lease termi- "nates. I suggest then, that the farm be "valued again by two farmers (the same, if "possible), and if it be found, on referring to "the previous valuation and to his accounts, &c., "that half the fields are worth 12*l.* each instead "of 10*l.* when he went in, then he should be "paid so many years' purchase (whatever is "decided to be fair) on the increased value of "the fields, and this sum should be handed him "when he leaves the farm. If some system on "the lines I have mentioned, or something "similar, were adopted, I think that tenants "would be found far more willing to lay out capi- "tal freely on their farms, the productive capa- "bilities of the soil would be stimulated, and the "tenant would have the satisfaction of knowing "that he would be able to recover, at any rate "approximately, all the capital he had sunk in "the farm. Moreover, the tenant would gain "in two ways. Firstly, in security of tenure, "for the landlord would not evict on some "frivolous pretext if he expected a heavy bill "for compensation, and, secondly, by applying "more capital he would obtain greater gross "profits. On the other hand, the bad farmer "would be stimulated by the fear of having to "pay for deterioration, and if he should allow "the land to deteriorate it is not for the public "interest that fixity of tenure should, in his "case, be considerable; in fact, giving the land- "lords compensation for deterioration, and vice "versâ, would tend greatly to improve farming. "The gain to the public is obvious. Any im- "provement in the most important of all "industries would at once be reflected in manu- "facturers and trade. I must say that it seems "to me a monstrous injustice that a landowner "should be able to levy or exact rent from "the capital sunk by his tenant in improving "the farm." That was one suggestion I had to make, that the tenants have not sufficient security for laying out capital on their farms.

43,075. With regard to the game, have you anything to say?—There is very little game about. With reference to a sliding scale, there is no doubt that the sliding scale rent is the fairest, but I do not see how you could possibly calculate it. It would be so complex. I think sliding scales have gone out of use, having been in use in the South of Europe I believe, and in some parts of Scotland. They seem to have gone into disuse entirely, they are not satisfactory; in fact I do not think a tenant would like to have his landlord as a sleeping partner in his concern. Besides, it would be very difficult to calculate unless you went into the cost of production and the price of the raw articles

43,076. As part of your evidence I am sure it is extremely interesting. Have you any other amendments to suggest?—I do not see why a tenant also should not have compensation for disturbance if he is evicted by reason of the whim of an agent or a landlord or anything of that sort.

43,077. Do you know of any instance of capricious eviction?—No, I cannot say that I do. I know of instances of tenants having their rents raised on their own improvements, but I do not think on our property.

43,078. Would those be instances in the case of what we call large properties, or what?—Generally the small owner I have found to be the worst, more especially the mercantile man, who has made money in business and invests it in farms; he generally wants a steady return of 4 or 5 per cent. for his money.

43,079. Generally the small landowners are worse than the large landowners?—That is my experience.

43,080. Then with regard to damage done by game, you seem to say that there is one case which you know of where some damage was done?—The tenants, so far as we are concerned, are perfectly free to shoot rabbits, but I must say I am rather averse to trapping, and that sort of thing.

43,081. It is a most effective mode in some cases?—Dogs, cats, and so on get into traps.

43,082. Traps are the most effective way of keeping rabbits down. I wish someone would invent some other means of keeping rabbits down; but traps are found in practice to be most effective?—No doubt they are effective.

43,083. You suggest that tenants should be encouraged to shoot rabbits?—We only have two places where there are rabbits, and there they have, up to quite recently, shot the rabbits themselves; two of them did, anyhow.

43,084. In case of shooting, are the tenants obliged to beat?—There is no obligation.

43,085. It is volunteered?—It is volunteered, especially in the winter, when they have not much to do.

43,086. What is the effect of game-preserving?—I say, when not excessive, that I think it tends to encourage good feeling. Of course, if excessive, it would tend the other way.

43,087. What is the proportion of game offences to other offences?—In these particular petty sessions there are not many game offences.

43,088. Comparisons are odious, so that perhaps you had better not compare them with anything else?—No.

43,089. Is there much trespass?—I object to trespass by stray dogs, very much; it tends to sheep worrying, and so on. I do not see, myself, why female dogs should not be chained up in certain periods of the year; I know it is very objectionable the way in which they come about houses, three or four dogs at a time, and they tend to worry the sheep. I have known several instances.

43,090. Is there any attention paid to fruit culture or horticulture?—No.

43,091. Or any attention paid to bee-keeping?—There is very little of that except the smothering plan.

43,092. What do you say as to instruction in butter-making?—The lectures are well attended.

43,093. Then as to manures?—They had some lectures at Conwyl a year or two ago on manure, which were at first very well attended, but whether they benefited by them or not I cannot say. There were 40 the first time, 15 the second, 3 the next, and 1 the last. I was the one.

43,094. There is co-operation in the butter factory at St. Clears?—There is. That is the only co-operation I know of.

43,095. Are there any cases of insurance?—They do not insure the buildings. We insure some of them.

43,096. In case of purchase of holdings by the tenant is the money often borrowed?—Almost invariably about two-thirds borrowed.

43,097. And at what rate?—About 3*l.* 15*s.* or 4*l.* per cent.

43,098. In your opinion, is the freeholder in a better or a worse condition than the tenant farmer?—I should say he is worse off because he has to do his own repairs.

43,099. Do you find that tenant farmers work on the small farms with their servants?—Yes, they do, and the children.

43,100. Do the children get any remuneration?—They get clothes, and a little pocket money, and they get dowries when they marry, and are set up in life to the best of their parents' ability, of course.

43,101. You suggest that the tenants who have no children pay the rent, and you conclude that others are able to?—Yes, that is my conclusion. I know some tenants, who pay the rent who have no children, so that, I presume, the others are well able to.

43,102. What is the amount of labourers' wages?—From 15*l.* to 20*l.* I should say roughly.

43,103. And what per day?—About half-a-crown a day, and a little more at hay time.

43,104. A little more at harvest time?—Yes.

43,105. Do they have a right to graze cattle or sheep?—The farm servants are generally allowed to keep a couple of sheep on the farm—one or two.

43,106. What is the supply of cottages upon your property; they are scattered about, I suppose?—Yes.

43,107. Do some few of them have gardens?—They all have gardens.

43,108. Do they sometimes have more than the gardens?—Some of them try to get fields if they can.

43,109. Is the land and the house usually held from the landowner or from the farmer?—They are almost entirely held from the landowner in our case, except one little cottage.

43,110. When do you think the trade depression commenced?—I think it began from about 1874 to 1875, more or less. Then I think it was worse in 1889 or 1890.

43,111. Are the relations friendly between landlord and tenant?—The mutual relations are very good.

43,112. Then, with regard to the causes of the trade depression, could you give us your opinion as to those causes, and suggest any remedies?—The depression, I presume, is due to the fall in prices, and the fall in prices I attribute to be due to two or three reasons, one being industrial progress. The second, I think, is due to the contraction of the currency in gold-using countries; and the third is, I think, that the trade is with difficulty carried on, because there is an absence of a par of exchange with silver countries. That is the third reason; but I should put the second as the principal cause.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,113. Where is Traws-Mawr?—Four miles from here.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,114. Which direction is it in?—It is close to Conwyl, a mile and a half from there.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,115. What language do your tenants use?—Welsh.

43,116. And you speak Welsh, of course?—Yes, I do.

43,117. If you, speaking Welsh, had to employ an agent who did not know Welsh, that would not facilitate matters?—No, but I do not know that I should employ an agent any way.

43,118. You would not employ an agent who did not know Welsh?—If I had an agent I should not. My property is not big enough, in the first place, but if I had an agent I should certainly see that he understood Welsh.

43,119. You have cottages on the farms, and they have gardens, I think, you said?—Yes.

43,120. About how large are the gardens?—Small gardens, where they pay about 3*l.* for the cottage and garden.

43,121. Would it be a good thing for these people to have small allotments, do you think; would they like allotments if they could get them?—If they could get them close.

43,122. They would take them?—Yes.

43,123. And take them at a rate that would pay the landlord, would they not?—Probably they would.

43,124. I see that some of them are underlet. That would also meet that point, would it not? Do you approve of underletting?—I said that they did not underlet as a rule, except small bits for cabbage planting and that sort of thing.

43,125. Yes. You do not approve of underletting. Would not the small allotments do away with that, and do better?—I think they only took these small allotments for a couple of years, especially the cabbage plants.

43,126. Do you keep many gamekeepers?—We keep none.

43,127. We have had a great many instances where the farmers say that the gamekeepers are at the root of all the bitterness between the tenants and their landlords?—Yes, I have heard so.

43,128. Do you think there is some truth in that?—I cannot offer an opinion upon that question.

43,129. How about the statistics with regard to morality in this part. I see that is treated under one of your headings?—Yes, the cases are pretty frequent here. I have no statistics, but the cases are pretty frequent at the petty sessions.

43,130. How about the accommodation of the farm-servants in most of your farms. Where do they sleep?—I think the male servants as a rule sleep over the stable.

43,131. Where do they spend their evenings?—Is there room for them in the kitchen?—I do not know where they spend their evenings. They have two rooms usually in each farm-house, and some of them have what they call a "gegin fach" (small kitchen) outside, which would make three altogether.

43,132. Are the farm servants welcome to those kitchens?—Yes, I think so.

43,133. Is there room for them without disturbing the family?—Yes, I should say so.

43,134. You do not think that the frequency of the cases that you alluded to, is partly owing to bad accommodation for the farm servants?—I cannot trace it to the accommodation much.

43,135. Have you thought of that?—Well, you see the female servants are usually in the house, while the male servants are out. I should have thought that would have tended the other way.

43,136. But, on the other hand, they have no control over the movements of the men servants during the night?—No, not more than anybody else, of course.

43,137. You mentioned compensation for capricious eviction?—Yes.

43,138. How would you get that to work?—It would be rather difficult I admit, but it might be done through the medium of a county council. It would be rather difficult to assess, I admit.

43,139. You would require a court of some kind?—Yes, you would, it would have to be sued for, I suppose.

43,140. You mentioned the amount of repairs. Did you give us your rental?—Mrs. Stephens, my mother's, rental I have mentioned.

43,141. I do not remember the rental?—I said about 800*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,142. You say that the agreements between you and your tenants, Mr. Stephens, are only verbal. Do you find any difficulty at all with your tenants owing to this?—We have never had the slightest difficulty with them. I think we have the best set of tenants that I know of in the neighbourhood.

43,143. You find that they do not really abuse the liberty that is extended to them, and that it is not necessary to put in restrictive clauses?—I mean if they were to sell a lot of hay they would probably say, "Do you mind my selling so much hay," or anything of that sort, which would not be refused. I do not think they have more than three white crops; it would not pay them to do so.

43,144. When were the rents last fixed?—That I cannot tell you.

43,145. You say of your own knowledge that they have not been raised for 15 or 20 years?—No, except that one instance I gave you.

43,146. You say that on your estate when a tenant pays for manure he also gets the payment when he leaves. That is so, is it not?—Yes.

43,147. Is that customary on other estates, because if it is not, difficulty arises. Perhaps, say, on your estate the tenant has to pay for manure when he comes in; he gets payment when he leaves; and when he goes into another farm on another estate he goes in and he does not pay anything for the manure. Unless there is the same principle on all the estates in the neighbourhood, in some cases there may be an act of injustice?—What we do is if he pays when he comes in he is recompensed when he goes out, so that he is no loser so far as we are concerned.

43,148. No, so far as you are concerned he is not, but it generally works out badly unless the same principle is adopted in all the neighbourhood?—It might, I should think, but so far as we are concerned we have only had two changes of tenancy in my recollection. Of course I have not had much experience in that line.

43,149. You really acknowledge that you are in favour of some tribunal to settle disputes that may arise?—I say that I am in favour of a tribunal to value any money that a tenant has sunk in his farm.

43,150. But not for the adjustment of rents?—I do not see how you can adjust that unless you follow the laws of supply and demand.

43,151. But that is already done in the Highlands of Scotland?—Yes.

43,152. By a court or commission?—Yes, they are I believe there, but then I should like to know whether the landlord would have the choosing of the tenants.

43,153. He has the choosing of a tenant unless the former tenant bequeaths the tenancy?—It could invariably lead to a premium being paid by one of them.

43,154. You would like the landlord of course to have the choosing of the tenant?—Yes, and then it would lead to a premium being paid.

43,155. But free sale is prohibited?—Yes, but you cannot prohibit money being given. You could not very well prohibit money being put down. You see what I mean; suppose my rent is fixed at 60*l.*, and one comes to me and says, "I will give you 100*l.*," and another one says "I will give you 50*l.*," I should probably take the one who offered 100*l.*

43,156. But he cannot sell to whoever he likes; he can only sell to the nearest relative?—Yes, but when there is a death I mean.

43,157. Yes?—You see the landlord would have the next choice of tenant.

43,158. Yes, he would?—In that case what I said would probably occur.

43,159. How do you mean?—Two tenants come to me, and suppose the rent is fixed by the authority——

43,160. But do you place yourself in the position of the landlord?—Yes, when the tenants come to me, and suppose the rent is fixed at 50*l.*, and one offers me 100*l.* and another offers me 50*l.*, I should take the 100*l.* gentleman probably.

43,161. It would be a judicial rent, do you see?—Yes, but I mean to say if I had the choice of the tenant I should take a premium probably.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,162. You would look to the men's resources, would you not?—Yes, but if the rent was fixed by an outsider I would look to the premium probably more.

43,163. But you would only have rents adjusted in cases that you could not agree with regard to the rent between you and the man in possession?—Yes, but those are the premises I started from.

43,164. A man who wishes to take a farm of yours cannot bring you to court to adjust rent for him. I do not suppose that is contemplated?—Those are the premises I was starting from.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,165. You think that the law would not be sufficient to prohibit that?—No, I do not see how it could.

Sir John Llewlyn.

43,166. There is a question put in by Mr. H. Harries, "What was the dispute between you and the outgoing tenant of Blaencynlleth"?—It would take some time to go into that.

43,167. I see that one of the witnesses who is going to be called is from Blaencynlleth?—That is the new tenant. See 43,223.

43,168. Then we had better not have that explanation now?—I am perfectly willing to go into it.

43,169. You may or may not, just as you like?—I am perfectly willing to answer the question. There was a man in possession of the farm whom I rented it to, and when he was in possession his brother came down from London. It seems that he had enough of his brother from London interfering with the place and so on, and he surrendered the farm to me by an ordinary surrender. He went out of the farm, but this gentleman from London refused to go out. I then issued a writ against this gentleman from London, but owing to the assizes not being held until March, and this occurring on the 29th September, of course there was five months gone, and I had to settle it, and pay him about 30*l.* or 40*l.* for his going out. I forget the exact amount, but I can find out. That was that little business. I was the loser over it unfortunately.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. David Lewis called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,170. Are you Mr. David Lewis of Pontantwn Farm, Llangendeirne?—Yes.

See 37,076–37,199; 38,197–38,251.

43,171. What is it that you wish to say?—I wish to speak with regard to what Mr. William Thomas said at Llanelly, that Mr. Saunders did not give abatements. I say that Mr. Saunders did give abatements.

43,172. The words used, I think, by Mr. Thomas were these: "Some landlords have made "abatements varying from 5 to 20 per cent., but "these were landlords who rented cheapest. "Mr. Saunders Glanrhydw (and he named "some others) made no abatements." What is it that you wish to say to that?—I say that he has given abatements; he has given me an abatement of 40*l.* in fact. My rent used to be 220*l.*, but it is now 180*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,173. What is it now?—180*l.*

43,174. Is that a temporary abatement or a permanent reduction?—No, it is permanent in so far as I know, and I know it.

43,175. What else have you to say?—That we as tenants like Mr. Saunders, and that we are all on friendly terms with him, except Mr. W. Thomas.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,176. Would you inform me to what extent Mr. Thomas modified the words which I have read. This is not a copy of the shorthand writer's notes, so that we have not his evidence in full.

Mr. Richard Jones.

He said "to my knowledge."

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,177. Was the abatement or reduction given to each of the tenants?—No, only to the oldest tenants, because those who took to the farms under the new tenancy were taking them now in bad times.

43,178. Have you anything else to say?—Nothing particular, unless you wish to hear something from me.

43,179. I think we had better keep to the rebutting evidence?—I beg your pardon, but I should like to hand this in. [The witness handed in a document.]

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

43,180. I think it better to confine ourselves to the rebutting evidence now?—This is a memorial.

Mr. Llewelyn Williams. If that is going to be done, I have a question to ask.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We do not take testimonials to character. We are unanimously of opinion that now we had better confine ourselves to rebutting evidence, but perhaps there may be another opportunity for your giving further evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Evans called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,181. What is your farm?—Glanrhydw farm.

43,182. What do you wish to say?—I say that my landlord is a good landlord, and that I get all that I want from him.

43,183. Have you had any abatement in your rent?—Yes, I get 25*l.* per year.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

43,184. Have you anything more to say?—No, I have nothing to say beyond that I get everything I ask from him 43,185. You have had abatements of rent?—Yes, for years.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Evans called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,186. What is the name of your farm?—Gwempa.

43,187. Have you heard what Mr. Lewis and Mr. Evans have said?—Yes.

43,188. Do you have also an abatement in your rent?—I took my farm last Michaelmas twelvemonth, and the landlord made a reduction for me at the time.

43,189. Did you have an abatement?—He made a reduction of 40*l.* a year. I cannot say about the old tenants.

43,190. What I mean is, it was not confined to them. You had some, even though you were a new tenant?—Yes, he made a reduction of 40*l.* in the farm when I took it.

43,191. A permanent reduction?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Really your evidence does not apply. The question is with regard to abatements.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,192. Have you anything else to say?—Yes, about the statement that was made that he was not on good terms with his tenants. All the tenants are on good terms, I believe.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I do not think Mr. Thomas made that statement. It is not in his evidence, Sir John.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,193. The following questions are by Mr. Llewelyn Williams:—"Is Mr. Saunders of "Glanrhydw on good terms with all his "tenants?"—All I know of, except Mr. Thomas, partly.

43,194. "Is it a fact that you were once a "Nonconformist and are now a Churchman?" —No, I was never a Nonconformist. I have always been brought up in church since a child. Of course I attended a Methodist chapel when I was in the farm which I occupied before through inconvenience; the distance was too far to go to church; I had three miles to go to church over the mountain, and then I thought it better to go to the nearest place of worship.

43,195. "Do you know that all the tenants "have had abatements?"—No, I know nothing about it.

43,196. This is a question also from Mr. Llewelyn Williams:—"Did not some of the "tenants other than Mr. William Thomas "refuse to sign a memorial with reference to "Mr. Saunders?"—I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAM STEPHENS called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,197. You are the tenant of the Bridge Inn farm?—Yes.

43,198. You have heard the evidence of the last three witnesses?—Mr. Thomas said I would have to go to church before I could get the Bridge Inn Farm.

43,199. Is that true. The words are these: "The present tenant of Bridge Inn promised to "go to church before getting the Bridge. Before "that time, all the year to last September, he "was a member of the Methodists"?—No, but the name was on the books, only it had not been erased. I had only been two or three times during the three years in the Methodist chapel. I was on the chapel books.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,200. Were you a member there at all?—Yes.

43,201. Till when?—Till they crossed it out, after I had gone to church.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,202. Is it true that you promised to go to church before getting the place?—No, I did not say it to anybody. I did not tell anybody.

43,203. Is it true that you promised to go to church before getting the Bridge?—No, no one ever asked me the question.

43,204. Have you anything else to say to the Commission?—No, I have nothing to say unless it is necessary—unless you wish me to say anything more.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,205. I simply want to be clear on this. You were once a Nonconformist and you belonged to the chapel?—Yes.

43,206. What chapel?—It was a Methodist chapel.

43,207. And when you took the Bridge and went to live at the Bridge Inn Farm, you went to church after that?—I used to go to church more often before, but it was about that time that I went.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,208. You sometimes went to church before and sometimes to chapel; is that so?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,209. But you were treated as a member of the chapel?—Yes, and I can give you the reason why I got it.

43,210. Got what?—The reason why I got the Bridge. I was a servant of Mr. Lewis, Pontantwn, for 39 years, and that was of assistance to me in obtaining the Bridge.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,211. Who is Mr. Lewis of Pontantwn?—The first witness.

43,212. The following question is by Mr. Llewelyn Williams: "Did you not tell Thomas "Jones that you had to promise to go to church "before getting the farm at Bridge End"?—I do not deny those words. I said so in order that I might have peace from them, because they inquired the reason from me on the road. There is the truth.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID REES called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,213. Does this statement contain your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes.

43,214. You have seen the statement?—I know what it is, but I cannot read it in English.

43,215. You know what the statement is?—Yes.

43,216. Then I think we will have it read.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

The Evidence of DAVID REES, tenant farmer, Forge Farm, Bronwydd Arms.

Personal.—In the year 1868 I became the tenant of Fronfelen, the property of Mary Lewis, Frongoch. Seven tenants had occupied the farm in the last 18 years. I took the place for 3*l.* more than the preceding tenant, because Mary Lewis had told me that she was getting that much for it. I made an agreement with her for 21 years. One part of the place was very wet, and the other part a wilderness, but I stuck to it, drained the wet land, and cleaned the wilderness. I limed it all during that time, and laid every field down as pasture and manured it well. It was part of the bargain that I was to have timber for repairs, but Mary Lewis died and another became the owner. The new landlord sold every bit of timber there was on the land, and I had to find my own timber. I built three new buildings. The landlord told me to stick to it so that I might enjoy it in my old age. I had two sons who were out in service, and who gave their savings to me to pay the rent and to carry on the improvements, and two other children working at home without wages. Within one and a half years of the 21 years the landlord and myself had a conversation, in the course of which he said that I should not go from the place, nor should the rent be raised. On the strength of those words I limed a field, and about a month after, Mr. Benjamin Evans, Brithdir, auctioneer, and the landlord came to the yard and said that they wanted to value the land ("cerdded y tir") as the landlord had determined to sell it. Mr. Evans said, while walking with the landlord over the land, that the crops showed that there was an excellent farmer there. It was part of the bargain, also, that I should have gates and gate-posts, but I never had them, and I made some myself. These

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

I had to leave behind me, and all the other improvements I had made, without a penny piece as compensation. The value of the farm when I went there was about 300*l.*, and it was sold at the end of my tenancy for 540*l.* The new owner came to live there, and I had to go in search of another home. I had two children who were earning—one of them getting 35*l.* and his food at a shop, and the other 24*l.* and his food. They wrote to tell me to take Y Dderwen Groes, a farm belonging to Mr. A. Stokes, St. Botolph's, as they thought my wife and I were too young to give up farming, and that they would prefer to help us. Y Dderwen Groes was a bad farm. Few tenants stayed there for more than three or four years. The land had been badly cultivated, and there was a great deal of wild and wet land. The landlord promised, when I took it, to do all the necessary repairs, but he made no repairs. The farmyard was very wet, and he did help us a little to put that right. There was a good deal too little accommodation for the cattle properly. I was compelled to build a shed sufficient for eight cattle and two colts. We had eight yearlings, and I had to put them in a building that was too small for them, and four of them died because the place was too small, and there was not much "shape" on the rest. We had two sows without a sty for them. I had to take the carts out of the cart-house in order to house one of the sows when she littered, while the other littered on the dung-hill on a cold winter's night and the whole litter died. We had four acres of green crops on the top of the land, separated from the house by some very wet land. The best way, therefore, to cart them to the house was by crossing a neighbour's field which belonged to the same landlord. There were 120 drills of turnips in the field, and I had been offered 10*s.* per row for them, but it was no use trying to sell them as the agreement was against me. In November I went to pay the rent to the landlord, and told him that I could not go to the field except by crossing my neighbour's field. He said that he would be coming up in a week's time to give me a road. I then drew most of the turnips. It froze, however, for a week, and my turnips were frost-bitten. In April my landlord came up and gave me a road over my neighbour's field. But all my turnips were frozen. And I built two pig-styes in the third year of my tenancy, and I made ditches of the length of 51 perches, according to what Mr. Stokes told me when I took the farm. I gave in a bill for the pig-styes for 3*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.*, but the landlord tore it up and threw it into the fire, saying that he never told me to build them. He said also that he did not remember that he asked me to make the ditches. Thomas John, Yet-y-ffin, wrote to him for me begging him to make some repairs, but to no good purpose. Five per cent. was given back in the rent to all the tenants, but nothing was given me because I was leaving. I refused to pay the last rent in full, as I had done the ditching at Mr. Stokes' instance. But the 8*l.* which I kept back did not compensate me for the improvements which I had made, and which I had to leave. I had limed five fields, I sowed seeds in five others, and I carried 15 tons of manure from Llanstephan station during the four years of my tenancy. I had besides cleared five acres of furze, and the children and I had given our labour for nothing during the four years. I produce copies of agreements with Mary Lewis and Anthony Stokes, the latter of which contains several very unfair clauses, such as keeping a dog for the landlord, paying a fowl and coal duty, and leaving all the manure on the farm without any allowance.

Rents. — There are many instances where rents have been raised on the tenants' improvements, e.g., the rent of Nantglas Isaf (the property of Mr. Thomas Abergwili), has gone up from 1860 from 40*l.* to 55*l.*, on improvements by draining, &c., made by the tenant. The rent of Pantrhiw (the property of Mrs. Davies Llwyndu) has gone up in the same time from 40*l.* to 60*l.*; of Mill Farm from 100*l.* to 140*l.*

Insecurity of tenure.—The case of Y Dderwen Groes, where there have been eight tenants since 1860, will illustrate the insecurity of tenure and the frequent changes in the tenants.

Labour. — Labour has gone up enormously in price in the last 30 years. Labourers get 1*s.* 6*d.* as against 10*d.* a day, and food; men servants, 24*l.* as against 8*l.* a year; carpenters, 2*s.* 6*d.* as against 1*s.* 3*d.* per day; and female servants, 13*l.* as against 4*l.* a year.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,217. Have you copies of the agreements?—Yes. [The witness handed in copies of agreements.]

43,218. Was the 8*l.*, which was kept back in the rent, enforced?—No, not yet, but I have received a letter saying that I must pay soon. I have the letter in my pocket.

43,219. What was the cause of these tenants leaving Y Dderwen Groes?—Of course they failed to pay for the farm.

43,220. The rent was too high?—Yes.

43,221. Do you think that religion has anything to do with the letting of farms?—Yes, I think there is something in that, too.

43,222. Can you prove it?—I do not know, indeed. Perhaps it is better that I should not prove many things.

43,223. If anybody tries to intimidate you, or if you think you will suffer any evil consequences, the Commission will protect you so far as the law will permit them. Have you any proof of it?—I have a proof, but I think it is better that I should not say it; unless I keep it to myself you will not. The person to whom I refer was doing me harm on the one hand and doing me good on the other. Can I say that much? Can I state it without mentioning who the man was?

43,224. We can take it for what it is worth, but, of course, it would not be so valuable as if you mentioned names?—I may say it in this way: I went to a clergyman to ask him for a character, in order to get a place. He gave me a character provided there was not a Churchman against me who happened to be a Tory as well, but I was the first man with him after this person.

43,225. What you mean is this—a provisional sort of character?—Yes, on condition that there was no Conservative or Churchman against me. Otherwise I would lose the place.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,226. Did you have the character?—Yes, I received the character, and I got the place because there was no Churchman competing for it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,227. Are you still on the place?—No, I have left the farm.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Davies called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,228. Is this your statement, and is it correct?—I understand it in Welsh. My brother has written it in English on my behalf.

43,229. Are you the tenant of Blaencynlleth, Conwil Elvet, Carmarthen?—Yes.

43,230. If your statement has been written on your behalf, can you vouch for the contents or not?—Yes, I can.

43,231. Then we will have it read.

The statement of the witness was then read as follows:—

In answer to the question, "Do you believe "that differences of language, creed, or politics "make any difference as to the relation between "landlord and tenant," I say that the landlord of the estate on which I am a tenant can converse in Welsh; hence, I cannot say whether difference of language makes any difference. Difference of creed or politics makes no difference whatever to relation between landlord and tenant. In answer to the question, 'Do you prefer tenancy from year to year to a lease? State your reasons.' Tenancy from year to year is, in my opinion, preferable to a lease; the foremost reason being that in holding from year to year the landlord has more sympathy with his tenants in times of trade depression, and so gives temporary abatements of rent. Then, in answer to the question, 'Judging by your own experience, do you think tenancy is reasonably secure in Wales,' as a result of my personal experience, I conclude that tenancy is perfectly secure in Wales, for on this estate no tenant has ever to quit as long as he will pay the rent.

43,232. What estate is it on?—Mr. David Stephens, Trawsmawr.

See 43,006

In answer to the question, "Are you familiar "with the terms on which you occupy your "holding? Have you a copy of your agree-"ment? Are the penalising clauses, if any, ever "enforced against a good tenant," I say that no agreement is made between landlord and tenant, and no definite terms are entered into, beyond those as to amount of rent and when payable. There is, of course, a mutual understanding between the two parties according to the custom in this part of the country. Penalising clauses do not occur. "State your objections to a land "court. (In this connection consider whether, "if there were such a court to fix rents, the

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

"landlords would be inclined to spend any "money on their estates.)" On the estate on which I am a tenant the friendly relations between landlord and tenant makes a land court perfectly unnecessary. The existence of such a court would, in my opinion, tend to destroy these friendly relations. Also such a court would lessen the landlord's interest in his land, and the natural result would be that he would not spend the money which at present he often does on improvements in his estate. Moreover, the court would not be likely to order such reduction of rents in times of depression as the landlord grants at present. In answer to the question as to the class of work done by the landowners in the way of building, draining, &c., and the terms on which it is usually done: the landlord pays all the expenses for building in connection with the farms, such as dwelling-houses, accommodation for cattle, &c. He also undertakes the draining when required; fences, gates, and posts; also manures and all seeds usually provided by the tenant. The manure for incoming tenant is paid for by the landlord. Then I am asked, 'Say any-'thing bearing on the subject which seems to 'you just.' Temporary abatements of rent readily granted during trade depression; especially of late years. Outgoing tenant obtains ample compensation for his improvements. There are rights belonging to tenants to dispose of their interests in their holdings to anyone to whom the landlord has no reasonable objection, and being rewarded and paid for his interests according to the amount of improvements he has wrought in his holding, he thus obtains sufficient compensation for any improvements. When this is not done the landlord himself grants sufficient compensation readily. Manure remaining at expiration of tenancy is bought by the landlord from the outgoing tenant and given to the incoming tenant; or may be sold directly by outgoing to incoming tenant, and latter then paid for it by landlord. All crops may be sold by auction by outgoing tenant. During first few years of tenancy the landlord gives considerable abatement of rent in respect of the sum spent by tenant on manures. On the estate of which I am a tenant the landlord has provided certain machinery for the use of those tenants who cannot afford to provide it for themselves. Rents fixed by proposal

followed by private treaty, but holding not let to highest bidder, but to one most suitable as regards capital, &c.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,233. It strikes me that the relations between you and the other tenants and your landlord on the same estate are particularly cordial?—Yes.

43,234. Am I right in attributing that to the fact that both you and the landlord, or the men acting for him, can talk Welsh to a certain extent?—Yes, we are able to speak Welsh together.

43,235. But do you consider that helps?—No, I do not consider that.

43,236. You think you would get on just as well if he could not talk Welsh, and you could not talk English?—Yes, if he dealt with us as he does now.

43,237. Yes; but I did not suggest that that was the only reason?—I did not say that that was the only reason. When we want anything we can speak the same language with him.

43,238. That helps you so far, does it not?—Yes.

43,239. I suppose the true fact is that the agent or the gentleman who manages the estate takes a sincere interest in farming, and takes an enlightened view of the whole situation?—Yes, we go to him himself to ask for anything.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,240. You say in your statement that a land court would not be likely to order such a reduction of rent in times of depression as the landlord grants at present. What reduction have you had from your landlord?—Ten per cent.

43,241. After taking 10 per cent. off, did you find that there was any profit remaining?—To me.

43,242. Yes?—Yes.

43,243. So that really the farm has paid you during this last year?—Yes, it paid for itself last year.

43,244. And has paid all along?—Yes.

43,245. You are very lucky. Do the tenants avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—Yes. The landlord does not say anything against it.

43,246. That is, against the killing of the rabbits and the hares?—Yes, and the landlord comes over the land as well.

43,247. Of course the landlord has liberty to kill as well, but do the tenants use their authority to kill the hares and rabbits?—The landlord gives every liberty to kill the rabbits, and there has been no dispute.

43,248. Are you troubled by ground game at all? Do they eat your crops?—No, we have very little game on the estate.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Stephen Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,249. Where do you live?—Dysgyrch Mill, Llangendeirne.

43,250. Is this your statement, and do you say that it is true and accurate?—I know what is contained in this statement altogether, but there is just one thing that is wrong. I do not understand English.

43,251. What correction do you wish to have made in your statement?—The only thing that is incorrect is this, that my landlord paid the mason and the carpenter for building a small kitchen and a dairy.

43,252. Subject to that alteration, is the remainder of it correct?—Yes.

The statement of the witness was then read as follows:—

The evidence of Stephen Jones, Dysgyrch Mill, Llangendeirne.

Personal.—I have lived under two landlords. I held my farm under my first landlord at a rent of 30*l.* About 1872 the landlord died, the farm was sold, and my rent was raised to 45*l.* In order to enable me to pay this increased rent I began to make improvements on the farm, at my own expense, from some little money I had saved. Fit buildings for the cattle were wanted, which in all reason the landlord ought to have done. Relying on his fine promises, however, I built two pigsties and a back kitchen and dairy, my landlord only giving the timber and tiles. I built a stable for the horses, which cost me 15*l.*, of which I got 5*l.* from the landlord. The farm was only 48 acres in extent, 25 acres being very wet. I drained seven acres at my own expense, paying both for the pipes and the labour. I wanted a road to the house, as there was practically no road. I carted 140 loads of stones, as my landlord agreed that a road was necessary; so that, after finishing everything, I was in debt. As the times were getting worse, and the landlord would grant no reduction in the rent, I determined to leave and get another tenant to take the farm. But the landlord found some fault in the tenant, and proceeded against me in a court of law, and I had to pay the whole costs. The first landlord was the Rev. Mr. Gronwy; the second was Mr. Richards, Llanboidy.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

43,253. Were they large landowners?—No, they were not very large landowners.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,254. How was it you were under two landlords? Was the place sold?—It was sold. I was five years under the first landlord

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,255. Was it the last landlord that advanced the rent up to 45*l.*?—Yes.

43,256. Did you try to sell your interest in the holding to the succeeding tenant?—I have failed to get anybody to take the old place.

45,257. But you say that you succeeded in getting a tenant, only the landlord would not accept him?—I failed to please the lady who owned the land.

43,258. There was something in the character of the tenant that would not satisfy the landlady; is that it?—Perhaps he had said a word about her at some time, but I do not know.

43,259. Did this tenant pay you any goodwill for entering into the farm?—No, nothing, only that I had got rid of the place.

43,260. Were you under lease?—No, I was not.

43,261. How did this action arise. You say that the landlord proceeded against you in a court of law. I do not understand?—I left the place without a notice, and this man was there for two years, and I paid the rent every year for those two years.

43,262. So that practically you were the tenant afterwards?—Yes.

43,263. Then you had not got rid of the place afterwards?—No, I paid the whole time, but then that other man was there under me. This is why he went to law. The lady who owned the land gave time to pay the rent, and she came there in Michaelmas to take possession, and she charged 3*l.* for bringing a conveyance from Carmarthen in order to take possession of the place. Then I put the matter with regard to that 3*l.*, and the rent, in the hands of a solicitor.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,264. And of course you lost the case?—I did not try the case. The landlady served me with a writ and the solicitor settled it of course.

43,265. What solicitor?—Mr. Griffiths.

43,266. Was that the solicitor that you employed?—No, my landlady's solicitor.

43,267. How did you settle it?—By my paying 22*l.* 10*s.* and 7*l.* costs.

43,268. So that it was practically a settlement of the case. If I understand you aright, your grievance is this, that you did not get compensation for the improvements effected on the place?—No.

43,269. And that really the rent was raised on the improvements carried out by you?—Yes.

43,270. That is practically your grievance?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS THOMAS called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,271. You are the tenant of Coedwalter Fawr, Llangendeirne?—Yes.

43,272. This is your evidence in Welsh?—Yes.

43,273. The evidence will be read to you in English, and Professor Rhys will follow it in the Welsh language?—Yes.

The statement of the witness was then read as follows:—

Evidence of Thomas Thomas, Coedwalter Fawr, Llangendeirne, Carmarthen.

I am a tenant of Mr. Owen Thomas, Ffynon Eiddon, Llandefeilog, of the same county, who is the owner of the farm, which he bought 20 years ago for a price which was exceedingly high, and went there to live himself to farm it as well as to rent portions of it to his neighbours for 10 years, and as it did not pay him, he determined to get the whole of it off his hands in two parts (Coedwalter Fawr 100 acres, and Rhydw, about 18 acres). The rent of Coedwalter without taxes and tithe being 130*l.*, and Rhydw 29*l.* without taxes and tithe. My landlord would like to sell the farm if he could recover his money for it. This history of my landlord Mr. Owen Thomas will suffice. It became necessary that I should leave the farm in the year 1885, that is nine years ago, because the estate was being sold at that time. A message came to me then from Mr. Owen Thomas stating that if I wished to have Coedwalter I was to have the first offer, and off I went, as I had no other place to go to; it was about Whitsuntide of that year. I agreed with him to have a lease in the future, although fearing a high bargain. Well I moved to the farm, manured it throughout, started work tidying the buildings and hedges, bringing manure from Carmarthen, and at it night and morning through the years under many difficulties. A stringent lease, a hard and impecunious landlord, although begging and entreating for even a shilling in the pound, for which I would be very thankful. My neighbours receive two and three shillings in the pound and the tithe back when they pay their rent. I have further evidence to give if I am called upon to do so. In the face of all this there is nothing but failure to expect, and that in a fair way. My landlord should either re-take the farm or allow me to sell the lease. If any of the Commissioners desire to see the lease, I will hand it over with the greatest readiness. This is also with regard to Coedwalter Fawr. In consequence of the sales which have been made so often during the last 40 years, the rent has been raised from 80*l.* to 159*l.* in a year, and the farm is for sale today. I am in favour of a land court so as to be a mediator throughout the country between the landlord and the tenant. I should further wish if the Government would lend money to buy holdings at a reasonable rate of interest.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,274. Do you think, Mr. Thomas, that there is any desire among tenants to be owners of their own holdings, if they could have security of tenure?—I am sure that we would like to have them.

43,275. You find that people like to become their own owners?—Yes, provided they get the holdings at a reasonable price.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,276. How would it be, supposing that a man had spent all that he had in buying a farm, we will say, and he had six or seven children, and when he died he would like to leave it equally for those six or seven children?—I should say they should sell the farm then, and divide the money if they like.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

FIFTY-SECOND DAY.

The Town Hall, Cardigan, Cardiganshire, Monday, 23rd April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Chairman.

In opening our sittings in Cardiganshire, I think it well to read the remarks I made in Glamorganshire on the first day of the sitting of this Commission: "We do not anticipate that "the Commission can be made the means of any "unfair attack on the character or conduct of "any individual, but in case any individul "should feel himself aggrieved by any state- "ments which he believes to be unfounded, we "provide the following checks, which we believe "will be adequate for the prevention of pain or "injury. In the first place, permission will be "given to any person present at any sitting to "put questions in writing to any witness "through me, the Chairman; the Commissioners "reserving to themselves the right of deciding "whether such questions be permissible or not. "Secondly, the Secretary has been instructed "to send notice forthwith to every person "whose character or conduct is impugned by "the statement of any witness, thus giving "such person an opportunity of explanation, or "of rebutting the charge, either personally or by "letter." There is only one other subject which I have to touch upon, and that is concerning the protection of witnesses: "Experience has shown

Chairman—continued

"that, unless witnesses speak out boldly and "without fear, inquiries like the one we are en- "gaged in are futile. We have no reason to be- "lieve that undue pressure will be brought to bear "upon any class of witnesses or any individual "witness; nor have we reason to think that the "giving of evidence by any person in this "county will lead to his being in any way "injured. But it is of course possible—we cannot "shut our eyes to what has before now taken "place in regard to affairs of this kind—that "some men are less scrupulous than others, and "that it is possible that witnesses who speak here "what is in their minds may be subjected to "loss and annoyance. We desire, therefore "(and it is our duty to do so), to point out that "the recent Act, the Witnesses' Protection Act, "1892, affords a remedy adequate to meet any "ordinary case." I have to say that the Commissioners are unanimous on that point, that if there is any case of intimidation of any description we shall feel it our duty to take steps to give witnesses the utmost protection that the law allows, and I may say that the law affords adequate protection to witnesses.

Mr. WILLIAM OWEN BRIGSTOCKE called and examined.

Chairman.

43,277. You are a landowner, reversioner, trustee, county alderman, late chairman of Carmarthenshire County Council, a ratepayer in the Cardigan and Newcastle Emlyn Unions, and chairman of the former?—Yes.

43,278. You have been good enough to say you will lay evidence before this Commission. Will you be good enough to do so?—The first question I should like to touch upon relates to ownership. My evidence is based upon the series of questions which were drawn up by the Land Commission, and I have in a statement I forwarded endeavoured to epitomise it as much as possible. With regard to ownership, I think the question is to this effect, as to what ownership you consider best. Obviously an ownership in fee, unencumbered, has advantages over other forms of tenure, but in the case of small holdings, bought wholly or partially with borrowed money, a tenancy may be more advantageous.

43,279. Then what do you say as to management?—Home farms are very generally held by resident landlords; absenteeism is not common. On home farms a superior style of farming prevails, and much labour is employed. I do not think that difference in religion, language, or politics has much practical effect in the relations between tenant and landlord or agent, but undoubtedly a knowledge of Welsh is a great advantage. I should like to amplify that answer. A good deal of stress has been laid on this, that there is no sympathy between the landlord and tenant. My experience does not tend in that direction. I may say when the concerts or Eisteddfodau, or any social gatherings are held, it is very common, I may say almost universal, that the neighbouring landlord or squire should be asked to take part and preside on those occasions. So far as I know, they never refuse. So far as I am aware, there is very good feeling between landlords and tenants, and I think the feeling has improved of late years, especially since the formation of the county council, which has brought them more into contact with each other. For the most part agents are skilled specialists; solicitors also act as agents, some being without much practical knowledge of agriculture, others the reverse. I consider payment by commission to agents excessively objectionable, because it gives the agent a direct interest in raising the rents. I think it is a very bad principle indeed. As to occupation, I say that tenancies from year to year, commencing at Michaelmas, are almost universal. There are also leases, generally for 21 years, and occasionally leases for lives and a long term, 60 or more years, the tenant in such cases doing the permanent improvements, but these leases are now very rare. I do not think there is such a demand for leases as formerly, but they are for the most part readily accepted by tenants. My own idea is that tenancies from year to year are the worst possible form of tenure you can have. I am very much in favour of leases of some sort or other, say, for 21 years, with breaks at seven years, something on the Scotch model; 19 years, with breaks at five years. I think it is reasonable, in view of the extremely uncertain state of agriculture, that there should be breaks, so that re-arrangements may be made from time to time. Changes of tenancy have not become more frequent of late years. I have myself paid tenants compensation for damage caused by timber cutting, and have sold hedgerow and other timber to tenants at a moderate price, to obviate any difficulty as to damage; and as far as my knowledge goes when any considerable piece of land for planting, or other purposes is taken, the value is taken out of the rent. I should also say, with regard to haulage, upon which there has been a good deal said on several occasions, that where the tenancies have ended either by sale or by change, I have paid compensation. In one or two cases in Pembrokeshire, in the neighbourhood of St. David's, where some farms for which I am trustee were sold, we repaid the tenant the whole amount of the haulage, every penny of it. Agreements are for the most part used as safeguards, in fact are drawn from common forms, and if carried out strictly might possibly prove to be objectionable. Penal clauses are inserted with an eye to the ending of the tenancies, and to prevent waste, actual or permissive, at the end of the term. I am, however, altogether opposed to mere yearly tenancies. As far as my personal knowledge goes tenants have copies of agreements given them. As to the rent, the gross sum is based on a field valuation. I should like to put in as a specimen of the way in which farms are valued, a valuation which has been made recently on Mrs. Brigstocke's estate. I am not appearing here for her, but she has been good enough to put certain papers in my hands in order to enable me to establish my facts, but I do not appear in any way as agent for her. This is a field valuation, and it was made in 1891, and you will, no doubt, at your leisure peruse it. (Handing in paper; see Appendix.) I think there is a tolerable uniformity in rent in the district, but as a rule the large estates are let much lower than small ones. There is a great deal of good mixed land let at from 10*s.* to 15*s.* an acre, e.g., the highest farm on the Blaenpant estate, 3,000 acres, in Llandygwydd parish, is 14*s.* 6*d.*, and there is some inferior land on the same estate in Aberporth parish, averaging from 7*s.* 6*d.* to 9*s.* per acre. On the Noyadd estate, highest farm is 15*s.* 6*d.* A farm—Vaynor—on the Blaenpant estate, let with another holding, and reputed to be the best farm in the district, was recently valued, tithe free, at 348*l.*, the acreage being 250, or 28*s.* per acre; a farm facing it (Llwyndyrus) lets at a somewhat lower rate. The Blaenpant estate, in Llandugwydd parish, is about 2,193 acres, and the rental 1,281*l.*, about 11*s.* 6*d.* per acre; Mrs. Brigstocke has made a permanent reduction, by paying the tithes, of 10 per cent., and she has also for the last year made an abatement of 15 per cent., so that off the 11*s.* 6*d.* you have to deduct 25 per cent. Then the Noyadd estate, for which I was trustee, is rented at about the same figure. I think the small property I have myself is about 9*s.* 6*d.* per acre. There is another portion of Mrs. Brigstocke's estate of 772 acres, which lets at 9*s.* 6*d* an acre, from which you have to deduct 25 per cent. The second estate is inferior land. The other is good average land, including some portion of good meadow land on the River Teivy.

43,280. What is the deduction for?—There is 10 per cent. value of the tithes, which are paid without charging the tenant, and the other is an abatement of 15 per cent. for bad times. Farms are not let, as a rule, to the highest bidder. I put in the valuation to prove that. The question of capital has much bearing on the letting. I regret to say that, as a rule, the working capital is very inadequate; the money is not to be had, and we very often indeed let small farms where the man has not even as working capital his stock and implements. As to any capital like you would expect in Scotland or the higher parts of the cultivated districts of England, 5*l.*, 10*l.*, 15*l.*, or 20*l.* an acre, it is very rare indeed, I am sorry to say, in this country. It is no one's fault, except Providence has not given us enough money. With regard to reductions, I cannot speak of 50 years, but there have been in some instances an increase during the last 30 years, especially about 1870–75. On the other hand, many estates have not been touched, e.g., Coedmore, Clynfiew. I mean this: I think when the farms became vacant in the seventies, when times were very good, they were let at an advanced rent. I do not say tenants were evicted, but when vacancies occurred they were certainly let at better prices than they were before. That is my experience. On many large estates here—I may mention Mrs. Lewis, of Clynfiew and Coedmore—for generations there has been no rise at all, at least, to sitting tenants. Of course that is only hearsay. I cannot speak to that of my own knowledge. There have been per-centages charged sometimes for improvements done by the landlord. Temporary abatements were made about 1884 or 1886, and now from 10 per cent. to 20 per cent. Notice of the abatements is always, so far as I know, given some time before the rent audit. We always let the tenants know what we are going to do. The Lady Day rents are usually paid in August, and the Michaelmas rents in January or February. As regards the preferential claim by the landlord, my view is this—of course, it is a matter of controversy, but the preferential claim for rent has its advantages in this way—that the landlords on that account are more inclined to let to tenants with small capital. Tithes are, of course, now paid by owners, and charged to the tenants under the Tithe Act, 1891. On the Blaenpant estate the tithes are paid entirely by the owner, and no charge made to the tenants. Local rates are paid by the tenant, the income tax by the landlord. I think, generally the land tax is paid by the landlord. It is at Blaenpant, I know. In Cardigan Union there is a material decrease of expenditure. I put in an official return of that, from which you will see that in 1885 the rate in the £ of the expenditure of the Guardians was 2*s.* 7*d*½., and in 1893, 1*s.* 7½*d*. One of the most onerous charges we have is the school rate. It is very heavy indeed in some of the parishes.

See 43,385.

43,281. Will you tell us the average?—There is a table of the school rate in the book which I have just handed up showing the expenditure (see Appendix). Then as to the size of farms, the following may be taken as a type of the size of the farms. On Estate A. there are 58 tenants, only nine paying more than 70*l*. On Estate B. there are 56 tenants paying less than 60*l*. 30*l*. to 50*l*., would I think be a fair average. The two biggest holdings I know of pay about 350*l*. There has been little or no consolidation. The size of the farm does not, I think, affect its mode of cultivation, and there are instances of both good and bad farming on large and small farms. Obviously men with capital adequate to the proper working of their holdings are better able to cope with depression and provide for their families than men living from hand to mouth. Labour is scarce, but land is not going out of cultivation. On mountain farms there has been a good deal of reclamation done by tenants. There has been a marked improvement in farming during the last 25 to 30 years,

Chairman—continued.

an increase in green crops, more land laid down in permanent pasture, and better treatment of grass lands. There is a very great improvement in the way in which grass land is treated. We never used to think of top dressing in this county, but now we think top dressing has a very beneficial effect. Then as to improvements of drainage on a large scale, that is mostly done by the landlords, and generally a per-centage charged. Tenants, too, drain. Buildings of all sorts as a rule are done by the landlords, and the haulage by the tenants. As I said before, on several occasions I have repaid the haulage entirely when the tenancy has ended within a year or so after the repairs have been done, but as a rule when the term runs on for some time no compensation is made; at least, that is my experience. At the commencement of the tenancy the gates and posts are found by the landlords, but maintained by the tenants, and the manures and seeds are found by the tenants. I know of cases where the landlords contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, but it appears to me that such contracts are illegal, except as regards the substitution of six for 12 months' notice to quit (Agricultural Holdings Act, sections 33 and 55). I do not think that application for the landlord's consent to improvements is often applied for. The custom of the country is that the incoming tenant has to pay for farmyard manure left on the farm, and grass seeds, and half value of lime which has been put on farms during the preceding year, but lime is not much used now, artificial manure having taken its place, and as far as I know no compensation is made in respect of it. Assignment or sub-letting is not allowed without the landlord's consent. The Agricultural Holdings Act has hitherto been almost a dead letter. Then as to game; there is very little game preserving, and tenants avail themselves, as a rule—there may be some exceptions—of the Ground Game Act. I have known of compensation paid for damage by rabbits by agreement between landlord and tenant. Tenants very commonly welcome, and accompany their landlords out shooting; but I have never known of any compulsion; it is rather looked on as a gala day. I believe that the Crown land sporting is let. Prosecutions for infringement of game laws are very rare in petty sessions. I think the magistrate's clerk will put in a return of the number of convictions under the Game Act for the petty sessional divisions of this district. I believe he is going to give evidence on that point later on. Then as to agricultural education, I think there is but little attention paid to fruit, market gardening, foresting or bee keeping, but the wives do a certain amount of poultry rearing. Dairy classes, under the auspices of the county councils, have been a great success. I do not remember what we do in Cardiganshire, but in Carmarthenshire, which I almost know better, we devote 500*l*. a year to technical agricultural education. The chairman of the Cardiganshire County Council is present and I am told 250*l.* is devoted in Cardiganshire towards it. Then, as to railway rates, I think the railway rates are very onerous, and bear, under the revised rates, very hardly on the export of horses and cattle, and most prejudicially affect these industries. I have mislaid the figures, but I appeared before the House of Commons Committee on Rates, and the increase on the revised rates for horses and cattle in Carmarthenshire was something frightful; it was more than 100 per cent., I think. Whether that has been continued I do not know; some of the Commissioners will probably know. I think Mr. Grove was there, and we lifted up our voices as loudly as we could against it. Perhaps there has been a modification. I have unfortunately lost the figures. Then, as to co-operation, I may add that recently a custom, very prejudicial to the sale of cattle at top prices, has sprung up. Previous to fairs small local dealers scour the country and bargain for the purchase of stock below market value, not only are sellers over-reached in the bargaining, but large dealers and graziers will not attend fairs where they have been forestalled, and cannot buy direct from the farmers. It is a most mischievous and pernicious custom, and affects the sale of stock very much indeed. I hope the tenant farmers and the freeholders will set their faces against it, as it has a most prejudicial effect on our markets. Then as to the general condition of the farming population, I believe that there are more freeholders in the county of Cardigan than in any other similar area in England or Wales. They have much increased during recent years. Many tenants have bought their holdings. Prices have ruled high, and tenants have often, indeed generally, borrowed a proportion, about two-thirds of the purchase money, at 4*l.* per cent. The condition of the freeholders, or anyhow the smaller ones, is at present very much worse than that of yearly tenants. The greater number of purchases commenced in 1875. Tenant farmers frequently take part in the manual labour of their farms, the wives presiding over the dairy and calves and poultry. Some members of a family generally work at home. I do not think that they are often paid actual wages, but are fed, and money to buy clothes given, in fact, they act as apprentices, and very commonly when a farm becomes vacant are set up in it by their parents; but amongst the larger farmers, almost invariably many of the sons receive a higher education, and are placed into business houses, banks, many become ministers and alergymen, others solicitors and surgeons. I could quote scores of instances around me. A great sacrifice, I may say, is made in the cause of education by the farmers. They make very great sacrifices indeed to give their children a good education, and place them in a better position of life than themselves. At the present crisis it is extremely difficult to give an opinion as to what would be a fair rent. With regard to labourers, as a rule farm servants hired for the year are more commonly employed than day labourers, the wages for men varying from 8*l.* to 25*l.*, including all food and lodging; and for women from 6*l.* to 18*l.* Day labourers are also employed. The wages are on the following scale: cash about 1*s.* 6*d.* per day, and food and potato ground. As a rule a small cottage would be let at about 30*s.* a year, and in some cases a bit of land sufficient to keep a cow is added; the rent of such holding would be about 5*l.* The rate of wage has increased very considerably of late years. The women servants sleep in the house, the men servants in a loft over the cow-house or stable. The back kitchen is generally used for meals and to sit in. Cottages have decidedly improved, but there are many vacant. There are, as a rule, a certain number of cottages attached to each farm, the letting being vested in the tenant, who generally makes it a condition that the labourer should work on the farm. Twelve months' notice is given for the determination of a tenancy. General house accommodation for tenant farmers is, on the whole, fairly good. It has improved of late years, and is improving. The Welsh tenant farmer is most thrifty and frugal; and his diet, though somewhat rough, is healthy and sufficient. It consists of tea, bread, butter, cheese, milk, bacon, and vegetables; fresh meat is rarely seen at table, and the diet of the ordinary farmer differs but little from that of the labourer. There are five meals daily—breakfast, 10 o'clock snack, at one dinner, tea at four, supper at eight. I regret to say that keeping accounts is very imperfectly carried out. Then as to the present crisis, this is only my humble opinion, and I do not wish to put it forward very strongly, but in my opinion the present very acute crisis is mainly attributable to the great depreciation in the price of store stock, consequent upon the drought last summer. The only thing that saved us last year were the pigs and butter. If it had not been for that we should have gone to the bad altogether. Pigs were very good, and butter was fairly good. Foreign competition is also an important factor, and probably the appreciation of gold. All classes feel the depression more or less acutely. It is extremely difficult to suggest any remedy for the present depression in agriculture. Like other trades, it has its good and bad cycles. I have but little faith in legislation. Protection is out of the question; moreover, highly protected countries are suffering equally with ourselves. I happen to own some land in the United States, and I have 1,000 acres, or something of that sort, of my own there, and all I can say is that they are doing worse there than we are in Wales, if that is possible. My sons are in Kansas, and the depression there, especially with regard to stock, is frightful, especially last year, since the silver question has cropped up. In France it is very bad, that I can say, because I have a letter with me now in my possession that I have received from France. I do not believe in protection at all, not in the least. It is impossible to localise taxation on personal property. I do not approve of the establishment of Land Courts on the Irish system, and for this reason; I have often been in Ireland, and so far as I understand the Irish Act, it is entirely based on the assumption that improvements are done by the tenants, and in the Irish Act there is a clause (4th clause of section 8) which specially exempts English managed estates from the operation of the Act. At a very early stage of the Irish Land Act a test case was tried, and I am quoting now from the Standard reports which I put in. The case was tried at Ballina, before Mr. Commissioner McCarthy. It was the case of Beresford Taylor v. The Earl of Arran, and the facts in brief were these. It was proved that the landowner had spent considerable sums, amounting to about 1,000*l.*, on the estate, and the Commissioners held that, under these circumstances, the tenant was not entitled to fixity of tenure or judicial rent under the Act. I am not aware that that case has been over-ruled. I will put in the report, so that the Commissioners may have an opportunity of looking it up. So far as legislative remedies are concerned, I think that the Agricultural Holdings Act is capable of very great improvement. Without wearying you by going into it at any great length, I should suggest that the improvements which are under the heading of the first section, and for which now it is requisite to obtain the landlord's consent, should be put under the conditions of the section as to drainage, and that they should be done by the tenant upon giving the landlord notice, subject of course to compensation. As regards the machinery, the arbitration clauses of the Agricultural Holdings Act are very valuable. They do not seem to have been very much used. The whole Act requires a great deal of simplification, and the machinery made very much more workable. What I should suggest is something of this sort—I am merely suggesting it—that two arbitrators should be appointed, which you can do now under the Act. There is still power to do so. One should be appointed, I think, by the Board of Agriculture, and the other by the county council. Of course there are objections to the county council appointing anyone, because I think it is a matter of doubt whether any judicial officer should be appointed by a popularly elected body. I think that is a broad question, but I think there is very strong feeling in the county that the county council should have something to do with the appointment of an arbitrator, and I think, on the whole, it would be well to concede that point, subject, we will say, to the approval of the Board of Agriculture. But I should always make the County Court Judge himself (and I lay very great stress upon this) the umpire in case of a difference between the arbitrators. I am sorry Mr Brynmor Jones is not here to hear this. I think there is no body of men in England who have done better work than the County Court Judges, and in a case where there might be possibly considerable friction, I think it most important there should be a judicially trained umpire, who would approach the question with a judicial mind, and with strict legal knowledge. I think you have already the machinery of what you may call a Land Court, and I cannot, for the life of me, see why you should endeavour to experiment with a new jurisdiction, which alone would cost a very great deal to the country. It seems to me, as a landlord, if you have fixture of tenure upon the Irish principle, and judicial rents, that you entirely destroy landlordism. It is not for me to object; possibly we may be a very useless, lazy, wretched body of people, but I do not think the evidence, so far as I have read, has proved that. However, that is not for me. The relations, in this county at least, between landlord and tenant are extremely good; I have no hesitation in saying so; and before you rush into new legislation I do respectfully think you might try the machinery we have now, with a few improvements. I should like to make it a positive certainty that a tenant should be compensated for every sixpenny-worth of permanent improvements. As regards the machinery, upon which I possibly do not agree with some of my friends, I feel most strongly that where you have what I consider a very effective, or what could be made a very effective Act, before you rush into fresh legislation and fresh jurisdiction, you should give it a fair trial. That is all I have to say, my lord.

Chairman—continued.

Chairman—continued.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,282. You stated, did you not, that leases were generally for 21 years?—No, I said tenancies from year to year were general, but when leases are granted they are generally for 21 years. Leases are comparatively very rare I am sorry to say.

43,283. You are in favour of leases, I understand?—Very strongly.

43,284. Do you not think that if leases were terminable after five or eight years the tenants would be inclined to farm well at the commencement, and pull up a bit before they came to the close?—It acts both ways, but if there is a great depreciation in prices it would enable them to come to fresh terms with their landlords. I speak of it in a practical form. I have had considerable experience and knowledge of the north-east part of Scotland—I have mixed a great deal with agriculture there for the last 21 years, and the form of lease there used to be 19 years but now they have modified it with breaks after five years. Of course what you say is quite true, but I think a fair average farmer is too sensible a man, and I think he would keep on farming well if he could. I would rather give 21 years myself, out and out. I object to a tenancy from year to year; it is, I think, hopelessly bad.

43,285. I meant with reference to getting from the land the largest crop that could possibly be grown?—Yes, we could get a great deal more out of our land if we had more money to put into it. I think a lease would be better security.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

43,286. I think you said that tenants of large farms are more able to meet the bad times than the small farmers?—I think I said tenants with a certain amount of capital.

43,287. As a rule they pay more for labour than the small farmers?—Yes, certainly. I was not speaking of the size of the farm, but I was referring to the size of their purse.

43,288. You know of no case where the landlords have assisted their tenants to lay down pasture?—No, I do not. I think I have heard of it.

43,289. With regard to the land in this neighbourhood, does it come very easily to pasture?—When you come to the highish land there is a great tendency to revert to the furze after a time. I think there is a good deal of land here which is not very suitable, but still, as you know better than I do, by vigorous top-dressing you can keep down furze.

43,290. It adds to the expense?—Yes, no doubt, but it also adds to the return for the expense. Practically I do not know anything that pays better than top-dressing grass land.

43,291. Of late years attention has been turned to that?—Yes, it is the only bit of practical farming I do myself.

43,292. We heard in Monmouthshire that Welsh people who had migrated to Hereford and Monmouth understood better how to keep grass land than corn land?—We do not grow so much corn as we did, and for obvious reasons, that the price of corn is so very, very bad.

43,293. Have you any period of exhaustion when the tenant drains the ground?—Do you mean when the improvements are considered exhausted?

43,294. Yes?—I do not think there is any rule; not that I know of. I think the measure of value is the value to the incoming tenant.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,295. We found in North Wales in some agreements a scale is provided?—I do not think it exists here; at any rate, not within my knowledge. It may be so, but I am endeavouring to speak to everything I know of my own knowledge. I am endeavouring to avoid hearsay as much as I possibly can.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,296. With regard to poultry rearing, is the accommodation pretty good for that?—They are not very fancy sort of places; not like what you keep your prize cochins in.

43,297. You think they could be improved?—Oh, undoubtedly. My wife has tried poultry farming in the fancy line; we do not pretend to get on very well with it. I think we do better with the "barn-doors," and let them rough it.

43,298. It is a thing that the foreigner cannot take out very well from under our feet. The foreigner cannot supply us with a fresh egg every morning for breakfast?—Yes, I think the breed of poultry might be improved here.

43,299. You speak with regard to the local dealers scouring the country?—Yes.

43,300. I think there are two sides to that question. Cattle look better on a farm than when driven a long distance into market?—Yes. I think the temptation of the gold in the man's hands is very great to the man who is hard up, besides which, there is nothing like an open market.

43,301. I believe in that. With regard to the tenants who have purchased their holdings, how do you find they are doing, as a rule?—Very badly, I think. I take it a tenant farmer very seldom makes at the rate of 4 per cent. upon the value of his holding. They have to start with a 4 per cent., or even 4½ per cent. mortgage to begin with.

43,302. In these depressed times there is but a small margin for living?—Yes, a very small margin indeed.

43,303. And they have no abatements or things of that sort?—No, I never heard of a soft-hearted mortgagee yet.

43,304. Do you not think it would be a very good thing if we could induce the Government to advance money to them at a low rate of interest?—Yes, I think so, provided an arrangement could be made that they should not give fancy prices, otherwise you are encouraging reckless expenditure. Supposing you are taking the average of a fair rent at 10 or 15 years, and then put so many years' purchase. As a rule, the competition has been so great, and they have been so anxious to buy, that they have given ridiculous prices, absurd prices.

43,305. You think if they knew they could borrow the money at 3 per cent. they would bid according to that?—Yes. I think just at present the anxiety to obtain land is very much nipped, and no wonder. It is not so acute as it was five or six years ago.

43,306. Why should the tenants be induced to purchase their land when they see this?—I suppose it is human nature. You like to be a landowner. It is a very good thing for the State; when a man has an interest in the State, in theory he is supposed to be a better citizen. There is no doubt the Welsh farmer has a longing to get a bit of land; you may call it land hunger if you like; but I think it has very much diminished of late, I must say.

43,307. With regard to cottages, are they plentiful in the neighbourhood?—Yes, upon Mrs. Brigstocke's estate we have several vacant at the present time; so many men go off to the works there.

43,308. Are they agricultural cottages or cottages in the neighbourhood of some town?—I am speaking of agricultural cottages, not near the town.

43,309. Are they distributed all over the farms where they are required?—I think fairly, and certainly they are very much improved. There are some villainously bad now, but there has been a great improvement the last 20 years.

43,310. Are there any old thatched cottages still standing?—Yes, there are, but I am glad to say they are disappearing.

43,311. Are you in favour of a labourer keeping a cow?—Yes, I think it is a very great boon, but I must say this: I think the farmer is a little bit inclined to charge the tenant too high for such a bit of land.

43,312. Generally they charge more than they pay themselves?—Oh, yes, much more.

43,313. Do you think the tenants would be willing to get a slice off the farm for the labourer generally?—Some tenants object to grant any land for a cottager. It depends so very much upon the convenience of the farmer that I could hardly give a general answer.

43,314. You find that something must be done to keep the good labourers on the farms?—Certainly.

43,315. You think this would be an inducement?—A very great inducement. I forgot to mention that they generally have a certain amount of potato land as well.

43,316. How is the butter of the neighbourhood as a whole?—It is not what it ought to be; in spite of our dairy schools they will go on to the salt.

43,317. The old system was that salt used to keep the butter?—Yes, but that idea has been exploded, has it not?

43,318. You find that here they are the same as elsewhere, very slow to adopt new methods?—Yes, we are very conservative, except in politics.

43,319. With regard to the dairies, are there any improvements made?—No; I think they are good. We have the Cilgerran flags, which make good cooling pans. They are generally put the north side of the house, and they are very fair, I think.

43,320. Have you any experience of the butter factories?—I have a share or two in the one at St. Clear's, but they seem to be rather in a muddle just now.

43,321. They seem to want milk?—Yes, there is something wrong. I do not know what it is. I am too far off to speak to that. I think the farmers' wives are very much against factories, because, if I understand aright, they get a little pin money out of the butter.

43,322. You say that farmers are very often able to give their children a superior education?—I say they make great sacrifices to do so.

43,323. Do you know of instances where they have been repaid by their children after they have got into good positions?—I think there is sufficient good feeling in the Welsh young man after he gets into a good position to help his father or his mother or his family.

43,324. Do you know instances, again, where farmers' sons have gone elsewhere?—In human nature there are some good and some bad sons. I do not think I can say any more than that.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

43,325. Now, with regard to your suggestion of a County Court Judge acting as umpire, do you think that judges, as a rule, are qualified to act as umpires on agricultural questions?—Yes, I do, in this way. Of course the primary people would be the two referees, who would settle the technical questions, but then the County Court Judge would apply his judicial mind and unbiased judgment to sifting the facts. It is very analogous to the arrangement that exists in the Admiralty Court, where the running-down cases are tried by a judge with the assistance of two nautical assessors. That is what occurred to my mind when I ventured to suggest what I have suggested.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,326. Have you a home farm?—No; I do not farm myself at present. My aunt is the possessor of the estate.

43,327. You would not be able to speak from experience as to whether the home farm was really a paying concern?—Speaking from the experience I had some years ago, I think with proper management it is. It is not quite analogous to a tenant farm, because the bailiff and all that is extra work, but with reasonable management I do not see why the home farm should not pay. In a home farm there are probably a good many more horses kept than necessary for estate purposes, hauling timber, and doing repairs to the estate. It is very difficult to compare a home farm with a bonâ fide tenant farm—very difficult, I think. I did farm about 200 acres for many years, and I think I made it pay pretty well. I think I paid my rent at all events out of it.

43,328. I was trying to arrive at this, whether that style of farming was a paying business?—I cannot speak of that first-hand, so that I will not attempt to give you an answer. You will get witnesses, no doubt, who are better up upon that point than I am. There is another thing, probably a landlord as a rule would have more capital to expend; I do not think any farming in any kind, shape, or way pays at the present moment, whether home farm or anything else.

43,329. You say that agents generally are skilled specialists?—Yes.

43,330. What do you mean by specialists?—People who have been brought up in an agent's office, or at Cirencester and so forth. I cannot understand why gentlemen of moderate fortunes, with 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* a year, want an agent at all. Surely they have a considerable amount of leisure, and what they want is a good estate carpenter and mason, and see to things for themselves. I think that tenants appreciate very much indeed the interference—not meddlesome interference—of the landlord. Suppose a tenant wants a cow-house or pigstye, and the landlord talks it over with him, then the tenant appreciates the interest shown, and the landlord probably saves a good deal of money. Of course, on large estates like

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Lord Cawdor's and Sir John Llewelyn's, you are bound to have an agent, but upon small country estates I cannot see why you want an agent at all.

43,331. In any case, where an agent is employed, do you consider a knowledge of farming would be an essential qualification on the part of the agent?—Yes.

43,332. What is the character of agents generally. Do you think they would come up to that standard?—Here in this particular neighbourhood?
